the son, as the mother likewise does with her daughter. His biggest task and special responsibility has been pointed out as being a companion and counsellor to his son, and that need not be questioned. But just as surely does his daughter need his counsel and protection. His understanding of the world outside the home is generally more intimate than mother's, and his counsel all the way along is important to his daughter's welfare.

Moreover most girls receive their first impression of the proper place and character of a father and husband from their observance of their own father, and that first impression may go a long way towards determining their choices and attitudes for life. Many a girl has concluded from the wide variance in type of character in father and mother, that not so much was to be expected from men as from women, that the double standard was to be accepted without question, and much disappointment and suffering has been reaped in consequence. Indeed, in view of the possibilities of such varied and far-reaching influence as he may exercise over her life, the daughter has scarcely less strong a claim for the right kind of a father as does the son, and the importance of her claims need all the more to be emphasized because they have been so completely overlooked. And where her claims are set forth, her duty of reverence and honor should be given with equal emphasis. All this is good reason for Father's Day.

Too Much Ego a Liability

We are being constantly told that self-confidence is essential to success, but we need also to be reminded that self-confidence, gone to seed, is a hindrance to success. When self-confidence degenerates into self-importance it destroys one's influence and makes him repulsive. Even in salesmanship where self-confidence is said to be most desirable and essential, when it becomes egotism, it arouses a feeling of disgust and defeats its own ends. Ego becomes a positive liability when it makes one's person so important and so prominent that he overshadows the firm he represents and obscures the goods he has for sale. And it makes little difference whether the salesman be one representing some manufacturing concern, offering for sale some material article of comfort or necessity, or whether he be a representative of the Lord Jesus, sent forth to persuade men and women to accept the spiritual benefits of the Gospel of grace. Everywhere the egotistic, pompous, self-displaying individual becomes an object of disgust, his efforts are continually suffering discount and his person is a constant discredit to the enterprise he represents. But if any cause suffers more than another from such attitude and conduct, it is the church of Christ, for nowhere is a protruding ego more indefensible and inconsistent than on the man or woman who goes forth in the name of the humble Man of Galilee. Whether he be preacher, Sunday school teacher, church official, or just an ordinary member possessed of an extraordinary opinion of himself, he should be made to realize that the proud, over-bearing, self-opinionated individual is an offense to God, a stumbling block to men and a liability to the church of Christ.

A sales manager, says "Printer's Ink", who discovered this fault growing upon some of his best men, kept on the corner of his desk as a sort of silent sermon or remonstrance, an effigy of a pompous man, arms in air and mouth wide open. Engraved at its base was the warning: "There is such a thing as being too self-important." Nothing was said about it, and no special attention was directed to it, as the story goes, but the effigy remained there, a silent reminder and accomplished marvels. The sales manager was not long in discovering that his men were taking the hint. They saw themselves reflected in that pompous, pathetic little clay figure on their chief's desk.

That sales manager is not the only one who has recognized the need of some such reminder of the danger and futility of self-conceit, for we find in the Word of God a warning of a certain wise man of old, who said, "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall" (Prov. 16:18). Paul admonishes the Christians at Rome (Rom. 12:16) to "be not wise in your own conceits", and to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 13:5) he says that those who are characterized by the true love of God do not vaunt themselves and are not puffed up. Peter warns his readers to "be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble" (1 Pet. 5:5). The truth is reiterated over and over again in the Scriptures, and finds its source in the teachings of our Lord himself, who said, "Every one that exalteth himself shall be abased and he that hum-bleth himself shall be exalted" (Luke 18:14). But the crowning rebuke of all is found in the blessed example of the Son of God, who "made himself of no reputation, and took upon himself the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of man: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross (Phil. 2:7, 8). As we gaze upon this marvelous example of humility on the part of him who was lord of heaven and earth, let it rebuke and cure us of the silly notion of our own exceeding worth and importance, and let us find our confidence and strength in him in whom we live and move and have our being.

The Measure of the Kingdom's Progress

We hear so much about the progress of sin and the spread of crime, declarations of such character being so loud-mouthed and so numerous, that we scarcely hear the less noisy but more encouraging claims of the Kingdom's growth. But the forces of Christ are surely, even if slowly, pressing forward, and the Lord is adding unto his church daily and yearly such as are being saved. While it is impossible to accurately measure the Kingdom's progress and to tabulate all its gains, yet it is possible to give fairly reliable figures of the membership growth of the churches, and these indicate as faithfully the true growth of the religion of Jesus Christ as the enlarging criminal statistics do the increase of crime.

According to the annual census compilations of Dr. K. K. Carroll and published in The Christian Herald a few weeks ago, the total church membership of the United States in 1925 was 46,883,758, or about forty per cent of the population. The increase during the last year was 807,256, as against an increase during 1924 of 621,630. The greatest increase was shown by the fifteen Methodist bodies, which was 220,183, giving them a total membership of 8,920,190. The Catholics are next with a reported increase of 203,990, making a total constituency of 16,156,914. But it should be remembered that Catholics count the total adherents, and not merely communicants. Next in order of increase are the Baptists (14 bodies) with a growth of 104,396 over last year, and a total membership of 8,397,914. Fourth in order are the Disciples of Christ (two bodies) with an increase of 90,493 and a total membership of 1,759,399. Then, the Presbyterians (9 bodies) gained 61,520, with a total membership of 2,561,986. Coming on down the line, though not to the very end, however, we find that the Brethren (Dunkards, 4 bodies) with a total membership of 150,160 experienced a growth of 6,273.

Dr. Carroll finds his researches indicate an increase of 166 church buildings, as compared with a decrease of 12 in 1924. The total number of church buildings is set at 236,964.

He also reports an increase of 2,966 ministers during 1925, which is less however than the showing of 1924, which was 3,658. The total number of ministers is 216,078.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The third installment of Dr. Gribble's missionary story is published in this issue. She has written other stories dealing with African customs, which we will publish in the near future.

Brother J. S. Cook reports nineteen confessions at McKee, Pennsylvania, where he is pastor, as a result of a recent meeting which he conducted. Eighteen of this number were received into the church. These make twenty-four additions since December. This church showed its appreciation of his services by another surprise "shower" of good things to eat. Brother Cook is pastor also of the Martinsburg church where he is soon to conduct a brief series of meetings.

We trust the Christian Endeavor leaders are making generous use of the excellent helps on the topic being published in "The Angelus" and prepared by Brother Thoburn C. Lyon, pastor at Lydia, Maryland. Also that the Junior leaders and superintendents are urging the children to read the interesting lesson stories in this publication, written by Miss Virginia Haun. These persons are doing a splendid service for Endeavor and leaders, including pastors, should help to make their weekly messages more widely used and so appreciated.

Dr. C. F. Yoder, of Rio Cuarto, Argentina, writes of the progress of the work in our South American field. Six have been baptized since the last letter, two in Rio Cuarto and four in Carlota. Sister Johanna Nielsen is doing good work among the Junior Endeavorers. Brother and Sister Sickel have returned or are returning to the States on their first furlough, and Brother Yoder speaks highly of them as missionaries. The churches will be glad to see and to hear them, both to get better acquainted with them and to receive the missionary inspiration they will be able to impart.

From the Shenandoah Herald of Woodstock, Virginia, we learn that Brother E. B. Shaver, one of the pioneer preachers of the Brethren church and father of the Virginia valley churches, underwent a successful major operation on April 13th. We are glad to learn that he is doing nicely and we join his many friends in wishing him a speedy recovery. Brother Shaver impressed us upon our visit to his church two years ago as being the most active preacher for a man of his age we have ever met. And he is still active and in the work, being pastor of the country church near Harrisonburg.

President Jacobs announces the new athletic coach for Ashland College, Mr. Walter Peiffer, and we can but form a most favorable opinion of him when Dr. Jacobs says he more than measures up to the high standards which our college has set for its coach. The president is to be congratulated on insisting on such standards, for scarcely another man on a college faculty yields so large an influence as the athletic coach, once he wins the confidence of the students. Announcement is also made of the coming Educational Day offering, which is set for the first Sunday in June. Every church in the brotherhood should begin making plans for a banner offering this year.

Brother Sylvester Lowman reports a very successful evangelistic campaign which he held at Pleasant Hill, Ohio, where Brother H. C. Marlin is pastor. Notwithstanding the handicap of illness which put the pastor out of service for a time, and affected the evangelist to some extent, they succeeded in leading fifteen souls into the baptismal waters and four to reconsecrate themselves to Christ. Brother Lowman makes a suggestion concerning a problem that is much on the hearts of the forward looking Brethren of both branches of the church, and concerning which many in both divisions might well agree to pray that a way to a solution and a reunion might be effected.

Evangelist B. T. Burnworth writes concerning his campaigns at Beaver City, Nebraska, and Rittman, Ohio. At the former place, Brother A. E. Whitted is pastor and the church was strengthened by some splendid additions, as has been previously reported. At Rittman Brother Arthur Cashman is the student pastor, being in residence at Ashland College, but is doing some good work for the church. Among the four families which Brother Burnworth mentions, we understand some valuable additions have been made to the Rittman mission.

Brother R. F. Porte in his Tract Corner makes a splendid point on the importance of the unseen: read it. We want to turn the figure, and suggest that too many of our people are satisfied to have our denominational literature to be among the things unseen in their homes. Spiritual things can be made very real, even though unseen, but such material objects as The Brethren Evangelist, The Angelus, our excellent Sunday school lesson helps and denominational tracts are not going to be very real so long as they remain unseen to you and the members of your home or church. And if they are very real to you, but are unreal and practically unknown to your neighbors and friends, do what you can to give these publications an existence in their lives.

From Gratis, Ohio, we have an interesting letter which shows progress in the work and reveals how busy and generally useful the pastor, Brother O. C. Starn, has been since entering upon the field. Aside from his many activities in behalf of the church directly, he is teaching Bible in the high school, which service will mean something for the leadership of the church in the community and also will mean much for the young people of the community by way of providing their developing minds with the religious element, which is essential to a balanced education. It will be a good day when schools everywhere allow the Bible to be taught. Two new members were received into the fellowship of the church as a result of a revival held by the pastor. Brother Starn was honored by his county Sunday school forces by being their representative at the great Birmingham convention. We are expecting a report from him of some of the good things he experienced there.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Preacher

By Prof. A. L. DeLozier

"Castigat ridendo mores." This admirable description of the true function of comedy was composed by the French poet Jean de Santeuil as an epigraph for a theatre curtain. It means: "It laughingly criticizes manners and morals."

What I am about to do, I do not undertake laughingly or lightly, but to use a French expression "au grand sérieux."

I may explain that I am a preacher called out of the pulpit to serve my church in another capacity than that of preaching. My almost six years out of the pulpit have given me a chance to see ourselves "as others see us", or if you prefer, at least as I now see us.

The first thing that leads me to write upon this subject—the preacher—is that I am now able to look back upon my own work as a minister, and I assure you that as I meditate upon it, I encounter phases of it that do not make me feel proud. As I write I make resolutions which will surely hold if I may ever be called back into the pulpit.

In writing, I am moved in part also by the lament expressed by some of the world's best thinkers that the time is past when great convictions move men. In other words, ours is not a day of great convictions, in religion and other matters. I am not pausing to argue whether these men are right or wrong in such an indictment, but it would seem to me that they are more right than wrong.

Then I am not a little influenced by a recent study in one of my classes of the great French preacher Bossuet. As a preacher he was something out of the ordinary, as a Catholic priest he was superfine. He debated the protestant clergy of the time and they had to admire his ability and sincerity. He had nothing short of apostolic ardour and succeeded in converting some Jews to the Christian religion as he knew it. He was not an extremist and was endowed especially with good sense. Some have accused him of copying from Pascal and others have said that Pascal copied from him, but says Mr. Des Granges, the literary critic, "La question est puerile . . . l'un et l'autre ont puisé dans l'Ecriture sainte et dans les Peres, voila tout." (The question is puerile . . . both of them drew from the Holy Scriptures and the church fathers, that is all).

The thing that especially interests me in Bossuet is his philosophy of preaching. He was opposed to the literary pretensions of the would-be orator of the pulpit, and what he called the guilty curiosity of hearers. He insisted that St. Paul had rejected all the cunning of rhetoric, but that in spite of that his messages always carried home. It is interesting to note that this was true in the case of Bossuet himself.

He avoided the oratorical type and yet was one of the greatest orators of Christendom. He said: "Let us not require of preachers the ornaments of rhetoric, but rather the doctrine of the scriptures . . . at least let us know how to distinguish between the seasoning and the solid food." He insists that if the Word of God is neglected, both preacher and people will be held accountable before God. "The preacher mounts the pulpit, not to deliver an empty address and that he may amuse, but he stands there as before the altar to celebrate a mystery (this may be Catholic, but has much truth for us Protestants anyway).

But now listen to this wonderful deliverance from a Catholic priest. "The conscience requires truth, and as it is to the conscience that the preacher addresses himself, he must seek, not the flashy things which divert, nor a harmony which delights nor bursts which tickle the ear, but lightning flashes which pierce, thunder bolts which move and shatter hearts."

Speaking of eloquence he says: "Wisdom walks ahead as the teacher, eloquence comes after as a follower . . . it (eloquence) must follow without being called. It must come of its own accord, drawn by the grandeur of things and in order to serve as interpreter for wisdom which speaks."

Again: "The preacher will get everything in the Scriptures, not only to justify, but as well to embellish his discourse."

Bossuet was the first great funeral preacher. His "Oraisons funebres" are a worthy part of French literature. He snatched the funeral address from the dangerous pass to which it had come. He did this by making inquiry concerning those whose funeral oration he was to deliver, and then frankly showing where they did right or wrong in their lives. He aimed to preach to the hearers on this solemn occasion, as every honest preacher of today should ("Bossuet se propose avant tout l'instruction et l'edification de ses auditeurs").

This philosophy explains why Bossuet in spite of his great genius did not have the brilliant success that some of his contemporaries had, and yet he has had a greater success than they after all.

Some of my readers may object to my setting forth such good qualities in a Catholic priest who merits a place in French literature. I do it first of all to show that we Protestants are not always entirely fair when we insinuate that Rome has no preachers, but only priests. And then I want us to get the lesson that Bossuet has to teach and which to me seems rather fundamental in many parts.

A call back to some of these essentials may be in order in a day when some printed sheets at least are raising the question: "Is the preacher a passing phenomenon?" Yes, they say that some day the poor parson will be no more and that something or some one will take his place. I have bitterly assailed this cheap sort of talk, but let us admit that there may be something to it.

If the preacher passes out and the world selects some other agency for teaching its religion, whose fault will it be? I feel that in large part it will be the preacher's own fault. The preacher is ostensibly a teacher of the word and lo, he prefers to read and peruse any other document but the very text book and authority for his work. He is supposed to preach truth and doctrine, and lo, he scours the universe for topics and occasions in his discoursing. He has affiliated himself with all the movements known to human society and espoused every cause under the sun, many a time not stopping to measure these things beside the standards of the Word of God. He thinks he is "making good" if he wins men to his particular organized group, often failing to "check up" as to whether he has really won them to Christ.

The preacher poses as a scholar and has the pedantic idea that the "earmarks" of scholarship are open-mindedness and the espousal of the latest new thought ideas, etc. Accordingly, he wants his mind to be open on all things, including the truths of the New Testament. I sometimes wonder if an editor was not right when he said recently, "A lot of the so-called open minds ought to be closed down awhile for repairs."

As I write these things I am fully aware of what writers are saying about truth and knowledge these days. I, too, read a late book or two occasionally. Many authors of our text books such as Sociology, feel that there is no final truth. We cannot be sure that anything is true, say some of them. And so they would have us hold our minds open even on the teaching of Jesus of Nazareth. Away with such vacuity!

I am frank to say, Mr. Dominie, that this will not get YOU very far if you take it too seriously.

In the field of education with which I am slightly familiar, one must be ever careful of being too dogmatic because these truths or findings are in a state of experimentation.

But we must not "scare" too much at a little dogmatism in religious matters. They say that there is but a step between dogmatism and intolerance and persecution. But I say that there is but a step from certain "open mindedness" to bolshevism, anarchy, atheism and a world of other things, for true as one of our secular papers put it recently: "The only trouble with the open mind is that everything gets in." Is the New Testament (or the Bible for that matter) the Word of God? Is Jesus the final and complete revelation of God to man? YES or NO will be the answer. A few squirms and a sign or two coupled with a pedantic or two will not suffice as an answer to such questions.

If the answer is YES, then let us be done with sham and impossible positions and like Paul, Savonarola, Luther, Bossuet and others, let us become men of convictions.

Sure enough the preacher should be more careful not to make any overstatements. Not to be rash or bombastic should be his watchword at times. If the parson has good sense and a fair education (the better education the better for him—if he has good sense), if he knows his Bible, just like our Master has a human and a divine side), I say if he has these things, he need not fear being branded as narrow, bigoted, sectarian, etc. For the likelihood is that his critics are just as sectarian as he, only in another field. If the preacher moves in a small circle so does the psychologist sometimes with his "pot of green" feathers" and so others with their hoary old illustrations.

My closing word will brand me as especially small and ignorant, for I want to urge that Brethren preachers cannot afford to be too much like other preachers. Most preachers are shackled and hedged about by ecclesiastical dogma and creeds and other limitations. Were many of them to preach all the truth, they would be "fired" by the machine that furnishes them their living. So, many preachers must be ever holding something back, they must be diplomatic. The Brethren preacher, on the contrary, must be thoroughly honest. He can pasture anywhere in the WORD and can preach it, for he serves a whole Gospel church.

So my plea is simply this: Let us be true to our high calling in a day of apostasy. Let us not trail this calling in the mire of professionalism.

God helping me, this is my resolution concerning the preacher (myself). My last word is to humbly beg the pardon of our own ministry for daring to write what I have. Let us take it and pray it over. I invite no discussion, for I am not disposed to be "contentious."

May God help and lead us all in HIS WILL.

A Father's Responsibility

By Rev. Charles Manchester, D. D.

The faults, failures, and crimes of children are largely due to fathers. Of course mothers are responsible too, but in the discussion I wish to look at the father's obligations and rewards.

Every child comes into the world by the responsible act of his father. Without any choice in the matter his heredity and environment is predetermined. The early surroundings and training largely determine his conduct. The father owes it to his child to give it a fair start. He should see that the child has proper physical, mental, and moral environment. The father who neglects his child is accountable to his generation now living and to future generations and to God.

From God's promise to Abraham it is clear that the father's responsibility is the basis of God's promises of good to the race. Read Genesis 18:19, and note the inference therein. "For I know him (Abraham), that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken." Here it is evident that God bases his promises of blessing on Abraham's commanding his children. That is, because Abraham trains his child in the way that he should go God gives his endorsement in blessings to many generations. It is safe to infer from this that the father is responsible for his children's and his great-grandchildren's blessings. It is the law announced in the first chapter of Genesis and the law that we can all see in nature. Like begets like. Each flower, tree, and animal bears fruit after its kind whose seed is in itself. The father who teaches and trains his child to obey God and do justice and judgment injures his child against sin and crime and secures for him an endowment of blessings that will go down the line of his descendants for a thousand generations.

Since these things are so, what shall we think of the father who tries to shirk his duty and who neglects the teaching of his child? What shall we think of the father who indulges his passions, lives a selfish life, and sets a bad example for his child?

It is the right of every child to have one man and one woman to pray for him and to teach him the right ways of the Lord, to set a right example of right living and to see that he performs that which he is commanded. There is no excuse for rich men who leave the training of their children to hirelings. You cannot buy love, longsuffering, goodness, and patience with dollars. The fruit of the Spirit is not secured by money. The father must be moved by love in the training of his child or the results will be different than they were with Abraham's children.

The great increase in crime is largely due to the failure of fathers to train their children in righteousness. "Parents wonder why the streams are bitter, when they themselves have poisoned the fountains." The father who in the seclusion of the home awakens in the mind of his child a love of justice and goodness does more for the world than if he had built a monument to some great man or if he had conquered a nation. He shall be blessed and be a blessing and his name shall be remembered through the ages as Abraham's has been.—The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

"HAS CHRIST BEEN PARCELED OUT?"

Brothers, for the sake of our Lord Jesus Christ, I beg of you all to drop these party-cries. There must be no cliques among you; you must regain your common temper and attitude. For Chloe's people inform me that you are quarreling. By "quarreling" I mean that each of you has his party-cries, "I belong to Paul," "and I to Apollos," "and I to Cephas," "and I to Christ." Has Christ been parceled out? Was it Paul who was crucified for you? Was it in Paul's name that you were baptized? . . . You are still worldly. For with jealousy and quarrels in your midst, are you not worldly, are you not behaving like ordinary men? When one cries, "I belong to Paul," and another, "I belong to Apollos," what are you but men of the world?—1 Cor. 10:14; 3: 3-5—Moffat's Translation.

Walks and Talks in Holy Places

(Article No. 11)

The Land of the Pharaohs

By Herbert H. Tay

Egypt is the land of one dimension. That one dimension is length. Egypt proper is eight hundred miles long, and an average of ten miles wide. Although the political boundaries may extend east to the Red Sea, and westward far into the Lybian Desert, yet the only habitable portion of the land is that which borders the river Nile, which has the dimensions before mentioned.

The one outstanding natural characteristic of Egypt, is the Nile. In fact, Egypt is the Nile, and the Nile is Egypt. If it were not for the river, there would be no Egypt. It seldom rains in Upper Egypt—once in twenty years, they say—so the people must depend entirely upon irrigation to water their crops. Then too, upwards of twelve million people inhabit this little strip of land, which being cultivated so intensively for almost five thousand years, would be completely worn out now, if it were not for the inundation of the Nile. This remarkable phenomenon of nature occurs usually in October. At that time the waters from the melting snows in Abyssinia and the Sudan reach Egypt. The volume is too great to be contained within the banks of the river, and the consequence is that the entire valley is overflowed with water.

The water passes on, and subsides in a few weeks, but it leaves behind a thin layer of rich sediment, which is excellent fertilizer. So by utilizing the Nile as a means of irrigation and fertilization, the natives are enabled to take abundant crops off the land from year to year, without putting anything back on to the land.

Egypt is also the "Land of Topsy-turvy." Everything is backwards. That is due to the direction of the flow of the river. It is "up south" and "down north" there. "Upper Egypt" is far to the south, while "Lower Egypt" is in the Nile Delta to the north. It is most confusing to the tourist from this country to keep the directions correctly in mind.

Compared to Palestine, Egypt as a whole, is much more civilized. Cairo and Alexandria are modern cities in every respect. They have broad, paved streets. Street cars, or "trams" as they call them there, carry one to all parts of the city. The streets are filled with automobiles, even though antiquated "arabiehs" or carriages may be seen in great numbers. The cities are brilliantly lighted with electric lights, and there are many telephones. However, one thing that is lacking, is gas. We marvelled that the cooks in the hotels were able to prepare meals for the guests. Wood in Egypt, as in Palestine, is priceless, so cannot be used for fuel. The railroads use bricks of pressed coal dust for fuel, but the price is prohibitive for hotel use. So most of the hotels use little single burner kerosene stoves. Perhaps some of you have seen the "Primus" or "Optimus" stoves. They are about eight inches in diameter, and a foot high. Some of the leading hotels use these in their kitchens, and the cooks prepare elaborate meals on them, using them for frying, roasting, or baking, and achieving as palatable results, as the most accomplished cooks in this country, who use the most modern gas ranges.

Though Egypt has its civilization, yet it has its heathenism and barbarism. In some of the native villages the people live in the most unsanitary and degraded conditions. Blindness is one of the curses of the land. One of the nurses who is working among the women and girls in Cairo, informed us that seven out of ten babies that are born, die in infancy, while of those that remain, fully one-half are totally or partially blind. It is a common sight to see a mother with a baby a few months old, wrapped in dirty rags, whose eyes are swollen, the lids covered with running sores, which are covered with a swarm of black flies. The missionaries are establishing hospitals where the mothers may bring their babies for treatment, and receive instruction on the care of infants, that they may prevent a great deal of the blindness.

Yes, with all its modern and ancient civilization, Egypt today has millions who are living in ignorance, superstition, and heathen darkness. In spite of the fact that the land is but ten miles wide, and a railroad traverses the entire length of it, there are people living in some of the native villages, who have never seen a white face. That means that they have never heard the story of the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, for none of the black folks ever tell them the true story. We had the opportunity of visiting one of these villages while there, in company with some missionaries whom we knew. Some in the village were scoffers, adherents of the Mohammedan religion, and they made it unpleasant for us, even throwing stones at us as we departed. Others were indifferent, seemingly not caring whether Christ or Mohammed were supreme. But others were eager listeners to the old, old story, and their interest made all the jeers and abuse worth while. So into this land of darkness, the light of the gospel is shining, and therein we do rejoice.

But of course, that in which we are all most interested in Egypt, is the ancient monuments. These are scattered from one end of the land to the other, and proclaim the mighty power and grandeur of the olden empire. One of the seven wonders of the ancient world, and in fact the only one which is standing in its original form, are the Pyramids of Gizeh. Descriptions innumerable have been written about these immense piles of masonry, so that further details are unnecessary. However, I cannot refrain from mentioning the experience we had, when we visited the pyramids by moonlight. Sitting beneath these towering monuments in the pale light of the moon, seemed to lend an atmosphere of antiquity, which one who views them in broad daylight misses. Time was annihilated, and we were looking upon the Egypt of old, which was ruled by the Pharaohs. In our minds eye we could see the valley below, teeming with the life of an ancient civilization. We could imagine the abundant harvests which were gathered in the time of Joseph. Then we could see the famine conditions, when everyone must get grain from the Pharaoh. The life of Moses seemed more real to us. In the sparkling lights of the city far away, we could see the palace of the ruler.

The Sphinx, with the Pyramid of Shephren in the background. Brother Tay stands at the base of the Sphinx

The courtiers were gaily chatting in the throne room. The Pharaoh himself was there, accompanied by all the glory, splendor, and riches of his court. And there was Moses, dressed in the robes of royalty, and decked with the golden ornaments and jewelry for which the ancient Egyptians were famous. A host of memories flooded our minds as we sat there in the mellow moonlight, entranced by the spell which our ancient surroundings cast over us. It was an experience long to be remembered.

Practically all of the Egyptian architecture is on a massive scale. The base of the largest pyramid covers thirteen acres. The columns in the great hypostyle hall of the temple at Karnak are twelve feet in diameter, and some are over eighty feet tall. There are obelisks cut in one solid piece of red granite, which are ninety-seven feet high. At the Ramesseum, the mortuary temple of Rameses the Great, there is a colossal statue of the emperor, the ear of which measures three feet in height, and which is sixteen feet across the chest. It was cut from one solid piece of gray granite. Because of the absence of rain, the temples of Upper Egypt have been remarkably preserved, and the figures and hieroglyphics inscribed in their walls, still have much of the original colors left in them.

The most interesting sight in Upper Egypt, is the Valley of the Kings Tombs, with the tombs of most of the monarchs of the Middle Kingdom and Empire there. Because of the custom of burying such riches with the kings, it became increasingly difficult to keep the tomb from being robbed, and the mummies desecrated. Consequently one of the kings evolved the idea of hiding his body in a tomb in a lonely valley in the desert west of Thebes. This custom was adopted by subsequent kings, with the result that most of the greatest rulers were buried here. But of course the location of the king's tomb could not be kept secret and so in course of time practically all of these tombs were entered and plundered. Some few of the tombs escaped however, among which was the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen, commonly known as "King Tut." He was an insignificant ruler, and did not command an important place in history, but the riches among which he was buried makes us wonder what sort of burial some of the greater monarchs must have had.

Most tourists are impressed with the climate and scenery of modern Egypt. We who came from Southern California were not so remarkably impressed, because it is almost an exact duplication of what we have here. Some of our friends who had lived in the Middle West all their lives, thought that the system of irrigation there was quite unique. We could not get excited over it however, because we have been accustomed to depending upon irrigation to raise our crops all our lives. The trees and flowers, and strange varieties of fruit are a source of wonder to the dweller of Europe or Eastern United States. But they were just what we have here, and so were not so peculiar.

But to the average tourist, Egypt is the land of enchantment. It has the atmosphere of the tropics and of the orient, which cast their spell over every traveler from other climes. An Egyptian sunset is something long to be remembered. The black mass of the pyramids stands silhouetted against the glowing sky. The yellow sand of the desert stretches away in endless waves till it is lost in the violet haze of the distance. Along the historic Nile, the hush of evening prevails. All is quiet, save for the lazy flapping of the sail of some boat which is moored to the bank, or the splash of an oar, which tells of some belated boatman returning to his home. Here and there lights begin to twinkle through the branches of stately palms and feathery pepper trees which line the stream. The twilight deepens, the sounds are muffled, the stars begin to dot the cloudless, azure sky, and the quietness of a warm, semi-tropical night settles over the land. That is an Egyptian sunset.

The Duty and Joy of Personal Work

By D. A. C. Teeter

It is a question if any man has ever been converted without human instrumentality. God could easily do it without us but that is not his way. If the lost are to be reached by the Gospel of the Son of God, Christianity must be more aggressive than it has been in the past. When we as children of God, "wake up," and go to work in the vineyard, then those who are living in wickedness all about us will be reached; but not in any other way. You may go to mass meetings and discuss the question of "How to reach the masses," but when you have done with discussion you have to go back to the personal effort.

Christianity did not begin with the preaching of a powerful sermon. It began when John the Baptist saw Jesus coming and said as if speaking to himself, "Behold the Lamb of God." He was overheard by two men. One was Andrew. Andrew is scarcely known except by name; and while Peter has ever held the place of honor throughout the church, yet Andrew brought Peter to Christ. Nobody said to Andrew, "Go and look for your brother!" Andrew found Simon his brother and said, "We have found the Messiah." He did not argue with Peter. He used the argument that we can all use, if we have the love of Christ within us. He did not wait till he had been made an apostle to speak to his brother, or even till he had become one of Christ's regular disciples. He began at once, "and he brought him to Christ."

There is a lesson here for each one of us. He who knows the secret of the Lord will lead the anxious sinner away from controversies into the presence of the Lord himself. He knows what he has found; he can invite trial: he is not afraid to subject the blessed truth to the most searching analysis. He can say I have found the Christ.

The Scripture gives us many instances of the personal work of our Savior while he was on earth. He talked to the Samaritan woman at the well; he called Zacchaeus down from the tree; he explained the way of salvation to Nicodemus; the rich young ruler came to him for help. He also commands us in the New Testament to do his work, besides giving us many encouraging words. "Ye are my witnesses," "Behold I send you," "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men," immediately following these words we find "And they straightway left their nets, and followed him," showing the disciples' cheerful, prompt obedience to this command. This is a duty which should be cheerfully discharged by all Christians whether ministers or not. The net to be used is the Gospel, "the power of God unto salvation." This net must be employed constantly and diligently. An indolent, indifferent fisherman cannot expect to succeed as the faithful and persevering one does. Let the Christian fisherman rightly understand his net, and the way to use it.

There is no step which requires so much tact, courage and persistence as the successful approach to a sinner. Pray earnestly for him, go with love for him and for Christ. Tell him you long to see him saved. The soul winner must be prepared to be turned aside, sneered at, and ignored. If we are working to build up our church or our own reputation, our power is destroyed. We must live consistent, Christian lives. People will listen to those whom they love and honor.

To win souls for Christ should be the greatest ambition of every child of God. Many qualifications are desirable but few are imperative. 1st. A certainty of one's own salvation; 2nd. A consistent, Godly life; 3rd. A Spirit-filled life. Jesus will work with you. His Spirit sustains you; his wisdom guides you; his love in your heart draws men to you.

Your one business is not to be a great man, but a man-catcher—a soul-winner.

There is no joy like the joy of seeing lost souls brought to Christ. There is a joy given to one who preaches the Gospel, making no apology for his message, and believing it to be the very word of God. When we win the lost we set joy throbbing in three hearts. In the sinner's heart, in our own hearts, and joy in the great heart of God.

May the Spirit burn these truths into our hearts and minds. May we be loyal to his Word. May we reflect Jesus Christ our Lord constantly in our lives, and, constantly engage in the holy work of saving souls. What joy it will be when in that better land we see the fruitage of our toil.

"Oh, ye saints, arouse, be earnest!
Up and work while yet 'tis day;
Ere the night of death o'ertake you,
Strive for souls while yet you may."

What Tobacco Money Would Do

By Will H. Brown

In a certain town in New York, workers with and for boys and young men recognized the need of a new Y. M. C. A. building, but the estimate of $30,000 was considered beyond the reach of the community.

It happened that the Association secretary was present at a social function attended by many men from the various churches. Observing that smoking was general, he conferred with one of his friends, asking him to make an estimate as to the number of men in his church who smoked and about what their tobacco would cost them each year. He then did the same with representatives of other churches, and when he got the figures all together was amazed to find that the total reached $30,000—the exact amount needed for a new Y. M. C. A. building, which some of the leading men of the community had decided could not be afforded.

When an opportunity was given the Y. M. C. A. secretary to speak, he told of the need of a new building, and of the estimates by men of the different churches as to the tobacco bill of church members, adding: "Now, gentlemen, you see that your churches spend on tobacco in ONE YEAR as much as would give us this building—the building you all want, but think you can not afford to pay for!"

The incident was printed in "The Christian", but the outcome was not stated. It is presumable that the community continued to do business for boys and young men in the old building and that Christian men continued to waste their money for tobacco to the extent of $30,000 a year.

An incident showing how men will spend money for tobacco in preference to other things is given in a brief history of a one-dollar bill, to which a note had been attached, asking each one into whose possession it came to state how he spent it. It was used 31 times in 14 days—TEN TIMES for tobacco and only FOUR times for food.

THE SCHOOL OF SERVICE

Its richest gifts are won in loving contact with the world. Not away from the world can any soul sanctify itself. That would be a false and an unreal holiness. In the school of service we climb to the highest. We are forgiven by forgiving; we obtain mercy by showing it; we live by bestowing love; by living for others' sake, we are sanctified.—Sidney M. Berry.

REPENTANCE

To repent is to begin over again in devotion to the better thing we should have done. That is the very alpha of the Gospel. And we begin over again not with tears but with joy. The very sins and blunders of the past may be caught up by divine grace and make grace and joy to abound. That is the omega of our Gospel.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Honor to Our Fathers

A Symposium

OUR SCRIPTURE

And he blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day (Gen. 48:15). If a son shall ask bread of any of you, that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? or if he shall ask an egg, will he give him a scorpion? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him (Luke 11:11-13). And he arose and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him (Luke 15:20). The father of the righteous shall greatly rejoice; and he that begetteth a wise child shall have joy of him (Prov. 23:24). My son, keep thy father's commandment, and forsake not the law of thy mother (Prov. 6:20). For God commanded, saying, Honor thy father and mother: and he that curseth father or mother, let him die the death (Matt. 15:4).

Our Worship Program

A DEVOTIONAL READING OF ROMANS (Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MAKING VAIN THE LAW—Rom. 2:17-24.

Of what value is the Jew's written law, if he does not attempt to obey it; he is no better than the Gentile who sins without the law. So the Christian, who boasts of his knowledge of the Gospel but does not practice it, is but a stumbling block to the uninstructed.

TUESDAY

FUTILITY OF CIRCUMCISION—Rom. 2:25-29.

Circumcision has value only for those who obey the law; it can never atone for lack of moral and spiritual improvement. Those who obey the great Moral Law, though Gentiles, are accounted more truly circumcised than are the Jews.

WEDNESDAY

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED—Rom. 3:1-8.

Though the moral Gentile is better than the immoral Jew, yet is not the Jew without certain advantages, e. g., he has the promises of God which remain true even though man is false. So has the church member the advantage over the non-church member, though this is not in any way an excuse for his unfaithfulness.

THURSDAY

HUMAN GUILT UNIVERSAL—Rom. 3:9-20.

The whole world has sinned; all have failed to attain righteousness. By no self-effort or good works can man save himself. A new way must be found.

FRIDAY

THE WAY OUT—Rom. 3:21-26.

There is offered "a righteousness which comes from God but embraces man, by no deserts of his but as a free gift on the part of God", and is appropriated by faith in Christ.

SATURDAY

ALL ALIKE BEFORE GOD—Rom. 3:27-31.

There is therefore no such thing as human merit or personal claims in obtaining righteousness, for "there is no merit in faith", and all stand before God on the same footing.

SUNDAY

ABRAHAM RIGHTEOUS THROUGH FAITH—Rom. 4:1-8.

"He, like the Christian," says Sanday, "was declared righteous, not on account of his works—as something earned, but by the free gift of God in response to his faith." No one therefore is actually righteous, that is, has earned righteousness; it is pronounced in response to faith; it is the gift of God—G. S. B.

Godly Fathers, a Noble Heritage

Godly fathers are a noble heritage; in the first place, because the good qualities which they have received pass on to their sons and daughters. They are generally strong in body and mind. They have good habits and ways of thinking, and consequently, they are generally prosperous in life.

In the second place, Godly fathers are a noble heritage because they provide good conditions for their children. The atmosphere of their homes is Godly. The children are shielded from many temptations and bad influences. They are given opportunities of being true children of God and of enjoying God's blessings on earth.

And in the third place, Godly fathers are a noble heritage because God's promises extend from them through countless generations. "Blessed is the man who feareth Jehovah—his seed shall be mighty upon earth. The generation of the upright shall be blessed" (Ps. 112:1, 2). Mary, the mother of Jesus, sang: "His mercy is unto generation and generation on them that fear him" (Luke 1:50). The promises made to Abraham extended to Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and unto the generations of today (Gen. 48:15). That alone should prove that Godly fathers are indeed a most noble heritage.

ELEANOR YODER.

A Father's Provision

In three verses of Luke's Gospel (11:11-13). We have set forth the natural disposition of the father heart to provide the needs and wants of his offspring. Jesus uses this disposition by way of comparison to show how willing and anxious the heavenly Father is to give the Holy Spirit to them who ask it. The spirit of care and concern of earthly fathers is not depreciated, in the least, but is recognized as being most natural and proper. It is, in fact, ennobled and emphasized by the comparison, and has divine notice and approval. It is true to the relationship, for everywhere we find our noble fatherhood characterized by this disposition; he is continually seeking the best interests of his children, providing for them the necessities and comforts of life to the very limit of his ability. While it is natural for him to do this, sons and daughters should not receive all his provision and sacrifice with indifference and as a matter of course, but with gratitude deeply felt and sincerely expressed. We receive these blessings with too much thoughtlessness. Let us be truly thankful to our fathers for their kindly care and provision, which they exercise over us, and which remind us of our heavenly Father's infinite wisdom and goodness and willingness to give the Holy Spirit for the asking.

W. H. SCHAFFER, JR.

A Father's Compassion

A mother's love and a father's compassion are the golden bands which bind the home together. They are the mirror in which sons and daughters envision the great heart of God, their heavenly Father. An earthly father's compassion is a measured representation of our heavenly Father's compassion. An earthly father would share the sorrows, the disappointments, the failures of his child. He would save him from disrepute, from despondency, from dishonor. His hopes for the future of his child are a useful building, grand in structure, practical in arrangement. Should the youth part from this hope, the father's heart is wounded, yet he watches with tender and yearning steadiness the every step, with the still greater hope that he may not stray long. Should the youth turn and venture toward the right, he finds a harbor in the father's compassion. This compassion is exemplified in the attitude of the father at the return of the prodigal son (Luke 15:20), a compassion that sympathizes, a compassion that loves, a compassion that forgives.

HELEN GARBER.

The Obedience Due Fatherhood

In various places throughout the Old Testament we find the duty enjoining to obey our heavenly Father. We recognize him as the giver of all things and in return endeavor to obey him as a token of our thankfulness, as well as because of the obligation that flows with the relationship. So it is too that our earthly father should be recognized because of his goodness to us and his providential care; gratitude should constrain us to show recognition by our obedience. Our course obedience goes to him naturally because of our relationship to him, but more than that should be our respect for all that he means to us. He protects and sustains life. He labors hard to provide for our needs and we should give our full obedience to him. Even though he is often separated from us much of the time by reason of his daily toil, his heart is in the home and his interest and planning is always being exercised for each one of us his children. We cannot get along without his fatherly support and guidance. And we should give heed to his wishes and instruction, to his counsel and direction. It is not only a divine obligation, but a moral one as well to respect and honor fatherhood by our obedience.

DORIS STOUT.

Honor for Fatherhood a Divine Decree

Father has ever been the head of the household, the provider, the spiritual advisor, the one to whom the family looks as an example, and it is far from strange that God should exalt the station of Fatherhood by making it worthy of honor. So important it was, both in relation to the members of the family as well as the father himself, that the Word tells us the extreme penalty of the law was exacted in the case of one who shunned this supreme duty. Certainly God has not exacted a troublesome or unreasonable return for the sacrifice and patience in the love of fathers for their children, because the devotion itself involves honor and love in return. When we honor our fathers we also honor God, for it is our heavenly Father who has required of us the execution of this commandment.

MYRA HELM.

OUR PRAYER

Holy Father, we thank thee for the blessed gift of fatherhood, as it manifests itself in the noblest, strongest and most gentle of men. Forgive us for our thoughtlessness and ingratitude, and the many times we have made their burdens of service and sacrifice heavier than was needful. Give us the spirit of loving obedience, godly reverence and genuine appreciation to be manifested towards our worthy fathers continually. May we cherish and magnify their virtues and condone and minimize their faults. And wherein we have been blessed with the noble heritage of godly fathers, may we prize it as the greatest fortune, and may we treasure their teachings and emulate their example. And may they be to us constant reminders of the infinite wisdom, inexhaustible provision, compassionate care and ever-present help of our heavenly Father.—G. S. B.

I WILL GO WITH MY FATHER A-PLOUGHING

I will go with my father a-ploughing
To the green field by the sea,
And the rooks and the crows and the seagulls
Will come flocking after me.
I will sing to the patient horses
With the lark in the white of the air,
And my father will sing the plough-song
That blesses the cleaving share.

I will go with my father a-sowing
To the red field by the sea,
And the rooks and the gulls and the starlings
Will come flocking after me.
I will sing to the striding sowers
With the finch on the greening sloe,
And my father will sing the seed-song
That only the wise men know.

I will go with my father a-reaping
To the brown field by the sea,
And the geese and the crows and the children
Will come flocking after me.
I will sing to the tan-faced reapers
With the wren in the heat of the sun,
And my father will sing the scythe-song
That joys for the harvest done. —Selected.

Abraham and the Strangers

Scripture Lesson—18:1-8; 16-19.

Devotional Reading—Psalms 133.

Golden Text All the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him. Gen. 18:18.

LESSON LIGHTS

"Why God Chose Abraham"

For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him and they shall keep the way of the Lord. When God would start a nation he made the home life the deciding question, and selected Abraham as the foundation on the ground set forth in my text; because God knew him that he would command his children and his household after him, and that God would therefore be able "to bring upon Abraham that which he had spoken of him." God's ideal nation starts with the home, with the father of the home "walking in the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment", and his children and his household following after him.

Home authority and home example are expressed in the words, "He will command his children and his household after him." The most dangerous sign of the times is the neglect of home life and the growing disrespect of children for parents. I was in a home sometime ago where a father asked a little six-year-old child to shut the door. She replied: "I won't." He said: "Poor Papa will have to shut the door himself." She replied: "I don't care; I won't do it." And I saw poor papa get up and shut the door. Having been an old school teacher, I want to borrow that child for about fifteen minutes; but upon mature reflection, I decided that her father was the fellow that needed lending. No man can bring a greater curse upon law and order and a good civilization than to turn such creatures out into the world. Uncontrolled at six and outlaws at twenty.

Mrs. Wesley who gave to the world such a noble family, the lives of whom will bless the world for generations to come, heeded the command of God in the rearing of her nineteen children. Her first step, she says, was to get complete control of the child.—Dr. George R. Stewart.

God's Covenant with Abraham

A great blessing and honor came to Abraham just before our lesson (Gen. 17:1-27), nothing less than his admission into a special covenant with the Almighty. He had reached the advanced age of ninety-nine, and Sarai, his beloved wife, and had no son. The Lord appeared to him, in some way not described, and made him a wonderful promise. It was a covenant; that is, Abram had a share in its obligations as well as Jehovah. "Walk before me, and be thou perfect"—that was the patriarch's part. For his part God promised that he should be "the father of a multitude of nations," that Canaan should belong to him and to his remotest descendants, and that Jehovah should be his God and the God of his posterity. The solemn rite of circumcision was established in token of this covenant, and in further commemoration of it the patriarch's name was changed from Abram, "exalted father," to Abraham, "father of a multitude," and the name of his wife from Sarai to Sarah. Both names mean "princess," the form being varied. We are now to study God's gracious repetition of his covenant promise under circumstances rendering it unusually vivid.—Illustrated Quarterly.

The Trials of Abraham's Faith

1. How many trials of faith the man of faith endured. "Joseph Hall counts up ten trials through which God saw good to pass to his friend." The trials increase the faith, and give power to the example of the faithful through all ages. Abraham was being trained up in God's school, whose lessons were sometimes very hard to learn.

2. But note also that these trials occupied but small part of his life. The most of his life was peaceful and prosperous. And after each hard lesson, through trial there came other lessons, new visions of hope, new and larger promises, closer communion with God.—Ibid.

Oriental Hospitality

"It seems quite out of keeping with modern Occidental notions for a woman of Sarah's high distinction, the wife of a powerful chief, to engage in this menial service, but among those who dwell in tents the wife of the proudest chief is not above superintending the preparation of the bread, or even kneading and baking it with her own hands (see 2 Sam. 13:5-10)." "The account of Abraham's entertaining the three angels present a perfect picture of the manner in which a modern Bedouin sheikh receives travelers arriving at his encampment. He immediately orders his wife or woman to make bread; slaughters a sheep or some other animal, and dresses it in haste; and bringing milk or any other provisions that he may have ready at hand, with the bread and the meat which he has dressed, sets them before his guests. If these be persons of high rank, he stands by them while they eat, as Abraham did in the case above alluded to."—Lane's "Modern Egyptians." This book was written many years ago and Alice D. Adams says, "It would be interesting to know just how far modern ways have entered into this characteristic of the East since the time of the world war, which has altered so many customs of 'the unchanging East.'"

Occidental Hospitality

What a contrast in this eager hospitality of Abraham to the reluctant and sluggish way in which many in modern days entertain when they must, their friends and acquaintances, letting strangers go past without any attention at all. Abraham is so afraid that the strangers would continue on their journey, and perhaps give to some other more fortunate person the opportunity to minister to them, that he does not wait for them to ask for entertainment, or even for a chance to rest, but begs them for the privilege of entertaining them, and hastens to provide the meal that they may not be delayed in their journey, and perhaps get impatient and leave him. This would be the universal feeling if we realized the joy of hospitality and the great gains that come from it; we should seek the chances for it as ardently as now too often we seek to avoid it.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Our Angels

"Angels do not come to us with snow-white pinions, they come to us as common men or women. How many a boy has lived to say of his mother, 'She was the minister of God to me!' How often a friend or a brother or a sister is the messenger in the heat of the day to us! Mr. Spurgeon, in one of his letters, wrote of his wife, 'She has been as an angel of God to me.' Angels wear the garb of ordinary mortals, but they shall make life different to us for evermore."

"He Walked with God"

"We are accustomed to this phrase, 'He walked with God,' of such a worthy as Abraham, and we recognize its fitness; but the converse phrase is one we do not often consider, 'God walked with him.' ... God offers to every believer the same privileges and enjoyments. There is no reason, out of ourselves, why each one of us should not be styled with equal emphasis 'the friend of God.' Our God walks daily with us and offers us all the treasures of his confidence. It is only for us to throw away the worldliness that weakens our faith and obscures our view of God."—Howard Crosby.

The Junior

By Ernest J. Chave

Designed to interpret the life of the child to the adult teacher, Dr. Chave's new book, "The Junior", has received wide commendation since its publication three months ago. In its current number "The International Journal of Religious Education" comments upon the unique contribution of this book in a one thousand word article. The following statement is the evaluation placed upon Dr. Chave's work by the "Watchman Examiner."

"This is one of the most excellent of recent publications in the department of religious education. The style is homely and direct, the method is thoroughly scientific, and the subject matter consists of careful and first-hand studies of the life-situations of children between the ages of nine and eleven. Sunday school teachers and all church workers, who guide the ways of children of those ages, will find real values within the covers of this little book."

How I Remember Christian Endeavor

By Rev. Orvis F. Jordan

In a central Illinois village thirty-five years ago I first came into contact with Christian Endeavor. For a quarter of a century now I have been a pastor. The other day as I looked down out of the gallery on six thousand young people in a Christian Endeavor convention, I had a sudden recollection of how it felt to be in that youthful crowd as one who really belongs, and not as an observer. Does it mean the same to this new generation to be banded together in a great organization with boundless enthusiasm and devotion to a great cause? Is Christian Endeavor doing the same thing to young people that it used to do? The young reader must answer after I tell you what it has meant in my life.

I think we should have been called Intermediates if that kind of classification had obtained back in those days. Most of us were new converts in the church, and we had for a pastor a young man just out of college, who did not seem very much older than the rest of us. We had a feeling that he had come to a very difficult field in our new little church. We were determined to help him all that we could.

Long before they had ever begun to talk about "the project method" in religious education he had the idea that young people ought to have something to do. We hunted for quite a while for some task that would be peculiarly our own. One day some one noticed that we had burial customs not up to those in other communities. It became the task of Christian Endeavorers to line the grave for each funeral. Instead of the bare earthen sides that looked so terrible to the mourners, henceforth in that community there was a lining of evergreen boughs. It took a good deal of time to get the graves ready, but it soon came to be recognized as Christian Endeavor's service in that community. I doubt whether very many societies could report so strange a "project" as that.

I am sure I can say that most of my great projects for life were born in a Christian Endeavor atmosphere. Though I lived in the open country and had never dared to lift my voice in public, one day I ventured a little "testimony" on one of the topics being discussed. Not long afterwards my pastor asked me whether I had ever thought of going away to college. I never had. The road seemed too long and difficult. If I had ever thought of it, I had dismissed the thought again. But in a Christian Endeavor meeting a Christian minister saw something in me which made him suggest a larger life than I had dared to plan for myself.

It was in much the same way that I came to enter the Christian ministry. Made bolder by encouragement, I had continued to talk in Christian Endeavor meetings until the startling suggestion was made to me one day by the minister that I write a sermon. It took six weeks to write one ten minutes long.

I know now that it was only a schoolboy's essay. But by the effort of doing this thing I began to find the confidence that one day I might do it well.

Nor shall I ever forget the friends that I made back in those days. Friends make or break one. There are friends, so called, who fill one's mind with images of evil. There are friends that inspire and ennoble. It does not trouble me now to know that some of the young men who sit on the back seat at the Christian Endeavor meeting came to see the girls that are there. Boys are not the worst sort that go there to find a girl. And the friendships made in that way are apt to bring out the best in young life. Yes, there was romance, too, in our little society. It would be nice to report that I found my future wife there, but I didn't. But in the days when

Of all the torch bearers that we have studied, none, I imagine, is better liked by boys and girls, than the one we have this time. Every boy and girl likes to read about David. There were a lot of qualities which David possessed that helped to make his torch burn brightly. Some of these were courage, forgiveness, kindness and tenderness. His quality of courage was shown when he faced the great giant Goliath, and at many other times in his life. If you do not know the story of the boy David and the great giant Goliath, read it in 1 Samuel 17. His qualities of forgiveness, kindness and tenderness were displayed in his treatment of King Saul when King Saul was extremely unkind.

Once there was a boy about fifteen years of age. This boy had red hair and was very good looking. This boy's father was a farmer and the boy helped with the work. His special job was watching the sheep. For hours he would stay out on the hills with only the sheep and the great out-of-doors for company. He liked to think about the world and the things that other people are doing. Besides this there was another thing that he liked exceedingly much to do. He liked to take his harp along. Do you Juniors, know what a harp looks like? The harp which this boy liked to play on was not like the ones you have seen. It was very small and had only a few strings. The player could carry it much more easily than the harps that you have seen can be carried. The boy learned to play so well that one time the king of the land heard about him and sent for him to play at his court. The king was very ill tempered but whenever he felt real bad he had the boy play for him and that made him feel better. Just think how much courage it took for the boy to stand before this big king and play for him when he was angry. One time the king was in such a wicked state of mind that he threw a javelin at the boy but luckily for the boy, it did not hit him. Just think what a kind spirit this boy must have had to play for a man when the man was so ill tempered as that.

Have you guessed who this boy was? He was David, of course. Thus we see that David displayed his tender spirit by making soothing music for Saul. Do you remember what happened later in the life of David? After David killed Goliath, the people praised him greatly. Then King Saul got angry at David and David had to flee. But, God took care of the young man and several times he even had a chance to kill Saul. One time when Saul was seeking David to kill him, he, that is, Saul, sat down in a cave very near to David and David could have killed him very easily. Would you expect a boy with such a tender heart as David had shown with his sweet music, to be cruel enough to kill the man he had played for. Of course he did not. Thus he again showed his kindness and forgiveness.

Do you take any kind of music? Well, if you do do you not think that it would be nice to practice a lot and become skilled like the boy, David? You do not need to practice out on the hills all by yourself but you can practice just as hard at home. It is nice to be able to play. Maybe you have some other talent. Perhaps you particularly like to work on some subject that you have in school, if so why not work real hard in it and become skilled so that you can do one thing well besides doing the rest of your work to the best of your ability.

David's torch must have been a very bright one, don't you think? Just think of the qualities that lighted it. There was so much courage that he was willing to face a great giant, so much tenderness and kindness that he played for a king who was terribly angry and he soothed this king. Then there was so much forgiveness, that he did not kill this same king though he had several opportunities when the king was trying to kill him. Let us try to add these qualities to our torches.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

"The harvest is past, the summer is ended and we are not saved." This must be the complaint of many thousands who have allowed the opportunity to accept salvation go by without accepting it.

In Argentina the summers are very warm and at the close come a series of festivities which greatly hinder evangelization. Now the schools have opened and the weather is pleasant. We are pressing forward with both difficulties and encouragements but always happy to be permitted to hold the Gospel light in a dark and dangerous place where many souls are going down to ruin for lack of it.

Since writing last it has been my privilege to baptize four converts in Carlota and two in Rio Cuarto. In Carlota there are several other candidates awaiting. One of these has a nice front room in a central location which we are using for Sunday school and hope soon to have regular weekly meetings during the week, as Brother Reina will go over from Alejandro, twenty-five miles away. Some of the children who began to attend the mission when Brother Bock began work eight years ago, are still faithful and are helping in the work. Brother Reina is a studious, energetic pastor and will doubtless be successful in Carlota as he is in Alejandro.

Of the two baptized in Rio Cuarto one was converted in Alejandro through the work of Brother Egea but now lives near Villa Mercedes and came nearly a hundred miles to be baptized. The other is a man who formerly had a little chapel in his house filled with images and other things for Roman Catholic services, but when he was converted he burned all these and offered the room for a branch Sunday school.

We celebrated the Lord's supper here recently but the Easter rain spoiled the attendance. People here have neither raincoats or rubbers, and many of them live out where there are no sidewalks and little light.

Sister Nielsen has organized a Junior Endeavor Society which is proving a success. It has meetings at the same hour as the Senior society on Thursday evenings and the children enjoy the work very much.

In Buenos Aires the mission has been moved to within two squares of the lot which we own in Flores on Avenida Campana and the believers in the former district will be cared for by a weekly prayer meeting. The move was caused by a desire to have our main work in the district where we hope to build, and also because two other missions have recently opened in the other district so that our labors there are not needed so much as before.

Brother Sickel and family are now on their way home on furlough. They have been faithful missionaries and leave with the love and esteem of all. We pray that they may be greatly used in the homeland to arouse a greater interest in the needs of foreign missions. Brother Adolfo Zeche will work with Brother Yett and family in Huinea Renanco for this year until Brother Yett can master the language.

The Bible Coach is still idle, but we have confidence that the Easter offering will enable us to start it out again soon. We need both money and well prepared workers. Pray that they may be given.

"The Children Who Were Thrown Away"

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

A Story of Life among the Aluru— (A Tribe of Nilotic Negroes)

Ex. 21:6. But if the servant shall plainly say, "I love my master, I will not go out free, then his master shall bring him unto God, and shall bring him to the door or unto the doorpost, and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl, and he shall serve him forever."

CHAPTER III

In Africa the birth of twins is surrounded by omens and superstitions. Ofttimes one twin is destroyed, sometimes both, and in some tribes the mother as well must die. But in this tribe it was usually considered a most fortunate event. The mother of twins need not work for a month. She receives presents from the villagers, and has a diet of meat, unheard of luxury for a woman. But Akana's triumph was nullified, for the law on castouts applies to twins. She looked lovingly at them, a boy and a girl. She named them not. Akwato, the old woman who had officiated at Ozwoko's and Oizo's births, had officiated also at theirs, and it was she who, in spite of the tears of a mother who dared make no protestation, carried the twins to the jungle. The mother prayed, Oh that they might indeed be redeemed before they were devoured. Onou, her brother, hyena by name, but a child of God, would have saved them from the real hyena, the scavenger of the forest. But the rescuer must be a woman.

Long hours of agony went by. Then came a knock at the door of the little hut. A faint cry was heard and then another—"Inru" she called—"Come in." "Ira" was the answer,—"I come." The door opened and old Ikodi entered. Ikodi was the village servant. None had sought her hand in marriage, and she had offered herself to the village chief, who had accepted her, paying her father a small dowry, and treating her more or less as a slave. Her name means rain, and she was an oft-quoted example of how unlucky it is to give a child a lucky name. What could be a greater blessing than rain, and who could have been more accursed than Ikodi? The mother's heart was filled with an incomplete and trembling joy. Ikodi had saved the children. Was it for long? Would the father redeem them? She waited. Otolo came in at last. One glance included them all. Ikodi with the children, and his wife. With the lovelight shining in her eyes, Akana's countenance was transformed. Otolo drew from his girdle a small lelo (awl) and pala (knife). Against the doorpost of the hut he placed the pala. Ikodi understood. In a moment she had placed the infant boy's ear against the pala and Otolo "bored his ear through with an awl," saying, "I name you Owiti," the boy who has been thrown away, and redeemed." The ceremony was repeated with the infant girl, she being given the same name, save for the substitution of the feminine prefix "a" for the masculine prefix "o" (Awiti). They were the boy and the girl who had been thrown away and redeemed. Saved by Ikodi, herself a type of One who humbled himself for us. Redeemed by the earthly father, not knowing yet the One whose type he by that act became.

Small wonder that the Aluru turn to Christ. They have the very customs of the Jews, they understand the meaning of propitiation, and they have the types of God's manifestation to our fallen race through his Son.

What joy to have been used in the years gone by in bringing some among them to repentance!

GROWTH OF EVANGELICAL CHURCHES IN SOUTH AMERICA

Evangelically speaking, the largest numerical advance in South America, both actual and proportionate, has been made in Brazil. Argentine and Chile follow next in order. In Brazil the total evangelical community has more than doubled since 1916, the communicant church membership has increased more than one third, the number of organized churches more than one half, and the national workers have grown nearly one hundred per cent and the ordained Brazilian ministers thirty-three per cent. Forty-five new central or residence stations have been established. Other places of preaching and worship have grown from 364 to 1,765.

WE THANK THEE, FATHER

We children thank thee, Father dear,
 For all the blessings of the year;
 For singing birds and blossoms sweet;
 For sun that gives us light and heat;
 For silver stars, green grass, and trees.
 The world is fair because of these.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MAURERTOWN

Rev. Shaver Operated On

Rev. E. B. Shaver, a minister of the Brethren church and the father of the Brethren church in the Shenandoah Valley, at this time pastor of the Brethren church at Harrisonburg underwent a cystotomy operation at the Rockingham Memorial Hospital at Harrisonburg Tuesday at 11 o'clock, four large stones weighing 5 1-2 ounces were removed from the bladder. One of them was as large as a medium sized hen egg, the other three were some smaller. The operation was successful. Rev. Shaver had consulted specialists at Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, Charlottesville and Buffalo, New York, to determine the trouble. The operation was performed by Dr. J. H. Deyerle of Harrisonburg assisted by his son, Dr. D. L. Shaver of our town. Rev. Shaver is 83 years old and widely known in the Valley and throughout the brotherhood of the Brethren church, being one of the men left who organized the church at Ashland, Ohio in 1883. Despite his age and his bladder trouble he has been active in his church work. The week prior to Easter he held a meeting at Bethlehem church and preached there last Sunday morning and night. He is an indefatigable worker for his church and churches in general and a fundamentalist of the first order. His son, W. E. Shaver and grandson, Duke L. Shaver accompanied Dr. D. L. Shaver to Harrisonburg Tuesday to be near while the operation was being performed.—Shenandoah Herald, Woodstock, Virginia.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The County Sunday School Association held a conference for the Young People's division in the College buildings last Saturday. Some 100 young people were in attendance. Professor J. A. Garber, Professor and Mrs. Puerbaugh, and Miss Atherton, director of Physical Education for Women in the College, were among the leaders.

Dr. Shively preached in our church at Springfield Centre over the week and expects the last of the week to go to Barnesville, (O.) to speak to the high school and from there to Asontown, where Brother Bell will be in the canvass.

Brother Horlacher represented the College May 7th at the inauguration of the new president of Temple University, at Philadelphia.

The New Coach

The College has employed Mr. Walter Peiffer, now of Bucyrus high school, to have charge of all the athletic interests of the College for the coming year and also to instruct in Physical Education. To get a man of the right sort for our kind of a school is far from being an easy task. He must be a member of some church, not use tobacco, be such a man as will be an example and inspiration to the men of the school and at the same time be a three sport man, viz., football, basketball, and baseball.

Mr. Peiffer meets all these requirements and more. He has served over seas, has been in attendance at the University of Illinois, Michigan, and Ohio State. He has had five years of successful experience in coaching and Physical Education work. He is married and will move here within the near future.

Mr. William Meredith, the present director, has not yet announced his plans for next year.

Professor Arthur DeLozier has charge of the pulpit in Johnstown First church in the absence of Brother Ashman who is now on the Coast. Brother Ashman paid the College a pleasant visit enroute.

Professor McClain has charge of the pulpit at Dayton over the week ends while Dr. Bell is in the field.

Educational Day

This will fall on the first Sunday in June, the 6th. It may seem as if this ought not to be taken up this year as Dr. Bell is visiting the various churches in the interests of the Endowment but the Board at its annual meeting last March authorized me to go forward with it as usual for the following reasons:

1. Dr. Bell will not cover the entire brotherhood yet for a long time.

2. There are some, even in the churches canvassed, who have no other means of supporting the College except by this offering.

3. We ought to have an Educational Day anyway when the needs of Christian Education are set forth and likely young people turned towards Ashland. The more people give to and think about Christian education, the more they will be interested.

So it seems altogether advisable to give the churches the usual opportunity to support the College and Seminary.

All money received from this source is applied to the deficit on the new building, so that it is not wasted and disseminated but becomes a permanent asset.

The usual printed matter will be sent out.

EATON, OHIO

Dear Evangelist Readers: I thought you might be interested in knowing something about our movements in the last few weeks. We have been with the Pleasant Hill, Ohio, Brethren in a meeting for almost three weeks closing Thursday night, April 22. The visible results when we closed were 15 baptized and four reconsecrations.

This was a hard fought battle for the adversary the Devil, was on the ground, some bad weather, and sickness, even the preacher got sick. The pastor, Brother Marlin was threatened with chronic appendicitis, and on the second Sunday, when we needed to climax our meeting and when everything had been planned for a big day, Brother Marlin was in bed all day and had to send for a doctor. I was almost down with a bad cold, but praise the Lord, we went over the day with a good meeting, and a real revival spirit present.

Brother Marlin is a product of Pleasant Hill and is largely a self made man, being a fine Bible student, and a good yoke-fellow for the Lord.

We had our home with Brother and Sister Marlin, and a fine home it was, too. Thank you again, Brother and Sister Marlin and Pleasant Hill Brethren.

The church cooperated in a fine fashion and the other churches closed two Sunday nights and came in a body.

This is one of the old churches of the Miami Valley, almost 50 years old, having been built before the divide. But why the divide? Well that has been fought out long ago. Now how may we get together again is the question. We do not need to forget our little differences for there are very few any more, and what are should never be mentioned again. Why not pool all our interests along the financial line, and get together with the Church of the Brethren and reorganize into one conference?

Perhaps call a committee of one hundred—50 from each group, let them meet for a year or two, then bring a suggestion of some plan. I have thought some along the line of getting together and have spoken to some of the Church of the Brethren folks.

S. LOWMAN.

GRATIS, OHIO

Quite a period of time has passed since the Evangelist family have heard of the work at Gratis. But our silence does not mean that we are inactive, rather we are very busy. Since our pastor and family came to us last June we are very busy.

Rev. Starn organized a Christian Endeavor Society, a Junior choir and the mid-week prayer service and Bible Study.

He has been teaching Old Testament history two periods each week in the High School and a Community Old Testament History class one evening each week this winter.

We have a very good Bible school, the attendance not so large as we would like, but are laying special plans to enlarge our regular attendance. Our W. M. S. is a strong organization and always busy.

In January, our pastor held a three weeks' evangelistic meeting, which resulted in two confessions. But who can measure the good accomplished, even though the visible results are small?

We presented a fine sacred Easter pageant, "The Living Christ."

The last Saturday evening of each month is Social night. A splendid program is arranged by the various Sunday school classes, and refreshments served. The Social evenings are greatly enjoyed.

We have just had the privilege of enjoying the splendid program given by the Ashland College Girls' Glee Club. It was indeed a great pleasure and privilege to have them visit our church, and we hope to have them come again into the Miami Valley churches.

Brother Starn has enjoyed the honor of being Preble County's delegate to the World's Religious Education Conference, at Birmingham, Alabama. It was the privilege of his people to hear the splendid report of this Conference, at the regular evening services Sunday.

Pray for us, that we may ever be found faithful in the work of our Master.

MRS. N. G. KIMMEL.

MARTINSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA

The work at both Martinsburg and McKee is moving along very nicely. We closed a three weeks' meeting at McKee about two weeks ago, with 19 confessions, and received eighteen into the church. The interest was fine considering the weather. This makes 24 received into the churches since December, and one reclaimed.

We had another surprise in March, this time from the McKee church, with a lot of good things to eat, for which we pastors are always grateful.

We are planning a week's meeting in May, in the Martinsburg church, to precede our communion service on the 23rd.

J. S. COOK.

BEAVER CITY, NEBRASKA

Out of the cold and snow of the East to the warmth and dry of the West we journeyed in March to Beaver City. They had no rain since last August and the sun shone brightly until you could bask in it and the wind blew of course and every day I got a bigger coat of tan. However, we did have a genuine dust storm or two, and the last week of the meeting two good rains. The meeting has been reported numerically to date with the promise of others who like the pastor have been incapacitated by the "flu." Brother Whitted was left with a weak heart after his "flu" attack, yet he led the singing every service and stayed right on the job although I see he was sick again for two weeks following the close of the meeting. Now ten or a dozen seem like few additions to the church but in this instance quality took the place of quantity and there were added to the church those that will be exceedingly helpful to it.

I like the little city of Beaver, its broad streets and wide expanse. In this uncrowded city live as fine, big hearted people as I have met for a long time. The spirit of the West is a thing in itself; having been reared out there, it got into my veins again. Here I met old time friends of my father when he used to go out to Norton County, Kansas just across the state line to preach in an early day, in short, it just seemed we didn't need to get acquainted with the good folk.

Brother Whitted and his faithful wife are the esteemed leaders of this fine group. They are most comfortably located just across the street from the church in a splendid new parsonage. Yes, the pleasure was entirely mutual to work with Brother Whitted and I hope sometime to be able to repeat. I lived with the preacher and his family and we had days of fine fellowship together. I shall always remember them and the good folk at Beaver City for their fine hospitality and their generosity. Beaver has my thanks and good wishes.

Rittman, Ohio

This was but a two weeks' meeting and in almost every instance it is not time enough to conduct a thorough campaign. The first week we were alone, a stranger in a strange land. The second week the pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Cashman, were with us and I consider we had very fine results; four families being received into the work there, practically all of them having been church folk in other denominations. This is an indication that we are gaining ground and are attracting the attention of some good folk at Rittman. But in the meantime there are some very peculiar problems there. I first of all will say that it is a very fertile field, made up of church folk now not affiliated anywhere. Then of course there are those who never made the great confession. But this work can not carry on and prosper by absent treatment. Here I should like to say that I can not see how Brother Cashman can give as much time to the work and at the same time carry on his college work as he does, and furthermore he and with the excellent help of Mrs. Cashman are doing probably more than most students would do. But Rittman needs of course a resident pastor.

Then as I think it over I believe the work there is being stultified by the kindness of the shops that pay practically all of their running expenses. The people are not learning to give and work and appreciate the opportunity they have as if they were actually thrown on their own resources. Some have the very bad habit of being too critical of their pastor, not only the present one but his predecessor and this does not reflect creditably upon these critics. Of course there are fine folk here, and so far as their treatment of me is concerned it was most royal and loyal from their hospitality to their offering. I had a most excellent home with the Slaubaughs and shall not soon forget these fine people and their kindness. I trust Rittman will get a vision of her opportunity and press faithfully onward.

B. T. BURNWORTH, Ashland, Ohio.

St. John—Four

By Mrs. Grace Boyer

While from Judea going to sunny Galilee, Our Master tired and hungry and thirsty as could be,
Sat at a well near Sychar, while waiting for his friends,
Who to the village journeyed for necessary viands.

While Jesus sat a-resting, a Samaritan woman came;

To her class of people there wasn't any fame;
So when Jesus kindly spoke to her,
Her heart within her quite did stir.
"Give me to drink", the Savior said
To the woman who curiously raised her head.
"Why ask of me whom Jews despise
And are so worthless in their eyes?"
"Who it is, if thou would'st know,
Thou'dst ask of him and he'd bestow
Water for which you'd never thirst,
For this you surely would ask first."
"You've not to draw and the well is deep,
From whence this water of which you speak?"

How glad was she the fact to learn
No longer to the well she'd have to turn.
If for this water she'd ask first
No more on earth she'd ever thirst.
"Go tell thy husband what you learn,
Go tell it quick and then return."
"I have no husband," she replied,
Her fallen spirit then he spied.
"You've rightly said, 'No husband I've'"
But this I know that you've had five.
The one who now abides with you
Is not your husband fond and true."

"Why he's a prophet surely come

To know what in the past I've done.
To worship, tell me which is right,
Jerusalem or Gerizim's height?"

"God's a spirit," Jesus said,
"And by the spirit you'll be led.
Any place a temple is
If in the heart the Savior lives."
The disciples came and wondered much
Why he should sit and talk to such.
The woman left and quite forgot
To take along her water pot.

To the village now she quickly went
With a message of joy from the Master sent "Come, see a man who knows my past, He'll give us water that will last."
The disciples had with meat returned,
The food they offered Jesus spurned.
They wondered much why he'd not eat;
Had other strangers brought him meat?
"I've meat to eat ye know not of,
My heart is filled with pity and love
For those who grope in dark despair
And know not of the Savior's care."

The woman with friends has now returned.
Of life giving water they had learned.
The stranger who gave it they wanted to see
For a long time with him they wanted to be
So he tarried and taught them of the gift,
From sin and darkness it would lift.
Now this is the story of St. John four.
Open your Bible and read some more,
Of Jesus' healing a nobleman's son.
To the seventh hour the fever had run.
They suddenly left for Jesus did say
"Thy son liveth, so go thy way."

Servants had come, their hearts filled with joy,

To tell the nobleman of his boy.
He asked what time the fever did leave;
When told the hour, he did believe That the Son of God he surely must be
To remove the fever and spare him to me.
His whole house believed from that very day
And started out on the heavenly way.

my ideals of girls were being forced I knew the kind that prayed. And I am sure that ever since my opinion of womanhood has been the better for that.

What a stormy time youth is! There are temptations and disappointments and contrivances. To make the right decisions for ten years in early adolescence is to succeed in life. And to make the wrong once is to fail. Out away from the parental roof there were temptations that reached the soul. I remember them even now with a kind of terror, and shiver a little to think what might have happened. My promise I had given in Christian Endeavor, my sense of obligation to other young people who would be disgraced by my downfall, helped to keep me from the many evils. Religion in a form that young people can take is surely the greatest moral force there is in young life. The commandment must be backed up by prayer and religious devotion.

Disappointments came, too. It is one thing to form an ambition and quite another thing to persevere in it. I had formed my program for life, but it seemed for awhile that I had been wrong. But I stopped asking, "Can I do it?" I learned to say, "I must do it." The handicaps became hurdles. Had been less surely built upon the solid rock of Christ's religion, I know my life would have been totally different.

And the controversies! Young life is so very impetuous. And I encountered enmity as I went along. There are people who make their petty programmes of revenge the chief business of life. It is one of the ways to lose the sweetness and buoyancy of youth. Fate writes its horrid story on a good many young countenances, and they are never beautiful again. Religion helped to forgive and to forget.

But I think that the best thing Christian endeavor ever did for me was to give me the joy of worship. Like every other young person inexperienced in religion I went to church sometimes quite unable to understand the sermon. I might have fallen into irregular church attendance, had I not discovered in my endeavor society that I went to church to bring something as well as to take something away.

Since then I have worshipped in some strange places. I sang hymns of praise in a great vaulted place in Mammoth Cave once along with a company of tourists. I have bowed the knee all alone in a Catholic cathedral. Not long ago I joined in the simple worship of a village church in a miners' camp where the appointments of worship were the crudest. But not even absencee from God's house on the Lord's Day through some accident prevents me bringing my praise to the heavenly Father. I have a great lifelong joy in worship that was taught me long ago and which grows richer with the years.

Every experience in life is different from every other. But in a different sense every one is the same. I cannot doubt that the great throng of young people I saw the other day finding religious values in their association together in a religious movement that is much the same as mine. And it is this confident belief that has kept me throughout my ministry a Christian Endeavor pastor.—In C. I. World. Park Ridge, Illinois.

A Father's Hope

By Hamilton B. Williams

Today, my dear lad's crossed the stile that leads O'er the years ... gone now the flowered meads Childhood. He must gird him for man's deeds.

His soul a thousand dreams are rallying;
A thousand urges from the past a-wing;
A thousand heritages quickening.

After-years shall see builded of wood
Hay and stubble, silver, gold—the good
Ill as fate his spirit has ended.

On the streets of living men his soul
Will prove his captaincy; by toll
Blood; that shall be purchased of his goal.

Save for him who would give him my all,
Hardihood to heed his spirit's call,
Hold a crystal heart 'yond yoke and thrall.

His honor guard 'gainst dogging ghosts that mar
Hearth's joy, 'gainst giving hurts that leave a scar
On souls. His honor build road to Love's Star.

His honor keep his steps from Unfair Street,
And guard his gates or high or low his seat.
God and Right be lantern to his feet.

I crave for him, how steep, the hill-top's quest;
And journeying, his soul all folk to guest;

And stalwart, to be named the kindest.
Give him, Good Master, of the lifting ways, Thy presence and thy courage through all days

To play his life-part as a Great Heart plays.

All he can be begin to strain and strive,
To struggle forth from chrysalis and give,
And ho, the road when soul begins to drive.
My lad, be not a-dread harsh circumstance.
Take your hard blivs face-forward—then advance.

Build your wrecks better and with courage chants.—In "Herald of Gospel Liberty."

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

The Fairy School

At golden rod and aster time
The fairies near our pool
Put on some freshly laundered wings
And fly off to school.

They sit at little toadstool desks
And do their fairy sums,
And learn to color autumn leaves
Before the frost king comes.

And then they study very hard
So they can spin cocoons
And sing the flowers all to sleep
With little bedtime tunes.

They'd fluttered home for tea today
When I went past the pool
But I almost saw the fairy dunce Staying after school!

—Marjorie Barrows, in Child Life.

After that, John wasn't Always "It"

Just as the game of Hide and Seek was well under way a voice was heard calling, "John Thomas Morgan! John Thomas Morgan! Please come here!"

John Thomas Morgan, who was "It" when the voice called, raised his voice shrilly and summoned the rest of the bunch from their hiding places.

"I've got to go," he announced, "Mrs. Lossing wants me to do an errand for her."

"That's always the way," grumbled Fred when John Thomas was out of hearing. "Every single time we get up a game Mrs. Lossing calls John Thomas. (She does it on purpose.)"

John Thomas was occupied the greater part of an hour, for his short legs could not carry him very fast, and when he came back it was nearly dark and time for supper. The spring day was none too long, for it was March, and the after school playtime seemed all too short for the outdoor games after the long winter.

"I wish we could have one more game," sighed John Thomas.

"You'd have to be It," said Willy Nelson.

"All right," said John Thomas. "I was It when the game broke up."

But it was too late, and they all went soberly homeward panting from the exertion of running, all but John Thomas, who had not been running. He was only seven years old, but already it had come into his mind that Mrs. Lossing was apt to think up another errand while he was gone, so if he did hurry he did not get back to the game a minute sooner.

That evening Willy Nelson told his mother about Mrs. Lossing, and how she always called John Thomas away from the game, and to his surprise his mother said, "Yes, I've noticed and I'm glad of it."

"Why, mother?" asked Willy with wide open eyes.

"Because you children always manage to make John Thomas be It when you play together. For some reason he stumbles and is slow, so that you can all get ahead of him, and he is It time and again. I've watched many times and he never gets to play," said Mrs. Nelson.

"We can't help that," said Willy fingering his cap. "We don't make him stumble. And, mother, he's so slow to find us it's no wonder we all get home safe."

"It would be nice if somebody once in a while would hold back and not try so hard in order to give him a better chance," said Mrs. Nelson. "It's hard to play that way all the time. I'm glad Mrs. Lossing calls him away, for she gives him pennies and cakes, and never asks one of you to do an errand for her. Last week her son sent John Thomas a whole dollar because he has been so kind to the poor old lady."

"A dollar! To spend?" asked Willy.

"Yes, to spend as he pleases. You see, she is sorry for him."

Of course Willy was curious to know what John Thomas would spend the dollar for, so he asked him, and the little boy said at once that his mother had put it away until they could add more to it, and then he would have a pair of glasses. "I won't have to be It all the time when I get glasses," said John Thomas. "The doctor says the reason I stumble so much is because I can't see well."

There was no game of Hide and Seek that evening, but a great counting of pennies and nickels and dimes as soiled fingers emptied little tin banks, and finally Willy Nelson was sent with all the money they could shake out of them to Mrs. Morgan's tiny home.

"Here's some money to help get John Thomas his glasses," said Willy. "We want him to see, so he won't have to be It all the time in our games. It's from the boys and girls, tell him." And then Willy ran back as fast as his legs would carry him, feeling far better than when he had rejoiced that there was one boy they could always beat in the games.—Hilda Richmond, in S. S. Times.

No one of my fellows can do that special work for me which I came into this world to do; he can do a higher work, but he cannot do my work. I can not hand my work over to him, any more than I can hand over my responsibilities and my gifts.—Ruskin.

Every member is not only urged but expected to be present and all Christians of like faith are cordially invited to share the blessings at the Lord's table.

JOSEPH L. GINGRICH, Pastor.

DIVISION OF MISSION FUNDS

"The impression seems to prevail that Africa does not receive any money from the General Fund. However, all money that is not designated (and thus goes into the General Fund) as well as all money designated for the General Fund, is divided between Africa and South America, as the two fields may have need during the year.

IN THE SHADOW

BOWSER—Edward Bowser was born in the vicinity of Mt. Perry, February 13, 1856. He departed this material life, and entered into the realm of those who have died in the Lord during the early morning hours of April 11, 1926, aged 70 years, 1 month and 20 days.

In 1878 he united with the Brethren church. The church loses in him one who has served in a faithful way. He wholeheartedly believed in a church making progress, and in any forward movement he was an enthusiastic worker.

He has many friends who mourn his going. A memory of him will live for a long time in the hearts of those who have had the privilege of knowing him.

HERMAN KOONTZ, Pastor Glenford (O.) Brethren Church.

LENGVEL—Lillian Pearl, daughter of Albert and Minnie Lengvel, was born July 6, 1924 and departed this life April 17, 1926, aged one year, nine months and eleven days. Besides her parents, deceased is survived by one sister—Betty May, aged six. Lillian Pearl was a member of the cradle roll department of the Third Brethren Sunday school but is now promoted to that School where God is the teacher and ruler.

Services were conducted from the church, by the pastor, assisted by Brother George Jones of Conemaugh.

J. L. GINGRICH, Pastor.

STOBIE—William Thompson, was born at Krefe, Scotland, September 20, 1843. He passed out of this life at Sunnyside, Washington, February 15, 1926, having reached the ripe age of 82 years, 4 months, 26 days. He lived as a child in Canada, but came to New York State in time to enlist in the Civil War. He enlisted in Company K, First Regiment of Artillery, New York Volunteers, February 23, 1861. He was honorably discharged June 20, 1865 at Elmira, New York. Mr. Stobie came to Sunnyside, Washington section in 1890 and has had much to do with the development of the south end of Yakima Valley. About eight years ago he made a public confession of his Lord and united with the First Brethren church of Sunnyside. He was faithful in attendance at the services so long as health permitted. He leaves to mourn his home going, his faithful wife, three children, one brother, a number of grandchildren and great grandchildren, and many friends.

Funeral services from the first Brethren church by the pastor.

J. C. BEAL.

KEEFER—David Keefeer was born in Pennsylvania, September 15, 1847, and departed this life at the home of his cousin, Edward Keefeer, the closest known relative living, after a short illness of the "flu." His young manhood was spent in New York State, coming to this country when quite young. He united with the Reformed Lutheran church in his young manhood. While at Roanoke he attended various churches. Although he had no close earthly relationship in this world, in his heavenly Father's home he will find many who will be closer than any earthly relations can be. Services conducted in the Roanoke Brethren church, by the writer.

W. F. JOHNSON.

SHARP—Alice Fusselman Sharp was born near Warren, Trumbull county, Ohio, April 27, 1842, and departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Roach, at Roanoke, Indiana, March 29, 1926, at the ripe age of 74 years. She united with the German Reformed church at the age of fifteen years, always giving first place in her life to him who gave her the promise of resurrection from the dead. She united in marriage with John Sharp, who preceded her in death in June, 1925. This union was blessed with nine children, two having preceded the parents in death. There remain four daughters and three sons and seventeen grandchildren to rise up and call them blessed. The church of Roanoke often met with her during this past winter, as she desired the church brought to her, since she was unable to go to it. The writer saw her and prayed with her on the morning before she left this tabernacle of clay and found her faith unwavering. She died in the triumph of that faith.

The Importance of the Unseen

The radio which is so rapidly filling the whole earth with its activities and ringing the people of the earth into one neighborhood as never before, is a new illustration of Paul's great words about the superior importance of the unseen. There have been men in every age who, like Abraham, built altars where they pitched their tents and tuned in with the unseen but omnipotent God. The humble man, woman, or child may do it today. We have the inspiration, the logic, the argument, the doctrine, of the greatest minds at our disposal if we use the printed page. You may have a master if you will take hold of the unseen power in printed literature. Select your tract which carries the message of your heart and pass it along. Reaction Against the Militarizing of Young People Compulsory military training is becoming more and more a vital issue throughout the land. And it is becoming increasingly plain that unless the churches and their leaders display a very active and determined opposition to the country-wide propaganda and effort of the war department to inaugurate compulsory military training in all our schools and colleges, we are going to find ourselves soon in the grip of a war spirit that may carry us far to sea from the peace-loving disposition and peace-promoting conduct that have long characterized us as a nation. We have remained indifferent and undisturbed about the matter too long, while military training was being established in great numbers of our schools and colleges. Indifference is seldom a virtue, but at this point it is a positive sin and a crime to the coming generation because the matter is so serious and the consequences so far-reaching. We have here one of the most insidious and sinister evils with which the Christian citizenry of our land is faced. While we rest in smug complacency because the militarists have failed to saddle upon us the universal military training they had desired, and because the war spirit and war ideals have found such meager sanction, they are attempting to capture the youth. If they can do this, they will be quite content, for they figure that they will ultimately win their point and military preparedness will become our approved national policy. And so the war department has been working on quietly, edging in here and there with their purpose of placing a miniature training camp in every school and college throughout the land. We have sat indifferent and unmindful of the far-reaching effects of such policy, while the militarists have already gotten a considerable hold on vast numbers of our young people.

But there has set in a wholesome reaction, which is steadily gaining strength as the people become more and more awakened to the situation. The Cleveland school board voted recently to abolish the military drill from their curriculum. Principals of high schools in Massachusetts voted against military training in high schools to the score of 300 to 9. In many colleges and universities the spirit of revolt against compulsory military training has shown itself in strong and decisive ways. And in the non-state controlled universities and colleges the authorities are in large majority taking a decided stand against the system. Boston University has announced that compulsory military training will be abolished from that institution. One-half the students of Cornell University have signed a petition against the compulsory drill. Students in Ohio and California have been especially strong in their opposition and are preparing to carry their fight to the voters. With increasing conviction and determination the leading educators are taking their stand against it. The president of Antioch College, Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, who not only knows human nature, but mechanics as well and is himself a highly talented engineer, points out what every one knows must be the inevitable result of such training, in the following words:

"I believe that military training in our schools and colleges has, as its chief result, not increased efficiency in the technic of warfare, but rather effected a change in the mental outlook of our young people so that they look upon war as a normal part of life and expect to take part in it. While the battle for war or peace is being fought today in our schools and colleges, the War Department, through government appropriations, has millions of dollars at its disposal to build the war spirit in the minds of our youth. We must take risks for peace as risks must be taken for every good thing. I believe that the building of a state of goodwill and the expectation of peace is far less of a risk than the building of a war spirit which will lead us to want to try out newly discovered military strength."

Also Dr. Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams College, speaks against military training in colleges clearly and definitely, and doubtless with representative voice for teachers and educators to a large extent. He says:

"Military drill is out of harmony with the aims of college. The aim of the college is to train men for citizenship by discovering and developing the best and highest intellectual powers of each, to the end that each may make the largest contribution to the common welfare. The aim of military drill is to train men in the use of a particular implement, to the end that citizens may defend their country by force of arms. Our first line of defense is enlightened citizenship. Our second line of defense is enlightened civilization, and so is our third. Civilization has interposed many lines between its outer boundaries and the first line of military force, and it is the supreme task of the college to bulwark these advanced positions of civilization.

In pulpit and on platform many of our leading prophets of the Kingdom and proponents of righteousness are declaring their opposition in no uncertain tones. One of the most outstanding instances of such utterances, and one which the militarists themselves, by their ever-zealous efforts to counteract its influence, have materially strengthened, was that of Dr. S. Parkes Cadman in one of his Sunday afternoon addresses before the Bedford Y. M. C. A., Brooklyn. These addresses have become widely popular and are broadcast by four stations, with hundreds of thousands of people listening in regularly, we are told. But many more hundreds of thousands have heard the essence of that address since the rumour on that Sunday afternoon, than heard it over the radio while Dr. Cadman was speaking, because large portions of the religious and secular press have reported the incident far and wide. Dr. Frederick Lynch writes:

"It had been previously announced that he would speak upon 'Disarmament and World Peace' and somehow the news leaked out that Dr. Cadman was going to attack military training in the schools and colleges. As a result of this news Colonel Robert Starr Allyn and several other reserve officers hastened to the meeting to see that nothing was said of a derogatory nature. It so happened that Dr. Cadman said a great deal. He devoted the last ten minutes to a scathing denunciation of the whole business, ending with an unequivocal demand that the war department keep its hands off the public schools of the United States.

"This was too much for the officers. They demanded that they be heard in the meeting. Secretary Hammond, who was conducting the meeting, refused them a hearing, but they would not be downed. The audience began to shout and the officers persisted in their demand that Dr. Cadman answer their questions. Finally the disturbance reached such a stage that Mr. Hammond sent for the police reserves and had the officers ejected from the house."

Such is the temper of the opposition that the proponents of peace must meet, and such is the determination of the militarists to carry their purpose to plant the war spirit and attitude in the minds of our youth. It is well for us to know this, that we may understand that the defeat of this purpose is no holiday task.

Dr. Cadman in a very large way interpreted the mind of many thousands of his fellow citizens when he said:

"Those who oppose military training as I do, contend that it ingrains in the mental and moral structure of our students the conviction that preparedness for war and war itself are normal relations of nations; encourages belief in violence as the final resort to international differences and discourages the efforts now in progress to settle such differences by arbitration.

"It also unconsciously produces in schools and colleges a mental attitude inimical to the ideas of world justice and world peace for which we went into the World War. Nor does our country need such an extraordinary measure. It enjoys enormous advantage of man power and economic power beyond calculation. If nevertheless, it needs an expansion of its military forces, let this be gained by other means than this act prescribes. In brief, take the War Department out of the public schools of the United States and keep it out."

In closing this vigorous and courageous address, Dr. Cadman spoke words that constitute a challenge to indifferent men and Laodicean churches everywhere, and should be repeated with emphasis to stir us to our duty of saving our nation from this growing Prussianistic policy, which if it is not checked, is destined to lead the world to war and ruin, and to hinder the advancement of the Kingdom of God incalculably. He said:

"In brief, take the war department out of the public schools of the United States and keep it out. It is unwise and in the real sense unpatriotic to introduce in these schools the very things we denounced so bitterly in our adversaries of 1918. Making military training compulsory by college edicts, refusing academic degrees to students on any other ground than academic unfitness, creating the vicious atmosphere of villification around those students who refuse military training as coward and poltroon is about as un-American a procedure as I know. It is entirely adverse to the spirit and the principles of the constitution and the declaration of independence. ... At the very least, I repeat the request, and ask you to consider it, that the war department be taken out of the public schools of the United States of America. We have refused compulsory military training for ourselves. Why should it be forced on our sons as part of the price for their education?"

EDITORIAL REVIEW

You must bear your share of the burden of giving forth the Gospel of Christ, says the Tract Promotion Director, and a way open for all to do this is by the distribution of the printed page. For example, hand out a tract, or give your neighbor your copy of The Evangelist, when you have read it, or see that he gets a copy of his own.

The personal letter of Estella Myers to her mother, who graciously shares it with the Evangelist family, reveals the yearning heart of the missionary for God's unevangelized children. If many of the members in the homeland were characterized by such deep concern for the souls of men, how much more rapidly the Kingdom of God would grow!

A "night letter" reached our office on Monday from the officers of the Maryland-Virginia District Conference, announcing the conference to be held at Roanoke, Virginia, June 15-17. Read the notice as we transcribed it for the "Announcement" column, page 16. A challenging attendance slogan has been thrown out to the churches and pastors of this district, and judging from the enthusiasm attending most of their recent conferences, we think they will likely reach the goal.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, pastor of the church at Ashland, Ohio, makes announcement of the approaching dedication of the new Ashland church on May 23, an end to which he has been anxiously looking and working since taking up the pastorate. And with its completion will also be fulfilled the dreams and hopes of many Ashland Brethren, as well as those of many scattered throughout the brotherhood. May it be the beginning of a larger future for the Ashland church.

Dr. W. H. Beachler reports a two weeks' evangelistic campaign preceding Easter at South Bend, Indiana, with himself doing the preaching, and with the result of 27 additions to the church and the prospect of more. Anniversary Day at this church found the pastor confined to a sick bed, but Prof. J. Raymond Schutz, who had been engaged as the special preacher of the day was equal to the occasion, and with the help of the Moderator, Attorney Obenchain, the financial program was put across in fine style. Over 8,000 dollars were raised to apply on the parsonage indebtedness.

Dr. Wm. Lyons Phelps of Yale, says: "I believe a knowledge of the Bible without a college course is more valuable than a college course without the Bible." But why entertain such a choice? Why not patronize Christian colleges where students cannot graduate without a Bible course?

Brother W. H. Miller, who writes from Fairview, West Virginia, that he is open to a call to a pastorate, informs us that he has completed the required work, passed all examinations and is soon to receive his Master's degree at the University of West Virginia, at Morgantown, this June. Brother Miller has spent a number of years teaching school in West Virginia and is now ready to get back into the pastorate.

Brother Homer A. Kent and the good people of Washington, D. C., are pressing forward with courage and confidence and are launching a great undertaking in the building of a new church house, which has long been sorely needed. The immediate task is to build the first floor, and delay the completion of the structure until the congregation is financially able. They are to be congratulated on the type of architecture selected for the Capitol City. The total estimated cost of the completed structure is around $75,000.00.

The work at Johnstown (Pa.) Second church has taken courage under the able leadership of Brother Dyoll Belote, who has been in charge of this mission point since last October and the people have set themselves with courage and resolution to press forward. A successful revival with Brother C. H. Ashman as the evangelist resulted in twenty-four additions to the church. A new church building is to be erected immediately which will be adequate to care for the needs of the congregation.

Brother C. C. Grisso reports a campaign conducted by himself at New Troy, Michigan, with ten additions to the church, besides a number of reconsecrations. He sees in Michigan a great opportunity for the Brethren church, if it shall occupy the field. This call and others constantly coming from various corners of the brotherhood emphasize a conviction that has been growing upon some of our leaders, that the time is at hand to press the work of church extension as never before. This is a vital matter that ought to elicit the prayers and concern of the entire brotherhood. At Warsaw, Indiana, where Brother Grisso is pastor, the church is being strengthened by four additions, two by letter and two who await baptism.

Attorney Orion E. Bowman, the peerless superintendent of the big Sunday school of the First church of Dayton, Ohio, writes an interesting newsletter for that church. The Sunday school is the largest both in enrollment and attendance in Montgomery county, having 1900 enrolled and reaching an attendance on Easter Sunday of 1409. Dr. Bell recently closed his pastorate of more than eight years, with the addition of a score of members during the last few weeks. Brother Bell has accomplished a great work at Dayton and he will be long remembered for his masterly guidance of this great congregation and for leading it to its present high state of efficiency. Prof. Alva J. McClain is very capably supplying the pulpit during the summer months and until Dr. Beachler, who has been called to this charge, takes up the work.

We are privileged to present the picture of the beautiful and commodious new sanctuary at Berlin, Pennsylvania, also the likeness of the capable pastor, Brother W. C. Benshoff, along with his report in the news department. He and his good people have accomplished a great undertaking for the Lord, the fulfilment of a long-cherished hope and the realization of a sorely felt need, in the completion of this new building. It is adequate for their needs, a contribution to the community and a credit to the brotherhood. And we are informed that they came through this great undertaking, not only with the financial demands almost completely provided for, but with almost unanimous harmony among the membership. We congratulate Brother Benshoff and his loyal people on the completion of this great work in so fine a spirit. Dr. W. H. Beachler was the speaker on dedication day and director of money raising for the occasion, and doubtless such splendid total results are due in no small degree to his inimitable talents. During the week of services that followed twelve new members were added to the church.

Great Men's Unbelief

By Dyoll Belote

ELDER DYOLL BELOTE
Pastor Second Brethren Church, Johnstown, Pa.

"Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein."—Luke 18:17.

In our own, as in other days, there is a repeated tendency to lay especial emphasis upon the bearing which it has on religion, of a mind and spirit among some noted people which are the opposite of the mind and spirit noted in the text of this discourse.

The writer was reminded of the truth of this statement by an article appearing in the Literary Digest of February 13, 1926, in which a report is given of an interview with Mr. Luther Burbank, the plant wizard of California. In this interview Mr. Burbank is quoted as declaring himself as "a doubter, a questioner, a skeptic."

Mr. Burbank is quoted further in the above-mentioned article as saying, "All religions of the past and probably all of the future will sooner or later become petrified forms instead of living helps to mankind. As a scientist, I cannot help but feel that all religions are on a tottering foundation. None is perfect or inspired."

"As for prophets, there are as many today as ever before, only now science refuses to let them overstep the bounds of common sense."

"The idea that a good God would send people to a burning hell is utterly damnable to me. I don't want to have anything to do with such a God."

There is quite a bit more along the same line quoted in the article mentioned, but I have simply quoted this much to get the background for what I want to say. As would be naturally expected, Mr. Burbank's pronouncements have stirred comment in both the secular and religious press. In the secular press quite a number of writers and editors have taken the opportunity to laud the great man for his boldness in declaring his convictions, and some have given their own personal assent to what he is quoted as declaring to be his religious convictions—or lack of such convictions.

The wide-spread publicity which has been given to Luther Burbank's pronouncement but substantiates the thought which I wish to impress in this article. The tendency of humanity to run after the opinions of some times famous folk, when they express their atheistic or infidel belief, is periodically set forth when men like Mr. Burbank relieve themselves of a pronouncement. Such folks will flock to hear scientists or jurists or doctors discourse upon the things of religion, when these same folks would not—and do not—put themselves out to walk across the street to hear their own preacher address them on the same subject.

There is every evidence that men do, and there is danger in the fact that men attach too much importance to, and lay too mighty an emphasis upon the UNBELIEF and IRRELIGION of the world's prominent people.

The first thought that I wish to suggest in the discussion is suggested in the comment of Bishop Charles P. Anderson, of Chicago, who suggests that the famous scientist "stick to his last," and who declares further, "If I were to express an opinion on the grafting of trees and plants, I might be as authoritative as Professor Burbank when he enters the realm of theology."

I. Bishop Anderson's suggestion reminds us that, large knowledge in one direction often exists with notorious ignorance on other subjects and along other lines of thought.

For illustration let us suppose that two men, one a lawyer and the other a doctor should have offices side by side

Imagine these same two men to be called to the bedside of a dying man for professional services. But suppose also that by some mistake the lawyer should be called upon to write the prescription for the medicine which was to be administered while the physician should be asked to construct the legal papers whereby the sick man's estate should be conveyed to his beneficiary. Would you want such a mix-up to occur at your bedside? It is easy to see how impotent and more than useless each would be if he attempted to do the other's work. This is because each would be out of his own sphere.

Phidias, the great sculptor, who could almost "make marble talk," could never have written the oration on the Crown which stands as the masterpiece of Demosthenes, the orator. Raphael was the master artist of all time, but he would have been utterly unable to have produced Dante's illustrious works.

Do we not confer entirely too much honor on so-called great men—in whatever line their greatness manifests itself—when we grant to them any especial authority in the realm of the spiritual? It matters not at all what a mathematician, or a chemist, or a biologist, or scientist, as such, may think or say about God, or Christ, of sin or of immortality. To use a phrase that needs no explanation—these things are not in their line. To these things they have given no especial attention and upon such questions they are not therefore entitled to speak authoritatively.

When it is a matter of our health on which we desire expert opinion we do not repair us to the lawyer, neither with a question of conscience do we approach the trained politician. Why then, when it is a matter of our soul, or a question about God or Christ shall we go to the man whose soul is color-blind to the light of forgiveness which shines in the face of the Redeemer, and who perhaps has never personally lifted the heart to God in prayer?

(I hasten to acknowledge the fact of the presence in the world of a fine group of great men, scientists, mathematicians and others, who have not become so enamored of the objects of their researches that they cannot see the handiwork of God in the universe, but have bowed in humble submission to the will and power of a Supreme Being, and whose sovereignty and glory they find joy in proclaiming.)

II. A second fact that needs to be kept in mind when we are considering the unbelief of great folks is that the great fundamental facts of religion lie entirely outside the realm of human discovery and are not to be reached by the processes of ordinary human reasoning.

Job puts the thought of the utter inability of the human to reason to the comprehension of the divine in these words, "Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?"

Paul conveys the thought, too, in his first epistle to the Corinthians when in the first chapter he speaks thus:

"For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God."

"For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent."

"Where is the wise where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?"

"For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

"For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom:

"But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness;

"But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

"Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

"For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called:

"But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty;

"And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are:

"THAT NO FLESH SHOULD GLORY IN HIS PRESENCE."

So it is evident that when we come to the matter of the possession of the knowledge which buttresses the faith of the Christian, both learned and ignorant are on the same level—FOR BOTH REVELATION IS AN ABSOLUTE NECESSITY. Without divine REVELATION the greatest man is left in ignorance in matters religious, and with it its adherent becomes easily the peer of the brightest unbeliever.

III. Again it is often true that the habits which are acquired in the pursuit of intellectual development have often a tendency to disqualify one for the attainment of spiritual knowledge.

Most of us are familiar with the story of the artist who was seated in the farmer's pasture field, sketching a beautiful landscape. As the story runs, the farmer came by and walking up behind the artist watched him for a while, and then remarked that he didn't see anything like the sketch the artist had made around there anywhere. And the artist's reply contains the germ of the thought we are trying to convey. His reply was, "Don't you wish you could?" The farmer had never learned to look for beauty in the world about him, but rather to figure how much grain or hay per acre the land would yield him, or what he could get for the timber which stood on his land. He had not that requisite which enables one to see the beauty—as well as the utility—in the world about us, viz., an inborn sense of taste, a love of the beautiful.

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." "To this man will I look, even to him that is of a poor and contrite spirit." "Him that doeth his will shall know of the doctrine." "Blessed are the poor in heart, for they shall see God." Verses such as these give us the simple teaching concerning the requirements for a clear comprehension of spiritual things. And that teaching is: BRING TO THE STUDY OF SPIRITUAL THINGS A PURE HEART AND AN OBEDIENT LIFE. AND YOU SHALL HAVE THE RE-

WARD PROMISED, EVEN A POWER TO SEE BEAUTIES AND TRUTHS IN RELIGION THAT ARE WITHHELD FROM OTHERS. This condition is the one that too many times is either neglected or ignored by the scientist, or historian, or philosopher when contemplating the things of the spiritual realm.

If there be a pure and reverent spirit which can truthfully say "I have loved, I have obeyed, I have prayed, I have laid my heart open to the influences of the Holy Spirit, like the heart of a little child, and still your God, your Christ, your immortal hope are as myths and fable," it may then be wise to make acknowledgment and time also to examine the defences of our faith.

But before the professor of physical or mental science who has not discovered the Holy Spirit as he might some new phenomena of the physical realm, before such I declare it best to possess our souls in patience, and to keep confident hold on our faith.

IV. And there is yet another reason why we should not allow ourselves to be disturbed by the infidelity of prominent people. And that reason is that sometimes such unbelief is of a punitive character.

Again and again it is declared in the Book that light is withdrawn from those who will not walk therein. Listen to what the Master himself says on this point: "Walk while ye have the light, that darkness overtake you not . . . While ye have the light, believe on the light, that ye may become sons of light." And those other ominous words, "Because they receive not the love of the truth . . . God shall send them a strong delusion, that they should believe in a lie."

There may be some who think that the old law of the Word in the sending of delusions in which the incredulous and unbelieving shall take stock is no longer operative. But is it not true that in every age there have been giants in almost every intellectual circle who have turned away from the great broad teachings of Jesus unto table rappings and spirit materialization? And can not we see men and women of our own day who are prominent in the worlds of law and letters and science who are in seemingly hopeless bondage to a coarsely-shrewd, and godlessly pretentious woman? THE EXPLANATION LIES IN THE TEXT OF THIS DISCOURSE.

And the hope for us all in the presence of these deflections to the opinions of godless great men lies in the fact that every generation of Christians has had to combat the same assaults that are manifest in our day. If our faith grows weak, it is not worth while to try to bolster it up with counter-arguments. Rather shall we turn from the unworthiness of our own lives; seek the true; love that which is pure; do that which is good; live nearer to him who is the truth.

Let us SHOW ALL REVERENCE FOR OUR SPIRITUAL INTUITIONS. And shall we not plead again the promise of the Word, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, and it shall be given him."

One Thing Lacking in Popular Education

By John F. Locke

"I thank thee, O Father, Lord of Heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight" (Mark 10:21).

It has been suggested that the above Scripture should serve as a starting point for short discussions of the very precarious subject: "One Thing Lacking in Popular Education."

The first thing to be said is: the subject is too dangerous and too fruitful for study and speculation to boil it down into a short article, albeit brevity may be the life saver in this instance.

Modern education is popular and there is perhaps more than one thing lacking in it. Because modern education has become so exceedingly popular it is assumed by the vast majority of persons, beside the usual "hoi polloi," to be almost the final and complete revelation in the art or science of pedagogy. "Education is the solution of our international difficulties; our crime wave; our race problem; our growing greedy, grabbing business principles; and so on ad infinitum or farther." Such in perhaps more and more elegant and ponderous phalanxes of rhetorical splendor, is the cry of those who write and speak from the lecture platform. Of course it is all believed verbatim and with bosoms filled with the mighty zeal of determination to proclaim this great truth from off the altar of oratory, the educational stock has soared far above par and in doing so it may have "crossed the bar." Education as a panacea like any other cure-all must some day be found to lack remedial properties for some ailment. Though its users may prepare a great list of uses for sundry, and diverse ailments, it is almost surely to be detected to have a weak point. So with the modern day, highly touted, grand and glorious, hurrah! sort of education. Send the kids to the big university, get them through a four year's college course in anything and you have saved their spiritual, moral and intellectual welfare. Henceforth they can calmly sit and let success, morality and honor be heaped upon them. To be complete in every good work is to have floated through the round of heterogeneous nincompoopery of the average college or university for four years; to have quaffed deep the cup of knowledge as a grizzled old flat-headed or hearted, one tamed professor has ordained; and to have so conducted your conduct in class as to secure passing grades. No wonder that a few men have been so daring as to suggest in no uncertain terms that education is but a hoax. One kind of education is a hoax. Unfortunately it is the popular kind. It is the education of the mind but not the heart. Leave the sentiments, feelings and aspirations, the heritage of truth, beauty and loveliness of those who dreamed dreams and saw visions beyond the distant haze of ever widening horizons and the motives which made men die with songs on their lips for the one whose love had led him to hear the fearful indignities of a cruel mob and die loving them on that green hill far away without the city wall, yes, leave these and education is a cruel, heinous joke, whereby civilization tugs at its own bootstraps and when it can not lift itself it must rebound.

Whatever the platitudinous verbosity of educational psychologists, sociologists and others may some day declare to be the chief end of education, one thing remains sure: If the moral and Christian emphasis is left out, education is of all vanities the most vain, for while it may advance intellect and invention it will leave the possession of such without means of enjoying their good fruits and without restraint to use them in the most pernicious and hideous ways. The prophylactic against possible disaster to the very chariot in which civilization has ridden thus far, is a replaced emphasis on old virtues.

And so, with little effort we may see the import of the small church college as it produces a few who leaven the whole lump. Unfortunately a great many church colleges have failed to see their unique and powerful influence and have instead, copied an exact imitation of the "big schools."

To readers of the Evangelist, may these few remarks plead for your support of your own college, not only with your own friends but with your own students. An education is a very easy thing to get today, as one man has said, "The price is the desire for it"; but a Christian education, one that will mean more than a cursory, hit or miss, dose of instruction in a few impracticable subjects cannot be gotten at any diploma dispensary. Ashland College is unique in its atmosphere and training and it belongs to the Brethren church for the express purpose of training its young people. Let's see to it that more of them enjoy all its exclusive advantages.

Education as it is popularly administered leaves out the feelings and ideals, it is a hard and cold merchantic formulation of facts. Truly to men possessing this type of attitude and training the joys and fruits of the spirit are hidden and are revealed to babes.

Among other things which combine to support this one thing lacking in popular education" the good old rubber stamp method of teaching should be highly emphasized. Parrots are too much petted by our one-track instructors, but the world soon accomplishes the undoing of many of the precious College Complexes, of course the aristocracy of money and worm eaten family trees might also be adjudged as accomplices in achieving the degeneracy of popular education, but the discussion must be concluded as it has already waxed lengthy.

Support Christian and moral education from kindergarten through College and the one thing will no longer be lacking which now makes popular education objectifiable, and too, Ashland College will be the school of dreams for Brethren young people and the hope and abiding place of Brethren faith for years to come.

A Needed Stimulant

By J. S. C. Spickerman

A United Press dispatch from Cambridge, Massachusetts says, "Decrease in antipathy between religious sects accounts for the present decline in church attendance in the opinion of President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard University.

"In an address here he said man was a combative animal, and the recent increase in respect and co-operation between the various religious sects has caused many churches to lose interest in religion and to stay home Sunday morning.

"To illustrate his point, President Lowell said if there were fewer intercollegiate football games, fewer boys would go to college."

Isn't that too bad? Since the disciples of the Prince of Peace have quit fighting one another, their religion has nothing left in it to attract them! No doubt many of the unregenerate church members would take more interest in churches if there was sharp contention with some other church, but this should not be true of the real Christians, to whom Jesus said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35). "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me" (Luke 9:23). Those who do that will not need rivalry, spiced with spite, to keep up their interest. As for the others, are not multiplied worldly attractions, such as golf and joy-riding, sufficient to explain their absence from church?

Paul might have exhorted the Pauline faction at Corinth to fight the other factions as a means of stimulating their interest in the church. Instead, he rebuked their divisions. 1 Corinthians 1:10-13. He appealed to a different motive. For the love of Christ constraineth us (2 Corinthians 5:14). He said that love is greater even than faith; that however great one's attainments, if he has not love, he is nothing (1 Corinthians 13).

Yes, man is a combative animal, but Christians have enough fighting to do without fighting one another. First, we have a lot of evil within ourselves to fight. Even Paul, who had lived in all good conscience before God, and had given up all for Christ had this fight on his hands (Romans 7:23; 1 Corinthians 9:27). There are also evils outside ourselves which we need to fight. In this country, the fight against the liquor traffic is not yet won. (It is said that some church members in the East are not in sympathy with this fight. They would probably be more interested in a fight between churches.) There are other vices which we must continue to fight until Christ returns. There are disease, and ignorance, and economic evils, which we must fight if we would obey the injunction to work that which is good toward all men (Galatians 6:10). There is heathenism, holding in its fetters a large majority of mankind, and Mohammedanism with over two hundred million more. Winning the world for Christ is the war to which he expressly commissioned his disciples, and which they have shamefully neglected.

It is a fight which will tax our resources to the utmost, and in which we will make much more headway if we drop our factional fights and work together.

We should stand by our convictions of Scriptural truth, and at the same time respect the convictions of others. We should oppose their errors only by teaching and practicing the teachings of the Bible. At the same time, we should have the same open mind to Scriptural argument that we ask of them. We should co-operate with them in Christian work as far as we can do so without violating the teachings of Scripture as we understand them.

We can safely follow the teachings of Jesus, even though they are disputed by the president of a great university. "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world" (1 Corinthians 1:20?)

Peace Activities

By A. J. Spacht

Three great modern proposals for guaranteeing the peace of the world are the Hague Conference, the World Court and the League of Nations.

The Hague Conference was the outcome of the assembling of the nations of the world at the call of the Czar of Russia. This conference met May 18, 1899, at The Hague, Holland. Its work was very important and if its plans had been followed the world war would never have happened.

The Locarno Conference might be termed a fourth proposal and it is indeed an important step in attaining peace in Europe. In fact some say with much truth that the world war ended only with the peace of Locarno. The Locarno Conference adopted treaties in line with the recommendations of the League of Nations providing security pacts between Germany, France, Belgium, Great Britain and Italy. Compulsory arbitration was provided for between these nations and other nations also. In fact if the provisions of the Locarno conference are carried out it is difficult to see how we can have another European war of a general character.

Owing to the fact that the great autocracies of Europe have been broken up the prospect for world peace was never brighter. The great autocratic governments of Germany, Austria, Russia and Turkey have been swept away and in their places other governments more responsive to the will of the people are gradually being developed. While we may sympathize with the plight of the royal families in those countries we must never lose sight of the fact that representative government and world peace have both been furthered by the events leading up to the changes we have witnessed during the past few years in the governing systems of these countries. We have lived through great historical events—the destruction of the greatest autocratic powers the world has ever seen. Almost any system of government will be better than those that have been destroyed by these great upheavals of an overburdened people. The happiness of the world will in the end be increased and the world made "safe for Democracy."

Because of the fact that all these recent developments have followed the lines marked out by the League of Nations the attention of the world has been focussed on the work of the League. Europeans are using the machinery of the League to attain the ends of peace and are thereby gaining confidence in the League and in each other. Fifty nations of the world have representatives at League headquarters, all working for but one object—the peace of the world.

Out of the League has grown the World Court. This court has been established to decide disputed questions between nations. It has representative members from the leading nations of the world. The United States has just accepted membership in this court and so has virtually become a member of the League of Nations in so far as decisions affecting the world peace are concerned. Perhaps after the bitter partisanship of politics dies out we may accept full membership therein and thus use all of our great influence for the furthering of world peace.

Certainly the greatest good of the human race is attained in peaceful pursuits. Hence war should be discouraged as much as possible and a peaceful spirit encouraged in individuals. As are the citizens of the world so will the nations of the world be. A sincere desire for peace in the hearts of the majority of the human race will do much to attain peace. Let us look with charity and forbearance and longsuffering upon the mistakes of other nations. Let us follow the admonition of the most peaceful man that ever lived—Jesus Christ—and love our neighbor as we love ourselves.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Christ's Collected Flock

By C. D. Whitmer

TEXT: "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd. John 10:16.

In the text, after having displayed in his previous observations, a tenderness never exhibited by any other inhabitant of this world, Christ proceeds to inform us, that he had other sheep, besides those of which he had been speaking; that he must bring, or collect them; and that the two flocks should constitute one—be sheltered by one fold, and led by one shepherd.

"Other sheep I have," says our Savior. "Other disciples, besides those of the Jewish nation, and the present age, I have belonging to my family. They exist among the Gentiles in this age; and will exist in every future period. "The gospel of the kingdom", which is be preached in all nations, will everywhere find those who will receive and obey its dictates: those, who in the exercise of a living and affectionate confidence, will hereafter give themselves to me, and become mine. They are now mine, and were given to me from the beginning; "Them I must bring." To collect them from every part of the world is one of the greatest duties of my office; a part of the glorious work which my Father gave me to do, and I shall not leave it unaccomplished.

"They shall hear my voice." When I call, they will know and acknowledge me as their Savior or Shepherd, and cheerfully obey the summons. "There shall be one fold"—a single church, a single assembly of my disciples, one in name, one in their character, their life and their destination, and I, the good shepherd, will lead them.

"They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of them shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of water" (Rev. 7:16).

"Other sheep," says our Lord, "I have, which are not of this fold." The sheep which Christ had were Jews; inhabitants of a single country, and living at that period. Nay, they were a little flock gathered out of these. His other sheep, as he has taught us in his Word, are a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, born in every future period; gathered out of every distant land (Rev. 7:9). "Them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice." He who took such effectual care of the little flock which followed him during his ministry, because it was their "Father's good pleasure to give them the kingdom," will be easily believed, when he informs us that he must and will bring into his fold a multitude, by their number and character of such immeasurable importance. For this very end, he hath, "ascended far above all heavens, that he might fill all things." For this very end, he is constituted Head over all things unto his church. This is the third great division of his employment as Mediator. The first to teach the will of God for our salvation; the second, to expiate our sins; the third is to gather us into his heavenly kingdom.

What things are to be done for the completion of this end I observe, 1st.—The views of mankind concerning religious subjects, are to be extensively changed.

It will not be questioned, that truth is invariably an object of Divine complacency; and error of the Divine reprobation. As God rejoices in his works, so it is impossible that he should not be pleased with truth; which is only a declaration of the state of those works of his agency in accomplishing them, and of his character displayed in that agency. Error which falsifies all these things, must be odious to him. As little can it be questioned, that truth is the instrument through which we are sanctified, and made free from the bondage of corruption.

2nd.—A mighty change also, must be wrought in the disposition of men.

Whenever mankind shall be brought into the fold of Christ, then will succeed that love to God, and to man, which is the fulfilling of the law; that repentance toward God, and that faith in the Redeemer, which are the primary obedience of the gospel. In the train of these attributes, will follow the virtues of Christianity, which so adorned the life of our Savior—"love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Gal. 5:22, 23), all glorious fruits of the spirit of grace—natives of heaven, and though for a time pilgrims in this world, yet destined to return to heaven again.

3rd.—The change will not be less in the conduct of men.

Permit me, then, to observe, that the primary conduct of men will experience a mighty and wonderful revolution. Truth, at the same time, will resume her empire over the tongue, the pen, and the press. Honesty will control the dealings of men. In the same manner will unkindness vanish from mankind. The stranger will everywhere find a home. Uncharitableness between those who profess the religion of the Redeemer, will be found no more.

On the bench, will be seen those, and those only who shake their hands from holding bribes, and stop their ears from hearing evils, and close their eyes from seeing blood. At the bar of justice, prisoners will cease to be found; the deserted jail will crumble into dust. Wars will be no more.

Then religion will resume her proper station, and no longer be subordinated to pleasure, gain, and glory, to frantic scrambles about position and power. Then will come true the saying of Revelation 10:1-2,—"Now is come salvation and strength and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ. God himself will dwell among the great family of Adam, and be their God, and they shall be his people."

Now, in what manner are these things to be done? I answer, they are to be accomplished, not by miracles but by means. St. Paul has in the most decisive terms given us the proper procedure, by which the kingdom of God is to be established in every part of the world. "How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Romans 10:14-17).

1.—Permit me to add, that those by whom these mighty things are to be done, are themselves to exhibit the spirit of the Gospel as the great controlling principle of their conduct. Common sense has proverbially declared, and all experience proved, that precept without example is vain.

2.—The process of this mighty work is, in this respect also, exactly marked out by St. Paul. "Salvation has come unto the Gentiles to provoke the Jews to jealousy;" or, as in the Greek, "To excite them to emulation (Romans 11:11).

3.—The casting away of the Jews is the reconciling of the world; the receiving of them will be to that same world, life from the dead.

Now, by whom are these things to be done?

This question admits of but one answer; on this subject there can be no debate; the time for doubt is past, the work is begun. Missionaries in great numbers are going to and fro, and knowledge is being greatly increased. "The gospel of the kingdom" is already preached in Greenland, Labrador, Tartary, Hindostan, China, New Holland, Isles of the Pacific Ocean and Caribbean Sea, South America and Africa. The voice of salvation, the song of praise to Jehovah, echoes already from the sides of Tarsus, and trembles over the

A DEVOTIONAL READING OF ROMANS
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

FAITH AND CIRCUMCISION—Rom. 4:9-12.

The blessing was dependent upon faith and not upon circumcision, and therefore Gentiles as well as Jews are admitted to the promise, and Abraham's spiritual descendants are uncircumcised as well as circumcised.

TUESDAY

PROMISE AND LAW—Rom. 4:13-17.

Again the promise of participation in the world-wide Messianic rule was dependent not upon Law, but upon a righteousness which is the product of faith. Therefore Abraham may be the spiritual father of all believers, Gentiles as well as Jews.

ABRAHAM'S FAITH A TYPE—Rom. 4:17-25.

"Abraham believed on him who caused the birth of Isaac from elements that seemed as good as dead; and we too believe on the same God who raised up from the dead our Lord Jesus"; thus it is a type of the Christian's faith.

RESULT OF JUSTIFICATION—Rom. 5:1-11.

The consequences of this justification are first the peace with God and the hope which gives courage in the face of persecution, and second, the assurance we have of final salvation and glory.

FRIDAY

ADAM AND CHRIST—Rom. 5:12-21.

As Christ brought righteousness and life, so Adam's fall brought sin and death. Law increased sin, but the work of grace has cancelled the effect of the law.

SATURDAY

THE MYSTICAL UNION—Rom. 6:1-14.

The Christian cannot continue sinning simply because grace so freely abounds, for the very act of baptism indicates a union with Christ, a death to sin and a living henceforth of the changed life, dedicated to God.

SUNDAY

FROM LAW TO GRACE—Rom. 6:15-23.

"The Christian was a slave to sin; his business was uncleanness; his wages death. But he has been emancipated from this service, only to enter upon another—that of Righteousness" (Sunday)—G. S. B.

waves of the Ganges. The Bible has traveled around the globe. In such an enterprise, all who engage in it must be united; if Christians do not unite their hearts and their hands, they will effectuate nothing. Solitary efforts will here be fruitless; divided efforts will be equally fruitless; clashing efforts will destroy each other.

In Conclusion: Learn that the work to which you are summoned is the work of God. My brethren, it is the chief work of God, which has been announced to mankind; it is the end of this earthly creation; it is the end of this earthly providence; it is the glorious end of redemption.

2nd. The present is the proper time for this glorious undertaking. It is the proper time, as it is marked out by the spirit of prophecy.

3rd. The necessity of this work irresistibly demands every practicable effort.

"The whole world," says St. John, speaking of his own time, "lieth in wickedness" (1 John 5:19). Lieth—for such is the indication of the original—as a man slain lies weltering in his blood. How extensively is this strong picture a portrait of the world at this moment.

4th. The day in which these blessings are to be ushered in has arrived. The day in which the mighty work will be seen in its full completion is at hand. We must labor, that those who come after us may enter into our labors. We must sow, and in due time both we and our successors, if we sow bountifully, shall reap a Divine harvest. With every faithful endeavor of ours, the Spirit of grace will cooperate. "As the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations" (Isa. 61:11).

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Good Shepherd

By Mrs. Ralph B. Smoker

OUR SCRIPTURE

But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the Shepherd, the stone of Israel.) (Gen. 49:24). The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want (Psalm 23:1). Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock (Psalm 80:1). Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young (Isa. 40:10-11). Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture: saith the Lord (Jer. 23:1). Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers, but the sheep did not hear them. I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture. The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy; I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth: the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep. The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep. I am the good shepherd and know my sheep, and am known of mine. As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father; and I lay down my life for the sheep. And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd (John 10:7-16). Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant (Heb. 13:20). For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls (1 Peter 2:25). And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away (1 Peter 5:4).

OUR MEDITATION

In the early history of Palestine and also at the time of Christ, caring for sheep was one of the most familiar occupations.

The way the good shepherd cares for his sheep, in the Eastern countries, is to this day a beautiful picture. He lovingly cares for them throughout the day and night, and they in turn love and trust in him. He does everything within his power for the safety, comfort and health of his flock. He knows each sheep by name, he calls to them from time to time, while they are grazing, to let them know he is at hand. Should the voice of a stranger imitate their shepherd's call, even though he had on the shepherd's garments, they would immediately look up with a frightened air and begin to scatter.

He leads his flocks to the greenest pasture available, and takes them to the quiet waters to drink. He is often seen carrying the lambs. At night the sheep are led to the fold, usually an unroofed stone wall with only one entrance. Here oftentimes many flocks are brought and the shepherds retire to their homes, for the night, leaving the sheep in the care of a porter. The porter fastens the door securely and carefully guards the sheep, until the arrival of the first shepherd in the morning. However, we are told of sheep folds built in a C-shape; where this is done, the shepherd at night wraps himself in an outer garment and lays down at the entrance. In this case "he is the door."

An Eastern shepherd is said to have explained, why he did not have to count his sheep every night,—he said that if he were blindfolded and a sheep were brought him, he would simply put his hands on the sheep's face and could tell instantly, whether it was his sheep or not.—Peloubet.

David, before God called him to become King of Israel, was a good shepherd and therefore was so well prepared to write, what is said to me the most frequently committed chapter of the entire Bible—"The Lord is my Shepherd. I shall not want" (Psalm 23:1).

"Pastor" means "shepherd" and is derived from the word "pasture." Jeremiah records, "Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture: saith the Lord" (Jer. 23:1). What a grave responsibility rests upon every minister of the gospel, to so lead those entrusted to his care, that none of the Lord's sheep may be scattered or led astray. Every Christian also has sheep to care for.

But Christ is the Chief Shepherd of us all and laid down his life that we might have the abundant life. When we accept that great gift in the measure Christ intended, ours is a life of consecration, contentment and usefulness.

Let us not try to climb, some other way, into the fold, the church of Jesus Christ, but call to the porter, the Holy Spirit, who will open the door to us to find Christ. Let us be as keen in discerning our Lord's voice as the sheep are the shepherd's, that we may not be led astray in this day of false teachers and doctrines.

What a blessed thought and rare privilege, that the followers of Christ are assured that he knows his own and is known of them. Even as Jesus and God are one, may be one with Christ. What a wonderful offer even unto the least of us.

Savior, like a shepherd lead us.
Much we need thy tend'rest care;
In thy pleasant pastures feed us,
For our use thy folds prepare.

OUR PRAYER

Divine Father, thou who art the Chief Shepherd of all who call upon thy holy name, may we trust in thee and depend upon thee for guidance, with the simple faith of the sheep. In Jesus' name, we pray. Amen.

Isaac and His Wells

Scripture Lesson—Gen. 26:12-25.

Devotional Reading—Matt. 5:1-12.

Golden Text—A soft answer turneth away wrath; but a grievous word stirreth up anger.—Prov. 15:1.

LESSON LIGHTS

Isaac reveals human nature in a passive attitude. In passing from Abraham to Isaac we seem to be passing from a mountain torrent to a peaceful pool. We come from the running into rest, from the hurry into the hush. Abraham has the foreign mission; Isaac has the home mission. Abraham has to civilize a world; Isaac to train a family.

The Character of Isaac

From Matheson and Tuck we have the following description: "Isaac's career was almost devoid of incident. His was 'the daily round, the common task.' But it was rich in character, and beautiful by reason of the tone which character can put upon relations. We have not, indeed, those active elements of character which nowadays men gather into the word 'Energy,' and then bow down and worship. We find rather those refined, sensitive pleasant, passive virtues which make tender and helpful the home relations, and which are the grace of all social intercourse: 'The best portion of a good man's life, his little nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love.'

"There was, therefore, always in the soul of Isaac more of the reverie and peace of the still twilight than the fever and restless ambition of the noonday. He was not a faded reproduction of Abraham, a mere reminiscence of that great man's personality, but the ruggedness and hardness in him were softened and mellowed into harmony and beauty. His life did not represent the sinewy swiftness of the mountain torrent, but the deeper calm of the unhastening stream flowing through the valley, presenting an unfretted surface for the reflection of the sky with its stars."

The Greatness of Common Goodness

We are wont to prize the unusual acts of heroism and extol the virtues of the great warrior, but we are coming to realize that the one who lives nobly in his common everyday, and shows himself righteous, just, forbearing and peaceful in the ordinary walks and duties of life, is the one who is truly great. We all have need to learn with a feeling of more certainty that "the reality and the greatness of the virtues do not depend on the place or sphere or form in which they are enacted, but on the motives, the choices, the spirit that permeate them. Heroism, courage, patriotism, are as real, and living, and growing amid the temptations of civil life as on the field of war. To do right when others do wrong, to withstand the tide of false opinion, to stand alone for principle, to turn from all gains through Satan spread out before one, as before Christ in his temptations, "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," to do right at any cost,—here is the universal field of heroism, open to every boy and girl every day. We cannot all be heroes in great things, but the field of heroism is everywhere, in every home, in every town. There are great enemies to overcome in our own hearts, there are powers and principalities of evil on every hand."

Wells Centers of Community Life

It is not strange that there should be so many contests over wells, when we realize that "a well of springing water was a possession of inestimable value," in these arid regions. "It was the center of community life, supplying alike the necessities of the household and of the flocks and herds." It was the social center, as women from the homes and men from the fields met to draw water in buckets from the depths of the well. Abraham had lived in Gerar for a time, and had of course been obliged to sink wells there, for he had too many animals and too large a household to be dependent on the wells of others. The stopping of these wells was doubtless with the express purpose of preventing Isaac's settlement there. He had been merely a sojourner, but the continued possession of wells would give him a sort of proprietary right in the land, according to their ideas." (Illustrated Quarterly).

How Isaac Maintains Peace

Many another man would have had a real battle over those wells, but Isaac was able to maintain peace by yielding time after time to the claims, unjust though they were, of the herdsmen of the Philistines. Some would call him weak, irresolute and cowardly, but it betokened more character to do a thing like that because it was right to refrain from fighting than would have been required to engage the enemies in battle. And his policy of non-resistance proved both wise and effective. As Alice D. Adams says, "We are not told whether the gentleness of Isaac made the Philistines ashamed of themselves and kindly disposed toward him, but common human experience proves that meekness usually has that effect when a real man exhibits the quality. War is the world's greatest curse. It is humanity's vast shame and sin. The chief task before all good men and women today is to end war, to make it impossible forever. There is no way to do it but to inculcate the spirit of Isaac. Men must cease to 'stand on their rights' and begin to be intensely solicitous for the rights of other men. Men must cultivate the spirit of self-sacrifice, must rejoice in the prosperity of other men and other nations, and in honor prefer one another."

Field Secretary

Brother Melvin Stuekey, our Field Secretary, gave Ashland a brief visit in making the transition from Indiana to Pennsylvania. His reports of work done since the beginning of the calendar year were both gratifying and heartening. He is persuaded that substantial progress is being made by Brethren schools. He found a greater interest, and a more enthusiastic response in his meeting with our workers.

After a brief period in Western Pennsylvania, Brother Stuekey will move eastward through West Virginia to the southern end of the Shenandoah Valley. His plan is to work northward, returning through Maryland. The schools of these sections will do well to give him the largest possible hearing, and fullest co-operation.

Birmingham

The late Quadrennial Convention of the International Council at Birmingham measured up to the expectations of the promoters. There were about seven thousand enrolled delegates. The local attendants increased the number by several thousands more. The addresses were of an unusually high order. The most fraternal spirit prevailed throughout the convention. The theme was: "Building Together a Christian Citizenship. And in the entire study the chief concern was for the nurture of childhood and youth, for the young become the citizens of tomorrow. The great young people's congress with a thousand delegates, held over the week-end, revealed a fine interest on the part of the young people themselves. All the delegates came away with profound conviction and high enthusiasm with regard to the immediate and far-reaching significance of religious education.

An Unusual Record

There were only five Brethren delegates. The Church of the Brethren had about sixty. Had we more people like Brother Eli Helser of Warsaw, Indiana, we might have had a larger number present, too. He has attended twenty-four state conventions, five international conventions, and one convention of the World's Association. He wanted to go to Birmingham, but his health would not permit. J. A. Ohio Christian Endeavor Convention

By Prof. J. A. Garber, President
Brethren National Union

Ohio has the record of having one of the best state conventions held anywhere in the country. Plans are being made to make the coming convention the best ever.

The convention will be centrally located this year. It is to be held in the capital city. This central location favors an unusually large attendance. Registrations are coming in rapidly. Brethren Endeavorers planning to attend should register as soon as possible through their county secretary or with the State Secretary, 511 Clinton Building, Columbus.

Our own young people should plan to attend in large numbers. For some time we have had representation in the state organization. At the present time, Brother E. M. Riddle is serving as stewardship superintendent. In addition to the instruction and inspiration received from the general program, we have planned the following program for our Denominational Rally which will be held at the First Brethren church on Friday afternoon:

1. Introduction and get acquainted service, led by local President.
2. Devotional Service by Rev. H. M. Oberholtzer.
3. Brethren Endeavor in Ohio by Rev. F. C. Vanator.
4. Christian Endeavor Fellowship by Rev. E. M. Riddle.
5. Talks with a Forward Look by delegates.
6. What Next by the National President.

The date is June 22 to 25. All roads lead to Columbus.

Don't Underrate Yourself

"I'd give anything if I had Elsie's ability to make friends," sighed a young woman. "Put Elsie in a crowd of strangers and in ten minutes she is laughing and chatting as if she had known them all her life. But in her place I'm as mum as an oyster and so shy and awkward that nobody feels like making an effort to draw me out."

This lament made it plain why the girl in question was slow in making friends. She was guilty of self-depreciation. She underrated her ability, her attractiveness, and her power to make a pleasant impression. When she met people for the first time, a thought of her awkwardness was uppermost in her mind. She felt sure that if she tried to talk it would only sound silly. Although she is in reality quite as bright a girl as Elsie, whom she envies, it is true that she does not make the favorable impression on others that Elsie does, because she so persistently underrates herself as to put herself at a disadvantage.

It is a pity that any girl should wrong herself this way. It is a pity that she should hold such a distorted image of herself before her mind's eye. The most brilliant girl who should continually tell herself that she was awkward and stupid would end by being unable to do herself justice.—Selected.

But give me, Lord, eyes to behold the truth;
A seeing sense that knows the eternal right;
A heart with pity filled, and gentlest truth;
A manly faith that makes all darkness light.
Give me the power to labor for mankind;
Make me the mouth of such as cannot speak;
Eyes let me be to groping men and blind;
A conscience to the base; and to the weak
Let me be hands and feet; and to the foolish, mind;
And lead still further on such as thy kingdom seek.

—Theodore Parker.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for May 23)

Radio Messages from China John 14:6-9

Hello, Junior Christian Endeavorers of America:

My name is Sin San and I live far from you. The big rolling boisterous Pacific lies between us, yet I am sending you a message. Is it not nice that children can talk to each other even when we have never seen one another? First, I want to thank you for the wonderful Missionary lady, whom you sent to me. Do you know how wonderful she is? She loves all the boys and girls who come to her and helps them to solve their problems and be happy.

One time there was a great famine in China. At that time my mother and father and three brothers were living in a house boat on the Yangtse River. Though I was only a little girl, and girl children are not considered very important in China, yet I was happy while we moved slowly along the river bank. Often I swam with the other children along beside the boat, or carried my little brother on my back through the towns. One time, the rice crop failed and at last we only had a few grains of rice left for food. Since little girls are not considered as important as little boys, my parents finally decided to put me off the boat. That will be hard for you to understand for I am told that in your country, mothers and fathers like little girls as well as little boys, but in our land it is not so. When it was found that there could not be food for all of us, I was sacrificed to the need. I was left in a small town and as I stood and watched the boat float away without me, I wondered what was to become of me. I walked about for a while and then came back and lay down on the wharf, feeling that my folks must surely return and pick me up. That night I was hungry and cold and lonely and it seemed that morning would never come. Finally, daylight came, but by that time I was so sick and hopeless that I cried sorrowfully.

Then, what do you think happened I heard some one say, "Little Girl, what is the matter?" and when I looked up, there stood a beautiful smiling lady. She took my hand and helped me to stand up and then she asked me to go with her. I think she must have guessed that I was hungry for she took me to her house and gave me a big breakfast. When I had eaten and rested, she asked me to tell her my story. I told her all about my troubles and she told me that she would find a place where I might stay. Have you guessed who this kind lady was? (She was your missionary lady, of course. Do you wonder that I love her very much? I am not the only person she has helped. She has helped lots of other little children and grown folks, too.

I love Jesus and the Bible stories that my missionary lady has told me about. Some day she is going to help me to find my parents and brothers and tell them about Jesus. I am anxious to see them again for I know that they did not really want to leave me there all alone that evening. They felt that it was their duty to save my brothers.

Every day I go to school in the missionaries' school. There are lots of children in our school. We are taught lots of school subjects like you have in your schools over there. Then we have Bible lessons right in our school, too. I am learning to make my own clothes and to dress like American people do. Some day, I hope to come over to America and learn to know you Junior Christian Endeavorers, and then I am coming back to China and help the missionaries to tell more people about Jesus and his love.

I hope that you will send more and more people over to tell the rest of the people in my land about Jesus. Christianity helps these who know about it to be happier and it helps them to know how to be kind to each other and love each other. I think that if all of China was a Christian land it would be a much better and happier place to live in. Those of you who can not come over in person can help send others and can pray for us. Again, I want to thank you for your wonderfully kind missionary lady and to ask that you think of your Chinese friends often and remember them when you talk to our heavenly Father, for he loves us, too.

A Personal Letter from Estella Myers

(The following letter, written by Estella Myers, missionary to Africa, to her mother, Mrs. Annie V. Myers, of Millersburg, Iowa, was sent to us by this mother of missionaries with the kind permission to share it with the brotherhood, and we are pleased to pass on to our readers these generous excerpts.—Editor.)

Bassai par Bozoum, par Bangui,
 French Equatorial Africa.,

January 8, 1926.

Dear Mama:

How fast time goes; Another year is here. I wonder what this year will bring. If we in Africa had all of our wishes we would have beside the hospital finished that Brother Kennedy has nicely started, we would have a church and school here and permanent houses for the people at Yaloke. Oh yes, we would see the people nicely situated on the new station we hope to open this year. I can not help but wishing and praying that some wealthy, godly man would find joy in giving and make possible the Leper asylum we need so badly in Kareland. Leprosy is spreading and it is needed not only for the black people but also to protect the missionaries. If the people who have money in the homeland knew the joy of giving in large sums, I believe God would reveal to them how much good their money would do if invested out here. Sometimes I sit on the rocks and look over the vast land before me, praying as the many needs flash into my mind, and I wonder why people who have money limit God. We are so thankful for the Woman's Missionary Society which gave the $500 for the hospital. We are praying God to send more that we might have all the rooms needed. We long so much for a laboratory, and that the building might have an iron roof. This is so expensive.

But not only the material means do we plead for this year, but we long so much for godliness in the lives of our Christians, that as they go out with the Gospel story they may be heard. Many are being baptized. It is a revival all the time and our time is taken very much in teaching. Every time a Christian sins our hearts ache, and we plead for the life hid with Christ in God for them. We long that they might take the Gospel to the many in far villages.

Hattie and I just returned from a trip through the region called the outlaw villages. They told us the story of the war that the French had with them in the month of June. They hid in the rocks from the soldiers and many children died of hunger. Many were killed by the soldiers, but many lost their lives from sickness in their hiding places. What remains now are the people who surrendered and how gladly they received the Gospel. One day fourteen came forward. They praise God for his working. Truly the devil is in this land with all force, but as the natives say it, "God exceeds the devil."

I made many resolutions New Years' day. You see I have not gotten away from my childhood days. One of them is to arise at 5 o'clock in the morning and spend the time in prayer until the house boy rings the bell for breakfast which is about 10 minutes before 6. I feel that we can put the devil to flight more through prayer than any other way, and as long as my heart is so burdened I choose not only to pray without ceasing, but in the still of the morning to spend an hour with God.

Since we are living in the house made for girls we can do so many things that were somewhat hard when we all lived in the same room. Now each of us have a room, and we do not bother each other. We have a nice reception room that has in it the bookcase, little organ and phonograph, beside the chairs. We have pictures on the walls and draperies at the windows. Inside our home does not look like Africa at all. I thank God for it all and know that our health will be much better than it used to be. We have had no serious sickness for a long time. May God speedily give permanent houses to the Yaloke workers.

Brother and Sister Kennedy are living in the married couple's house and are indeed happy. Brother Kennedy is a hard worker. It is surprising to me how he can work so hard all day with the natives on the hospital, then when his turn comes to preach in the mornings he gives such good sermons to the natives. I guess it is because of his godly wife, as well as the strength of the Lord.

Was just over to see a sick boy who has sore throat. He cannot swallow, and he wants to eat so badly. He asked me to give him some of the stuff I gave the boy who was hurt by the wagon, when I sewed up the long gash in his leg. It was chloroform he meant, and he thought that should I give him some he would not feel his sore throat and could swallow. I explained to him that chloroform was not good for anything like sore throat. He said I did not know how badly it hurt. I said, "O yes, for I have had sore throat so badly that I had my tonsils taken out." He then said, "Take mine out." I said, "Yak-anenzi, I do not know how to take tonsils out; doctors only do that." Then the response came that we have heard so often. "Why don't the doctors come to us?" I told him to pray and I knew that God would send one here, and that there was a young man in school now that would come out here as soon as his medical course was over. So the Kare are going to pray for Brother Taber to live here. Although they say if he has a motorcycle he can visit all the other stations...

It's dreadfully windy here now. Hattie says, "Kansas has nothing on Bassai." We are writing letters today with sweaters on! The mail goes out tomorrow.

Yes, I wish we had some of your apples. Would gladly exchange peanuts for them. We had guinea for dinner. Living on beans and stored pumpkin these days. How we appreciate the dried fruit that was sent us. Remember me to every member of the family, and know I pray for you all and want God's will in each life.

Your daughter.

ESTELLA.

Can We Give Too Much?

By Allen R. Bartholomew

Beneath the cross of Jesus I fain would take my stand,
 The shadow of a mighty Rock within a weary land;
 A home within the wilderness, a rest upon the way,
 From the burning of the noontide heat and the burden of the day.

So much is being said about giving, in our day, that some of us have come to believe that we are giving too much. It is no proof that much is given because we hear so much about it. On the contrary, may it not be true that too little is given to the work of the Lord?

Giving is a test of living. Christians who give not, do not live. They cannot grow and they do not prosper. They may have a name to live, but are dead. We can be like Christ only as we give like he gives. "He gave himself for us." There should be no limit to our giving, except it be the limit of need and ability.

"There's a wideness in God's mercy,
 Like the wideness of the sea."

Giving is the test of faith. It is a testimony of the love we bear for Christ in our hearts in the face of an unbelieving world. We should give as unto the Lord, and not for self-glory.

St. Paul gave the Christians at Corinth a plan that we do well to adopt in our giving. It is sound, simple and scriptural. Set apart each week a certain amount as the Lord has given us earning capacity. This is a very convenient method for most people. Giving "every week" insures that we give regularly. The great trouble with so many people is that they give too seldom. Paul's plan also helps us to know how much we give. Those who do not give regularly think they give many times as much as they really do give. Some Christians must blush when they find out how little they give for the spread of the Gospel in all the world.

"The first day" of the week is fixed as the most suitable time for giving to the Lord. How appropriate the day—"the day of all the best, emblem of eternal rest." We receive our most sacred thoughts on the Lord's day. It is a reminder of the great resurrection gift of Christ to the church. What act can be more beautiful, than giving, for the holy day! Who could refuse to give then?

The amount of our giving is to be determined by our getting. If we receive little, our gifts can be small. If we receive much, our gifts should be large. In either case, the blessing will be sure. Our prosperity is to be the measure of our liberality. God gave to us that we may give to others. He trusts us, and we are to trust him that he will give us all things richly to enjoy.

Every Christian should be a giving Christian. The chief cause of trouble in many congregations is that so few of the members are giving according to their ability. We are to give freely, willingly, heartily. Whenever people are forced to give, the gift loses its value. Where compulsion begins, their love ends. Jesus said, "I lay down my life for the sheep." His was a voluntary death. As we think of Jesus, and what he did for us, should we not in all sincerity say:

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small,
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all!"

—The Outlook of Missions.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

BERLIN DEDICATION

On Sunday, April 25, 1926, the Brethren of Berlin, Pennsylvania, dedicated their new and commodious church. For a number of years our people here have felt the need of a more adequate place of worship. Prior to the world war plans for building were being considered but conditions made a postponement necessary. Early in the year 1920 plans were again interrupted by the sudden death of the pastor, Rev. I. B. Trout. The writer assumed the pastorate the next October. It became immediately apparent that the task before us was the stimulating of interest and the uniting of the forces. To some the building of a church seemed impossible. After much meeting, and council together, plans for the proposed building were approved by the congregation April 23, 1922. But it seemed the time for proceeding had not yet arrived. Prices were high, the old church must be moved and money was needed. A contract was finally let to Lewis Keiper of Johnstown, March 30, 1925. The old church having been moved the fall before, the work of excavating and the building of the wall began almost immediately. The work of construction proceeded rapidly under the direction of the contractor and local committeemen, and the new edifice was dedicated on the above date to the worship of the Lord.

The organization of the Berlin congregation is of more than local interest. It was here early in August of 1881 that Elder H. R. Holsinger passed through the trial which marked the beginning of the Brethren church. A new house of worship was dedicated on December 4th of this year. The number of adherents to the faith were few but these were loyal to the cause they had espoused. The growth here has not been by leaps and bounds but steady and substantial. The congregation has produced from among her sons five ministers of the Gospel as follows: J. H. Knepper, Alvin A. Cober, W. H. Stahl, J. Wesley Platt and Albert B. Cover. Eighteen regular pastors have served the Berlin congregation during these forty-five years of history.

The New Building

The new structure stands upon parts of two lots, the one on which the old church stood and the corner lot purchased some years ago. Facing on Main street and in the center of town, the new edifice is ideally located. The building is about 92x63 feet in size. The foundation is built of native sandstone, and the walls are hollow tile cased in brick. The basement under the entire building is complete in its equipment, part of which is the baptistry and two rooms each containing five tubs for the practice of the ordinance of feet-washing. Further basement equipment is a large assembly room with a seating capacity of about 350, kitchen, sewing room, lavatories, etc. The main floor includes church auditorium, pastor's study, choir room, library, mothers' room, Sunday school auditorium with balcony, and 22 class rooms. The total seating capacity is about 675. The speaker can be easily seen and heard from any point. The main auditorium and choir loft will seat about 300. This gives ample facilities for all the activities of the church.

ELDER W. C. BENSHOFF
Pastor, Berlin, Pennsylvania

The cost of the building was $58,617.11. This does not include a number of personal contributions of equipment, nor the cost of grading and laying of sidewalks, nor the pipe organ which will be installed this month. Total cost of plant will be about $65,000. This exclusive of the lot. The amount raised up to the time of dedication was $21,600, leaving an amount to be raised of approximately $37,000.

Dedication

Dr. W. H. Beachler of South Bend, Indiana, was the speaker of the day and had charge of the raising of the money. Brother Beachler is well known and it is sufficient to say that he gave to Berlin his best. All the rich experience gained through years, as a minister in the preaching of the Gospel, and the raising of funds for the church, he put into this gigantic task. Three services were held. The attendance throughout was large, especially at the afternoon and evening services when all space was occupied. The afternoon hour was in the nature of a community service with short addresses by the local pastors. The music of the day was exceptional. The local choir was assisted at the morning service by our choir from Meyersdale—there was an anthem and solo. A community choir of some sixty voices led in the singing in the afternoon and evening service and rendered special selections. A week of special services followed. Dr. Beachler continued with us till Thursday evening. With a sermon by each of the Brethren H. L. Goughnour and H. G. Rhoades and two sermons by the pastor, the special service concluded. Twelve were added to the church by baptism.

The financial results were beyond the expectations of the most optimistic. The total amount raised in cash and pledges was about $33,500, leaving about $3,500 unprovided for, and the end is not yet. As I write these words I am led to say: "The Lord hath done great things for us." But are we as glad, as full of praise and thanksgiving as we should be? For it is to the Lord that we are indebted for this phenomenal result. History has been made. Experiences passed through have been enjoyable and profitable. May this beautiful temple, dedicated to the worship of God, ever be kept sacred; may nothing ever be said or done here to bring discredit to his name.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

HOME MISSION NEWS

Doubtless there are many wondering what progress is being made at Fort Wayne, Indiana. We have a recent letter from Brother Kimmel, the pastor, in which he states that the new church is now under roof and that everything is moving along nicely.

The Mission Board feels that Brother Kimmel is making a splendid start. He has already raised $2,400.00 by subscription and hopes to raise $1,500.00 more. $1,900.00 was paid for the lot, which is ideally located in a thrifty section of the city. The balance will be applied on the building.

If all goes well they hope to be ready to dedicate the building by July 15th.

Brother Kimmel has had much experience in Mission work and the accomplishments to date at Fort Wayne, show that he is not an amateur in the business.

Let us all pray for him, the work, and the workers associated with him.

Kentucky News

Brother and Sister D. A. Young, who have so faithfully served us at Riverside Institute for several years, have accepted responsible positions at the Otterbein Home. Sister Young was employed as a teacher and Brother Young as Financial Secretary and teacher. In behalf of the Mission Board we wish to express our appreciation for the good work done in our Mission by them and all the other workers. God will reward each one according to his good pleasure.

Rev. and Mrs. M. D. Early of Los Angeles, California, are to be the successors to Brother Young. They have been highly recommended, and we believe they will be efficient workers.

Other Points

Our Missions churches in the cities of Port Scott, Kansas, and Des Moines, Iowa, are going forward in a commendable manner. They have splendid leaders and that means much, for the success of any undertaking, especially is this true in church work. Brother Wood at Port Scott, has tackled a hard proposition. Your Secretary was on the field for a month last spring and knows what the task is. We believe the good people who compose the membership of that flock, will stand by their pastor and help in every way possible to build up a splendid church in that beautiful city. It really is a beautiful city and we have an ideal location for our church.

Evangelist readers have doubtless noticed that a mission church has been built at Winchester, Virginia, and other places are being considered for the opening of mission points in the near future. Let us have your prayers, and more liberal contributions and thereby make possible the establishment of many Brethren churches throughout our fair land.

Offerings

Practically all the churches have sent us their Thanksgiving offerings, but there are several that are delayed for some reason. We hope to receive them all before July 1st, so that the amounts may be included in the annual report.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Ashland Dedication

We, at Ashland, have been traveling some, even though we have not been blowing the bugle about it. We have come to a climactic day in the history of this old congregation. Many of our brethren do not know now, perhaps, that for the past forty years, this congregation has been worshipping in the college chapel. Strange as it may seem to those not here, it is not ideal for either the church or college. For a good many years, projects have been initiated, looking to the building of a new church. It was with this forward march distinctly in view that I came to Ashland, nearly three years ago. It was not until last fall early, that we decided to go forward with the final project. We have now nearly reached the time of dedication, May 23rd, is the time set for it. At that time, we expect to have with us, Dr. Wm. H. Beachler for the event. It is because we hope to have a good many more, that we are writing this letter of information and invitation. Hundreds of our loyal brethren all over the brotherhood have been here as students or have had children here. We have a mind that we should like to have you all here for this great day to which some had looked forward and for which a good many have pledged money.

One of these former students was here recently and gave me permission to read off his name to a pledge he had made many years ago and for which the time had not come to pay until now. It has been my conviction from the start that the brotherhood owes much to this church for her preachers and for the ones yet to be made and that therefore, they ought to help in the payment of this building. The longer I live here the more I am sure of it; and it is with a fervent hope that I write expecting that I will receive many letters next week, telling me to do the same thing for others. If friends wish to send a check for this needy cause they may send it to the financial secretary of the church and building fund, Andrew Miller, R. F. D., Ashland, Ohio, who will see that it is put right where it ought to go. We expect a great day for the Dedication and invite any near churches to come. A picnic dinner will be served and a basket of food will come in handy, if you decide to come by churches. We expect Dr. Miller to have returned from his Palestine trip for this event, and doubtless he will have some prominent part in this service. Remember the date—May 23, 1926.

JOHNSTOWN SECOND (MOXHAM) HAPPENINGS

After something more than six months of labor with the membership of the Second Brethren church, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, it occurs to me that perhaps some of my friends, and the people of the brotherhood in general, might be interested in hearing from this part of the Lord's vineyard.

At the earnest solicitation of the Pennsylvania State Mission Board I assumed charge of the work at this place on October 15, coming in for Sunday services only until November 15, when we set up housekeeping in the midst of our parish. The work at this place was in rather a weakened condition, from various causes, and it certainly looked rather disheartening for the first few weeks. Gradually, however, the attendance at the services began to increase and things became more encouraging and hopeful. As with all the churches of Johnstown, the problem of the working hours for the men (and Sunday labor as well) is one of the drawbacks in accomplishing the largest amount of good possible. When men, though they be members of the church, are compelled to work for seven days in the week, year after year, with scarcely an opportunity to attend divine services they find it hard to develop that deep sense of the spiritual which is vouchsafed to those privileged to enjoy regular attendance upon the services of the church. Too, the wives and mothers are often compelled to stay at home to minister to the comfort and appetite of the husbands and sons who come in at all hours of the day and night, and so the women also are robbed of the blessing of regular attendance at worship.

In spite of all the drawbacks, however, there are the faithful few who have kept the work together at this place through all the years, and they can be relied upon. And since coming among the good people here it has been the effort of the pastor to prove himself a real shepherd to the flock. Much sickness has required considerable calling and has also brought the shepherd and his flock together in a somewhat closer fellowship than developed my mere formal calling on the minister's part.

Having been without resident-pastoral care for several months the congregation felt that a revival campaign would be a good thing for the work. Accordingly the services of Brother Charles H. Ashman, of the First church, of Johnstown, were secured for an evangelistic campaign. Brother Ashman came to us on February 21, and for three weeks proclaimed the Gospel with clearness and fidelity to the truth, as well as love and tenderness. During and immediately following the evangelistic campaign, twenty-four were received into the fellowship of the congregation. Of this number eleven came by letter, seven by relation, six on confession of faith, of the last number one remains to be baptized at a later convenient time. The group here are greatly encouraged at the prospects of the work, so much so that architect's plans have been drawn for a new church building and it but awaits the completing of a few of the details before actual building operations begin. It is planned to build on a modest scale, so as not to burden the membership, and yet with ample facilities for the needs of the work for several years.

Since coming among the brethren here the attendance at the Sunday school services has practically trebled, while the attendance at the worship periods has been steadily increasing. An encouraging fact is the presence at most of the services of a great many who had grown discouraged and were no longer attending the services. There seems to be a growing spirit of fraternity among the members themselves, and where there is harmony and accord among the members a church will eventually grow. It is planned to organize both Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor societies in the near future, and thus care for the spiritual interests of the young people of the charge.

We are praying that God may give us wisdom to lead wisely and well the work at this place, so that his kingdom may be built up and the coming of the King hastened. To this end we crave an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood for the outpouring of the Spirit upon both sheep and shepherd, so that we may be kept humble and teachable and always amenable to his will. We greet the sister churches of our beloved fraternity and rejoice in the progress of the work among all the Brethren.

Fraternally,

DYOLL BELOTE.

SOUTH BEND NOTES

We conducted our annual evangelistic services here during the two weeks preceding Easter. They were two very busy weeks. It was purely a local talent affair. The pastor did the preaching, which, incidentally, made for him the third successive meeting in this church. Our music was in charge of Brother Milton Wysong a member of the congregation. And a large chorus choir, assisted by the orchestra, under Brother Wysong's able leadership, meant that the music was a very telling factor in our meetings. We have had 27 additions to the church as the immediate result of our campaign, and we expect enough more, to make it at least 30. Needless to say the congregation was greatly blessed.

Easter was a great day among us. Our Missionary offering was, I am told, the largest in the history of the congregation. I think it is fair to the South Bend congregation to say that we have here a very generous people. And when once the heavy local obligations have been taken care of, this congregation will give increasingly fine support to all of the interests of the denomination.

April 11th, the very next Sunday following Easter Sunday, was also a memorable day in the life of this church. It had been set apart months before as Anniversary and Home Coming Sunday. We had all looked forward much to this day and had also planned carefully. The primary object for the day was to finance the cost of the parsonage property. We had set as our goal $12,000. North Manchester congregation kindly granted their pastor, Prof. J. Raymond Schutz, leave of absence to come over here and do the preaching of the day. He spoke morning, afternoon, and night and he did his part nobly and well. We knew he would. The only hitch in our plans for the day was that April 11th found the pastor securely parked in his bed, a very sick man. But the program went right on just the same. Under the able direction of Attorney Roland Obenchain, Moderator of this church, the canvass was made, with the result that over $8,000 was raised. It was a splendid achievement. Of course I wanted to have a part in the day's program, and certainly if I had had any voice in the matter as to when I was to be sick I would not have chosen Anniversary Day. My congregation knows that well enough. This congregation is highly grateful to North Manchester church and Brother Schutz.

This church gave me the privilege to go to Pennsylvania and have a part in the dedication of the beautiful church at Berlin. This means going back to the country where we had lived three years. It was a great pleasure to Mrs. Beachler and myself to meet very many of the Myersdale and Summit Mills friends, also the Salisbury friends, at the various services of dedication day and the evening services that followed. I shall leave it entirely to the pastor, Brother Benshoff, to report the dedication. All I will suggest is that the results spelled victory, and real history was made. And one more beautiful edifice is now added to the increasing number of fine church buildings to be found in our brotherhood.

WM. H. BEACHLER.

ADOPTION

Never the pain of birth, perhaps, nor the joy that follows after,
But the peace that comes with the wistful sound of a lonely child's first laughter;
Never that moment of breathless thrill when a baby's hands go groping,
But the calm that comes to a tired soul when there is an end to hoping!
Never the rapture of saying, soft, "This is flesh of my flesh, I'm bearing!"
But the quiet charm of a home complete—and a love the heart is sharing.
Never the gleam of a girlhood dream in a little fact uplifted,
But a hand to touch when the shadows creep, and the yearning years have drifted.
Never the pain of birth, perhaps, nor the rapture coming later;
Never the fear that is past belief—nor the splendor, which is greater!
Just an aching lack, to be satisfied, that some tiny life is feeling;
Just the sight of a little cozy bed—and a child beside it kneeling!
Never the waiting anguish torn, for a spirit to be lighted,
Only the knowledge of work to do, of a wrong that may be righted;
Never the best, perhaps, of life—its wonderful, age-old story—
But who shall say that the second best is lacking its share of glory?

NEW TROY, MICHIGAN

The writer just returned from a seventeen days' evangelistic effort with the little flock of believers at New Troy. I was not a stranger to the field, there, having led them in previous efforts and the Lord has always blessed our labors together. Brother J. H. English ministers here, and although his ministry has extended through many years, he is still serving the church well, and God is giving them souls occasionally for their labors.

Since Brother Duker has moved from the state, Brother English is the only active minister remaining in the entire state.

What a great field of virgin soil for church extension! Certainly our mission boards ought to press their way into such fields and claim them for the Brethren church.

Our people at New Troy have a very neat and comfortable church building. A splendid Bible school, and an active W. M. S. The latter organization is a real force in the church, spiritually, financially and otherwise. Our revival was a success in many ways. The souls won were such that they will mean much to the work for the present and for the years to come. There were ten who took their stand for the Lord and will all be added to his church. This does not include the many who renewed their vows and rededicated their lives to his service. This meeting was made possible by some help from the Evangelistic and Bible Study League, and the little church I am sure, is very appreciative of the League's interest in them. The Brethren here are not many but they are genuinely Brethren and know why they are. Here live those whose names have been household names in the church from its beginning. The Ashmans, Penwells, Pletchers, Weavers, English and Phillips families are among the number. May the Lord keep them true in these days when so many are departing from the faith.

Our work at Warsaw is moving along very nicely in every way. We have no complaints to offer. God is blessing our labors in a great way, for which we thank him, take new courage and press forward. Within the past few weeks, four have been added, two by letter, and two confessions awaiting baptism. Our attendance at all services are on the increase.

The Bible school especially is the best in its organization, attendance and offerings in many years, we are told.

The pastor will deliver the Baccalaureate sermon in the M. E. church on May 30.

Brethren coming to Winona for the season are invited to spend the Lord's day with us. During my absence the pulpit was supplied by Evangelists Ricker, Greenfield and Ronk, and Rev. M. A. Stuckey. We greatly appreciate having these men in our pulpit. Pray for us as we continue in his service.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

God's appeal to the children of Israel was that they "go forward." That same appeal has sounded in the ears of the members of the Washington church and in answer to it they have taken a forward step which we believe will prove of great blessing to God's cause as represented by the Brethren here in the Capital City.

For an extended period there has been the growing need of a new church building to adequately care for the needs of the work here. The need is well nigh imperative at the present time. Our Sunday school is now meeting in two widely separated buildings which makes it difficult to do efficient work. We are losing many opportunities for obtaining new scholars because of the lack of facilities for caring for them. The present building is well nigh a hundred years old and is about ready to fall to pieces. There is no basement in the building and thus no furnace equipment. Many cold days it has been impossible to properly heat the building which has resulted in impeding our progress.

For these reasons and for many others the Washington Brethren decided that something must be done. Thus at a business meeting which was held a few nights ago a plan for procedure was adopted. It was realized that it would be impossible at the present time for the church to undertake to complete the kind of a structure that ought to represent our brotherhood here in Washington without incurring an oppressive debt. But it was seen that the church could undertake the erection of the first floor plan. This will enable the Sunday school to be drawn together, will give to the school a number of class rooms whereas now there are scarcely any, and it will give to the church a comfortable place in which to worship.

With this in mind the church has determined to begin operations on the erection of the first floor plan. Construction will doubtless go forward during the summer. Upon the completion of this much of the church we will necessarily have to stop until such a time as finances will enable us to go ahead with the completion of the entire structure, which we hope will not be long. The completed church will in appearance be of a memorial type, such as are very prevalent in Washington among all the denominations, and should be an object of pride for the whole brotherhood. The cost of the completed church will be around $75,000.00. But above all may its building be for the glory of God. The Brethren here will appreciate the interest of the church at large in this huge undertaking. They will be glad to receive any offering that anyone may feel led to give to help toward the completion of this work.

Yours in service,
HOMER A. KENT, Pastor.

DOINGS AT DAYTON

The first four months of 1926 have been busy ones in the work of the Master at the First Brethren Church in Dayton. Following the splendid revival meeting held in January by Dr. Ashman of Johnstown (which has been reported) our people began working in earnest to get ready for the spring drives.

On February 25 we had the privilege of having in our midst Brother Melvin Stuckey in a fine officers' and teachers' conference. He gave a fine address and on the following Sunday preached two splendid sermons which were appreciated by our people.

Our Annual Increase campaign in the Sunday school began on the first Sunday in March and continued to Easter Sunday. These campaigns are yearly events and create much enthusiasm among our people. Many new enrollments were secured, together with a number of additions to the church. The enrollment of our school is now over 1900. Our attendance on Easter Sunday was 1409, leading all the schools of Montgomery county by 300.

Each Sunday of the campaign was a special day. Probably one of the most interesting days being Forward Step Day on Palm Sunday. 71 people definitely pledged to become tithers on this day.

Dr. Bell closed his pastorate here on April 11 with a great service. A score or more people were added to the church during the last few weeks of Dr. Bell's pastorate. At the morning service of April 11, he preached on "The Message of the Brethren Church", and in the evening the largest communion in the history of the church was held when over 500 surrounded the tables of the Lord.

Dr. Bell leaves his work with the love and respect of the entire church after more than eight years of faithful and efficient service. The Dayton church feels that Dr. Bell has done a wonderful work in Dayton and vicinity and shall always hold him in high esteem. May he be richly blessed in the great work in which he is now engaged as Endowment Secretary of the College.

Dr. Alva J. McClain of Ashland College began his work here on April 18. His sermons are wonderful and we enjoy working with him.

On April 18, the Girls' College Glee Club came to our church and gave a very fine concert. Their visit to the Gem City where they were heard at the Y. M. C. A. and the N. C. R., besides our church gave our school new and favorable advertisement to the citizens of this city and county.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ASHLAND DEDICATION

This is the most important announcement the Ashland church has sent forth for many moons. May 23rd has been set for the dedication of the new church. We hope for the prayers and also the presence of the brethren everywhere it is possible. Nearby churches may come in a body if they desire. There will be three services: morning, afternoon and evening, and a picnic dinner. Dr. Wm. H. Beachler will be the principal speaker. Dr. J. Allen Miller is expected to have returned.

CHARLES A. BAME, Pastor.

PASTORATE WANTED

My school work closes with May and I would be pleased to correspond with any church in quest of a pastor, either for the summer or a longer period.

WILLIAM H. MILLER,
Fairview, West Virginia.

SMITHVILLE, OHIO

The Sterling-Smithville congregation will hold their communion service Sunday evening, May 16 at Smithville. All nearby Brethren people are cordially invited to enjoy this service with us.

M. L. SANDS, Pastor.

MARYLAND-VIRGINIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Maryland-Virginia Conference of Brethren churches will be held at Roanoke, Virginia, June 15-17. Mark the date. Plan to attend. W. S. Bell will be a speaker. Every church represented by pastor and lay members is the goal. Winchester encourages our work. The whole district expects a great conference.

Each Christian Must Bear His Cross

Jews in Russia who have been led to a personal knowledge of Christ as Savior through the reading of the New Testament are appealing to their brethren to allow them to remain in the synagogues as believers in Jesus as the Messiah. This request has been refused by the Jewish authorities.

Christ's law of discipleship still holds. Every one who would follow Christ must take up the cross or to put it plainly, he must bear his share of the burden of Christ's Kingdom. What a wonderful help the members of the Brethren church may be to all our institutions and to the local church and its pastor if each member will become an evangelist using the printed pages as his message. If you know of an active, growing church you know of active growing Christians. Every member of the Brethren church should help bear the cross and cease looking for some Simon of Cyrene to do it for them.

Educational Day a Universal Obligation

Educational Day has been announced for the first Sunday in June. To those who realize the great importance of such an event, it would seem that the mere announcement would be sufficient to secure a generous response. But it is not so, neither with regard to Educational Day offering, nor any other of the general offerings of the church. There are two reasons for this. First, a great many people do not understand the need; and second, there are those who do not live up to their known duty in such matters, without urging. If all church members were sufficiently alert and interested to keep themselves informed concerning the general interests of the church, and if all were so true to conscience that to recognize a duty was to meet it, the task of securing an adequate offering for any of the accepted enterprises of the church would involve little more than announcing the date for the offering and passing the collection plates. But the task is not so simple as that. People must be informed and quickened with a sense of duty.

There are various means of bringing this information to those to whom the church must look for support, not the least important of which is the church paper. This organ of the church has been consistently loyal in its support of the college, as of every other legitimate interest of the church, and it has persistently sought to arouse the people to their duty. Also the college authorities, by personal communication, visitation and other means, have acquainted the brotherhood of their needs and appealed for adequate support. But notwithstanding all our very best efforts to broadcast these needs, there are still many who have not gotten the message, and will not get it, until the pastors with one voice and with great conviction and by persistent effort carry the message down to the last member of the last congregation. The printed page and the personal communication are very important, but they cannot take the place of the pastor, nor make up for a pastor's lack of interest and enthusiasm. And they can not begin to cope with his opposition. Not all the other means combined can go over the head of a pastor who enjoys the confidence of his people to secure an offering of respectable amount, to which he is indifferent or opposed. On the other hand such a pastor, without the support of other means, can put across almost any campaign with considerable success, if he undertakes it wisely and enthusiastically, and keeps persistently at it. The pastor truly is the key that opens the way to success in the congregation, and on him rests the largest measure of the responsibility.

Nor need there be any reluctance or faint-heartedness on the part of any pastor about pressing the claims of our educational interests. And on the other hand, no congregation or local leaver has the right to object to the pastor presenting by strong arguments and by every other rightful means, such claims and insisting on sincere effort on the part of the membership to measure up to their duty thereto. Indeed, the very fact that such an offering has been authorized by General Conference, lays upon every congregation in good standing the responsibility of doing its share. Where there is not such cooperation, there can be no successful prosecution of general activities and all the plans and programs of General Conference are futile. We can make no worthy progress as a denomination; we can make no impact upon the world; we can pursue no program of advancement without the spirit of cooperation and a reasonable effort on the part of the congregations to meet their share of the obligations involved. Every congregation expects such an attitude on the part of its communicants towards its local aims and undertakings. And just as certainly as each individual member of the local church is honor bound to cooperate in carrying out the plans and programs that he himself has participated in formulating, so each individual congregation is under high obligation to the brotherhood to do its part in the promotion of the aims that the various congregational representatives in conference assembled have chosen to accomplish.

This obligation on the part of the congregation to do its share in such offerings is further strengthened by the fact that every shirking of duty on the part of the various units of the brotherhood puts a heavier burden on the rest. Many a church, after having paid its portion, has had to help make up a deficit caused by other churches failing to do what was rightfully expected of them. And the assessments or apportionments made by the various boards on the congregations are larger than they would need to be for the work that is being done, if every congregation could be counted on to do its part. But experience has taught us that not all can be counted on, and so those who are willing must be asked to pay not only for themselves, but for those who are unwilling. Either that, or else the work of the church must lag. We may be thankful for those who are willing to do the extra amount. But why should it be necessary? Why should not every church be willing to do its full share, that is, what it is able to do? We well know what is a fair amount per capita for one congregation, is not necessarily a fair portion for another, for some congregations have more wealth than have others. But every congregation can give something, even though a small amount, and those who do not, or who give a much smaller amount than they are financially able to give, are shirking their duty and throwing an extra burden on others who are willing. And it is not always the poorer congregations that do the shirking, by any means. Sometimes the churches that have comparatively little of this world's goods put their well-to-do neighbors to shame by their giving. It is the willingness, the consecration, that determines the size of the gift, very largely. What a fine thing it would be for the work in general, and what a blessing to the congregations in particular, if each and every one would make an offering of such size that the pastor could honestly say, My people have given generously.

Furthermore the obligation is strong upon every congregation to support the educational interests because the college belongs to the brotherhood and every congregation is a beneficiary of this institution's beneficent influence. And that support ought to be to the limit of the various churches' ability, because the need is so urgent. We are wont to talk about "our college" and we regularly avail ourselves of the trained leadership that goes out from its halls, but what moral right have we to call it "our college", or to summon to our service the young life it has trained, if we give little or nothing towards its support? Churches who do that, not only morally forfeit their claim on the institution, but also make of themselves spiritual paupers by the process. Ashland College must be supported, and the first responsibility for so doing rests upon the denomination whose possession it is, and every congregation must bear its share of the responsibility, and Educational Day affords an opportunity for all to do their part, in small or large amounts, according as they are able. Let us not withhold our funds and enjoy the benefits, while others contribute to its upbuilding to our shame.

"Personal Liberty" Plea Absurd

It is an old argument, that of "personal liberty", and has been shattered many times, but each time it has been patched together again and brought out to do service when nothing more sensible could be thought of. The absurdity of the plea is everywhere apparent to thoughtful men and women, but we are often made painfully aware that a great many people do not think for themselves, and so, many very absurd things are frequently accepted without question. It is foolish for any one to talk about the right to drink liquor if he wishes to do so, for everybody knows there is no such right, but especially is such a claim foolish on the part of a trade unionist. This fact was brought out forcefully by Rev. Charles Stelzle, the popular labor preacher, when he spoke recently before a Sunday evening audience in Chicago. His words, which follow, are wise counsel, not only to members of labor unions, but to others as well:

"When a man joins a labor union," Mr. Stelzle said, "he deliberately gives up his right to work for what, and for how long, and under whatever conditions he pleases. He will tell you he gives up those rights for the benefit of the whole working class. I believe in his philosophy. That is exactly the principle that underlies the prohibition law.

"Clarence Darrow says he has as much right to drink a glass of whisky as any other man has to drink a cup of tea. But did you ever hear of any one killing another under the influence of tea? What a man can do in exercising personal liberty depends on how his acts affect other people.

"Organized labor believes in better jobs for working men, greater efficiency, higher wages, and in keeping little children in school instead of sending them to the factories; in the dignity of woman and the preservation of the home. Therefore labor cannot logically take a stand in favor of the increased manufacture and consumption of that which lowers the standards for which organized labor is contending.

"Employers of labor who deliberately violate the law and disregard the constitution of the United States for the gratification of their appetites may some day face a situation where working men hungry for bread will feel justified in breaking other but no less sacred laws and appropriate for themselves by force whatever will satisfy their hunger.

"The slogan, 'To hell with the constitution!' is a boomerang. If one class in this country declares it will obey only those laws it chooses to obey, any other class has an equal right to disregard any other set of laws it may select.

"A democratic form of government is the most complex form of government. The greater our civilization the more restricted become our liberties and we may enjoy our civil liberty only as we sacrifice our personal liberty."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Don't forget to make plans for Educational Day. Good offerings seldom come by chance. Also, young people should observe Ashland College Night.

Be a "lamplighter", says Brother Porte in his "Tract Corner", in other words, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

There will be no paper published on June 9th. Those having notices that should go out before June 16th issue should send them in for the June 2nd issue, and send them in time to reach the Evangelist office not later than the morning of May 31st.

Brother John Perry Horlacher, president of the Alumni Association of Ashland College announces an alumni banquet to be held at Ashland during commencement week. This will doubtless be a very happy occasion and should be largely attended.

President Jacobs' College News are to be found in this issue. The program for the class day exercises and the calendar for commencement are the special features. The many friends of the college who find it possible will enjoy a visit to Ashland at this season.

Brother E. B. Studebaker reports the work at Dallas Center, Iowa, where he has had charge for six months, as moving forward with encouragement. The young people are a very special reason for encouragement, both for their numbers and their willingness to work.

A pre-Easter service of ten days' duration conducted by the pastor resulted in eight being added to the church.

We have a very interesting newsletter this week from Dr. Gribble, who is spending a few months in rest and study of the French language in France. She seems to be very satisfactorily located with some cultured, Christian people in the historic town of Digne. Incidentally she points out the importance of thoroughly mastering a foreign language before attempting to preach the Gospel by means of it.

The Maryland-Virginia district conference is scheduled for Roanoke, Virginia, June 15 to 17, and two related announcements are to be found in this issue. The pastor of the entertaining church, Brother H. H. Rowsey, wants to know how many folks are coming, and the president of the district mission board wants the churches to complete their payments.

Brother A. B. Cover reports the work pressing forward at Falls City, Nebraska, and the loyalty spirit is manifest in that all special offerings have been made and reported promptly, which is commendable. During an Easter season campaign the church was strengthened by the addition of eight members. Brother Cover has been called to remain with this splendid church for his fourth year beginning next October.

The Indiana Brethren will be interested in the announcement of their annual Bible conference to be held at Shipshewana Lake, July 19 to 25. A splendid program is promised by the moderator, Brother W. I. Duker, and it is expected to be ready for publication in the near future. We were sorry to learn that Brother Duker, who is pastor of the Elkhart, Indiana, church, has been laid up for several weeks with inflammatory rheumatism, but glad to announce that he is up and about his work again.

Brother F. C. Vanator, pastor of the church at Canton, Ohio, announces that they are now beginning the actual construction of the much needed new church for this growing congregation. They have a wonderful field, as the pastor says, and this will enable them to take possession in a much larger way. Professor McClain was with this congregation for a week of Bible studies during the Easter season. Also the Girls' Gospel Team recently paid them a visit. Brother Vanator has been retained by this church for his seventh year of service, with an increased salary.

The Sixth Annual Pastors' Conference of Ohio will be held at Columbus under the auspices of the College of Agriculture of Ohio State University, June 21 to July 2. This is of interest to all Ohio pastors, but especially to the rural pastors, as their problems are featured. A strong faculty is announced and it is expected that those ten days will be found very profitable to those who will be so fortunate as to be able to attend. No registration fee is charged, and it is estimated that the entire necessary expense, excluding railroad fare, should not exceed $17.50. Pastors interested should write Prof. C. E. Lively, College of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio, not later than June 15.

Items of Interest

Of all metropolitan centers it is said that the city of New York affords the greatest opportunity and challenge for home missions. This claim is given support by a recent figure released by the headquarters of the Welfare Council, in which most of the fifteen hundred social service organizations of the city participated. It is reported that social charities of that city aggregate $200,000,000 annually, far more than any other city of the world. Of this amount the city itself appropriates $31,000,000.

Appropo the spirit of union among the churches was the recent discussion at the meeting of the St. Louis Catholic Union Committee concerning a possible reunion of the Roman Catholic Church and the Greek Catholic Church, the latter having been the religion of Russia under the czars. Speakers at this meeting explained that there are seventeen branches or rites of the Roman Catholic church which had been separated from the church during earlier centuries, and had been allowed to retain their own language and customs when they returned. But the Greek church is still a separate body, and before the Russian revolution in 1917 it had 100,000,000 adherents.

Dignifying the Communion Service

By L. G. Wood

God himself has dignified this service by the important place which he has given it in the Holy Scriptures, through which he has handed it down to us, and also by the way the Word relates this service to the spiritual life of the church.

How may we teach and practice this service, so as to promote the best and holiest recognition of its real design and dignity?

The definition of that term "dignity" is to exalt, elevate, honor, adore, ennoble.

This is a very sacred and holy service, composed of three definite and successive parts, blending into one glorious climax, which commemorates the Atonement made by our Lord Jesus Christ for our sin. Throughout the Scripture, this service is associated with things most holy. It is even as the "Mount" that could not be touched or the "Ark of the Covenant" that needed not the hand of man to steady it. In fact, the Scripture gives warning to those who would treat this service in an unthinking or trivial manner, and revealing the fact that it can be made a curse, instead of a blessing. This service is forever elevated above human aspirations of his spiritual nature.

Christians do not approach this service in a spirit of dread or heaviness, but with a loving appreciation of God and his means of grace which rejoices the soul.

It is so simple that the humblest believer can feast his soul upon it, and yet so profound that the greatest philosopher can find unreach heights for meditation, and unfathomed depths for experience—IF HE WILL VIEW IT FROM THE STANDPOINT OF GRACE.

This great service can be abused and dragged down to the low level of commonplace things, until its dignity and real meaning may disappear, then it becomes an empty form.

May the minds and hearts of Brethren people never fail to recognize the supernatural, and spiritual designs of these forms. No doubt many of us have been grieved, in the past at the conglomeration, and mix-ups we have witnessed, in the conduct of this service; when it seemed that system, order and understanding were all absent. In the most part, this has been traceable to new arrivals in our denomination, who lacked both the knowledge and modesty of leadership. Paul seemed to find some such condition in his day, and endeavored to correct it; he refers to their lack of order by such terms as "every one taketh before other his own supper".

We should teach and practice these forms in their beautiful, and regular order and this will reveal the spiritual and devotional, instead of the curious and the ridiculous. There is a growing tendency among our pastors, which I think is fine, that is the conduct of at least, a few preparatory services, just preceding the communion service.

As Christian people come to understand the real place this service is intended to occupy in life, growth and experience, there will be fewer absentees, at their service and a healthier and a more wide-awake membership. Concerning the improper observance of this service, Paul said: "For this cause many are weakly and sick among you and many sleep." There is always perfect harmony between the outward form, and the spiritual design, of every Christian ordinance. As the inside of a walnut hull is the perfect shape of the kernel, so also the outward form of every ordinance, is in perfect harmony with its spiritual design. The form must not be maintained for the sake of its self, but for the sake of that which it suggests, teaches and contains.

These forms are "Jewel Cases" of God's own selection for the preservation of his jewels. It should not be difficult for Christians to understand the relation, of the "jewel" to the "case," spirit to the letter of the truth to its form.

All Christians, doubtless, desire to honor all truth, but we come in contact with two extremes, as to the method of doing so, and there is considerable variations between the two. One class of worshipers aim to dignify the ordinances by the method of elimination. They reject all outward forms, and endeavor to spiritualize all truth, by the process of meditation. They are to be admired for their devotion to the spiritual, but their method of attaining it, is certainly very clumsy. The other extreme is that class which see nothing but the outward form and by a process of mystical words, claim they change the Bread and the cup, into the real body and blood of our Lord. The dignity of this service may be easily discovered as the beautiful medium between the two extremes.

We recognize the importance and beauty of a Christian ordinance by seeing it in its true light, by accepting it in its true value and by obeying it in its true FORM and SPIRIT, as given in the Word. As to literal obedience may we refer to the words of the great Apostle: "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." With these also the words of the MASTER: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." I have selected these passages because they have been so often quoted to discourage the idea of literal obedience. They certainly convey no thought of literal disobedience. They do qualify literal obedience, making it spiritual instead of an empty form. This points to a free, cheerful, intelligent, obedience of the whole man, springing from a heart, which finds its greatest joy in the sway of the MASTER, seeking at the same time to know the "mind of the spirit" in the lesson which the act of obedience was intended to convey. When a father, who has the respect of his family passes away, having left a will, how careful are the members of that family, in carrying out the smallest details of that will. Our Lord and Majesty have left us such injunctions as: "Hold fast the word of that will of no concern of ours? Some will even ridicule the details of that will and call such obedience "hairsplitting" "nonessentialism," etc. Yet the eye-witnesses of his Majesty have left us such injunctions as: "Hold fast the FORM of sound words," and "But ye have obeyed from the heart that FORM of doctrine which was delivered you."

It is urged by some that the feet-washing service and the supper proper, bear no symbolie relation to the plan of salvation, and therefore have no spiritual significance and no place in the ceremonial of the church. The authority of the Lord Jesus ought to be a sufficient answer to all reasoning of this kind. But they DO bear most beautiful symbolie character, and are expressive of vital truth belonging to the plan of salvation. This whole service scripturally observed, furnish beautiful and successive steps, mounting higher and higher unto a glorious climax.

Let us see: feet-washing is the symbol of constant spiritual cleansing, which is necessary in order to fellowship with saints; and is expressive of the believer's cleansing by the Holy Spirit (John 13:1-17; 1 John 1:7; Matt. 25:40).

The supper is the symbol of continual fellowship; expressing friendship and equality of the children of God (1 Cor. 5:8; 11:25-33; Jude 12; Rev. 19:7-9).

The Eucharist is the symbol of the sacrificial offering of Christ himself for sin; expressing the union and communion of saints, and John says: "And truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ" (1 John 1:3; Luke 22:19-20; 1 Cor. 10:16-17).

F. W. Farrar, D. D., in his "Texts Explained", commenting on James 5:15 says: "The prayer of faith shall save him that is sick, i. e., 'from the bed of sickness.'" "There is as little need for us in England in these days TO USE OIL AS THERE IS LITERALLY TO WASH ONE ANOTHER'S FEET; OR GIVE EACH OTHER THE KISS OF PEACE." "Things which were practiced and prescribed by Christ himself and his apostles, are not of perpetual obligation, unless they are conducive to an end which is of perpetual necessity." That is our Brethren plea, and each one of these forms represents a spiritual truth which IS OF PERPETUAL NEED.

It is sometimes asked: "How can there be any virtue in feet-washing?" My answer is: JUST AS THERE IS VIRTUE IN A MORSEL OF BREAD AND A SIP OF GRAPE JUICE. Just as there was healing in a LOOK at the brazen serpent. "If ye love me KEEP my commandments"; "If ye KEEP my commandments ye shall ABIDE in my love"; "If a man ABIDE NOT in me he is cast forth as a branch and is withered."

Francis G. Peabody, professor of Christian Morals, in Harvard in his "Afternoon in the College Chapel," speaking on what he calls the "Sacrament of Service" based upon John 13: says in part: "The Lord's Supper (he calls the Eucharist the supper) is the Sacrament of power derived from Jesus; the washing of the feet is the Sacrament of service inspired by Jesus. You can not separate the two Sacraments. It is vain to partake of the body and blood of Christ unless they stir in one the works of Christ . . . I do not know anything which more completely distinguishes the Christlike life from the life of average morality, than this stooping to the sacrament of service."

Our Lord dignified this service and made an ordinance of it by his own example, by a definite precept, and by the solemn declaration, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." Then, as if to remove every doubt, he plainly teaches that no man can evade or neglect this ordinance, unless he assumes to be greater than his Lord; "The servant is not greater than his Lord" (John 13:16-17).

Our Lord also instituted a "Supper" the night in which he was betrayed, and he made it the middle link, in the golden chain of symbols. Both Luke and Paul mention the CUP as coming "AFTER supper." This with the historic fact that the "supper" was a permanent feature of the Communion service of the Apostolic church for several centuries, makes it evident that the apostles and early Christians, understood this to be a feast of new and Christian dignity, to be perpetuated in the church.

Hence, it is the divinely chosen symbol of fellowship and equality based upon friendship. Our Lord, as his manner was, appropriated a universal idea to a special spiritual end. To break bread together, to eat at the same board, is everywhere a sign of agreement, fraternal friendship of brotherhood; and this sign was transplanted into the church, and by our Lord's own appointment, it was made the holy and perpetual symbol of Christian fellowship. By this act he has conferred upon it the dignity of a holy ordinance, which is important in itself, and in relation to what precedes and follows.

As there could be no fellowship of a Christian brotherhood without cleansing and purity, so there can be no communion without fellowship and equality. One is a fitting prelude to the other; and thus the first two features of this three-fold service, lead up to, and culminate in the third, which is the Eucharist.

The communion service proper is first of all the memorial of the death of our Lord (1 Cor. 11:23-25) and the symbol of the atonement for sin, wrought out in and through his death. The atonement is the foundation doctrine of the whole scheme of human redemption and the Eucharist is God's means of grace, by which our faith is renewed, our hearts are refreshed, our souls enlarged, as we thus, from time to time, increase our spiritual perception of that glorious Christ of the broken body and shed blood.

The Holy Spirit uses this symbolic service to direct our minds and hearts to him for whom all of these symbols were given, and at the TIME when he paid the price, to purchase us back to God. Therefore in its spiritual sense, we are "made partakers of his divine nature. This is not only a memorial of his death, but also of his present, pure and holy life, and anticipating his coming again. Paul says that by these we declare his death, 'till he come.' Thus the Communion service as a whole is elevated to a dignity far above the empty form, or the 'letter' to a real place in the believer's growth in grace. May we enter the open door of this throne room of divine symbols, and in the simplicity of Christian faith, comprehend more of HIM who is symbolized in these ordinances.

And by the light of the Holy Spirit may we enter into the dignity, comprehend the purpose, and see the successive arrangement of these beautiful emblems, until the beautiful words of that old hymn may fill our hearts.

"O the love that drew salvation's plan!
O the grace that brought it down to man!
O the mighty gulf that God did span!
At Calvary."

THE FACE OF CHRIST

"The idea of God", says our correspondent, "is proclaimed through the book of Nature, but what about the great fact of Christ?" Men in all ages have studied the Book of Nature. They have spelled out a wonderful word here and there. But, the deeper they have gone into it, the more readily have they confessed, "Behold, we know not anything!" They have learned something of the "how of things," but the "why" eludes them. "Lo, these are but the outskirts of his ways, but how small a whisper do we hear of him. But the thunder of his power who can understand?" To the Christian faith the Book of Nature, even as the Bible, finds its interpreter and its interpretation in Christ. "Granted," says our correspondent, "that Jesus was a great fact." We would use the present tense for it is the Living Christ in whom Christians believe who completes the old partial revelations to the fathers of the race, and who as truly completes the partial revelation to the scientist of today. Our correspondent says that "Jesus . . . could have saved humanity if his teaching had been followed." Transcendent as is the teaching of Jesus, it is Jesus himself that is the Healer and Savior of humanity. Our correspondent finds fault with "the idea of the vicarious atonement" and doubtless the doctrine has often been presented crudely, and in a manner which was nothing short of a denial both of the love and the justice of God. But vicarious suffering is not merely a "church" doctrine. It is the mysterious central fact of all nature and of all life. The Christian faith teaches that God is not exempt from this law; that in all our afflictions he is afflicted; that Calvary was not in its essence a momentary incident in the age-long life of one Person of the Trinity, but a revelation of the Eternal life and love of God; that suffering for others is the most Godly—the most God-like—thing in the universe; that "in the midst of the throne" there is a "Lamb as it had been slain." No growth of knowledge can go beyond this. No creed can delimit it. This, often understood very imperfectly, is the faith that has saved multitudes which no man can number. As it becomes more clearly understood it is the faith that will save the world.—The Montreal Witness.

PRAYER---PRAYERS

By Dyoll Belote

God Answers Prayer

I know not by what methods rare,
But this I know, God answers prayer.
I know that he has given his word,
Which tells me prayer is always heard,
And will be answered soon or late,
And so I pray and calmly wait.

I know not if the blessing sought
Will come in just the way I thought,
But leave my prayers with him alone
Whose will is wiser than my own,
Assured that he will grant my quest,
Or send some answer far more blest.

—The Way.

Prayer

I do not always bend the knee to pray.
I often pray in crowded city street,
In some hard crisis of a busy day,
Prayer is my sure and comforting retreat.

"Dear Lord, thy help," my lips cry silently;
From swiftly moving train my prayer ascends;

My heaven is not afar, but near to me,
And ever from his throne my Father bends.

Here at my office desk I crave his aid;
No matter where I am, I crave his care;
In moments when my soul is most afraid
It comforts most to know he's everywhere.

—George Elliston.

The Place

There is a place where thou canst touch the eyes
Of blinded men to instant, perfect sight;
There is a place where thou canst say,
"Arise!"

To dying captives, bound in chains of night;
There is a place where thou canst reach the store

Of hoarded gold and free it for the Lord;
There is a place—upon some distant shore—
Where thou canst send the worker or the word.

There is a place where Heaven's resistless power
Responsive moves to thine insistent plea;

There is a place—a silent, trusting hour—
Where God himself descends and fights for thee.

Where is that blessed place—dost thou ask "Where?"

O soul, it is the secret place of prayer!

—Adelaide A. Pollard.

The Constancy of Prayer

If we with earnest effort could succeed
To make our life one long connected prayer,
As lives of some perhaps have been and are;

If, never leaving thee, we had no need
Our wandering spirits back again to lead
Into thy presence, but continued there,
Like angels standing on the highest stair
Of the sapphire throne, this were to pray indeed.

But if distractions manifold prevail,
And if in this we must confess we fail,
Grant us to keep at least a prompt desire,
Continual readiness for prayer and praise
An altar heaped and waiting to take fire
With the least spark and leap into a blaze.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will prevail to make,
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take,
What parched grounds refresh us as with a shower,

We kneel, and all around us seem to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stand forth in sunny outline brave and clear.

We kneel—how weak!
We rise—how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,

Or others—that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or worthless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,

And joy, and strength, and courage are with thee?

—Trench.

"Be Very Sure I Need It"

I cannot tell why there should come to me
A thought of someone miles and years away

In swift insistence on the memory,
Unless there be a need that I should pray.

He goes his way, I mine; we seldom meet
To talk of plans or changes, day by day,
Of pain or pleasure, triumph or defeat,
Of special reasons why 'tis time to pray.

We are too busy even to spare a thought,
For days together, of some friends away;
Perhaps God does it for us, and we ought
To read his signal as a call to pray.

Perhaps, just then, my friend had fiercer fight,
A more appalling weakness is decay

Of courage, darkness, some lost sense of right—
And so, in case he needs my prayer, I pray.

Friend, do the same for me! If I intrude
Unasked upon you, on some crowded day,
Give me a moment's prayer, as interlude;
Be very sure I need it, therefore pray.

—Marianne Farningham.

Morning and Evening

The camel at the close of day,
Kneels down upon the sandy plains,
To have his burden lifted off
And rest to gain.

My soul, thou too shouldst to thy knees
When daylight draweth to a close,
And let the Master lift the load
And grant repose.

Else how couldst thou tomorrow meet,
With all tomorrow's work to do,
If thou thy burden all the night
Dost carry through?

The camel kneels at break of day
To have his guide replace his load,
Then rises up anew to take
The desert road.

So thou shouldst kneel at morning's dawn,
That God may give thee daily care,
Assured that he no load too great
Will make thee bear.

—From a Girl's Scrap Book

How to Pray Right

If thou wouldst learn, not knowing, how to pray,

Add but a faith, and say as beggars say:
"Master, I'm poor, and blind, in great distress,
Hungry, and lame, and cold, and comfortless;
O succor him that grovel'd on the shelf
Of pain and want, and cannot help himself
Cast down thine eye upon a wretch, and take
Some pity on me for sweet Jesus' sake;
But hold! take heed this clause be not put in,
I never begged before, nor will again.

—Selected.

Dear Lord, Forgive

If I have wounded any soul today;
If I have caused one foot to go astray;
If I have walked in my own willful way—
Dear Lord, forgive!

If I have uttered idle words or vain;
If I have turned aside from want or pain,
Lest I myself should suffer through the strain—
Dear Lord, forgive!

If I have craved for joys that are not mine;
If I have let my wayward heart repine,
Dwelling on things of earth, not things divine—
Dear Lord, forgive!

If I have been perverse or hard or cold;
If I have longed for shelter in thy fold,
When thou hast given me some fort to hold—
Dear Lord, forgive!

Forgive the sins I have confessed to thee;
Forgive the secret sins I do not see;
That which I know not, Father, teach thou me—
Help me to live.

—American Messenger.

Morning, Noon and Evening

Prayers in the morning, and songs of joy,
The shadows of night have passed away,
Bright dewdrops are kissing the opening buds,
Unfolding to welcome the new-born day.

Prayers at the noontide, life is bright,
Sailing along o'er a tranquil sea,
With white sails spread to the gentle breeze
In our barque whose port is eternity.

Prayers at the even, songs of joy,
As slowly the daylight fades away,
The voyage is o'er, but there's a light beyond
The shadows that darken the closing day.
—Exchange.

Helping Together by Prayer

I like to feel that though on earth
We never meet,
Yet we may hold sweet fellowship
At God's dear feet.

I like to feel in all the work
Thou hast to do
That I, by lifting hands of prayer,
May help thee, too.

I like to think that in the path
His love prepares Thy steps may sometimes stronger prove Through secret prayers.

I like to think that, when on high
Results we see,
Perchance thou wilt rejoice that I
Thus prayed for thee!
—E. G. Barnes-Lawrence.

Prayer

Oh, praying one, who long hath prayed
And yet no answer heard,
Have you been sometimes half afraid
God might not keep his word?

Seems prayer to fall on deafened ears,
Does heaven seem blind and dumb?
Is hope deferred? Believe, believe,
The answer time will come.

Thy inmost longing may be told
The hopes that turned to shame,
The empty life, the thwarted plans,
The good that never came.

Say not—the promise is not mine,
God did not hear me pray,
I prayed, I trusted fully, but
The grave hath barred the way.

God heard thee—he hath not forgot,
Faith shall at length prevail,
Yea, know it, not one jot
Of all his word can fail.

And if ye truly have believed,
Not vain hath been thy prayer,
As God is true, thy hope shall come,
Some day, some time, somewhere.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Empty Seat

By Harold D. Fry

TEXT: "And Jonathan said unto David, Tomorrow is the new moon; and thou shalt be missed because Thy seat will be empty."—1 Samuel 20:18.

Introduction

When man looks out upon the world of nature, the universe in which we live, his mind should become more thoughtful. As we with the psalmist consider the heavens, the work of God's fingers, the moon and stars which he has ordained, there is one thing evident in all the physical creation which must impress the thoughtful man; and that is the fact that there is harmony everywhere. The same sun which gave its light to the saved in the days of Noah continues its orbit of service to us. The flaming worlds that shone upon Ur of the Chaldees and upon David in the sheep coves of Bethlehem, still keep their appointed courses. Consider the Divine artist as in the western sky there is painted a radiant and variable troupe of colors, about the sinking sun, the same scheme of colors which if man should try to imitate would clash and jangle with each other in hopeless discord. The stone and earth formation, the growth and fruit of herb and tree, how harmonious in their season! All is harmony around us, because behind it is a design, infinite, holy, eternal, wise.

I. Our Appointed Place.

But what lesson has such a study for us? How often this precious truth is missed, and the lesson never learned by those teachers and students who find their ways at certain times into the open to study nature! Should there not be harmony in mankind? Has not God a place for each man and woman and boy and girl in his eternal and perfect scheme? When he who said, Fear not little children, ye are of more value than many sparrows, did he not have in mind the loving design in which God who ordered the dandelion, and the sparrow, and the locust, and the lily, also give you an appointed place, which you only can fill? If every minute atom has its particular design and appointed function, should we not learn that the same all-wise God has not let one soul come into creation without being under his providential purpose and wise plan?

Every child of faith has an appointed place. The child of God above all others wants to know his position and duties that he might live and fulfil the God-planned life. Now it is not always that we know just what God's purpose is for us. We are often confused and placed in uncertainty as which way to take and what work to do. When God called out Abraham, he said, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee. And Abram went out, if not being revealed to him just then where he was to go. Yet his obedience was counted for righteousness in which he taking God by faith, was shown step by step the appointed place. Every Christian should become a friend of God by such obedient surrender to the all-wise direction of God. And every youth should come to know "one step's enough for me."

Paul, in 1 Corinthians 12, tells us that we are one body in Christ. There are different members in particular, but there is one body. Now in that one body, the spiritual body of Christ upon earth, each member has an appointed place to work. The eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again to the head and feet, I have no need of thee. There is one practical lesson for each of us here from this great truth about the church on earth, that if you do not fill your place, no one else will. The church at large and each congregation, yes, this, has its great tragedies because too many fail to live their life and take care of the job that God has placed for them. In your position in this village and in this body of believers, you have a service to perform that God does not expect from any other in the world.

II. The One Thing Needful.

Coming down to us is the story of a certain steamship that though constructed in England was designed for service on an inland lake in Africa. The ship was completed in one of the huge plants in Great Britain; and every part of it was finished. Then it was dissembled according to the original plan, and every part of it packed and sent away to Africa in small bundles. There from the nearest waterway and train, that ship was born part by part and set up in the place of its purpose. It was put back together and launched and is doing service today in inland Africa. But suppose one part were missing? That ship would have been hindered. If one piston had been lost, or not shipped, the engine would not have functioned. The operation and usefulness of the whole would have been marred by the absence of any one part.

Never forget that the proper success and most fruitful work and happiest completion of the mission of this congregation depends on you in your respective sphere. Christ the head, may desire one of you to be a teacher, another to pray, another to be a nurse, another a witness, perhaps another a business man in the congregation—we need men of business ability to run this church, and if there is any greater place than a church for the exercise and proper investment of your business head I do not know where it is. God may have blessed some of you folks with large earning capacity and opportunity, and he expects you to be heavy givers. God calls the Pharisee to give in the same proportion as the poor widow who gave her all.

How sweet is the picture of the text! Jonathan loved David as his own soul—with a love surpassing that of woman. But Saul had allowed an evil spirit to possess him and in envy and spite he hated the young shepherd king, David. Murder was in Saul's heart, and thus David's seat at the monthly festivity in honor of the new moon would be vacant. David being the son-in-law and great conqueror through God's favor to Saul, and as everyone knew he had returned, would be expected to sit at the family table. Now note well that the adversary had entered into the case to keep David's seat empty. Wickedness, worldliness, caused the man to be absent from his appointed place. Take it as settled that when any excuse keeps you from the service of God you are being led of the devil. Remember that if you are not fulfilling your duties in your God-planned life, Satan has given you the spirit of worldliness, the worship of the god of money, or some selfish ambition. And Jonathan says, "the joyful time of the New moon is coming," and adds with a note of deep regret, "and you will be missed because your seat will be empty."

It was the absence of David that grieved the heart of his friend. The food would lose its savor, the merriment its charm. Let us remember that there is One who grieves because something is keeping us away from our appointed place of service. Grieve him not! Can the Lord Jesus say "One thing is needful and calling you by name, say, "and you have chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from you"?

But there are great simple things which God expects of us all. These duties are privileges, and though we may do them in our own way, Christ expects us to fill our place in doing them. One of these places of constant service is personal work. We need personal work. The pastor was gladdened to know the spirit of some who attempted to win their neighbors by speaking to them of Jesus' love. And how he has been helped to note the growth of many in that direction of testimony and personal soul-winning! Yet if that early church had in it so many who will not speak for Christ, will not witness, and some who do not believe in it, I say that, if Christ's first band had as many empty seats as we constitute you and I would not be worshipping him today. Be my witnesses. Go ye, and make disciples. That is the program of the whole church—not just preacher and Official Board, but of every business man and housekeeper. The startling rapidity of Mohammedan growth is due to the fact that every merchant and traveler is a missionary. Let us be just as earnest for Christ. But we hear so often, "But you know I am not gifted for that. I have no talent in that sphere." Ah, but it does not call for talent. It calls for dedication. It calls for that obedience that Abram had. It takes that gratitude that makes your joy in such service abound. We must every one of us be found faithful ambassadors of our Lord.

The second great essential is giving.

And how much must we stress Christian giving. We can all give. Some one says, What, again? Why do we need to be always hearing about giving? Now, as a matter of fact, the folks that take offense when asked to part with what the Lord has entrusted them, are the ones most able to give, but the ones who least desire to. The poor heard him gladly. It is so today; and the most consecrated are the least able to give. You know some folks will not take much part in the Christian life, because they know that if Moses and Joshua and others had to take their shoes off when on holy ground that if they approach very near to their Savior they will have to take the tobacco out of their mouths. Likewise, too, many are willing to hear of the agony of Christ giving himself for us, but they hesitate to dedicate themselves, lest their god, money, will have to come off the shelf. Now the Lord loves a cheerful giver. He does not want the unbeliever's money for any part of the church's need. Believers should subscribe joyfully all they can to the gospel needs that Christ be not shamed before the world. But the Lord has one thing needful and that pertains to you. You cannot give as you can, and should, you cannot pray as the need demands, you cannot testify as we ought unless you fulfil that one thing needful.

Palestine of To-day

By Miss Z. I. Dahvice

There was a great rejoicing in Jerusalem recently, the re-echo of which reverberated all over the world. It was the rehabilitation of a people who had scattered and wandered over this planet for the last 2,000 years without losing its racial individuality.

The wailing at Jerusalem's walls has been heard and the prayers of pious Jews, who visited the Holy City of Jacob, David and Solomon from all parts of the universe or represented themselves with tears shed on nails which found their ultimate destiny in the cracks of its masonry, are answered. Like the crusaders of the Middle Ages, Israelites have found a firm footing in the land of their destiny when the cornerstone in the form of a university was firmly cemented.

Zion, their land of promise, their paradise lost, found and lost again has been restored in a new covenant made by man. The new Moses, Lord Balfour, as the second liberator of an oppressed people whose latest period of exile has swelled from a few centuries to 2,000 years, lived to see the lost tribe of Judea re-established in their home country.

Sir Samuels, the new Pontiff, holds his appointment from the Great British Empire as his predecessors twenty centuries ago held it by favor of the then paramount Roman Empire. Now, as then, Jerusalem is still held in submission as a protectorate to the Gentile world.

Disraeli, like Jacob, at the court of the Egyptian Pharaoh, found favor at the British court, only with different results: Egypt held the Jews in bondage, England liberated them. But times have changed and, instead of a mass return, there is only a dribbling back of the devout while the majority, holding fast to the fleshpots of Egypt, converted into money pots of Europe and America, send contributions to restore Judea to its pristine glory on an intellectual rather than an emotional basis.

Prophets have not ceased to arise among the chosen people, but carried on the work Isaiah, Elias and Habbakuk in the synagogues broadcast over the world and in chairs of modern universities. Now that the Jerusalem University has been firmly founded, it may be anticipated that they will concentrate their influence on this seat of learning and produce a modern version of the Old Testament and the hope of missionaries should be that they will accept the New Testament and that the modern version of the Old Testament may be a copy of "The Law and the Old Commandment which we have heard from the beginning."

Mt. Olive, the scene over which the new university has arisen, becomes once more the tableau of world attention as the hill of joy, and sorrow, of defeat and victory. But every elevation of the ancient historic city has its tradition of devotion and it is fervently to be desired that Golgotha, Calvary and Mt. Scopus will be considered as parts of one homogeneous whole, and cooperate for the good of

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

DEAD TO THE LAW—Rom. 7:1-6.

By analogy to the marriage bond, Paul shows how that, as the old life dies to the law and to sin through identification with the death of Christ, the Christian is freed and passes from law to grace.

TUESDAY

TENDENCY TO VIOLATE LAW—Rom. 7:7-13.

Even though to be freed from sin means to be freed from law, yet must we not identify sin and law. Law is good and revealed the sinfulness of sin. But the sin lurking in the heart was provoked to greater activity by the very things which the law prohibited.

WEDNESDAY

THE IMPOTENCE OF SELF—Rom. 7:14-25.

There is a dual self: the one responsive to the lower things; the other desiring the higher, but the better self is unable to make me do the right and shun the wrong. From this slavery Christ brings deliverance.

THURSDAY

DETHRONEMENT OF SIN—Rom. 8:1-4.

What the law failed to do, the Incarnation accomplished—namely, the dethronement of sin from its tyranny in the human heart and the installation of the Spirit of Christ in its stead.

FRIDAY

THE TWO STATES COMPARED—Rom. 8:5-11.

"The life of self-indulgence involves the breach of God's law, hostility to him and death," summarizes Sunday, while "submission to the Spirit brings with it true life and the sense of reconciliation."

SATURDAY

SONSHIP AND HEIRSHIP—Rom. 8:12-17.

We must live then not according to the worldly life, but as men bound for eternity, heirs of immortality, for we are in a special sense sons of God and are destined to share the glory of Christ, our Elder Brother.

SUNDAY

THROUGH SUFFERING TO GLORY—Rom. 8:18-25.

THAT THE PATHWAY TO GLORY LEADS THROUGH SUFFERING IS NOT AN ARBITRARY decree, but is an essential principle in nature. But the glory for which we hope is beyond all comparison with the suffering that must be endured for a season.—G. S. B.

the whole human race, of which Jew and Gentile, after all, are but small component parts.

Religious antipathies have come in for their share of deserved criticism in the wider acceptance of the modern tendency to accept the brotherhood of man in a spirit of more reasonable tolerance. Hence the erection of this new Jewish monument holds out the prospect that it shall be a unit of the long chain of educational establishments strung around the earth to cultivate interest in science, art, and culture rather than dissemination of partisan sentiment of destructive antagonism which hurts more than elevates the human race.

The restoration has not been opposed. The hotel in which Earl Balfour resided was stoned by the hereditary enemies of Zion. But such opposition will strengthen the movement, for it is only in encountering and overcoming strenuous opposition that enduring strength and courage are acquired.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Test of Religions

By T. R. Arnold

OUR SCRIPTURE

Then Peter, filled with the Holy Spirit, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders, if we this day are examined concerning a good deed done to an impotent man, by what means this man is made whole; be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even in him doth this man stand before you whole. He is the stone which was set at nought of you the builders, which was made the head of the corner. And in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved.

Now when they beheld the boldness of Peter and John, and had perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus. And seeing the man that was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it. But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves, saying, What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been wrought through them, is manifest to all that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it. But that it spread no further among the people, let us threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name. And they called them, and charged them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus. But Peter and John answered and said unto them, Whether it is right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye: for we cannot but speak the things which we saw and heard. And they, when they had further threatened them, let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, because of the people; for all men glorified God for that which was done.

OUR MEDITATION

I. The Trial of Peter and John. Two men, disclaiming all original power, excited Jewish society by the performance of a miraculous deed. Peter was challenged by the Sanhedrin to give an account of the miracle. It was an offense of doctrine, rather than of deed, which excited the opposition of the Sadducean rulers. The apostolic teachings reflected deep discredit upon the tribunals of the nation. A great crisis was pending. Jerusalem was in a moral upheaval. Seventy of the nation's magnates were confounded by two peasants. The fact of healing was recognized with the logical conclusion that it was a sign of the presence and working of some supernatural power, yet the power and authority of the apostles were questioned. They were sturdy, truthful, uncompromising witnesses to Jesus and the resurrection. They testified to the thing which had been done and of greater things which he could do. Peter's words had a remarkable effect upon his distinguished hearers. Though they contended that the apostles were not personally qualified and had no right to teach, there was the strange coincidence, that in the moment of their amazement the rulers should give true and sufficient explanation of their work in that they had been with Jesus and learned of him. The impress of the great Teacher was too evident to be denied. Tone, look and manner declared the apostles' training beyond a doubt. The Jewish rulers had admitted the originality of Jesus as a teacher and had opposed him on that account. That originality had reappeared in his disciples. The old controversy had suddenly revived. For the apostles to vindicate Christ's character means the condemnation of the rulers. The resurrection of Jesus was a complete vindication of his character. Reference to the crucifixion stirred the priests. Reference to the resurrection stirred the Sadducees. The name of Jesus was set forth as the source of power. "Neither is there salvation in any other," was the substance of every apostolic announcement. Christ's way of delivering the nation was by becoming the cornerstone of its hope. What Israel needed was new life, and its only Savior was he who had healed the cripple. The apostles were branded as heretics and forbidden to preach by the supreme authority of the nation. Religion, politics and skepticism conspired to crush the young church. The apostles were endowed with divine fortitude. Their endurance of persecution was a guarantee of their sincerity and an exhibition of the power of the gospel in themselves. Theirs was the heroism of hearts inspired by love and living for the benefit of others. They knew their mission and message to be divinely given. They possessed the secret of true courage, because they believed and did the right, from right motive, under the immediate inspiration of the Spirit, who made them effective.

II. The Trial of Jewish Rulers. Peter gave the men of the court their appropriate titles, recognized their office and authority and addressed them with deference and respect. He made the most of his opportunity. The prisoner's bar was transformed into a pulpit. He stood in view of them all, a splendid illustration of the truth that "the righteous are as bold as a lion," exhibiting granite-like firmness and unflinching loyalty to truth in his declaration that the risen Christ is the only Savior of mankind. In the boldness of Peter the Jewish rulers saw the answer to their own words, "His blood be on us, and on our children." Their antagonism was strong in spirit, but futile in effect. In vain had the men of scholarship looked down contemptuously upon the men of true learning. Their prohibition aimed at an impossibility. The places of the prisoners and the judges were in reality reversed. The apostles were empowered anew to speak, while the Jewish rulers were reduced to silence by the combination of evidences against them. Working under the authority and power of the Holy Spirit made the apostles invincible. Being under the arrest of an accusing conscience and destitute of divine approval made the rulers the actual criminals.

OUR PRAYER

Our Father in heaven, we thank thee for this example of fidelity and courage on the part of thy disciples of old and for the wonderful power which thou wast able to manifest through them. May our lives be so devoted to thee, our faith so firm, our courage so undaunted by even the fiercest opposition that thou mayest use us mightily for the freeing of men from the bondage of sin and the putting to shame those who are set against thy truth. Amen.

First, we need to know the truth; next, we need to have the conviction to accept it; and, last, we need to have the wisdom to put it into practice.—Allen Christophel.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

For twenty years after the marriage of Isaac and Rebekah (Gen. 24) there were no children, which was and is a great sorrow to Eastern women, and doubly so here where the fulfillment of God's promises to Abraham and Isaac depended upon the coming of children. Then twin boys were given in answer to Isaac's prayer.

Esau, "hairy," was the elder son of Isaac. He was rough and wild, a keen sportsman, attractive and good-natured. His other name, Edom, "red," was given either on account of his ruddy color, or in remembrance of the red pottage he bought with his birthright, Jacob, "supplanter"—a domestic man, plain, apt at business, quick at a bargain. Esau was the favorite son of Isaac, and Jacob the favorite of his mother Rebekah.

The birthright, the right of the eldest son, gave the headship of the family, or clan, and the larger share of the property. Esau in addition had the right to the covenant of God with Abraham and Isaac. To possess the birthright made a vast difference in the life of the one who possessed it. The twins had grown to be young men, when Esau came home one day tired and hungry from hunting. Jacob had prepared some lentil pottage, a thick soup or porridge, of reddish color, very palatable. Esau was so starvingly hungry that when Jacob offered to give him the porridge in exchange for the birthright, he accepted the bargain.

Forty-three years later, Isaac, feeble with age, planned to confer the birthright on his oldest son. But Jacob and Rebekah conspired to receive the dim-sighted Isaac, while Esau was hunting for venison for the feast, and they made up Jacob to seem like Esau. Esau had forgotten his ancient hasty promise, and felt that he was cheated by his brother, and he threatened to kill him as soon as his father, who was very feeble, died.

Their mother Rebekah therefore sent Jacob away on the pretense that she did not want him to marry any of the daughters of the surrounding heathen, but wished him to go to relatives far away to the north, where he would be safe from Esau.

Why Jacob Inherited the Birthright

Jacob inherited the blessing because he was best fitted for it, or rather he had with him the best possibilities which could be trained into fitness. Hence God had ordained that the elder should serve the younger (Gen. 25:23). It would have ruined the nation if Esau had been at the head of it. But God did not ordain that Jacob should gain it in this way. Esau might have had it if he had been willing to be worthy of it.

Good Things Obtained in Wrong Way

God in no sense approved of the way in which Jacob obtained the birthright. It seemed to Rebekah and Jacob as if God's promises were about to fail, and they must do something to bring the right thing to pass, even if they did a wrong in accomplishing it. But did God need Jacob's sin in order to carry out his plans? God forbid! The work would have been done infinitely better if Jacob had gained his birthright in God's way and God's time. His sin arose not from faith, but from the imperfection of his faith. "It was virtually the sin of blaming God for forgetting his promise, or of accusing him of being unable to perform it; so that they, Rebekah and Jacob, had, forsooth, to take God's work out of his hands, and show him how it ought to be done."

Every Life a Stairway

1. Its top reaches to heaven and God. 2. Every right life has one end based on the earth. 3. "It is ladder, too, all the way; it does not become a plain, easy, flower-lined path after a time." 4. The true life has always visions and ideals reaching far beyond our present state. 5. The true life is ever climbing upward, and the rising is always step by step.

The Place of Vision in Life

A Beth-el vision would have been impossible for Esau. He was sense-bound. He cared more for a bowl of red bean soup than for his spiritual inheritance from Abraham.

How to Conduct a City School for Vacation Church School Workers

By Walter M. Howlett in "International Journal of Religious Education"

In planning a training school for daily vacation Bible school workers, the greatest problem is to find sufficient time in which to give the instruction which it is necessary that the prospective principals and teachers should have. The period when the school is actually in session does not average over twenty-five days of three hours each day. Thus, there is always a limit to the time which the workers in the school feel they are willing to give for preparation. In a large center of population, it is usually possible to plan for ten sessions of three and a half hours each day for a preliminary training school. Then immediately preceding the opening of the school three days of five hours each day. This final training conference will always draw a large number who were not in the preliminary ten sessions. In our school we had two hundred and fifty in the preliminary and one thousand in the final training school.

How Much Can be Taken for Granted?

It would be vain to expect to fit those to be principals of daily vacation Bible schools who had never had any training in the basic subjects of teaching in a period which was limited to forty-five hours. It is necessary to find for principals those who have had training in child psychology, principles, methods and aims in religious education and basic courses on the Bible. It will not always be possible to find a full staff of teachers who have had these courses, but in practice, especially as the salaries are increased, such principals can and should be found. More and more each year, it is possible to raise the qualifications of those who are to be teachers.

The Actual Training

Let us see how we get in the most essential things in the time available. The first fifteen minutes is spent in worship. There is very little time for comment or training in worship, except in so far as the worship itself may be a training, which is to every observant participant. This worship should be conducted by departments. That is, those who are to teach in the beginners, primary and junior departments, would meet in separate groups.

The second period of fifty minutes, all students are required to take a course in the aims, organization and conduct of a daily vacation Bible school. In this course, it has been found advisable to actually go through the program of a session of a daily vacation Bible school. The teachers may imagine themselves students. Have them come in as you would have the children themselves come in. Have them register and go through the different parts of the program itself. This may seem simple and yet it will save many a school from failure. The teachers, after this, will not find themselves suddenly at a loss what to do at any given period in the conduct of the school itself. Sometimes teachers have objected to the necessity of taking this course and a question arose whether any but principals needed this, since the organization was so largely in their hands. It has been found in experience, however, that unless they did get this training, the staff would lack in unity, purpose and sympathetic understanding. In a number of instances in past years, prospective teachers who had received good training in education and who had had experience in the Sunday school, have thought that they did not need this instruction and had been excused. Almost invariably they have ultimately failed in the task.

How the Church can Direct the High School Students of Our Church toward Ashland College

By Marjorie Price, '29, Ashland College

"Old Ashland dear, with voices clear,
To thee we lift our loyal song,
Old Ashland U, old Ashland true,
Life's dearest mem'ries round thee throng."

The words of this song, our college hymn, should be familiar to every young church member of high school age in the Brethren Church. But how, you ask, can we keep the College before the young people of our church?

What is needed is powerful and stirring interest. This may be created through the auxiliaries of the church, the Christian Endeavor and Sunday school. If the Christian Endeavor society is wide awake it will be eager for novel meetings. An Ashland College meeting could be made a most interesting and attractive one. It would be well to have college meetings at regular intervals, with the purple and gold predominating the room, the college songs sung and talks given by suitable members should attract any young person to think about the college. If the pastor is a graduate of Ashland College he could help a meeting wonderfully by a good, boosting talk on college life and its benefits.

The "Ashland Collegian," the college weekly, should be in every church of our brotherhood for the sake of our young people. Some member of the Christian Endeavor or of the young people's classes should receive it, then present news and items of interest to the other members. This is bound to create interest in the college.

If the Christian Endeavor is not adequate, use the Sunday school as a means of bringing the college before the young people. Have socials and parties and feature an Ashland College program.

The young people's leaders must first direct their attentions toward the college, then the young people will do likewise. For the young will go where they are led. Therefore leaders, I plead for you to do your share. You lead and the young people will follow. Bring the college before them as the best step to take. Think it; feel it; live it—the college spirit!

Leaders of young people of our Brethren church, it is up to you!

there regularly. The pastor of this church was a rather young man who liked young folks and liked to have good times with them as well as to talk to them in his sermons. This pastor found out that Mary had quite a few brothers and sisters, so he told her that he was going to come to see them. The first time that he went, he arrived in the midst of a hot battle between May and Jennie over a small piece of rope that both of them wanted to have for a jumping rope. The young preacher felt very sorry for children who had not enough toys but all wanted the few that they had. However, he realized that children ought not to act as these children were acting, even though they were in need of many things.

Many things happened after that first visit of the preacher. He began visiting them often. Sometimes he played with the children and helped them to have a good time together without a whole lot of toys. Sometimes he talked to the mother and father about the things that their family needed. Soon, the parents as well as the children became so interested in this young man and his kind spirit that they started going to his Sunday school and church. Within a few months of time a change could be noticed in this home. Within a few years of time the home had changed entirely. They had moved to a new house where they could live comfortably, the children had more of the clothes and other necessities that they needed and all were happier.

Do you want to know what brought about all this change? Well, there were several things, one of them was, of course, Christianity. But one of the most important things was that love accompanied by unselfishness and politeness entered that home. If true politeness were a part of the life of every boy and girl and every grown person, then very much would be added to life. As you can see in this story politeness did not enter into this family until they began to love each other. Real politeness can not be had unless it is kindled by a spirit of love and kindness. When this family that I have been telling you about began to realize that they really loved each other, they began thinking of each other's wants. The older children helped to make some money to help with expenses and the younger children began to be more kind to each other about the things that they had. When they began to think of each other more than each one of himself, when they began to be polite to each other, then they began to be happy.

Junior boys and girls want to learn to be kind and polite to each other, don't they? Not only do they want to become polite with each other but they want to learn to be courteous to older people. Did you ever hear some child say to his father or his mother, "I won't do that"? Is that being polite? Didn't it really make you feel bad when you heard him or her speak like that? Does it not

Trees

By Joyce Kilmer

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is prest
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast;

A tree that looks at God all day,
And lifts her leafy arms to pray;

A tree that may in summer wear
A nest of robins in her hair;

Upon whose bosom snow has lain;
Who intimately lives with rain.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

Wide-awake Juniors

By Mrs. Margaret Bradt Southmayd

We have in our little Minnesota town of Delhi a Junior society of rather a different kind, and I thought the other Juniors might like to hear about it. In the first place, the Juniors are required by State law to attend the meetings of the society, as we have it the last hour of the midweek school of religious education, that being the only time we can get the country children in; and the society of twenty-two has only eight town children in it.

We are using the regular Junior topics, with the Junior leader, and the secretary, who sits with the leader each time, and calls the roll, as we have to keep attendance records. There are many different ways of answering the roll-call, and we are trying them all. We have our memory work, with a half-hour before the Junior meeting for drill, and that does not cut into our Junior hour. We have the hand-work, which is credited to the Junior service, and a half-hour of mission study with brave adventurers, which counts on our mission study. Poster work, etc., are done after that time.

We have our Junior parties every six weeks, cutting our Junior meeting a half-hour short on the day of a party; for the darkness comes early in Minnesota these days, and some have a few miles to travel before dark. The plan is working out well, and I pass it on to you for whatever it is worth.

What are Good Manners?

Phillipians 4:8, 9

Once upon a time, in a hut, in a dark alley of a big city, there lived a family whose name was Need. This was a very big family. There were nine children and the father and mother. There was Henry Need who was about grown, and Mary Need who was also nearly grown. Then there were John and Kate and May and Jennie who were in grade school and little Ida and Sue and Jimmy who were too young to go to school. Just think what an opportunity to have a good time with as many children as that together. But the sad thing was that they did not have a good time. None of them was happy. Everyone of them wanted all of everything that they had just for himself or herself.

One time, one of Mary's friends took her to a church where people were very nice to Mary. She liked the church and began going

From Dr. Gribble in France

Villa Jonquille, Boulevard Victor Hugo,

April 11th, 1926.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

I trust the dear missionaries upon the field are writing you from time to time and that you have no need of such poor epistles as I must write when away from the field. Something of this feeling has kept me from writing you, yet the kindly letters of solicitation received from various ones of you since my arrival in France lead me to take this means of answering them more fully than time and strength have permitted in private correspondence.

When I last wrote you in the latter part of February I was upon the verge of going to Port Cros, a small island of the Mediterranean. But God had other plans, and kept bringing to our attention a small country hotel, to which we finally decided to go, and where we arrived on March first, and remained throughout the month.

I had never in my life before been a guest at a residential hotel. In America, the doors of hospitality have been flung so widely open for me, that never since the day when in 1908 I left home and mother for Africa, have I had need of more than the passing of an occasional night in an inn. But in Europe, unknown and homeless, I was glad for the refuge of the Hotel des Mimosas at Castabelle until God should open another door. I found the guests whether French or English, to be of the highest class of worldly society. From the very first they displayed toward me an amount of kindness and courtesy which was surprising, and for which I cannot yet understand all the reasons. The French are naturally courteous to women, especially so to married ladies, and extremely so to widows, especially when as grey-haired as myself. With the English guests, even of the highest rank, one needed no other passport than to be a member of the medical profession. Accidents and illnesses occurred among them and being in the country there were emergency cases which must be relieved.

In a way I did not regret this, as when one lives in an ungodly European hotel, where everyone but the missionary drinks, gambles, and smokes, as a matter of course, one seeks opportunity to bear a ringing testimony for righteousness. And whether in Africa or Europe there is no better stepping stone to the gospel than the practice of medicine. The accident to Mr. —'s hand, acquainted me with the fact that, though now traveling and writing under a nom-de-plume to avoid bringing reproach upon the family name, he is the son of a godly English minister, who in his day was the friend of Moody and Barnard and many another evangelist and philanthropist. His knowledge of the Bible surprised me and I have the assurance that my "sermons" as he called conversation concerning our Lord and Savior, have not fallen on sterile ground

The tears flowed down dear Mrs. — face, as, while her suddenly infected arm was being dressed, she begged to know more of the way of salvation, having hoped that God was too merciful to condemn a sinner! And the long conversations in the "salon" evenings with Mr. — whose deafness necessitated the use of the pocket phone were listened to by others than himself. The blood of Christ, its efficacy and atoning power, needed to be as carefully explained to these worldlings, surprisingly hungry hearted in spite of their seemingly thoughtless pursuit of pleasure, as to the veriest child of the slums. And had it not been for his wife's sprained ankle, this open door for parlor conversations might never have occurred. For the true soldier of the cross must live only for Jesus, and his testimony must be ringing and pure in the midst of the world's darkness. Yet how difficult to be in the world, yet not of it, and how much one has need of the Lord's constant presence, and his own supply of grace, wisdom and courage! Yet it matters not where we may be geographically situated, if we are spiritually in his will, if we abide in him and his words abide in us, we shall bear fruit! I found it a pleasure in my daily walks to talk with the peasants laboring in the fields, many of whom gladly accepted French gospels and Testaments, but some of whom, probably through fear of persecution, refused. Many of these peasants spoke French with an Italian accent, which I have unfortunately acquired.

God's marvelous goodness was manifested to me during my own brief but severe illness at the hotel, when the friends vied with one another in keeping my room filled with fruit, flowers, and perfumes and in supplying other delicacies or necessities. And even more the contents of envelopes handed me at tactful moments helped very materially in the payment of hotel bills.

But I felt myself greatly in need of a change from Hotel life. The number of English guests at the hotel was constantly increasing, and we were too near Italy for the acquisition of a pure accent. Both these facts were unfavorable to the securing of such a knowledge of French as I desire. Once more God answered prayer in opening through correspondence the door of a lovely French home here in Digne, at which place I arrived on the first of April, and where I am now duly installed as a "paying guest." For the first time in my life I hear and speak only French. I am the only permanent guest, and partake to the full of the privileges of family life. Digne is on the highway between Nice and Aix-le-bains, and many transient guests come and go to and from this home, which is the center of Christian activity in that large province of France known as the Basses-Alpes.

Already I have met numbers of young Christians, French, Alsatian, or Dutch. What an opportunity to touch young lives with a sense of the world's need of Christ! The Basse Alpes itself is a needy place, covering a territory as large as Switzerland and yet having only one Protestant chapel, the one here at Digne! My privileges here including the making of occasional visits with the pastor and his wife who are my host and hostess, to various mountain villages, where Christian literature is distributed, homes visited, and in some way or other the gospel preached.

These trips are made in a regular American Ford, belonging to Pastor Contesse, and where the roads are not rough are extremely enjoyable. Madame Contesse is my teacher, and fortunate indeed am I to have one so gifted. She is an authoress of considerable note, and has also contributed widely to the Christian literature of France by the translation and publication in French of many widely useful books. Monsieur et Madame Contesse edit "La Bonne Revue", one of the foremost Christian periodicals of Europe, finding its way into Switzerland, Belgium, Holland and other countries where French is spoken, as well as having an increasing circulation in France itself.

Digne is a historic place. The metropolis of the province of the Basses-Alpes, it has yet a population of only 7,000—less than it had in the middle ages for it has been constantly depleted by war and pestilence. It occupies a beautiful, though absolutely level site in the midst of mountains which surround and overtop it. The altitude of the city itself is only 1,800 feet, in spite of snow-capped mountains in the vicinity. The famous hot-water mineral baths, containing sulphur, calcareous salts, or arsenical ones, are about two miles from Digne proper. They were comprised among the famous baths of the ancient Romans, and are especially therapeutic in gout, rheumatism, arthritis and associated complaints.

Those of you who have read "Les Misérables" either in French or English will remember that Digne is the scene of its opening chapters, and of all that pertains to the benign old bishop. Many of the buildings described in this famous masterpiece of Victor Hugo's still exist, one especially now utilized as the "Academy of Inspection." Digne has non-Catholic schools for boys and girls, as well as for young men and young women, the advanced schools being affiliated with the University of France, and offering special courses for foreigners.

The climate being dry and equable, it is a summer resort much frequented, especially by the French themselves. There are certain species of butterflies which exist here in the beautiful valley of the Bleone which are found nowhere else in the world. This brings during the beautiful summer months, entomologists from various parts of Europe. Five of the guests at Costabelle will come later to Digne in the pursuit of their entomological science.

Rest assured, however, it is not entomology, but the pursuit of the French language which has tempted me to this beautiful place, where I am, except for the obtaining of the special teachers' diploma, much more fortunately situated than our students of French in Nogent and Paris, although somewhat to my surprise, I find living more expensive in the Midi than in Paris and its suburbs.

Increased study but reveals the intricate difficulties of the French language.

Madame Contesse tells me of an English evangelist who attempted to preach in French. In appealing to backsliders, who had lost their faith, he invariably said, "Vous qui ont perdu le foie," (You who have lost your livers) instead of "la foi", (your faith!!!). And in speaking to sinners themselves he habitually invited them to accept "l'eau de vie" (brandy), instead of "l'eau vive," (living water), or "l'eau de la vie" (Water of life). And then he complained that French audiences were so frivolous that when speaking upon the most serious subjects, he met with no response save peals of laughter!

Letters are being constantly received from our dear missionaries, both in Africa and in Nogent. The question of my return to the field as speedily as possible is constantly upon my heart. At Bassai the hospital which is being built will progress nicely under the supervision of Miss Myers, assisted by Miss Bickel, and at Yaloke, Miss Tyson will do capably all that she is permitted to do, but since, at Yaloke, we have applied for permission to erect a hospital of the first class, its erection will be held in obedience until there is a doctor resident on the field. The same is true of the hundreds of lepers who inhabit the villages and roam the paths of the Karre and other tribes. The nurses are caring for them bravely and faithfully, but of necessity ineffectively and unsystematically, because until there is a doctor resident on the field, the proposed leper asylum cannot be opened. Pray then, for the going forth in God's own time of doctors younger, stronger, and more capable than myself, and for my own restoration to such a degree of health, as shall enable me to return and fill in the gap.

One of the earnest young Christians whom I have met in Digne is M. Rayaards who passed his Easter vacation here. He speaks French, English and German, as well as his native language, Dutch. Pray that his beginning interest in missions may be fanned into a flame, and that as he pursues his medical studies it may be with an intensity of purpose to serve the Lord in Africa.

Miss Tyson writes of one of her patients being clandestinely removed at night from the temporary quarters where she was being cared for, and, according to reports elicited by later investigations, buried alive, though fortunately unconscious! What need of a hospital at Yaloke! And I would not emphasize the medical work alone, for it, as I have said, and every other form of activity, are but subservient to the one great means of salvation, evangelism. "For it has pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

My heart looks forward with joy at the thought, the Lord willing and enabling, of seeing your dear faces at our National Conference in August. Just when and where I shall enfold again in my arms the little daughter whose life and health, God has so graciously spared throughout the year, I do not know. But to us the children of God, glad reunions are coming, reunions on earth of parent and child, of church and missionary, of missionary and people. Glad reunions I say, yet after all, mere types of that glorious reunion with HIMSELF when HE shall come, bringing with him the saints of all ages! And among the throng we shall seek first his own glorious face, and then those of the saints of our own generation, whom we have loved, with whom we have labored, and from whom we have been separated, because HE has chosen that for a brief time before us, they should be absent from the body and present with HIMSELF.

And now, lest I should encroach upon the space of missionaries, who, being actually in Africa, have so much more right to address you than I, let me close.

That word encroach, however, reminds me of a little story which, if it be true that "misery loves company" ought to afford a grain of comfort to those of us who whether in Ashland, Nogent, Digne, Yaloke, or Bassai, are struggling more or less hopelessly with the French language. I am told (by an Englishman, to be sure) that a French gentleman was about to close his call upon a lady of his acquaintance. "Excuse me, Madame," he said, in his very best English, "that I should have presumed so long to cockroach upon your time." "Oh, not at all," responded the lady amiably. "Your visit has been all too short. But, monsieur," she added, "in the sense in which you have employed it, we English would say encroach, not cockroach."

"Oh, certainly, Madame. Thank you. Zese genders, zey always do confuse me!"

And now, indeed, farewell. Let us press on together, "more than conquerors through him that loved us!"

Only Jesus will I know,
Only Jesus will I know,
'Twas his tender love for me,
Broke my heart and set me free."

Thus, knowing him and witnessing for him, following the Lamb, whithersoever he shall lead, shall we enable him to see the travail of his soul and be satisfied.

Yours till he come,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA

Six months have passed quickly by since we came to work with the good people of Dallas Center. Due to the fact that our Corresponding Secretary has been touring in the west for the above mentioned length of time, we have had not report for the information of our Evangelist readers. So in this instance we shall in our own crude way endeavor to give some items, which we believe to be of mutual interest to those who love our Lord, and are laboring in his vineyard.

We held our first Sunday service in Dallas Center, October 4th. Of course a new broom always sweeps exceedingly clean, and our first Sunday was a very encouraging one—One hundred and twenty-eight (128) were present for Sunday school, and a splendid audience appeared for the morning service of worship. In the evening we had a delightful surprise when three other churches of the town omitted their regular Sunday evening services, in order to visit us and get acquainted with the new preacher. So on the first Sunday evening our beautiful little church edifice which seats about 400 people was quite filled. It has never been so full since, except when we entertained a union Armistice day service, at which time we again had the privilege of speaking to a full house. However, our attendance and interest have shown a slight increase, although much fluctuation has been in evidence during the winter months, due to abnormal conditions, either of weather or sickness. Dallas Center has problems which seem peculiar to herself; still we encourage our hearts with the thought that Paul gives us in First Corinthians 10:13. After all our problems and complications are perhaps only common to church life in localities, and can only be overcome by the grace of our Lord, and through a consistent faith and practice of this Gospel.

We have observed all special days and made all regular offerings. Our Easter offering broke all records for Dallas in giving to foreign missions. For this we have great reason to rejoice.

Among the Young People

Our feelings run high as our pen starts to tabulate facts about our young people, so as we proceed we shall endeavor to season our pride with modesty.

We dare say a finer group of young people cannot be found anywhere; they are clean as the great hymn goes "Within and Without"; they are sincere, zealous, and capable in all they undertake to do, and to make it complete, they are willing to do. In fact our church is a young people's church; our choir is made up of young people, and under the congenial leadership of Brother J. O. Lehman, they are always in their places, 22 voices, ready to render a very important part of our service.

We have three Christian Endeavor societies, —Junior, Intermediate, and Senior—all doing fine work. Our Seniors are especially active and willing to undertake. A few weeks ago our Senior young people made themselves responsible for the entire Sunday evening church service; they gave special music, readings and sermonettes. Two of our young men, prospective preachers, did the main part of the speaking, each giving a sermonette on the subject, "Transformation." They were excellent. The church that uses up preachers and produces none is a parasite. We have also introduced a new feature which might be called an appendix to the Christian Endeavor work; we choose to call it the "Practical Christianity" class. We believe it is very profitable and we recommend it to any pastor who wishes to add development to his young people. The class meets every two weeks on Saturday evening with the pastor, and we discuss methods of making our Christianity practical, to meet the demands of a practical world. For a definite study we have been taking "Methods in Personal Evangelism." As we see fit we shall vary our studies, perhaps taking a study of "Christian Evidences." We also use part of the hour in practical exercise of spiritual graces, such as prayer and fellowship. This is very profitable for both pastor and class.

The Sisterhood

We have both a Junior and Senior sisterhood society. They hold regular meetings and carry out splendid programs. This adds much to the interest of our young people's work.

W. M. S.

The Woman's Missionary Society has the reputation of being one of the most active and faithful auxiliaries of the Brethren church, and ours is no exception. We have a very large enrollment in comparison with the size of our constituency, and their program of procedure is a credit to the church, and a recognized benefit to the community.

Mid-Week Meeting

Our Mid-week inspirational meeting has grown in attendance from six to twenty-five. This is very encouraging since for a long time a successful mid-week meeting has been considered impossible. We think our present attendance can be increased and should be doubled in a short course of time.

Pre-Easter Meeting

In anticipation of our communion services held on Easter Sunday evening, we conducted a series of Pre-Easter meetings, occupying in all ten nights. The Spirit worked as we endeavored to present the simple Gospel message, which within itself is the power (Rom. 1:16). On Easter Sunday we had the joy of administering the rite of baptism to seven precious souls who had confessed Christ as their Lord and Savior. One having been baptized before makes a total of eight added to the church. Many others are procrastinating, some more and some less interested; we need prayer on their behalf, that their blinded eyes may be opened. We have no excuse for existence as a church other than to carry out the plan and purpose of our Lord, and certainly the avowed purpose of his ministry was and is to "Seek and to Save the Lost" (Luke 19:10).

Those who know the power of prayer, will you kindly remember us at the Throne of Grace?

E. B. STUDEBAKER, Pastor.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The College is under obligations to Mr. John Miller, president of the Senior Class and my assistant in Biology, for a new cement aquarium and growing tank recently built in the growing room of the Biological Laboratories.

The College baseball team recently won from Wilberforce University (colored) and lost to Capital University.

Educational Day. The First Sunday in June. The printed matter is being gotten ready for the mail. It ought to reach the various pastors within a week or two.

I recently gave the Commencement address at Jelloway, Lakeville, and Ruggles high schools near Ashland.

Professor Charles Auspach gave the dedicatory address at the Madison Township high school, near Mansfield.

Four of our men, Messrs. Kellogg, Coleman, Welch, and Riblett held the County Field Meet at Medina, Ohio. Also a group did the same for Ashland county at Loudonville.

Dr. Shively recently returned from Mason-town, Pennsylvania, where he assisted Dr. Bell in his canvass. I am expecting the latter here the last of next week when a report of the canvass thus far will be made in the Evangelist.

EDWIN E. JACOBS, President.

CANTON, OHIO

We are glad to be able to report progress in the work of the Lord in this field. And when we say progress we are able to capitalize the entire word. If we were to begin where we ought to begin we would tell you a little about the fourth annual visit of the Ashland College Gospel Team. They came to us, as has become their custom, at the Thanksgiving time, a quartet of fine, consecrated young men, in the persons of Thomas Presnell, Robert Crees, Bertram King and Egidio Romanenghi. We have not space to tell you more than that there were ten confessions, seven of whom were received into the church, while the other three were kept out because of parental opposition. We cannot say too much in praise of the boys who come to us from time to time.

Our Christmas Cantata, under the direction of Brother F. E. Clapper, was of the high order that marks any musical effort which is under his direction. About thirty voices participated.

The Sunday school goes forward under the leadership of Brother F. B. Lindower and is doing splendid work. We are waiting rather impatiently until such time as our new church will be ready for occupancy, when we can make a concerted effort to multiply our forces and enlarge our borders. Our condition now is such that we dare not make very much of an effort for we have no place to take care of more than the present content of our school.

This leads us to one of the most important of the advances that the church has made. Previously we reported that steps were being taken to erect a new church edifice two blocks from the present site. At a recent meeting of the church the Building Committee was authorized to proceed with this erection to the best of their ability. This Building Committee is composed of the Board of Trustees of the Corporate church in the persons of F. B. Lindower, President; F. E. Smith, Vice President; F. E. Clapper, Secretary; M. E. Itskin, Assistant Secretary and S. W. Link, Treasurer. A finance committee was appointed by this Board, which is composed of S. W. Link, Chairman; D. F. Eikenberry, and the pastor. This Committee begins the financial canvass on May 16th and hopes to have it finished by the following Sunday. Five teams will make this canvass. These teams are composed of, the Building Committee, the Finance Committee and three additional men in the persons of J. J. Hang, Harry C. Miller and Norman E. Clark. In the meantime the committee has proceeded with the excavation of the basement and this is now complete. It is the purpose to proceed as rapidly as possible with the hope that we may be able to dedicate around the Thanksgiving time. Brethren pray for us that we may do the work of building the House of the Lord in a manner that will be well pleasing in his sight. We have a wonderful territory to serve, but cannot adequately serve it with the present plant. We would gladly receive any contributions that the brethren would make as friends of the work here.

At the Easter time we had a blessed time with Brother McClain in the pulpit for a week's studies of the Word. The interest was fine and one accession to the church was the result materially. The spiritual impulse that came to the membership through Brother McClain's helpful messages can never be counted, because its influence went, not alone through the ranks of our own church membership, but rather out among the unchurched and the indifferent. We expect these messages to yet bear fruit in the nature of regenerated lives. We were thankful for this and likewise thankful for the opportunity to become more personally acquainted with both Brother McClain and his good wife.

At the recent meeting of the church in quarterly business session they were again kind enough to extend a call for another year to the pastor. This we were glad to accept because we have come to love these people and would have been sorry to leave them. We have now had six years of fellowship with them and expect the seventh to be just as gracious. They were also thoughtful enough to substantially raise the salary.

Just yesterday (May 9th) we had with us for our Mother's Day program at the morning hour, a Girls' Gospel Team from the College. This was composed of Miss Evelyn Coons, Miss Helen Garber and Miss Marjorie Price. The singing of Miss Coons, and Miss Price and the message of Miss Garber was much appreciated and bore fruit in the confession of one young girl who felt the call to serve her Master. One member was received into fellowship by relation at this service.

Brethren, remember this part of the Vineyard where we are seeking to do God's bidding, depending on his promises for the fruition.

Sincerely in his Name,

FRED C. VANATOR, Pastor.

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

How quickly time passes when we mark it! It seems but a very short period of time since our last report, but the quarterly report is due. During this time, we have striven to meet the obligations we owe the church at large and our constant endeavor to serve our Master with our humble efforts.

After the Christmas activities, which have been reported, we looked forward to the special days and the Easter opportunity of soul enlistment. On the special days attention was called to the various needs and in every instance our people responded in their characteristic way. Offerings were taken and forwarded promptly to the proper places, so that the ministry of the church is reaching beyond our own congregation and immediate community. Six of the churches of the city united in a pre-Easter union evangelistic effort, with the pastors of the cooperating churches doing the preaching. A splendid interest was manifested and fraternal ties strengthened. We continued the services one week, after the close of the union meeting, with the result of eight additions to the church. Four of these were adults, three husbands, whose families were already members of the church, and one boy. The other four were two boys and two girls from the Sunday school. We all rejoiced in these splendid additions to the membership and pray that God may abundantly bless them in his service. It has stimulated the membership to renewed activity. We closed the meeting with our spring communion service. It was a spiritual feast that we enjoyed in the Name of our Lord. With the opportunity of these spiritual privileges, we pray that our spiritual lives may be strengthened, so that we may be enabled to do a greater work.

The W. M. S. and the Sunday school are continuing their splendid work. This time of the year seems to call for special social activities. The classes and departments are taking advantage of them and are enjoying themselves.

The W. M. S. has planned the "Mothers' and Daughters' Banquet" which proves to be both delightful and helpful. We aim to make the social part of our work a means of Christian fellowship.

At the last quarterly business meeting of the church, the pastor was again recalled for another year, the year beginning October first. We are serving our third year's pastorate with this church. We have had our successes and our failures; our mountain-top delights and our valley problems. But we are endeavoring to uphold the Cross of Jesus and with the united efforts of the membership we hope to continue to progress in this part of God's Visible Kingdom. May we be led to do his will. This year has also witnessed the passing of some of our loyal members. Our loss is their gain; and may the loss we sustained be an incentive for others to assume the vacant places. Someone has said, "God buries workers but carries on the work." So may the call of need unite the church everywhere to heroic effort.

sound a lot better when the reply of the child to his mother or father is, "Surely, I will do what you want me to do." Are you kind and polite to your parents, your grand parents and all the older folks with whom you meet? Let us think about these things and help make our homes and all the people whom we meet happier by being polite to them.

Notes on the Sunday School Lesson and Isaac, his place in the divine covenant, his leadership of his people along the paths of God's providence. God grants his visions to those that walk in his ways.

The Beth-el vision must have been a splendid inspiration for Jacob and a great comfort through the years of toil and discouragement that lay ahead of him in Mesopotamia. It assured him of God's presence, of God's loving care, and of the glorious future which God had in store for him. This is precisely the revelation which Christ has ready for every Christian who will open his heart to receive it.

The Beth-el vision is possible for every Christian, even the poorest, the most ignorant, the weakest and the humblest. We need not travel abroad, for every place may be a house of God. We do not need learning or power or time for meditation, or great saintliness; Jacob had none of these. We need only what Jacob had, a longing after God and a feeling of our own helplessness without him. Surely we can all meet these requirements.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

KELS-LAMBERT—At the home of the groom's parents, on May 6, 1926, occurred the marriage of Mr. Charles E. Kels and Miss Gladys Lambert. The service was performed by the writer in the presence of the immediate families of the contracting parties. The bridegroom is a member of the First Brethren church, of Johnstown, and the bride is a member of the Lutheran church. Two promising young people have started out on life's pathway together and our prayer is for the leading of God's spirit as they enter upon this new relationship. DYOLL BELOTE.

WRENCH-JOHN—On the morning of May 10, 1926, about eleven o'clock, Mr. C. E. Wrench of Lynchburg, Virginia and Miss Lois M. Johns of Roanoke, were united in marriage at the Brethren Parsonage of Roanoke, Virginia, by the writer. Mr. Wrench is a member of the Episcopal church and is a well known newspaper man of Lynchburg, Virginia, being on the staff of the "Lynchburg News". His bride is a member of the Roanoke Brethren church, an active worker in many church activities, and will be greatly missed by the whole church as she is one of our most popular soloists. Mr. and Mrs. Wrench expect to make their home in Lynchburg, Virginia, after June 15. A host of friends extend every good wish. HERBERT H. ROWSEY.

IN THE SHADOW

CLAYCOMB—Alexander Claycomb was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, September 25, 1857, a son of Henry and Rebecca Dunmire Claycomb, and one of a family of 8 children. His demise came on May 4, 1926, in the 70th year of his earthly pilgrimage. Brother Claycomb was the last surviving member of his immediate family.

Alexander Claycomb was united in marriage with Emma Elizabeth St. Clair on July 4, 1881. To this union 5 children were born, all of whom survive. The wife and mother preceded him in death on May 27, 1900.

Brother Claycomb united with the First Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, some ten years ago and has remained a communicant of that congregation during the years since his conversion. In the last few months Brother Claycomb has been an attendant at the services of the Second Brethren church of Moxham, because of the proximity of the church to his residence.

Funeral services for Brother Claycomb were conducted at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Vincent Reighard, of Cambria Avenue, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, on Friday morning, May 6, by the undersigned, in the absence of Brother Charles Ashman, pastor of the First church. Interment was made in St. Jacob's Evangelical Lutheran church cemetery, at Youngstown, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania. DYOLL BELOTE.

ORRIS—Betty Jane, only child of Charles and Gertrude Thomas Orris, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, was born April 17, 1926, and departed this mortal ken on May 11, 1926, aged 24 days. Not for long was she permitted to taste the experiences of an earthly existence, and yet God granted her to the care of the parents long enough to prove how strong is the hold that such tiny beings can get upon our affections. Funeral services from the family home on Wednesday afternoon, May 12, conducted by the undersigned. The parents are members of the First Brethren church of Johnstown. Burial in beautiful Grandview cemetery.

STONER—Elizabeth M. Hoard was born near Stewardstown, Gongalia county, West Virginia, September 6, 1860, a daughter of Edgar and Rebecca Ross Hoard, and one of a family of 7 children. Sister Stoner's demise occurred on Sunday morning, May 2, 1926 at the age of 65 years, 7 months and 26 days, she being the first of her father's children to answer the death summons. Death came full Grandview cemetery. DYOLL BELOTE.

as a release from extreme suffering from a malignant form of cancer.

Elizabeth Hord was twice married, her first husband being Wm. J. Fouch. To this union three children were born, two of whom died in infancy, the surviving daughter, Mrs. Lowrey Moser, making her home with the mother. The first marital relation was broken by the death of the husband in 1903. The second husband was Martin S. Stoner, to whom she was married in 1907. To this union no children were born. Martin S. Stoner died on March 15th, 1920, since which time Sister Stoner has resided at the family residence at 55 Highland Ave., Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Stoner is survived by 4 brothers and 2 sisters, one daughter, two granddaughters. Besides these 13 step-children respect the memory of the woman who was a mother in love and service in their parental homes.

Mrs. Stoner united with the First Brethren church of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, some ten years ago, and remained a faithful and consistent member until her demise. Quietly and faithfully Sister Stoner served her Lord and Master, and death found her prepared to meet him. Because we had been neighbors—as well as sustaining the relation of pastor and parishioner—for the five and one-half years of my pastorate at Uniontown, it was Sister Stoner's personal request that the undersigned should officiate at her funeral obsequies, which were held at her home on Tuesday morning, May 4, 1926, in the presence of a crowd of people which filled the house. Burial was made in St. Jacob's Lutheran cemetery, in German township, Fayette county, Pennsylvania. Brother E. F. Byers, pastor of the Uniontown congregation assisted in the services.

CROUSE—George H. Crouse was born in Fayette County, West Virginia, and died March 24, 1926, aged 61 years 11 months and 21 days. He was a member for years of the Church of the Brethren and was a deacon. He never married and left to mourn his departure three brothers and two sisters, Joseph and Charles of Fayetteville; John of Loch Gelly, Mrs. Mary Mitchell of Akron, Ohio, and Mrs. J. E. Sanger of Sebring, Florida. Services in the Chestnut Grove Church of the Brethren and burial in the nearby cemetery. Services by the writer.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

CAMPBELL—Mrs. Jennie Campbell was born in Monroe County, West Virginia, December 2 and died at the home of her son, Eugene, at Oak Hill, April 8, aged 67 years, 4 months and 7 days. Eighteen years ago she became a member of the Brethren church. She is survived by one son and three grandchildren. Services at the home and burial in Oak Hill Cemetery. Services in charge of JOHNSON—James W. Johnson was born in Fayette County, West Virginia, and died at the home of his niece, Mrs. Treadway, near Oak Hill, April 17, 1926, aged 70 years, 5 months and 17 days. He was survived by nine children, who all live in this state. Among those surviving are Brother Marion Johnson of Oak Hill. Services were held in the Methodist church in charge of Rev. A. R. Young and the writer. Burial in Oak Hill Cemetery. FREEMAN ANKRUM.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

MOUNT PLEASANT, PENNSYLVANIA

Sunday evening, June the 6th will be our regular communion service. Every member of the church is expected to be present. Others of like faith in the observance of the teachings and examples of our Lord, are invited to participate with us.

WILLIAM A. CROFFORD, Pastor.

1014 Ash Street, Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

CAMPBELL, MICHIGAN

Having tendered my resignation as pastor of the Campbell Brethren church, Lake Odesa, Michigan, these Brethren will be looking for a pastor. Business interests have made the change necessary. Campbell Brethren are a most splendid people, and it is with deep regret we go from them. Our work will close about July 31st, or as much sooner as a new pastor is secured or a supply is obtained.

This church is undecided between half and full time pastorate. We believe, however, that if a man were inclined to the chicken industry, these good brethren would make such a side-line possible, making possible a full time service. Their locality is a most wonderful place to live and work.

Too, being in the midst of Dunkard people, our church is in position for a wonderful growth, providing pastor gives time to definite pastoral work.

If interested write Lewis Clum, Lake Odesa, Michigan.

Preacher, you never need to worry about pay day with these brethren.

E. A. DUKER.

SHIPSHEWANA CONFERENCE

Plans for the summer Bible conference for the Indiana District to be held at Shishewana Lake are going forward and the program will soon be ready for publication. The date is July 11 to 25. The program will ensure those who attend of a real spiritual feast, such as we have been accustomed to enjoy at the Brethren Retreat and it is hoped the churches will plan to have a goodly number of delegates in attendance.

W. I. DUKER, Moderator.

NOTICE TO CHURCHES OF MARYLAND-VIRGINIA DISTRICT

Every pastor in the district should see to it that his church or churches pay up their mission apportionment before the District Conference. Send it to Samuel Hounshell, Treasurer, New Market, Virginia. He will have a chart at Roanoke showing apportionments and amounts paid. A star will be given each church paid in full. Let every church win a star. Action should be taken at once, as the conference is near at hand. The date is June 15-17.

G. C. CARPENTER.

TO MARYLAND-VIRGINIA BRETHREN

The writer has sent cards to every known pastor in the district relative to the District Conference, which meets in Roanoke, Virginia, June 15, 16 and 17. Brother Pastor, will you please fill in the self-addressed reply card which was sent to you and return promptly. Thanks. Any pastor who did not get these cards, or any church who is without a pastor, will aid the Roanoke Brethren in their planning and preparation, if you will advise me of the number of persons we may expect from your church in attendance at the Conference. HERBERT ROWSEY, Pastor.

1017 Gilmer Ave., N. W.,

Roanoke, Virginia.

ALUMNI BANQUET

The Alumni Association will hold a banquet at Ashland on the evening of Tuesday, June 8. It will be the first banquet and meeting the Association has ever held at Ashland. It is being held in accordance with a decision reached at the annual meeting held at Winona last August, and will become a regular affair, held annually, and not superseding but complimenting the Winona meeting. This is notice to all members of the Association who read The Evangelist that they are invited to attend this banquet should they be in Ashland at Commencement time, or near enough to get there.

The banquet itself will be excellent enough to tempt the palate of Bacchus; the program will be short and first rate; the college orchestra will furnish the music. No graduate of old A. C., who can possibly be there should miss this function.

JOHN PERRY HORLACHER, President.

Lamplighters

The following given by Sir Harry Lauder at the Hotel Cecil one evening, might have been spoken from a pulpit:

"I was sitting in the gloamin', an' a man passed the window. He was the lamp lighter. He pushed his pole into the lamp and lighted it. Then he went to another and another. Now I couldn't see him. But I knew where he was by the lights as they broke out down the street, until he had left a beautiful avenue of light.

"Ye're a' lamplighters. They'll know where ye've been by the lights. Ye'll want your son to be a noble man. Let him say wi' pride when you've passed on: 'Ma father 'lit that lamp!'"

Dear Reader: Are you leaving lights along the shores of time? There is no light like the truth of God. You may light a life for God with a good tract. Send for a supply now and begin lighting up some lives.

The Passing of Defense Day

A bulletin from the War Department informs us of the passing of Defense Test Day. The child was only two years old and had never enjoyed robust health, having been afflicted with unpopularity from its birth. The first year it suffered a severe shock of protest that gave it the "little growth", which not all the wisdom and facilities of the war chieftains were able to overcome. By the next year its unpopularity had grown to such extent and such little hope was held out for its support that a more propitious season was sought for its appearance. Its promoters had thought to have some of the popular favor of Armistice Day transfused into its anaemic veins, but as that day had been given over to peace promotion, the President thought it best not to risk having it polluted with war activities and ideals. Almost as incongruously however, Independence Day was set for the demonstration of the war strength of the nation. And the gravest fears of the War department were fully realized—the widespread disapproval of Defense Day was more pronounced than before. So strong was the opposition and so feeble was the response that those in charge were kept busy for days making apologies for, and explaining the failure of, the Day. Secretary Davis, still undaunted, was disposed to make yet another heroic effort to save the life of this pet scheme for war propaganda, when President Coolidge, realizing the political "dead weight" that it had become, directed that no more national mobilizations be conducted without authorization from Congress, which meant, of course, that they would cease entirely. And so Defense Test Day, before its third demonstration, dies the death, the victim of popular protest inspired by Christian idealism and opposition to war.

But, it is well not to be over-jubilant about it; the War Department's purpose to plant the war spirit and ideal in the minds of American people is not to be frustrated by the failure of this one venture. It was only one item in the program. Another, and more wisely laid and more skillfully manoeuvred plan is that of putting military training in the schools and colleges of the land. This is destined, if not frustrated, to have a very far-reaching and effective influence in the creation of a militaristic mind on the part of the American people. The attack is made at the most strategic point in our national life—the formative period—and if it is not brought to a halt by a vigorous protest on the part of the peace-loving, Christly-disposed people, the next generation will be thoroughly militarized and built up into a gigantic war machine. So while we rejoice at the passing of Defense Day, let us be alert and set ourselves with vigor and persistence to the creation of popular sentiment that will be able to sound the death knell of compulsory military instruction in our schools and colleges.

The Unheeded Voice of Memorial Day

Memorial Day comes with a varied plea. We hear and readily accede to the call to render fitting reverence and gratitude to the memory of those who laid down their lives in the great martial conflicts in which our country has engaged. We honor the service of sacrifice and praise the deeds of heroism that have been recorded and preserved for our inspiration. We extol devotion to country that in multitudes of instances has proven itself stronger than life. We give honor and loving ministries to the veterans who remain and place markers and wreaths on the graves of those who have departed. From our hearts come cheers for the living and tears for the dead. And for all our praise and tears we are rewarded with a feeling of satisfaction at having shown ourselves virtuous in quantities of reverence and gratitude. But all the while we are deaf to a voice that cries out from every wound and scar of the living and every mound of the dead. We pursue our activities of sympathy and honor unheeding and failing to understand the mute appeals of the new arrays of white markers, steadily increasing, and the growing number of wreaths required to decorate the graves. What does it all mean? What are they saying? They are asking, Why all this loss? Why all these slain, and why all this human wreckage? And as these monuments increase with multiplied thousands, the voice will continue to question us with increasing force and persistence.

Why must wars continue? Why this vast loss of human energy and genius, and this waste of mighty aggregation of machinery and food and tons of military equipment? All this tells us that we have forgotten the message of Jesus; we have lost his Gospel of "good will among men", and the "Golden Rule" and the principle of brotherhood have been cast into the discard. Love and forbearance, unselfishness and service have been looked upon as impracticable ideals, fit only for subjects of meditation by the religious recluse. In their place selfishness and greed, race prejudice and bigoted nationalism, commercial imperialism and allurements of power and wealth have been given thought and counted important. These have become the ideals that are gripping us as a people far too strongly. We are thinking such thoughts as individuals and as a nation, and we are becoming like what we cherish. Materialism is crowding out idealism. Oil concessions and commerce seem to be given a higher rating than moral leadership and the protection of the weak. Arrogance and aloofness have the upper hand of mutual consideration and cooperation, while many would cause militarism and the right of might to supplant counsel and the might of right. These are what cause wars. These are the things responsible for this awful loss of life and health of which we are so sorely reminded on this Memorial Day. These are the elements that combine to fill our beautiful landscapes with rows upon rows of white markers.

Do we want that awful work to continue? Have we not had enough of war? Will we never give heed to the mute voice of these memorial stones and wreaths? The boys who went to France thought they were going to war to end war. And we were all imbued with that same high ideal and purpose for a time. The method, we have discovered, was all wrong. But why should we have lost the motive and the aim? One of the boys who fought in the late war, after he had been some time in the service and had seen some of the horrors of war, said, "If I live, I am going to spend my life working for peace." He did not live; he fell among the poppies of Flanders while some of us were tasting luxury and learning extravagance. And he had many comrades who gave life or offered it from all lands, inspired with the same conviction, while among those who remained at home in safety were some who said, It is expedient that they should die that all the rest of us might not die. It was such consummate unconcern that made profiteers of those awful days. And it is the same attitude toward war that is making militarists in our beloved land at this very hour.

Can we so soon forget the dearly bought lessons of war? Can we close our eyes to the horrors and carnage of war, while militarism is raising its bloody head again in the civilized world? Can we continue to turn a deaf ear to the voices coming from the tombs of those who died to end war? Nay, rather, in the light of all that is now taking place to hinder the advancement of conditions that make for peace, we cannot be unheeded of these summonses from the dead; they lay upon us a most bounden duty. In the words of Rev. Thomas Lutman, "We live—we must be baptized for the dead. We must swear that never again shall this thing be. Cry to the militarists and the war lords as they cried—'You shall not pass!' If the militarist comes back then the dead have died in vain. We pray, 'Thy kingdom come.' Does that mean a kingdom where the sword settles disputes? 'Thy will be done.' Is it his will that nations should mount the treadmill of war? The end of war is possible—we must make it actual. We must determine that every gun and sword shall go to the scrap heap." War is not inevitable. This terrible cost is not necessary. These rapidly growing memorial stones cry out against it. May there be throughout the whole church of Christ a heeding ear given to this hitherto unheeded voice.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

EDUCATIONAL DAY IS JUNE 6. Every church should make a generous offering to this cause.

Our efficient Home Mission Secretary, Brother W. A. Gearhart, makes a report of the General Home Mission receipts for a period of weeks.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble continues her interesting narratives of tribal customs, this time dealing with the superstition of "blood propitiation" as practiced by a barbarous African tribe.

The report from Camden, Ohio, tells us that our church at that point is being revived, that two were recently added to the church, and $700 was raised to liquidate the church debt.

Brother R. F. Porte, in his "Tract Corner", asks, "How is the Lord's tenth prospering in your church?" We are wondering how many of the churches have made any provision at all for the Lord's tenth.

Brother Homer Anderson, pastor of the church near Mulvane, Kansas, writes that he is encouraged, the work is well organized and that progress is being realized notwithstanding hindrances. He has been called to remain as pastor of this church for the second year.

Our correspondent from the church at New Troy, Michigan, reports concerning the evangelistic meetings recently conducted by Brother C. C. Grisso of Warsaw, Indiana, and reported by him in last week's Evangelist. Ten souls were added to the church.

The beautiful new church at Ashland, Ohio, was dedicated on May 23, according to schedule, and a successful day it was, with Dr. Beachler as the principal speaker and director of the money raising operations. It is not our purpose to give out any more of the news in advance of the authorized report which will doubtless appear shortly, accompanied by a picture of the church.

From the Second church of Los Angeles, of which Dr. E. M. Cobb is pastor, reports twenty-two received by baptism since the first of the year and nine by letter. A week of Bible lectures by Dr. Leon Tucker was recently enjoyed by this congregation. Brother C. H. Ashman is soon to conduct an evangelistic campaign here. So the unusual growth of this wide-awake congregation promises to continue.

The first report on the Memorial Endowment Campaign over the signature of Dr. W. S. Bell is to be found in this issue, and the dial found on first page indicates the splendid lift which the Eyeman Will gives the Endowment fund. Brother Bell has been hard at work since entering upon his duties as campaign secretary, and we understand has been meeting with some splendid success and will have some encouraging reports to make during the coming weeks. Keep your eye on the dial. And of course you will be eagerly awaiting every report that Dr. Bell will have to make.

Dr. J. Allen Miller has returned from his trip to Egypt and the Holy Land, and reports a very enjoyable and profitable experience. It is evident that the trip did him good in more ways than one, for he appears to be several pounds heavier besides having a nice coat of tan. We were all glad for his safe return and to hear a most reassuring message from him on the evening of the dedication of the new church at Ashland.

Brother W. S. Crick gives us an interesting report of the work of the Bedford county circuit in Pennsylvania. At the New Enterprise church ten were added to the church as a result of an evangelistic meeting conducted by the pastor. At Yellow Creek interest in the various services and the work of the church is encouraging. The Raystown people have made a splendid effort toward the liquidation of the debt on their church building. Brother Crick has gotten his work started in a splendid way in this group of churches.

From a recent personal communication from Brother W. C. Benshoff, pastor of the church at Berlin, Pennsylvania, we quote the following paragraph, which reveals how thoroughly their new church is appreciated, and how much it promises to mean to them: "Held our first communion in our new church Sunday evening. Wonderful improvement over the old place. 180 communed. On the evening of the 9th the baccalaureate service was held in our church. Had an audience of over seven hundred, all of whom were comfortably seated. The ones farthest from the speaker said they could see and hear. It gives us prestige in the community that we can now take our turn along with the other denominations in these union services." The brotherhood will appreciate this note of rejoicing and will be glad for this new day that has come to the Berlin congregation.

Brother A. L. Lynn reports a very enjoyable evangelistic campaign with Dr. M. A. Witter at West Kittanning, Pennsylvania. What is said about the importance of full time pastoral service at Kittanning, may also be said about almost every mission point. There are few points where mission work can be carried on by half-time service without very seriously crippling the future of the work from the outset. However, when a mission board has so many places that must have help and only a miserably small fund on which to draw, what is it going to do but divide it between the loc. The solution must be found in the instruction of our churches to give more generously for home missions. We have not begun to take this part of our work seriously. Returning to Brother Lynn's report, he speaks very highly of the selection of Dr. Bell as Endowment Campaign Secretary, and it is evident that his church gave the canvass a good start and that Dr. Bell has something good to report in the near future.

Items of Interest

How will the next war be fought? Edwin Emery Slosson, director of science services, Washington, D. C., says it will not be fought by the crude implements of war we now possess, but by the latest and most destructive chemical formulas of the scientists. In speaking before the National Conference of International Problems and Relations, meeting at Briar Cliff Manor, New York, two weeks ago, he said: "Wars are no longer fights between armies. They are contests between peoples. Nowadays the battle is not to the strong but to the ingenious. The most effective preparedness is scientific research and industrial development in general. Nowadays fighting is carried on with scientific formulas, and the nation that invents the best one beats." This is all the more reason why we should put forth our best endeavors to bring the world to the point where it will be content to live without war. The best kind of preparedness is the cultivation of the will to peace.

An Israelite altar to Astarte, the heathen moon god, and the ruins of a huge temple which may have been the palace of King Jereboam, have been discovered by the American-German archaeological expedition, now digging at the site of Shechem, thirty-four miles from Jerusalem, reports The Methodist Protestant. The discovery of the altar to Astarte, in the opinion of Dr. Sellin of the University of Berlin," confirms the truth of the earlier prophets concerning the multiform idolatries of the cities of Northern Israel."

GENERAL ARTICLES

Educational Day and Our Own Church College

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

The demand for religious, or rather Christian, education is as great today as ever, if not greater. A good many years ago, it was taken as a matter of course that colleges were conducted with the rather definite aim and end in view of serving in one way or any other, the church which had founded them and by whose good favor they existed. But with the coming of state founded schools, technical colleges and those of private foundation, sometimes with the express purpose of exploiting and continuing a family name, all this was changed. The aims of these founders were not the same as those of the churches.

If this is true, then the various churches must look well to their own school. It is perfectly evident, it seems to me, that the church has little or no duty to educate lawyers, dentists, teachers for the state school, farmers and business men, merely as such. Just now those church colleges which are striving to educate for these professions and callings are finding it increasingly difficult to meet the standards set up for them by other agencies. Some time ago I attended the installing of the president of a university which had in its very inception an intense religious and denominational basis, and which still carries on its diploma the name of a well known church dignitary, but which now has almost no religious interest. During the entire day I heard no word relative to Christianity nor any reference to Christ at all and only a reference to God in the single prayer offered. The wishes of the founders of that school are entirely disregarded and religion has entered into a period of long sleep.

Now if, on the other hand, the church colleges can serve in the general public and at the same time continue to serve the church they may well claim support and respect, but I hold that they should not sacrifice everything for popular support. There are always athletics, state regulations, high scholastic standards and other general interests clamoring for their share of attention until one hardly knows whether these are the chief aims or not. And not a few colleges have lost their bearings and are trying by rather doubtful means to "increase their enrollment", to "serve the local community", to "send out successful graduates", and in general make an appeal for both support and attendance.

Now, nothing can take the place of service to the general interests of Christian education in the first place and selected and specific service to the church also. The church has no obligation to furnish an education to the general public by the wholesale but it has a duty to educate for a specific purpose and with a specific end in view. If the ideals of Christianity are worth anything, then the church could hardly spend too much to propagate them. And what is more, it could hardly spend too much in order to see to it that they were propagated, not by ignorance and tyranny, but by enlightenment and education.

If so, then the church ought to bend its every effort to keep its contribution abreast with that of the best. Just as soon as a finger can be pointed at the church and her schools and the cry raised of "ignorance", and "inefficiency", just that soon the church and her program of education will be seriously handicapped. All one has to do is to spend some time in some of our great graduate universities in order to find proof of the above statements.

"Where did you graduate from?" "From a modest denominational college in the mid-west." "And did the university accept your work at full value?" "Yes." "That is odd. I came from the State university and of course no question was raised about my credits. But yours . . ."

I insist, the churches must keep their educational interests to the forefront if for no other reason than that of self preservation.

Ashland College and Educational Sunday

This date has been set for the first Sunday in June and the usual printed matter and envelopes have been sent out. We are now in the midst of an endowment campaign, but that will not be complete for a period of years and meanwhile the college has its useful needs.

The general state of the institution is good. We are serving the church as best we can. The Seminary has been strengthened by the addition of another teacher and the course remade and other things done which will tend to make that part of the college more effective. The week following Educational Sunday we will graduate the largest class from the seminary in our history—14, all long course graduates.

When one remembers that there are not over 1,700 graduates from all the seminaries yearly in the United States, it appears that we are doing at least our proportionate share and perhaps more. With all the above facts in mind, it seems as if the churches, and ours among them, should never for a moment lose sight of their great problem, viz., that of rightly educating their own people and at the same time to give a general impetus to religious education wherever there may be an opportunity for them to exert their influence.

We have set ourselves definitely to that task. We are anxious to excel in all respects—intercollegiate debate, athletics, enrollment, class room achievement and scholarship, but over and above all of these we desire to excel in stressing the Christian character and foundation of learning. If this is not the mission and scope of the denominational church college, then I do not know what it is. To this our denomination and our college ought to bend their efforts.

Ashland, Ohio.

EDUCATIONAL DAY

The aim of the Christian college is not reached by turning out students who are merely believers in Christianity, who consent calmly and indifferently to its creed. It aims to fill its students with the spirit of St. Paul, to make them alive to the service of Christ, and to fire them with the enthusiasm of humanity.

There are special reasons today which show that the part taken by the Christian college in our national life is growing important and strategic. America, already the richest of nations, is to become far richer. The number of the wealthy will be increased, and millions will have most of the comforts, and even luxuries, which the very rich now enjoy. The tendency of opulence is to enervate. Christian character needs to be hardened and fortified against luxury. And a "manhood that can stand money" is what the Christian college aims to produce.

Our civilization rushes to a vast and fatal plunge unless God is enthroned in the educated minds of our people. Education without religion is architecture without foundation and roof.—Barrows.

WHY SUPPORT ASHLAND COLLEGE ON EDUCATIONAL DAY

An Appeal from Some of the Professors

Not Self-Supporting

By Prof. A. L. DeLozier

I well remember the first time I ever heard the words ASHLAND COLLEGE when I was a small boy in the hills of Pennsylvania. I often think of the vague impression those words made upon me that first time I heard them pronounced and then asked my father what Ashland College meant. Later I came to appreciate better what Ashland meant and my conception has been clearing up more and more ever since until today I see our college in a different light than ever before.

You say you have been hearing so much about Ashland all through the years, but allow me to ask you a question: "Have you responded to any of the appeals that have been made to put the college on a better footing?" No? Well then you have a right to hear about Ashland again, for your conception of her importance is not yet clear enough. You have done your best? God bless you then, you will rejoice to learn that we are trying to get others to do that very thing. Perhaps you say: "Why isn't the college self-supporting by this time?" Almost as well ask: "Why pay taxes to support the public school?" You pay your school taxes from year to year and never think of questioning the advisability of it. Here are two reasons why Ashland College is not self-supporting:

1. No college is a money making institution else it is not deserving of the name college.
2. Education should be brought within reach of all who wish it. And even then it is oftentimes hard enough a struggle for a poor boy or girl to secure an education.

In Ashland College the student pays about one-fourth ($\frac{1}{4}$) each year of what it costs the college to run that year to educate him. You are being asked for the other three-fourths in the future interests of the church and of humanity. This is the very best investment you can make anywhere.

Ashland College will always need money just as surely as your local church will. When you build a church you don't expect it to be self-supporting. You expect always to have to give money to keep it up. So you should not expect a Christian college to be self-supporting, for it does not exist for the purpose of making money, but for making character, which is far better and so much more needed these days.

Home of Ideals

By Dr. L. L. Garber

In asserting the "main aim of education is to instill ideals," Prof. Bagley gives strong testimony to the high worth of the small religious college. The small religious college is distinctively the "home of ideals." Here the finer things of the spirit are not smothered under the material atmosphere of selfish considerations. Here students studying "under scholars who are gentlemen, and forming character under professors who are Christians," learn to love and to admire the things most worth while in life. They thus develop that sterling manhood which is the chief asset in a successful and happy life. Such an institution is most vital and worthy and deserves the support of all Christian people.

Produces Full Rounded Life

By Prof. R. R. Haun

There are institutions which exist for technical training and the graduates of these are judged a success in terms of the degree of success they attain in the particular field in which they have been trained. There are schools which lay particular stress upon the cultural values and it is in terms of these that they boast of their graduates and their achievements. There are schools who glory in their ability to give pure academic training and who turn out the great scholars of the day. But it is the glorious part of the small Christian college to turn out the men with a full rounded life, not only to efficiently pursue the particular business or occupation in which they are to be engaged, but to govern their lives and their relations to others in terms of Christian ideals and Christian principles. Can there be a finer piece of work for any institution to perform? Does it not call for the sympathetic and whole-hearted support and cooperation, not only from those who have sons and daughters, who are not looking forward to college education, but to all who are interested in the future of the world in general and the church in particular?

WHY A GIFT FROM EVERY MEMBER OF EVERY CHURCH ON EDUCATIONAL DAY

An Appeal from Some of the Students

1. Arthur Cashman

Two reasons center about every member and two about the college. Money given to the college is for a Christian cause and should be taken out of the tithe. Those who tithe should have a liberal share ready for Educational Day, as they usually do. Those who do not tithe usually give sparingly to most special offerings and could afford to give adequately at this call. Such persons are already cheating God's work out of its rightful share and should use this opportunity in making past neglect an urge to give now. We need a gift from every member for there are so many who cannot give in large amounts that we must have the many small gifts sent to Dr. Shively's office in order to make a respectable sum of the final total.

We should give to the educational offering because it is an investment that gives to your denomination large returns. Ashland College has grown because of past gifts and is depending on your offering on June 6 for another boost forward. Again there are a greater number of graduates this year by far than any year before, so you are helping to equip a college and Seminary that is attracting a greater number of the best young people in the brotherhood.

2. Eleanor Yoder

There is no question as to the possibility of every member making a gift on Educational Day. However, it may be a problem in the mind of some. In problems like this there are two things to consider: first the CAUSE and then the RESULT. The first is easily settled, for the cause is a noble one. And besides that, Ashland College is especially in need of gifts right now. As to the result, that too is apparent. Ashland College will be a better College with the aid of every member. The result of helping, however, is not only good for the College, but for the helper, for when a person gives for a good and noble cause there is no end of satisfaction in his own life; and who knows how much in the life of others.

3. Arthur Carey

What the world needs is not war, nor peace, nor more houses and lands, nor more money nor business prosperity, but what it does need is Christian religious education. Religious education is the one antidote for this sin-sick world. It will solve the peace problem; it will take care of financial matters. The world needs not more religion, but more Christianity instilled and built up in the hearts of men. An antidote for poison may be harmful if not used in the right way. A tool of a workman may spoil the product, if the workman is not taught how to rightfully use that tool. Even so Christianity may be harmful if Christians are not taught and are not educated in Christian doctrine, principles and life. Ashland College is a training school for Christian service. Its teachers are devoted to the Christian life and the teaching of Christian education in the school. On Educational Day you are asked to support this noble cause. Let us make it a one hundred per cent response for Christ and the church.

4. Helen Price

There stands a college on the hill;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.
Her welcome light is standing still;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.
In troublous times her work begun;
O'er troublous seas her course has run;
But praise the Lord for victory won;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.

From the halls of this university is ever pealing forth the melodious strains of the above song. Why do we sing it? Because, we love it and our hearts are overflowing with the enthusiastic sentiment it so nobly expresses. And our hearts are full of gratitude at the realization that those who have gone on before have made it possible that this institution might live. By means of perseverance, faith and years of hard labor this great dream has become a reality and a vote of thanks we cast for our fellow alumni, honorable professors and people of the church, who made this possible. For we students of today are reaping the bountiful harvest which comes from the sowers of yesterday. Their ideals have been realized in so far that Ashland College is strictly Christian which makes possible the best scholastic and moral results. Snobbishness and superficial social distinctions are discouraged and initiative is encouraged. It is the aim of Ashland College to encourage and develop a spirit of service, fair play, and cooperation for the common good.

Why not help to preserve these ideals with a gift on Educational Day, this coming June

"Now is the time for every good man to come to the service of his country." This sentence which is so stereotyped that it is near to being platitudinous, carries great import to every student and alumnus of Ashland College. The students have come to the front in the endowment campaign, and the Alumni can do likewise or have the alternative of seeing their credits go down in the scale of college ratings. In other words, if Ashland College is not made a standard school as far as endowment is concerned, before 1928, the credits of all graduates, past, present, and future, will be worth only one-half their face value; and the brotherhood will be faced with the task of securing its pastors from other denominational schools. No one wants to attend a school which is not able to give credit in full for all work done in its halls.

The Birmingham Convention

By O. C. Starn, Preble County, Ohio, Delegate to Birmingham

The Quadrennial Convention of The International Council of Religious Education was held at Birmingham Alabama on April 12-19, 1926. This great Convention is very worthy of mention and praise.

I. What is the International Council of Religious Education?

We are well aware of the fact that the Protestant forces of North America are divided into various denominations. For a long period of time these forces were non-cooperative and in many instances antagonistic. There gradually arose a feeling that there was a tremendous task being unperformed and which could never be fully carried out by any one denomination. This task was to give religious education its rightful place in education—to weave it into the warp and woof of life; to seek to conserve the very finest moral and spiritual values of Christianity and to make them a part of the educational experiences of our developing young life. The different denominations had their own methods for training the young but somehow this was not functioning satisfactorily. The conclusion was reached that there should be a united effort, a federation of forces, of all the Protestant denominations to cope with the task. The International Council of Religious Education, including Canada, Mexico and the United States, is this federation of forces. This does not mean that the Council is an organization that dictates what shall be done but one through which the Christian forces cooperate.

It is very interesting to note the composition of the International Council. In 1922 the International Sunday School Association and the Sunday School Council of Evangelical denominations each voted to disband and merge their combined forces into the Council. Hence it is a combination of noble aims that have been in use for many years. It has to do with the Sunday school and the whole expanding program of religious education in the home, the church and the community. It is a stable organization built upon a good foundation. It has not grown up over night nor does it consist of a motley of "wild goose" ideas of a few fanatics but has grown out of the best thoughts, observations and experiences of noble men.

The Council is thoroughly and soundly organized. Its governing body or Executive Committee is composed of about 190 members, a part of these chosen by the thirty-six cooperating denominations. This body determines policies and programs and established standards for the Church School which are voluntarily accepted by all cooperating forces. The Board of Trustees is particularly responsible for financial affairs. The International Lesson Committee composed of forty-four members selects the topics for the Sunday school including the Sunday and week-day sessions. The Committee on Education considers all matters relating to standards and educational policies and pass their recommendations on to the Executive Committee. There are different Professional Sections representing the educational groups such as Children's Work, Young People's Work, Vacation Church Schools, etc. The International Staff takes care of the administrative work of the Council. This includes the General Secretary, Editor of The Journal, Business Manager and Directors of the different departments. The Auxiliary Councils refer to the State Councils, the County Councils and in many places Local Councils. Thus we can see on what a purely democratic basis this great Council is organized. With competent persons at the helm this ship is bound to carry her cargo of usefulness to port where many shall share its benefits. It merits the hearty support of every Christian person.

II. The Place of Meeting.

The City of Birmingham is one of the beautiful and thriving cities of the Southland. It has a wonderful location. It lays in a beautiful mountain basin almost completely surrounded by the everlasting hills. There is a wealth of natural beauty which in so many instances is absent in the north. Here we are prone to be too mechanical with the arrangement of trees and shrubbery and flowers. This is largely absent in Birmingham. Instead of so many domesticated trees they have allowed the natural growth to remain in their yards and along their romantic winding boulevard drives and parks. At the time of the Convention nature was just dressing in her new spring garments. This was like getting into an enchanted garden from the cold, icy regions of the north.

Birmingham is a great steel center and is termed "Little Pittsburgh." We used the above term "the everlasting hills." We are not so sure that they will last forever. These hills are rich in iron ore. While taking a view of the city from Red Mountain we noticed the red rock which looks like the real iron. It is claimed that there is enough ore about the city that at the present rate of output of the steel mills here will be enough to last a thousand years. Mother earth has surely laid up a grand supply of iron ore in this region. One could not help but think back over the ages of the past as these rocks were in the process of formation. Evidently great geological disturbances have taken place in these mountains in the distant past as one notes the tilts and folds of the rock stratas. We could not help but remark, "O God, great is the work of thy hand."

We must say a word about the fine buildings. This city is in the process of reconstruction. The old buildings in the business sections are being replaced by modern structures. There are a number of real skyscrapers to be seen from the mountain tops. Many fine dwelling houses greatly add to the beauty of the city. Property is high. One of the churches having abandoned their old plant sold their lot for around $200,000. They paid $50,000 for a new lot and shortly after the purchase was made they were offered $200,000 for it. It takes from eight to ten thousand dollars to buy a decent dwelling house. The steel mills are the financial life of the city.

We doubt if any city has any finer church buildings from the standpoint especially of utility for Religious Education purposes. They are built for Sunday school work as well as preaching purposes. There is no direct connection between the main auditorium and the Sunday school departments. Some have separate plants. Some of the modern structures are three stories high with one department on each floor. Each department has its own assembly room with its own corps of officers. Built around this assembly room are home-like sound-proof class rooms fully equipped. The method of procedure is the very best and they are getting results. As we made hurried observations of the different classes on Sunday morning we could not help but note the contentedness of the pupils and wish our Sunday schools were thus equipped. The sooner all churches adopt these same measures in educating people religiously the better off the world will be. The Protestant churches are just realizing the fact that system in teaching religion is just as essential as material. Equipment, method and material are mutually important and this is manifested in these splendid churches of Birmingham.

No one can overlook the fine courtesy of the people of Birmingham. They made every one feel at home and were always ready to do anything they could for the comfort of their guests. Even the mayor said that if any of us get "pinched" he would likely pardon us. It made us feel sorry that as fine people as the north contains should ever have come into conflict with these fine type of people of the south. We hope that it will never occur again. A thousand people volunteered the use of their cars that on one occasion all who cared to go were shown all the main churches of the city. On another occasion every one was taken on a 35 mile tour of the city. This was greatly appreciated and enjoyed by all. Many thanks for their kindness.

(To be concluded)

IF—

- If the church is a house, visit it.
- If the church is a flock, feed it.
- If the church is a family, guard it.
- If the church is folks, love it.
- If the church is light, follow it.
- If the church is a body, regard it.
- If the church is a law, obey it.
- If the church is life, preserve it.
- If the church is truth, be ready to die for it.
- If the church is an inspiration, welcome it.
- If the church is a teacher, listen to it.
- If the church is a fountain, drink of it.
- If the church is a fold, seek refuge in it.
- For in so doing thou wilt not only save thine own soul, but be the instrument in the hands of God to have thy brethren.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Empty Seat

By Harold D. Fry

TEXT: "And Jonathan said unto David, Tomorrow is the new moon; and thou shalt be missed because Thy seat will be empty."—1 Samuel 20:18.

(Concluded from last week)

But the third place of common service, and the foundation for the other two, is prayer. Setting the example himself, Jesus told his disciples to pray without ceasing. In order that they start not out in their own strength and zeal, he warned them to tarry in Jerusalem in prayer. The Christian church in the beginning was simply a group of plain people on their knees waiting upon and expecting from God. Our Lord has not changed his plan. And the scandal of the modern church is that there are so few willing to talk with their Savior, such a pitiful number willing to praise him who died for them. The shame of this, congregation is that there are so few in our prayer meetings! We must pray. Christ prayed and redemption was provided; someone prayed and you accepted it. Another interceded and you were healed from sickness, or unseen death, or food and comfort were yours. Prayer is God's plan, and we must fit in. Away with this old worn-out excuse that you cannot. God's plan for your physical provision is that you eat, and he gives you the means and manner of so doing. God's spiritual provision for you is prayer, and either he will give you the ability, or you do not want it.

Since prayer is God's plan, let us come to an understanding that until we have so done, we will never succeed in spiritual things—our seat will be empty. Jesus said, "without me you can do nothing." If men are to be won for Christ and children brought up in safety and decency and salvation, we must follow Christ against a multitude of evils today. Temptation is horrible, sin is delirious with seeming victory, crime is beyond measure, and the Christian's place is empty. Nevertheless, the evil of this day will be surpassed, and while already according to prophecy men's hearts are failing them for fear and for looking after the things that are coming upon the earth, there are darker days ahead, and harder fights to win for Christ. John Roach Straton, man of God, tells of his boy of six years in his childish delight for stories, how that often he comes to his father's bed at dawn and slipping into bed with his father desires a story. The precious child has also come to the loving father in the darkness of the night, and the minister tells the story of one of those visits. The patter of little feet and hands feeling through the darkness awakened the man who is a light sleeper. And warm hands on his father's face told him that the baby was in some trouble and had come for help. The man threw back the covers and told the small figure to slide in. A moment of silence and a little heart that beat rapidly told of an agitated lad. He snuggled up to his father who asked him several times the trouble. Finally he asked, "Daddy, what are dreams"? The minister told him as best he could the meaning of a dream, and asked him, "Why"? "Daddy, I saw a big red thing!" Too much supper or something indigestible, had brought that awful experience upon the little fellow—a nightmare. And that big red thing he did not understand, and so to the one place of safety and comfort he had come—he came to his father! Oh, in this day when storms are impending and awful forms loom through the darkness, and the gathering shadows bring portentous signs we do not understand and cannot master—we need our heavenly Father! At his feet let us be ever found, and humbled under his mighty arm.

IV. The Accusing Condition.

It is that our place is empty. The Lord wants YOU. You and I must be dedicated before we can serve him the way we should. David, THOU, shalt be missed. Thou! thou! The Lord Jesus did not say, Peter, give me part of you. John, you only need to believe about me. Thomas, just follow my other disciples. No, no! The Savior wanted their heart's devotion. He wanted them, and he wants us. He says, If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments. Oh yes, that is it. If we love him we will pray, and testify, and give. But love demands ourselves; and we must be wholly dedicated, lest our service fall short and our place be empty. The truth was spoken in a precious way by Paul concerning the offering for the impoverished ones in Jerusalem when he said of those in Macedonia "They first gave themselves to the Lord."

There was a man who was a distinguished citizen. He had been mayor of a city, a very successful business man, and greatly beloved. Right in the midst of his splendid career he was stricken with a malady from which he never recovered and was taken away from the walks of men. He lay for four months on a bed of sickness before called home, and his pastor had many visits with him. Precious were the seasons of spiritual fellowship with this lovable and Christian man. But there was one day near to the time when he was called home, that he seemed anxious to disclose some great secret that seemed to be burdening him, and his wife with that woman's intuition, left the room to her husband and the minister. "Pastor, I have something I want to tell you. I am just burdened about it." His pastor said, "Well, my dear fellow, say on. I will hear sympathetically anything you have to say." He replied, "I know you will, and that makes it all the harder." He said, "Do you know that since I have been lying here upon this bed for these months it has come to me that I have not carried my corner for Christ." It was the expression of a practical, public business man. "I do not know that I catch your meaning. You are a member of the church. You have these children and your home is well ordered." He replied, "Yes, I am a member of the church, and the head of this fine family. But yet, pastor, I have realized in these days what I have not realized before, that there has been a lack. It has come to me that I have not carried my corner for Christ." "Well, just tell me about it."

"You know I have been in business and in public life. In business and in all business relationships I did carry my corner fully and have no regret, and no ache in my conscience for that. In the development of my own firm, if there came a time when more money was needed to invest, somehow I managed to put in my share. I never failed. In times of stress we were there far after midnight—over the books, or planning a new campaign. In public life I was loyal to my party and to my friends. I carried my corner faithfully and with some measure of success. Then I have done my best for this beautiful wife and these lovely children God has given me. I have not stinted them. Perhaps I have been too prodigal, especially with the children. Everything they wanted that I thought was at all reasonable I have given them, and the home has been well ordered. I have made all the necessary sacrifices for my family and home."

Then his face dropped, and his voice came back into that minor strain of sorrow. His chin trembled, and tears came into the eyes of that strong man as he said, "But pastor, I have not treated my Christ as I should have. I love my Savior dearly, but I am conscious of a sad neglect. I

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE GROUND OF CONFIDENCE—Rom. 8:26-30.

We are not left alone in our struggles, for the Holy Spirit assists us in our prayers and supports us in our helplessness. Furthermore, God accompanies his chosen constantly with his providential care.

TUESDAY

PROOFS OF DIVINE LOVE—Rom. 8:31-39.

The Christian has nothing to fear with the proofs of God's love before him—love so strong that nothing can intercept it or break the Christian's triumph.

SORROW FOR THE LOST—Rom. 9:1-5.

The glorious prospect of the life in Christ fills the Christ-like soul with sorrow for those who, like the Jews of Paul's day, have excluded themselves by unbelief in the Messiahship and Saviorhood of Jesus.

THURSDAY

EXCLUSION OF UNBELIEVERS JUSTIFIED—Rom. 9:6-13.

Though physical descendants of Abraham, the rejection of the Jews is justified because of their unbelief; so also the right of being sons of God is not dependent upon the accident of birth or personal merit.

FRIDAY

GOD IS JUST—Rom. 9:14-18.

God cannot be accounted arbitrary and unjust in rejecting one and accepting another because he is absolute sovereign and can bestow or withhold his favor as he wills, and the divine will has determined that the human heart must be receptive and believing to experience his grace.

SATURDAY

POTTER AND VESSEL—Rom. 9:19-29.

Man has no right to complain at the bestowals of divine grace or favors, for as the vessel is in the hands of the potter, so is man's relation to God. The Christian should submit to and obey God without question.

SUNDAY

REASON FOR REJECTION—Rom. 9:30-33.

Israel sought righteousness in its own way by means of works, and not in God's way through faith, and so was rejected. Faith is still the one and only means of securing the favor and righteousness of God.—G. S. B.

know I owe my all to him. I gave my money; I was not stingy there; but Pastor, I did not give MYSELF to him as I should have done. I allowed these other temporal interests to creep in and monopolize my time and my thought, my strength and my ambition until I excluded Christ. I have not born the faithful witnessing to him, and I fear pastor, that I shall be ashamed to meet him face to face."

What a confession! But there was no word of comfort to this man. He was sick, ready to die, and the life had been lived. His seat had been empty because he had not given himself to the Lord as he should. He had missed at the prayer meetings. His example should have been stronger and his testimony clearer. He was sympathetic and not stingy, but he did not give of himself. His seat was empty.

Thank God for the thought that when our days of service are over, when we have faithfully warned those whom we have been privileged to meet, against the pitfalls of sin and spiritual death, and pointed them to the shining heights of heaven—Thank God for the thought that we will have a place reserved for us at the marriage supper of the Lamb! How sweet it will be when we, as stewards of time, of money, of life, will all be gathered home to glory and to God, and to see each one occupying the place prepared by our Savior and our God!

But how awful if our friend, Christ, should whisper to some of us this morning, "And thou wilt be missed, because thy seat will be empty."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Uplifted Life

By G. S. Baer

OUR SCRIPTURE

Then the Spirit lifted me up, and I heard behind me the voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of Jehovah from his place. And I heard the noise of the wings of the living creatures as they touched one another, and the noise of the wheels beside them, even the noise of a great rushing. So the Spirit lifted me up, and took me away; and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit; and the hand of Jehovah was strong upon me. Then I came to them of the captivity at Tel-abib, that dwelt by the river Chebar, and to where they dwelt; and I sat there overwhelmed among them seven days.

And it came to pass at the end of seven days, that the word of Jehovah came unto me, saying, Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thy hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul. Again, when a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteous deeds which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thy hand. Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he took warning; and thou hast delivered thy soul (Ezek. 3:12-21).

OUR MEDITATION

The hand of the Lord was upon me, declared Ezekiel. It was a hand of power and of victory, as is indicated repeatedly in the Scriptures. God's hand is a strong hand and is constantly effective, affording a never-failing place of security. Ezekiel was conscious of the fact that the call of God was upon him, that a work was set before him to accomplish and that the hand of the Lord was upon him sending him forth empowered. Other men have thus felt the hand of the Lord laid upon them, have had a vision calling them to a specific mission. John the beloved disciple in his Revelation has a vision of Jesus that overcame him to the extent that he fell at his feet as one dead, and so he was prepared for the call that was about to be made. So also Peter had a vision that prepared him for the call to preach the Gospel to Cornelius, and Paul had his vision that changed his life and set him upon the greatest missionary career in the history of the Christian church. God lays his hand upon us to lead us out of a life of sin into one of righteousness out of aimlessness into commission, out of weakness into power.

Another significant phase of our Scripture is, "I have made thee a watchman." There is frequent emphasis on God's dependence upon human agency in the Scriptures. God's people are made to understand that they are responsible for the moral well-being of their fellow-men. Cain tried to evade that responsibility by asking scornfully, "Am I my brother's keeper?" And many today are trying the same thing, but in vain, no one can escape the duty. When our Scripture speaks of a watchman, it implies that there is a danger from which people are to be guarded. We may not be responsible for the existence of the danger, but we are responsible for keeping ourselves out of the way of it and for doing what we can to guard other people from it. Nor should the watchman be criticised for pointing out the dangers that threaten and urging avoidance of them, for he is in position to see them. A noted preacher of the last century, said, "The exposition of future punishment in God's Word is not to be regarded as a threat, but as a merciful declaration. If in the ocean of life over which we are bound to eternity there are rocks and shoals, it is no cruelty to chart them down; it is an eminent and prominent mercy."

And the responsibility is an urgent and strong one. God makes no impossible demands of us, but sets before us a most reasonable duty, and says if some one is lost through our neglect "his blood will I require at thy hand." We can warn the ungodly of the evil of their course and the terrible consequences of a life of sin, but our efforts may not turn them to a right life. But if the warning has been faithfully given, we have "delivered our soul"; we have discharged our responsibility and they have no one to blame but themselves. Let us suppose that a company of youths are rowing on the Niagara river above the falls unmindful of the fact that they are nearing the falls. If some one on the bank sees them and observes their danger, it is his evident duty to warn them. If he does so, and does all in his power to turn them aside and they refuse, he is free of blame, but if he fails to warn them, he is in a large degree responsible for their fate. He has not "delivered his soul." And remember that this task of warning men of the dangers and ravages of sin is not the duty of ministers only, but of all who are in vital touch with the Lord Jesus Christ. Those who have experienced the thrill of the uplifted life, cannot escape the duty, nor will they seek to do so. How great a responsibility it is, and how much it would mean—to live and act in such a way as to feel that the fate of immortal souls rested upon us! Such a responsibility may seem too great for us to bear, that we cannot measure up to such high spiritual requirements, but God will supply the needed grace.

OUR PRAYER

O Lord God, who through thy Son Jesus, hast taught us to call thee Father, help us to realize that thou hast laid thy hand upon us, that we are commissioned and thou dost wait to empower us. Help us to see the dangers that threaten thy people, and not only avoid them, but warn others and so prove ourselves faithful watchmen. May it not be said concerning any lost soul, that because of our neglect, "his blood will I require at thy hand." In his name. Amen.

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

The New Jacob

After Jacob's experience at Bethel, God's blessing and his consecration vow to God, Jacob became a new man, or, as in our day he would be called, a Christian, seeking to live a better life. He was no longer so selfish, so sharp at a bargain. He never again, to our knowledge, gained his ends by lying and deceit as in the birthright transaction. He was still shrewd, skilful, clever, but so far as the record goes, was honest. He went on his long and sometimes dangerous way till he arrived at Haran, where his Uncle Laban, brother of Rebekah, lived as a chieftain. At his first entrance into Haran he met Rachel, the daughter of Laban, and immediately fell in love with her. By a deceit possible because of the Eastern custom of weddings, whereby a bridegroom never saw his bride's face during the ceremony, he was tricked into marrying the older sister, Leah. Later, however, he married Rachel as well.

He served Laban 14 years without pay, for the privilege of having Rachel for his wife. Jacob was honest, faithful, skilled, unselfish, so that he could say to Laban after 14 years, "Thou knowest how I have served thee, and how thy cattle was with me. For ... the Lord hath blessed thee since my coming." But after the 14 years he felt that he must provide for his own future and for that of his growing family. So a bargain was made and that Jacob served six years more for wages. But by a device which Jacob had learned from his careful observation or from others, Jacob's flock increased rapidly and at last outnumbered Laban's. It is questioned by some whether Jacob's device was quite honest. But in fact Jacob brought much more to Laban than he ever received from Laban in the 20 years they lived together.

New Troubles

Jacob's brother Esau had become a wealthy chieftain, and his territory lay between Jacob and his home. As Jacob drew near Palestine, on his way to the fords of the Jordan, he sent messengers to his brother; but no answer was returned, save that Esau was coming to meet him with four hundred trained soldiers. He was exceedingly afraid and discovered no defence against such an attack. Jacob's uneasy conscience saw retribution approaching, and he made swift and shrewd arrangements.

He parted his people and animals into two bands, that one at least might be spared. He made up a great present for Esau—five generous drives, each of a different kind of animal, and sent them ahead at intervals, to be presented one by one. He betook himself to praying, and offered up one of the noblest prayers recorded in the Bible (vs. 9-12). All this carried him well into the night.

Wrestling in Prayer

This strange event (Gen. 32:24-30) is often used as a model for our prayers, and rightly if the terrible earnestness of that midnight struggle is alone considered. We are to "come boldly to the throne of grace", "with all perseverance." "If you don't want a thing, don't ask for it. Such asking is the worst mockery of your King you can insult him with."—Ruskin. We are to pray as Luther prayed in great earnestness by the bedside of the dying Melancthon for an hour and returned home, when the recovery of the reformer for his splendid later years was assured, saying to his wife, "God gave me my brother Melancthon back in answer to prayer." But with all our fervent praying we must remember that our Father is always eager to "give good things to them that ask him." "Prayer is not a teasing and a coaxing of an unwilling God."—Cuyler. "Prayer is not the conquering of God's reluctance, but the taking hold of God's willingness."—Phillips Brooks.

The Reconciliation

Jacob must have been wonderfully strengthened in spirit, though worn in body, by his midnight struggle, and his fears must have given place to a great peace. Nevertheless, he continued his wise preparations to meet Esau. He arranged his family, putting in the rear, as the safest place, those whom he loved most, Rachel and Joseph. Then he manfully went forward alone to meet his wronged brother. Seven times he bowed to the ground before Esau, as if acknowledging the superiority which he had stolen from him; but if Esau had come in anger, the sight of Jacob

How to Conduct a City School for Vacation Church School Workers

By Walter M. Howlett in "International Journal of Religious Education"

The training school meets in five divisions. The kindergarten group is divided into those experienced and inexperienced in daily vacation Bible school work. The others into inexperienced teachers and principals; then an advanced course for principals and a seminar or graduate course for those who have been in the work for a number of years. It is only by giving this seminar course that it has been possible to attract and hold those who have had a number of years experience and thus are prepared to make the largest contribution to the advance which we so earnestly desire to make in the daily vacation Bible school division of the teaching problem of the church school. There is no other field which offers as large an opportunity for experiment and possibilities of contribution in theory and practice as that of this period in the summer when we have almost unlimited time at our disposal and where we are not hampered by history or tradition.

The third period of fifty minutes is given to instruction in story telling for younger children. Our group has always been so large that it has been necessary to give this work largely as a lecture course. Where the groups are smaller, it will be possible to have more practice, require the reading of the best books and have the groups meet together to try out their work on each other and to offer criticisms. It will be possible here to review the literature offered by the various denominations as well as independent publishing concerns, and help the student-teacher to get acquainted with the ever growing sources of material and aid her in choosing the right kind of Bible stories which really will affect the life of the children.

When the teachers of the primary group are having their instruction in story telling, methods, and practice, the leaders of the juniors are receiving instruction in other expressional activities, including dramatization, play, worship, handwork and other ways of leading the children to undertake projects with definite religious value. Then the teachers of juniors change places with the leaders of the primary group.

The last half hour is given to music. It is felt again that the entire staff should have an understanding and a part in this. Thus all are required to attend. The group should again be divided into departments and the department further divided between those who will lead from the platform and those whose primary interest is in leadership from the piano.

In Small Towns

It is fully recognized that even this program cannot be carried out in small towns. Usually three days is the most ambitious training period which can be conducted under these conditions. In these instances it has been the custom to have the program substantially as above, having about six hours each day, the morning hours devoted to the more formal teaching and the afternoon hours given to expressional activities.

A Leaf Game

By Richard S. Bond

After all, the best kind of game is one that educates as well as pleases. Almost every normal boy wishes he knew more about trees, flowers, insects, stones, and other things that surround him; but somehow or other he never gets to the point where he gets the information he desires.

An excellent way to learn of trees by their leaves is by playing the leaf game a few times whenever there are enough on a hike or a picnic to make it interesting. By having girls compete with boys, or non-Scouts competing against Scouts, an added thrill can be secured.

First of all, some one who knows leaves should take a ramble through the woods and gather a number of leaves of various kinds. These should be sorted into two piles. The contestants are then lined up about fifty feet away, in two files, and the game is explained.

At the words "Get a maple-leaf. Go!" The two leaders run to their respective piles, sort rapidly until they have secured this particular leaf, and then return to the rear of their lines.

"Get an oak-leaf. Go!" starts number two of each line toward the leaves.

This is continued until each boy and each girl has secured a leaf. The holdings are then checked, and the side securing the largest number of leaves as called for wins.

A game of this kind may be varied in many ways. When there are but three or four contestants, the leaves may be divided into so many piles, and to all contestants may be simultaneously given slips of paper upon which the names of ten or twelve leaves have been written. They then rush to their proper pile and secure the leaves as rapidly as possible. Then one first getting his leaves and returning to the starting-point is declared the winner, provided he has chosen properly.

As the group becomes more proficient, the contest may be made more difficult by calling for "black oak," "white oak," "red oak," "sugar-maple," "river-birch," and other specified varieties. Soon the children will learn that the black oak has pointed tips; the white oak, rounded tips; and the principal difference between the black and the red oak, is the fact that the back of the black-oak leaf is shiny while the other is dull.

Another variation is to ask each contestant to rush to the pile of leaves and return with six "nut-leaves." This gives him a chance to choose leaves of the hazel, walnut, hickory, beech, etc. Evergreens may be included, so that the nature-lovers will soon learn to tell the pine from the spruce and the hemlock from the cedar.

An excellent opportunity is always afforded to call each contestant's particular attention to mistakes, explaining how it was that a leaf of a spicewood or an oak was chosen in place of that of a sycamore or a maple, or why a twig of fir was brought back when spruce was asked for.

Still another method which will always arouse interest is to have an adult at the head of each line. When "Maple" is called, and the two starters rush back with what they consider a maple-leaf, the leader glances at it. If correct, the second boy in line is rushed forward for an "oak" or a "birch" leaf. If the maple-leaf proves to be something else, number two in line is obliged to rush forward to secure a maple. Each leader has a list of leaves to be secured, and he sends his boys forward as rapidly as possible. The side first securing the necessary number of leaves wins.

In spring, summer, and fall flowers may be substituted occasionally for leaves. Here it

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for June 6)

Getting to Know Jesus. John 1:35-42

My Junior Boys and Girls, the lesson that we are about to talk about this time is a very important one. All of us want to know Jesus, don't we? The better we know Jesus, the better boys and girls we can be. Jesus lived a perfect life and set an example for us to follow. The better friends we are with Jesus, the more like him we will grow.

How can we get to know Jesus? Let us think about that together. How do we get to know anyone? We talk to them, don't we? We write them letters and receive letters from them. We talk to them about our problems and our pleasures. Suppose a new little girl moved into the house across the street from you, how would you get to know her? What are some of the things you would do? You would probably go over to her house and talk to her the very first chance that you had. You would talk to her a while and ask her to come to see you at your house. You would learn to know the things that she liked best and learn to do them. If she ever went away you would write letters to each other and soon you would be very good friends, I believe.

Do you know, Junior boys or girls, that you can learn to know Jesus in a very similar way to this? First, you can go to his house. Do you think of your church as Jesus' house? I think that Jesus would like it very much if you would think of your church as his house. When you think of your church in this way you will want to think of Jesus a great deal of the time while you are in his house. Don't you think that that will be a nice thing to remember? If Jesus lives in your church, you want to go there often and learn to know him.

Then there are some other things about learning to know Jesus. We said that if we were getting to know some little girl we would invite her to come to our home. We can do this with Jesus, too. We can invite him to live in our homes, can't we? Then we said that we would learn to know the things that the little girl that we were learning to know liked. Let's do that with Jesus. How can we do that? Are you wondering? We can do it just like we said before. We can talk to him. We can talk to him in our prayers. Do I hear my readers saying, "Well, Jesus can not answer us like our little friends would do." Do you think that? It seems to me that Jesus can answer you. First, he can answer you through the letter that he has had written to you. Do you know what that is? It is the Bible. When you want to know how Jesus felt about different things you can find out by reading your letter from him. The second way that he can answer you, I think, is through your thoughts. If you really want to know what Jesus wants you to do, just talk to him in prayer and then try to think of him and I believe, that he will help you do the thing that he wants you to do.

Now, we said that to know our friends well we would want to know the things that they like. Let's think together for a few minutes about the things that Jesus liked, so that we will know him better. He liked service for one thing. That word means a whole lot. Have you ever thought about it? It means doing things for others. It means being useful. Jesus liked to help people. Another thing that Jesus liked was friendliness. Some of the people that he met during his life were people whom others did not like. They were not popular. Jesus liked to be friends with these people as well as with all those others who were thought to be worthy of his friendship. Jesus liked to help others to live the right kind of lives for he gathered about him twelve apostles and taught them how to live and how to tell others the Gospel. There are many other things that we want to know in order to know Jesus, so, let's read his letter and find the things that Jesus liked.

And so let us try to know Jesus better by going to his house, by inviting him to come into our homes, by talking to him, and by listening to him when he answers and by learning the things that Jesus liked by reading the things that Jesus liked in his letter to us.

Tales of Tribal Customs. No. II

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

Blood Propitiation

Ouulo the chief was dead. A truce of war had been declared. All work and labor must cease in the gardens for three days. No one was to be allowed to dig or to plant or to cultivate the Kaffir corn. All the property of Ouulo was now to go to the eldest of his brothers during his life time. Oliess was happy in the prospect of his increased wealth and augmented number of wives. The eldest son of Ouulo according to the custom sat stoically during the whole of the mourning on a stool outside the hut, Ouulos' numerous wives now to pass into the hands of Oliess were wailing loudly. Strings of banana fiber were attached to their bodies and their customary dress, a tail of string worn behind had been blackened until only an occasional white string showed. All Ouulo's male relatives had shaved their heads. Seemingly the greatest of all the mourners was Oniet. Yet even as he sat thus in his appointed place as chief mourner on his stool outside the hut, even now he was meditating murder.

He wished to support his uncle as chief. How else could he do it without taking life? He and Oliess had never been friends. Nor would they be, mused Oniet, the son. Should his father, who had been known as Ouulo, the great drum, be supplanted by a mere elephant Oliess, while he a man of brains, as evidenced by his very name Oniet, was in existence.

Oliess was made to take a poison so insidious that his death came about without suspicion, and Ouulo's mourning was but continued for Oliess while Oniet succeeded him. But before this event took place, he realized that he must make for himself an atonement. He therefore procured for this purpose a chicken, killed it, and hanging it around his neck head up, he marched into the hut. The atonement was in his poor heathen yes complete.

But Oniet had yet to learn of that other atonement, gracious and complete, the atonement of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Not yet into his life had come the joyous revelation that "he is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world."—He became chief. For so young a man the honor was a great one, for the chieftainship was extensive. Skilfully had Oniet concealed his crime from man. But "all things are naked and open before the eyes of him with whom we have to do." Oniet's village was beautifully situated upon a mountain high above the placid Lake Albert. But like many places thus beautiful for situation, it was a focus of electrical activities. Not long after Oniet had thus assumed the duties of his chieftainship, lightning struck the hut in which he lived, bringing tremendous consternation upon the villagers for Oniet himself was stunned. Could it be that in so short a time they were to lose their third chief? Must Oniet follow so closely in death, the footsteps of Ouulo and Oliess? They began to prepare his body for burial. But, while doing so, Okeech, a little village waif, hungry by name, and hungry of heart, ran quickly to the doctor's. For in that strange far off land, they had a doctor, a missionary, who could put her healing touch upon the sick and oft relieve the pains of the suffering. Burns had often been healed and even that dread disease of yaws had disappeared under treatment. Okeech himself had been cured of ophthalmia, and his physical sight had been but the forerunner of the spiritual vision with which he had seen Jesus as might never again strike the village with fatal force. But what is the doctor doing? She is just now inserting a needle into Oniet's limp arm. And strange to say, as she pushed the medicine in, Oniet faintly moved, slowly opened his eyes, and looked around. The burial ceremonies were arrested, the rooster was released, and Oniet to this day has the reputation of having been raised from the dead. Yet he did not turn to the Lord. Little Okeech pondered all these things in his heart as he watched Oniet, drenched with the pouring rain, being carried by the doctor's orders into another hut. Yes, he was living, he had not been buried alive but he was ill from shock and exposure. Toward morning he grew rapidly worse. The busy doctor did not come again to see him until evening of the next day. Then Okeech told a sorrowful story. Oniet had commenced breathing very quickly as his little brother had once done when he had pneumonia. Okeech had wanted to call the doctor, but the chief would not permit him to do so. Instead he sent for the witch-doctor who cut a hole in Oniet's chest and took out a little piece of the lung. Oniet was suffering terribly and in spite of all that could be done for him, soon died, another victim of the terrible practice of witchcraft.

Oniet's brother, Yukwit now became chief. Nobody expected much of him. Oniet had been the brain. Yukwit was only the hair. But Yukwit gave his heart to the Lord Jesus and many villagers followed his example. One day four Christian villagers came carrying Yukwit to the doctor. He had been bitten by a puffadder, one of the poisonous snakes of that section. Death was inevitable they thought, but a cut, an insertion of permanganate crystals and a series of hot fomentations were used in saving Yukwit's life. At last the village had a Christian chief, twice saved, in body and in soul.

Thus, out of the many to whom the gospel is preached some, like Okeech and Yukwit believe. Invariably their influence tells, and through the converts won by the missionary comes a second harvest, those who are won by the life and influence of the native Christian himself. Who would not be a messenger in some needy part of the world for him who is the King of Kings? "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."

"We see more when we look up than when we look down," says a famous preacher. We can see farther when we look up than when we look down. When we are discouraged we are inclined to cast our eyes to the ground; but the longer we look the worse we feel. A glance upward dispels the feeling that makes us gloomy. Our eyes glimpse heights that have never been attained by man. The azure beckons us on to new endeavors, fills us with fresh hope, and bids us forget our troubles and go on.

My Gift

John 6:1-14

Dear Master, take the gift I bring,
 It seems so very small
 To offer thee, my Savior, King,
 Who gave thy life, thy all.
 But long ago, beside the sea,
 An eager-eyed young lad
 His loaves and fishes brought to thee
 With willing heart and glad;
 And as thy hands the gift didst take,
 It was enough to feed
 A multitude when thou didst break
 And bless it for their need.
 Thus may I have some little share
 In sending forth, I pray,
 The Bread of Life, for everywhere
 Are hungry souls today;
 Oh, take this offering of mine,
 And through it somehow show
 Thy grace and power, thy love divine,
 To those who need thee so!

—Edith I. Young.

Lord. Perhaps the doctor could do something for Oniet! It was late and the storm still raged fiercely, but dear little hungry Okeech, hungry to impart to others the blessing that had come into his own life, ran to the mission station. The doctor arose, and dressing quickly, hurried to the village where she found them already completing their burial preparations. She stooped and felt for his pulse. She examined his heart with those strange bells and tubes that Okeech had seen her use when his brother had had pneumonia. A crowd surrounded him, impatient, for the burial ceremonies should begin. They believed in the doctor's skill, but could she bring him back from the dead? A large red rooster had just been procured and they were impatiently waiting to rush three times around the demolished walls of the smouldering hut (carrying with them the red rooster) that lightning

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

BEDFORD COUNTY CIRCUIT, PENNSYLVANIA

Since the last quarterly report for the Bedford County, Pennsylvania, Circuit was sent in January, another news letter is a month overdue. We rejoice in the Lord that there are definite gains to report.

New Enterprise

The New Enterprise congregation planned to hold its evangelistic meeting in February, but was unable to proceed owing to the illness of the writer with quinsy. The meeting was begun on the second Sunday in March and closed three weeks later on Easter Sunday morning with a confirmation service when ten were received into the fellowship of the church and her Head.

The small but faithful membership here enjoyed splendid cooperation from members of other churches living in the community. This help not only increased our attendance considerably, but also added greatly to the inspiration of the song services. The Sunday school workers rallied to the challenge, and through personal work, nine boys from the junior and intermediate classes and one adult made the good confession.

It was an impressive service on Easter Sunday morning, after baptismal services on Saturday. Three pairs of brothers, from as many Brethren homes, knelt together for confirmation. Then three brothers and the father from another home knelt, and all covenanted to follow the leading of the Holy Spirit. Thus, again was the evangelizing possibilities of the Sunday school attested, and the workers encouraged to press onward.

On Sunday evening, April 2, the spring Communion was held, with forty-two surrounding the tables. Every newly enlisted member participated in the service, to the inspiration of old and young alike. Sickness prevented a number of our old faithful members from attending.

Yellow Creek

No special services have been held in the Yellow Creek congregation since our last report. The attendance at the Sunday school and regular services of worship has been sustained and more efficient organization has been effected. The membership responded loyally to an annual business meeting, and adopted some constructive plans.

The date for the spring Communion was decided, June 13. It is hoped that several of the young people of the church who are engaged in school activities the greater part of the year will be able to attend this service, as well as the resident membership.

Raystown

The Raystown group, although numbering little more than half a hundred, is steadily marching on with its maintenance of an active Woman's Missionary Society, Sunday School, Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, and Senior Christian Endeavor Society.

The concerted manner in which these several organizations are advancing the church as a whole was demonstrated on the first Sunday in March. Then a special service was held to round up funds to be applied on the church debt. After personal subscriptions amounting to two hundred dollars had been given, the various organizations of the church gave one hundred seventy-five dollars! Of this amount, the W. M. S. contributed $114; the S. M. M. $15; the C. E. $8, the Young Peoples Sunday school class $20, the Adult class $5, and the Sunday school as a whole $15. With a balance of $335 in the special treasury from the sale of a formerly used church property, the debt of one thousand sixty dollars was cut down to three hundred fifty dollars.

It was a great victory, and a day of great thanksgiving and rejoicing, for this membership is composed of families who toil for their livelihood. The total reported as "raised" was not merely pledged, but paid over, and was at once applied on a note coming due. The church, during the year, has met each general call of the brotherhood generously, and its current expenses regularly.

The Sunday school is holding quarterly Workers' Councils, the W. M. S. and S. M. M. are planning a Mothers' and Daughters' Service for next month, and the C. E., just recently reorganized, is reaching out for more efficient methods and equipment.

Conclusion

In beginning our second year's work on this circuit with this month, the writer has many reasons to be optimistic about the outlook for the next year. This optimism, of course, is based principally upon the activities and attitude of the churches during the past year. When the followers of the Lord have a "mind to work," a disposition to be "Brethren" indeed, and are faithful stewards, great things can be accomplished through him working in and through us! Pray for this section of the Master's vineyard.

WM. A. GEARHART,
Home Mission Secretary.

BETHEL CHURCH, MULVANE, KANSAS

Brethren, we are not dead out here, we are in the fight to the finish for victory over Satan. This is no time to sleep at Bethel. This is a trying year for this church. We may have to cast out some things to lighten the burden. We may have to pull down the sail and cast anchor and wish for the day. But we will stay till the storm breaks.

The church gave us a unanimous call to serve them another year beginning September 1, 1926. This will keep us here for fifteen months.

Our attendance has been below normal, owing to muddy roads. We have had two good Sundays since March first. On one of these we had 75 and on the other, last Sunday, May 2, we had 70 out for morning service. Then it rained all afternoon and we had no evening service. I think the attendance is remarkable considering our handicap.

We have been here a year next Sunday. There was one added to the church. We have had no deaths during the year, so we have had a net gain of one. We had a bank failure to contend with, and it hurt us some; but now we must face the spiritual effect of it.

We have been treated fine by these good people, and we believe they appreciate our efforts. The last Sunday in April the sisters gave us an egg "shower," not of the ancient variety, nor one of the kind calculated to get rid of a preacher, but a crate full of fresh eggs.

We have preached two funerals, assisted at two and baptized one during the year. Our work is nicely organized and is going along very nicely.

Pray for us at Bethel.

H. W. ANDERSON.

ASHLAND COLLEGE FIRST BIG GIFT

Our college has long looked forward to the day when it would be remembered by members of the Brethren church in good substantial gifts, the same as other institutions of learning are receiving. We are encouraged to think that the time has now come and we are looking forward for bigger things and a greater future for our college.

No Academic School is Self Supporting

It is impossible for any College of academic standing to be self supporting. If sufficient tuition were charged to maintain a college, it would be practically impossible for the great mass of students to attend on account of the cost. State institutions are largely supported by the tax money of the State and most every college of any standing is heavily endowed. Ashland College is one of the five colleges in the State of Ohio, out of thirty-five, that has less than $500,000.00 endowment.

The Purpose of this Campaign

The object of the present MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN is to give our college an endowment of $500,000.00, which will entitle it to first rank among the colleges of our country and make it a standardized school of learning and give it general recognition among the colleges of America.

The First Big Gift of $20,000.00

This gift comes from the estate of Jesse Eyeman, who lived near Washington Court House, Ohio. Brother Eyeman who died a little over two years ago, in his will made this gift to Ashland College. The money being placed under a trustee-ship and supervised by the Court. It was only recently that legal matters were cleared up and the college given unquestionable right to the gift. The heirs tried to have the will dis-annulled and it was only through the tireless and able efforts of Attorney Orion E. Bowman of Dayton, Ohio, that the will was sustained by the Court.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due

Your Endowment Secretary takes no credit for this gift. Brother Eyeman was visited by many of our Brethren in the interest of the church and to no one individual is this gift due. To Brother Orion E. Bowman more than any other the church is indebted, for his legal ability and sacrificing efforts to sustain the will, which the Court did. Brother Bowman at his own expense made repeated visits, sacrificing his own practice for days, gave his efforts unstintedly in the interests of the Brethren church. At one of our recent meetings of the Board of Trustees, he presented his bill for legal fees, which amounted to over $500.00, marked paid and cancelled. GOD GIVE US MORE LAYMEN OF LIKE SPIRIT, who make the Kingdom first in their lives and business.

The Campaign is on and we are off, with a Good Start

As this gift is an endowment and only recently received, which has been since the present campaign was launched, it will be credited to the present MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT. Which gives us a good start and lots of encouragement.

Something New to Watch

In previous campaigns we have used a thermometer to show the goal and the process made from time to time toward it. To have something a little different, we shall use during this campaign A DIAL, on which the hand will indicate the progress made. When the hand shall have made the circuit we will have reached the $200,000.00 mark. THIS CAMPAIGN MUST GO OVER. WE CAN PUT IT ACROSS AND WE WILL.

Watch the Endowment page in the Evangelist and pray for its success.

W. S. BELL, Endowment Secretary.

SECOND BRETHREN SERVICE STATION Los Angeles, California

Another dividend has been declared for this station, and is as follows: Since January 1st we have received into the church by baptism 22 and by letter 9. Also 17 are on the waiting list, having made their confession and expect to be baptised soon.

This promises to be another excellent year for the Second Brethren church, and why not? We are living on the mountain top of God's sunshine and feasting on everything in God's Word from milk to the choicest meats.

Dr. Leon Tucker, one of America's leading Bible teachers, and his wonderful troupe of Gospel Messengers recently gave us a wonderful week of songs, music on a dozen different instruments, and highly profitable studies in the Word.

If there should happen to be a modernist preacher in our brotherhood he better stay away from Tucker. He eats them alive.—He defends every word in the Book.

Last week the First church also had the pleasure and profit of a week's visit from Dr. Tucker and his troupe.

In a few weeks we will begin our evangelistic campaign with Dr. Chas. Ashman as the preacher. I know what Ashman can do. I know what Cobb can do. I know what the Second Brethren people can do. You can expect to hear more from us later. What's the matter with some other church giving us a challenge?

J. C. McBRIDE.

800 W. 48th Street.

NEW TROY, MICHIGAN

Our evangelistic campaign began April 13 and continued until April 29, with Rev. C. C. Grisso as evangelist. The meeting was not up to our expectations, yet due to no fault of the evangelist. He preached the Word with power and in song. But the people did not turn out to the meetings to hear him. As usual some were "too tired," and the weather was "not suitable." "Excuses." There is just one other small church of Methodist Episcopal denomination in this place, besides our own. Of course the school or M. E. church had some kind of entertainment for young people nearly every evening that kept them away; yet our meeting was a success. Ten souls accepted Christ as their Savior. Two were heads of families and eight were of our Sunday school scholars, the hope of the church. So we feel the meeting was a great success.

There was much good done, as some of the members had grown cold and indifferent, but all seem to have taken on new life, for which we praise the Lord.

MRS. IDA PHILLIPS.

A FORTNIGHT AT WEST KITTANNING

How quickly these days passed. Regarding our stay at Kittanning, we can truly say "Tempus fugit." To be yoked up with Christian people in a great work certainly makes one oblivious to the flight of time. However, history is replete with campaigns launched and decisive victories won in less time than two weeks. Dr. Witter will report results.

It was truly a spiritual tonic to work with Dr. Witter and his good wife and the groups of earnest Christians at West Kittanning. Dr. Witter and his wife are in love with their work. They are certainly doing a fine piece of work for the Lord. I esteem it a great privilege to work with a man like Dr. Witter in an evangelistic effort.

West Kittanning is a field pregnant with great possibilities which shall never be realized through a half-time ministry. I am persuaded that the work is handicapped by "scattering" of effort.

It seems to me that we ought to make it possible for Dr. Witter to give his full time to the work at West Kittanning.

I have a feeling that the good Brethren at West Kittanning will purchase a parsonage in the near future. This would be a splendid thing to do.

We were royally entertained in the home of Brother and Sister Ralph Hooks. Thanks to these good people for their kind hospitality.

The West Kittanning people gave further proof of their appreciation by giving a substantial purse to the evangelist for his effort. May God richly bless Dr. Witter, his good wife and the earnest Christian people at West Kittanning.

Pittsburgh and the Endowment

We wish to congratulate the members of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College. You evidenced wisdom in selecting a man of Dr.

Bell's ability to represent the interests of the College in this important campaign. The doctor knows his line. His heart and soul are in the work. With the cooperation of the brotherhood success is assured.

Pardon the egotism, but we do not believe that you made a mistake in selecting the Pittsburgh church in which to open the campaign. The generous response of the Pittsburgh people is substantial proof of her interest in our beloved College. We are glad to be the pastor of a church that acquitted herself so magnificently in the face of so great a challenge.

Thanks for your confidence, also for the honor conferred—giving to the Pittsburgh church priority in the launching of the endowment campaign. Our prayer is that health and wisdom may be given to Dr. Bell that this campaign may be a decisive victory.

CAMDEN, OHIO

It was our pleasure to spend Mother's Day in the Camden church. Elder N. V. Beery has been the pastor of this church since November 1, 1925. At the morning service the pastor called for an offering to lift the church debt of $600, and the amount of $700 was raised. At the close of the service two more received into the church membership. In the evening communion service was held and was well attended. The Camden church is reviving and its prospects are very promising.

The railroad accident record of 1924 brings out the fact that the railroads are twice as safe now as they were ten years ago before organized safety work was begun. The Union Pacific System was awarded a gold medal for the best accident prevention record among American railroads in 1924, and the Chicago Great Western Railroad was awarded a silver medal for second place in a like record.

THE GIFT THAT JESUS WANTS

A missionary was preaching to the Maori tribe of New Zealanders, telling them of the offerings of Christ for them.

Then stood forth a plumed and painted chief, the scarred warrior of many fights, and as his lips quivered, he spoke:

"And did the Son of the Highest suffer this for us men? Then chief would like offer him some poor return for his great love. Would the Son of God like to accept the chief's hunting dog? Swift of foot, and keen of scent, the tribe has not such another and he has been my friend."

But the missionary told him that the Son had no need of such gifts. Thinking he had mistaken the gift, he resumed:

"Yet, perhaps he would accept my well-aimed rifle. Unerring of aim the chief can not replace it."

"No, not that."

For a moment the chief paused; then, as a new thought struck him, suddenly despoiled himself of his striped blanket, he cried with childlike earnestness: "Perhaps he who had nowhere to lay his head will yet accept the chief's blanket."

Touched by love's persistency, the missionary tried to explain to him the real nature of the Son of God; that it was not gifts, but men's hearts he yearned for.

For a moment a cloud of grief darkened the rough features of the old chief; then, as the true nature of the Son of God slowly dawned upon him, laying aside his blanket and rifle, he clasped his hands, and looking up into the blue sky, his face beaming with joy, he exclaimed:

"Perhaps the Son of the Blessed One will deign to accept the poor old chief himself?"

might be well to start the entire group simultaneously, each with a list of ten or twelve common flowers growing in the vicinity. As soon as any one finds these flowers, he returns to the starter. Prizes may be awarded the winners if desired.

When there is a lagging of interest at a picnic, the flower game will be a welcome one. Such simple flowers as dandelions, white daisies, black-eyed Susans, blue violets, white violets, white clover, red clover, and snow-on-the-mountains may be listed. With these, as the children become more efficient, Queen Anne's lace, Indian Healli, and other flowers that are not so well known may be included.

seemed to bring back the happier period of their innocent boyhood. Impetuously the injured brother ran to meet him, and in an eager embrace assured him of forgiveness. Esau even offered generously to return Jacob's present, but was prevailed upon to keep it. He urged Jacob to accept an armed escort, but this was firmly refused, perhaps with a lingering suspicion of his brother, but more likely because Jacob now felt God to be sufficient protection.

A Lesson in Reconciliation

Our lesson also illustrates the great truth that, in spite of human folly and sin, there is much of good in all men on which to build genuine reconciliations. Aim to discover the best qualities of your personal enemies, if you have any. Seek to love them, in obedience to Christ. Thus employers and employees should seek a close acquaintance with one another. Thus nations should try to learn the fine qualities of other nations, and should eagerly seize on every opportunity to help other countries in any time of special trial. Esaus and Jacobs need only to see each other as they are, and they will rush into each other's arms. The spirit of Christ, the Prince of Peace, can alone reconcile man to his brother, and "peace on earth" will come only as the Christian spirit is extended among men.

Hiding His Talent

Spurgeon once related the following incident. A negro had become convinced through hearing an address by a missionary, that it was his duty to give a tenth of his increase to the Lord. So he divided his fields into ten parts and planted corn, potatoes, etc., in one-tenth for the Lord but took no further care of it. When people passed by they usually expressed surprise that nine-tenths of the field was in perfect condition and one-tenth entirely neglected. Then Zachariah was wont to explain, "That is the Lord's part."

So, said Spurgeon, many do. Their own affairs are attended to with scrupulous care, their whole being is forced into action therein, but in the work of the Lord they are lukewarm and do as Zachariah did with his field. How is the Lord's tenth prospering in your church?

EDUCATIONAL DAY OFFERING

Sunday June 6, 1926

JUST REMEMBER THAT

The problems of Christian Education are as pressing today as ever.

The Christian religion needs trained Leaders as much as ever.

There are no other trustworthy agencies for this purpose but the denominational Christian colleges.

Ashland has this one mission, viz., to emphasize Christianity in Education, to recognize it as the foundation of all learning, and to train ministers for the Church.

The endowment Campaign is now on but it has just started and will take at least two years to finish.

Meanwhile, the College has its usual needs. Then there are those who can not give to the support of the College other than through the Educational Day offering.

KEEP IT GOING WHILE ITS GROWING

The condition of Ashland College never showed itself more worthy

A Lofty Note on Race Betterment

The problem of race betterment was a subject for consideration of the National Conference of Social Work held at Cleveland, Ohio, where 5,000 representatives of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish social welfare agencies were assembled. A lofty note was sounded by Dr. John A. Ryan of Washington, D. C., when he gave a ringing criticism of the advocacy of birth control and certain wild ideas in the field of eugenics. His criticism was of those who approach the problem from a purely biological point of view, and claim that nine-tenths of crime, insanity and sickness could be eliminated within four generations if those who are mentally and physically under normal were denied the right of marriage, and otherwise subjected to devices to prevent parenthood. He said:

"No social worker who gives due recognition to the spiritual element can approve these brutal proposals. Even if we assume that it is possible to identify all persons whose offspring would be a social liability rather than a social asset, the proposed means of forbidding them an opportunity of marriage and parenthood are immoral.

"A considerable immediate gain would come to society if all the insane, all the hopelessly crippled, all the irredeemable criminals, and all the incurably infirm were put to death. For two reasons this remedy finds few if any advocates.

"The first reason is that it would violate the right to live which these afflicted groups possess in common with their more fortunate fellow beings.

"In the second place, there is grave reason to fear that the disregard of human sympathy involved in this wholesale killing for a social end would bring about a continuous decline in human sympathy and in the sense of human values generally. Human society would revert to the practice of the jungle."

Both of these objections can be urged against certain radical measures of the eugenists, insisted Dr. Ryan. And his objections are valid and unanswerable. Any theory of race improvement that ignores these considerations and fails to take into account the sacredness of personality, the fact that man is not a mere brute, that he is a spiritual being, is too unchristian to be defensible and too impracticable to ever get us anywhere. Undoubtedly there is much room for improvement of the right sort. But that sort does not run in the line of extermination of the weaker and less fortunate, but turns towards improvement through instruction, the correctives and preventives of medical science, the elimination of social and industrial hindrances, and often through conversion and wholesome thinking and living. There can be set no standard of physical fitness to which an individual must measure up in order to be entitled to the right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and they who advocate it are harking back to the ideals of savagery.

Dr. Ryan continues:

"The magical circle of fitness can be contracted more and more until it includes only the higher group among the Nordics, or the members of Class A of the army intelligence tests.

"Once give up the spiritual element in man and his essential sacredness and you cannot find a logical place to stop in your subordination and subjection of the supposedly less desirable members of society to the supposed welfare of society as a whole."

Birth control was criticised as also ignoring the spiritual factor in man. Those who plead for a "smaller quantity of children, but a better quality" are thinking of quality only in material terms. Doubtless he would not deny that it is certainly in harmony with Christian thought to insist that parents shall be impressed with their responsibility for the proper care and training of the children whom they bring into the world. They dare not be insensible to the health of their offspring, and those who stand in places of instruction and influence may properly insist on young people living clean lives and thinking pure thought because they have before them the high and sacred privilege of parenthood with its possibilities of bestowal of a heritage of strength and honor or one of weakness and disgrace. If the great laws of life were reverently but plainly taught to children by parents and other teachers who may find proper opportunity, it would undoubtedly have a far-reaching influence upon the quality of life of our young people, and so upon their fitness for parenthood, and there would be more proper caution exercised in the choosing of life companions. "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" applies not merely to theological items of faith but to faith in and regard for laws of health and of heredity. No young person has a right to bring to the one to whom he or she gives troth other than a clean body and a pure mind. Such considerations are fundamental and are in harmony with the spiritual conception of man and the laws of life. But those who think of quality merely in terms of the physical and are unmindful of the moral, or who imagine that the physical should be the determining factor in deciding fitness without regard to the moral are looking upon man merely as an animal with the most perfect animal as their ideal.

If we are to improve the quality of our race we must take into account the moral and spiritual elements as well as the physical. And with that view of the problem, we must look upon such superficial and materialistic suggestions as birth control as being both vicious and unsound. Mr. Ryan said, speaking of birth control:

"It cannot include moral qualities. In all the essentials of character children in artificially restricted families are very liable to be of inferior quality, growing up in an environment which fosters selfishness, laziness, flabbiness of will and inefficiency of intellect.

"They do not have the capacity to overcome obstacles and to endure the unpleasant things of life. They lack the power to do without, lacking which no person is able to achieve anything but mediocrity."

Without the consideration of man's moral and spiritual faculties, no sound policy for the improvement of the stock of the race can be formulated. He cannot be permanently improved by an emphasis on physical characteristics alone, for while we theoretically divide man into physical, mental and spiritual and speak of him in these three phases of his being, yet we know that this is a mere devise of language to serve our convenience, and that all these phases or manifestations of man's life are one being, that man is a unity. It is therefore folly to talk of bettering man's physical condition in a real and permanent way without being concerned about his spiritual well-being. Any one who gives even a casual glance at the work of Jesus can see that he recognized that vital principle. First he forgave the sin of the man borne of four and then healed him of his affliction. A healthy body without a pure mind and soul would be of little permanent value. The healing mission of the church is divinely joined with the strengthening of faith and the forgiveness of sins, as James clearly sets forth in the fifth chapter of his epistle. And that policy is not one arbitrarily set forth, but is determined by the very constitution of things; it is according to the laws of him who created both soul and body. It is not according to the will of God that man's body should be racked with pain and filled with disease and infirmities, but these follow naturally in the wake of sin, but it is foolish to think to rid ourselves of the former while we are indifferent or unconcerned about the latter. Social work surely comes within the province of the church's task, but social work of permanent value cannot be divorced from religion.

"Humanity's Hope"

President Coolidge in his Memorial Day address at the great amphitheater in the Arlington National Cemetery echoed "humanity's hope for disarmament and peace." He bespoke for America the hope that the Geneva disarmament conference should achieve some "practical results." The President said:

"We believe that other nations ought to join with us in laying aside their suspicions and hatreds sufficiently to agree among themselves upon methods of mutual relief from the necessity of the maintenance of great land and sea forces.

"This cannot be done if we constantly have in mind the resort to war for the redress of wrongs and the enforcement of rights."

He shied at the league as solely an old world instrument and expressed America's desire to exercise patience and sympathy toward Europe in the settlement of her problems, but said,

"But we cannot fail to assert our conviction that they are in great need of further limitation of armaments and our determination to lend them every assistance in the solution of their problems.

"We have entered the conference with the utmost good faith on our part and in the sincere belief that it represents the utmost good faith on their part.

"We want to see the problems that are there presented stripped of all technicalities and met and solved in a way that will secure practical results.

"We stand ready to give our support to every effort that is made in that direction."

Mr. Coolidge did not sidestep the world court issue notwithstanding the fact that three world court senators have been rejected by the voters in the primaries, but came out boldly in its defense as "a method of the adjustment of international differences in accordance with our treaty rights and under the generally accepted rules of international law." But in this connection the President emphasized the fact that the sentiment of the people themselves will dominate whatever machinery may be set up for the promotion of peace, and that on the spirit they possess will depend the degree of peace we shall enjoy. He said:

"In spite of all the treaties we may make and all the tribunals we may establish, unless we maintain a public opinion devoted to peace we cannot escape the ravages of war.

"A determination to do right will be more effective than all our treaties and courts, all our armies and fleets.

"A peaceful people will have peace, but a warlike people cannot escape war."

Those are great sentences and should be broadcast to every home and find lodgment in every heart. Those great metropolitan dailies and prominent politicians and office holders who have set themselves with grim determination against the passing of the old discredited ideals of selfish nationalism, arrogance and grasping imperialism ought to be rebuked by these lofty sentiments.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Have you ever helped to salvage a human wreck? Brother Porte in his Tract Corner asserts that it pays and points out a way in which all can help in the work.

Brother R. D. Barnard, moderator of the Ohio Conference announces the Ohio ministers' retreat to be held at Ashland, June 10 and 11. Ministers can come for the Commencement exercises and stay for the Ministers' Discussions following. This should prove a very profitable and friendship-cementing occasion.

President Edwin E. Jacobs gives us another installment of interesting news items from the College. He informs us that Dr. Bell will have something interesting to announce concerning the endowment campaign at an early date. So great an undertaking merits your continued interest and prayer.

The program for the Thirty-ninth annual conference of the Maryland-Virginia churches is published in this issue. It is well planned to give both inspiration and to care for the business interests of the district and should receive the hearty cooperation of every church of the district. The conference is to be held at Roanoke, Virginia, June 15 to 17.

We hope our Junior Endeavorers, and young readers who are not members of any society are following Miss Haun regularly in her fascinating stories on the Junior topics. They are also worthy reading by older folks, especially those who are interested in telling stories to children.

We call the attention of the W. M. S. to the June Prayer Calendar, supplied by the Prayer Band Secretary, Mrs. W. O. Nish, of Massillon, Ohio. These prayer calendars have been appearing regularly each month in the "Woman's Outlook", but circumstances preventing this month, use is made of the Evangelist pages. We are glad to give the ladies space, and welcome them at any time.

Brother E. M. Riddle favors our Endeavorers with some most interesting and helpful messages which he secured for a program rendered in his Endeavor society at Bryan, Ohio. We are glad to give the Endeavorers this extra space, and hope they will appreciate it to the extent of giving us a gist of helpful messages and interesting events from various societies from time to time.

Dr. C. F. Yoder gives us a most interesting letter this week concerning the medical situation in the Argentine, and sets forth the need of, and the move on foot to secure, a union evangelical hospital. Mr. Perez, mentioned in his letter, is an interesting personality and his conversion promises to be an asset to the mission cause. Your prayers will help him to show his conversion genuine and to prove faithful in the midst of persecution.

Brother C. R. Koontz, pastor of the church at Carleton, Nebraska, gives us a faithful record of events during the past nine months in his parish, and they have evidently been busy months. The work has been registering progress right along, evidences of which are shown in both physical improvements and in spiritual and numerical growth. Fourteen were added to the church during the pre-Easter services. Such interesting epistles are worth reading and we hope Brother Koontz will favor us more frequently.

Our correspondent from the Pittsburgh church writes with characteristic enthusiasm and loyalty to the local work, and it seems that the Pittsburgh Brethren are in the grip of such enthusiasm, which explains in no small degree the progress the church is realizing. Possibly they have caught the spirit from their eloquent and enthusiastic pastor, who has the full confidence of his people. This church speaks with justifiable pride of the splendid start it gave to the college endowment campaign, of which Dr. Bell is the director.

The Hoosier Brethren will find the Shishewana conference program in this issue, and in view of the feast of good things that it promises there ought to be a very large attendance. The outstanding feature of the program is the series of lectures by Dean J. Allen Miller. Dr. Martin Shively is also one of the out-of-the-district speakers, and is scheduled for two lectures. The date of the conference is July 11 to 25.

You can preserve meats in an ice-box, but not religion; it keeps better in the sunshine.

Christ forgave his enemies, but it keeps the average Christian busy forgiving his friends.

It is a real compliment to a minister to have it said of him that he is identically the same man in the pulpit and in private conversation.

The better a man knows God, the better he will understand his fellowmen and the greater will be his influence among them.

The measure of life is not in months and years, but in how much of abiding worth we are able to crowd into it.

GENERAL ARTICLES

"He Knew What Was in Man"

By A. E. Thomas

This striking statement from the Scripture recorded by St. John sets us to thinking. Perhaps the most interesting thought that attracts us is this. If Christ knew men, how did he act under this terrible burden of knowledge? This is a vital question, for we realize that most of us walk through life more or less in disguise. Who would care to know the intimate secrets of the lives that most closely touch our own?

To pry deeply into each other's lives would be unquestionably to find something that would cause us to wonder whether our friends would still be friends if our whole heart were laid bare. Would love survive the absolute revelation of all that makes up our lives? Let us think over our lives. They are restless, sometimes driven to distraction, because of its petty sins which from time to time have stained our hearts. Realizing then that Christ did know all about men, knew them in every fibre of their being, also conscious that he knows all about us today, let us pause and see how did Christ act under this knowledge of man.

It delights my heart to know that he who knows all about us, in life and among men, gave to us the comforting thought that he who knows us best, knows thoroughly, gives us three great notes—Love, sympathy and faith. He who knew all men, had love for them, sympathy for them, and faith in them. Love sympathy and faith are connected with full knowledge of men.

See for a moment our Lord's attitude toward his disciples. He knew them all. There was Judas, who had three years of constant companionship with him. He knew what was in the heart of this one who would betray him. There was never a word of harshness. When he was dismissed from discipleship, it was the verdict of outraged love that still loves him in spite of it. Take Peter, that impulsive yet wonderful man. Christ knew his weakness but yet in spite of his denials the Lord loved Peter and molded him into the great and mighty man of Pentecost. So with all the disciples, in spite of their errors, their mistakes, their slowness of thought, he loved them with a love that was mightier than death. Christ saw their virtues as well as their vices. He saw not certain aspects of man but the whole man as he was, and as he might be when the Grace of God became really effective in his life.

He who knew men had love for them. That leads me to wonder whether or not the harsh verdicts we pass upon each other is not due to a lack of knowledge. There is not a single person that we come in contact with but what is a whole lot better than we suppose him to be, as we should readily see if we knew him better. But the tragedy is that we do not know him and we cannot refrain from speaking of the uncomplimentary things we think we know. We seem to delight in mocking his peculiar traits of character. Having discovered the worst in him we love to parade it to each other. Human nature is full of faults, but we ask, Is it a worthy thing to discover and parade them before the world? Christ who knew all that was in man never failed to love all men. He who saw men most completely loved man most perfectly. Better knowledge of each other would mean more love for each other. There is one remedy for our unwarranted fault-finding of each other, and that is a wider knowledge of humanity. And we should be inspired to this end by remembering that the Savior, who knew the worst was never blind to the best and ever judged men by the best rather than the worst.

Second, note his sympathy. Consider how Jesus acted towards the evil people. Let us note it well. He knew what was in them, and he had sympathy for them, more than for the so-called good people who were cold and bitter in attitude. The unsympathetic Pharisees elicited severe condemnation from his lips because they had contempt for humanity. To see no good in men, to hate them, to see in them no capability for good, to spurn them, to loathe them, that to Jesus was the sin of all sins. And he rebuked those who possessed that attitude. But his attitude toward the despised was that of sympathy. Over the city of Jerusalem, hostile to him, he shed tears, his great loving heart went out for them because he saw them scattered as sheep without a shepherd. The great desire of his heart was to gather them, to protect them, from the enemy of man. To the dying thief on the cross when he cried unto him to be remembered, he uttered no word of criticism, but only words of sympathy—"Today shalt thou be with me in paradise." And thus it has ever been. Men under the crust of terrible debasement have found in Jesus a great fountain of pity. Dear reader, if there is anything we need today, it is that we may have the eyes of Jesus to see in the worst wretch that ever walked the streets something worth saving. If we should get this vision, we would never grow weary, we would never tire, we would never lose heart, we would keep ever fresh in our pursuits after the lost.

We need not only eyes to see but a great loving heart that believes that in the worst there is a throne, a song, an anthem. All around us these unfortunates are. They need to see Jesus as the one who can untie the knots and straighten out the tangled threads. He can. He will. God give us knowledge of men and then we will have sympathy for them.

Again, Jesus knew humanity as a whole, and the result of his knowledge was faith in man. He was despised and rejected of men, yet he had faith in man. He knew more about the baseness of the hearts of men than anyone else, yet he never lost faith in the possibility of transformation into beauty and perfection when once the grace of God had taken possession of him. He knew what afterwards he inspired one of his own to write—

"Down in the human heart crushed by the tempter, Feelings lie buried that Grace can restore."

His life is the story of betrayal, the scorn of debased man, if anything could cause the faith he had in man to waver, it was the terrible tragedy of Calvary. But Christ died full of hope that out of this terrible scene men would rise to proclaim his gospel of redemption and of grace. And while debased, unregenerated humanity still shows defiance to him, his faith in man has been justified in the lives of myriads of people. It was justified in the life of that swearing, drunken sailor, whose profanity made his neighbors shudder and was vile and wretched, but by faith he saw the stream that flows from Calvary and was wondrously saved.

His name was John Bunyan. Christ's faith in man was justified in the life of that man in England who was helping to sell beer in his brother's saloon, who after proclaiming his faith in the risen Christ became the mighty preacher, George Whitefield. Christ's faith in man was justified when all the blood-washed saints in our churches in all the lands began singing his praises. Thank God for the faith our Lord has in humanity! Some one has said, To know all, is to forgive all. Imperfect knowledge means imperfect understanding.

What a wonderful thought this is, Christ has faith in me. Christ has faith in all. He knows our lives, our temptations, our difficulties. He knows us, loves us, sympathizes with us and greatest of all, has faith in us.

I just wonder how far short we come each day with its added responsibility and temptation! But in the midst of all our failures it is for us not to give up, but to keep on trying, for he our Master has faith in us. And if Christ has faith in humanity, then he will judge us rightly.

In conclusion then let us resolve as his children that if Christ who knew the worst of men found in the worst of men something that was worthy, something that was lovable, may we not among ourselves resolve that we shall reserve our judgments of others and try to see the best, and like as Christ exercises patience with us, we too shall be patient with each other until we all shall meet him and through his marvellous Grace awake in his likeness.

May God grant it, is our prayer.

Experiences in Egypt

By Herbert H. Tay

One of the most impressive "experiences" which one has in Egypt, is the first sight of the land. To awake one morning, and go on deck, just as the sun is rising, and find oneself in the harbor of Alexandria, surrounded by the life and civilization of Egypt, makes an impression which one can realize only by experience. To land in a European country after the trip across the Atlantic, has its thrills. But there the people are only different, in that they speak a different language. They have many of the same customs. They wear the same style of clothes. The buildings are much the same. They have the same religion. But when one lands in Egypt, everything is different. The people are dark skinned. They have a peculiar style of dress. Their language is of an entirely different type than any European language. Their religion is different, and most of the native buildings are different. To look out over a city of dome-roofed houses, with scores of minarets piercing the sky—to see clumps of stately palm trees scattered here and there, makes one think of the Arabian Nights tales—of Aladdin, of Sinbad, and of Ali Babi—and these tales which fascinated us in our childhood, live anew in our memories, as we see the natural setting of the stories. Yes, simply to land in Egypt is an "experience" long to be remembered.

Within the cities of Alexandria and Cairo we did see a great deal of European and American civilization. However, the native life was there also, and these cities which are the largest in Africa, are the meeting place of European and Arabian civilization. We were not particularly interested in the cities, for they partook too much of the character of European cities. Our chief interest was in the country life of the people, for we knew that there we would see native life, where it was least influenced by outside civilization. We had an excellent opportunity to observe country life, while in Cairo. Two young men were there, who had graduated in our class in the Seminary. They had gone to Egypt as missionaries. One day the four of us rented some bicycles, and rode out into the country, where we could see the people in their native state.

We were particularly interested in the methods of farming. The plow used, is very primitive, probably being no better, and in fact, not as good, as the plows that were in use in the time of Joseph and Moses. It consists of a long, crooked, limb from a tree, which is used as a "tongue." Near one end of this is tied another shorter piece of wood at right angles. The plowman holds one end of this cross-piece in his hand, while the other end scratches the ground, as it is drawn by the oxen. The animals principally used for work on the farms, are the "gamoosa," as the natives call them. This word means literally, "cow," but the gamoosa is really a water buffalo. They are all purpoes animals however, for they are not only used for work, but also for milk and for meat.

Upon this trip into the country, we saw a man plowing, and I wished to get a picture of him. I asked Mr. Grice, one of the young men who was with me, to ask the man to stand still for a moment, so that I could get the picture. He walked over to the man, and began talking to him. The man stopped, and began talking, and I soon saw that an argument was in progress. After he had talked with the man for some time, Mr. Grice came to me and said, "I think it would be best not to take his picture. He seems unwilling to have it taken, unless we pay him fifty piasters." "Oh, is that all," I replied, "Well, let's go then. I took the picture while you were having the argument."

If the method of plowing is primitive, the method of irrigation is just as antiquated. The principal method of irrigation, is by means of a chain with buckets attached, which is raised by means of a crude wooden windlass. This is usually turned by a water buffalo, though sometimes donkeys or camels are used. In most of Egypt, the water needs to be raised only six or eight feet, since the Nile flows beneath the surface of the ground from the desert on one side, to the desert on the other. But in some cases, the water must be raised all of twenty-five feet. In that case, an implement known as a "shadouf" is used. It consists of a long pole, which is laid across a horizontal bar about six feet high, so that it will rock up and down. On one end of the pole, is a huge ball of mud, which is heavy enough to balance the bucket full of water, which is suspended by a rope from the other end. This implement looks very much like the old-fashioned well sweep, and operates much like the walking-beam of an oil derrick. With these, a man can lift the water from six to eight feet. We saw about fifteen of them in use in a group at Luxor. They were drawing the water from the Nile, for the irrigation of the surrounding country which is about twenty-five feet above the surface of the water. One set of shadoufs would lift the water from the river, and pour it into a ditch about six feet above. It would run into small reservoirs, from which it would be lifted by the next set of shadoufs to another ditch six or seven feet higher. Thus it was lifted from one level to another, until finally it ran out upon the surface of the ground above, and out to the gardens.

The crops that are grown most, are sugar-cane, cotton, and vegetables. We never saw such vegetables in our lives. I suppose some might doubt my veracity if I said we saw cabbages as big as washtubs. So I won't say so. But then, you know, washtubs come in assorted sizes. However that may be, we saw the biggest vegetables, without exception, that we have ever seen in our lives. I don't know whether it was the variety of the vegetable, or the fertility of the soil that brought such results, but I am inclined to believe it was the latter. The Egyptian today, as in the times of Moses, must have his "Onions and garlic", and we saw plenty of these.

When we were in Egypt they were harvesting the same crop. Sugar cane seems to grow well, the entire length of the valley, and every few miles we would see, towering above the flat-roofed mud houses of the natives, the massive brick walls and smokestack of a sugar factory. The frequent appearance of these modern sugar factories, kept us aware of the fact that we were not completely isolated from the modern world yet. The product of these factories is not quite up to the American or European standard, however. The sugar is quite coarse—more so than coarse sand. Frequently it is molded into cones, weighing about a kilogram each. That was the only form in which we could buy our sugar on the Dead Sea Expedition. The next problem was to reduce it to edible form. This we did, by chopping it with a hatchet—it was almost as hard as a rock—and then pounding it to the consistency of gravel with the hammer.

The natives of Egypt like to eat the cane just as it comes from the field. The vendors on the station platforms, have whole cart-loads of it. It is no unusual sight to see a bundle of cane like a corn shock coming through the car window, into the compartment where you may be sitting. Then the natives will munch that cane, sucking the juice from it, and throwing the stalks on the floor, until by the time you reach your destination, the compartment looks like a stable, and you can hardly climb over the embankment. I have actually seen heaps of cane on the compartment floor, a foot deep.

I shall close this series of articles, by relating an incident that occurred while we were visiting in Cairo. One day we went out to Old Cairo, the portion of the city that was standing two thousand years ago. The principal point of interest there, was a church which the natives call the "Church of Babloon." Many authorities consider this the "Babylon" to which Peter refers in 1 Peter 5:13. Near this church is a small chapel, which is in reality located in a cave in the ground. The natives say that this is the site of the oldest Christian church in the world. It may be that they are right. At any rate, the church which was originally built over this cave, was constructed in the dawn of the Christian era. The Coptic priest, who was in charge of the chapel, told us that it was in this cave that Joseph and Mary, and the infant Jesus hid, when they fled to Egypt to escape the slaughter of the innocents. As a consequence, this cave is supposed to possess peculiar properties for the blessing of infants. But the thing that interested us most, was a basin that was hewn out in a ledge in the solid rock of the cave. It was about two feet long, a foot and a half wide, and slightly over a foot deep. Being interested and inquisitive, we asked the priest what it was. He replied that it was a baptismal font for babies. I was much surprised, and asked if they baptized babies by immersion. "Yes," he replied, "by trine immersion." And I thought, Here is a church, undoubtedly founded in Apostolic times, and perhaps by one of the Apostles himself. They baptize by trine immersion. What stronger proof does one need, of the Apostolic authority for our form of baptism?"

The Birmingham Convention

By O. C. Starn, Preble County, Ohio, Delegate to Birmingham

(Concluded from last week)

III. Spirit of the Convention.

The spirit of this convention was far beyond reproach. We shall never forget the opening scene on Monday evening. The place of meeting was the modern Municipal Auditorium with a seating capacity of over 7,000. In this building was gathered a seething mass of humanity with an unmistakable jollity and friendliness, yet with a soberness, confidence and determination to accomplish something. One could easily detect a burning desire to attain unto the higher ideals of life. Certainly there is born in heaven and on the earth new hope and confidence as a result of such meetings. It made one feel that the world has not all gone wrong. There are many knees as yet that have not bowed to Baal, but ready to bow to the Divine Son of God. Not all have fallen away. Among this mass of people were the very best of society, and then think of the thousands of you "bests" that were not privileged to attend. How it encourages and inspires one to go ahead with the tasks that face the Christian people of today. How different from that pessimistic note that there is no hope for the world. Jesus gave his life a ransom for all and let us work as if we believed that to be true. While it is not a probability that everyone will be won to Christ, yet it is not an impossibility.

As the great curtain was lifted a magnificent scene greeted our eyes. First, the beautiful nature scene painted on the draperies and background of the stage. There were the beautiful hills that God created, covered with grass and rocks and shrubbery and trees. Around these hills were the paths which the feet of God's choice creation, man, had made. Here and there the meadows were dotted with lovely flowers which in the inspiration of the moment seemed to breathe words of welcome in the name of their Creator. Then, appearing immediately on the stage were large heavy limbed trees with a wealth of shade for weary travelers.

Secondly, a choir of 300 men and women were seated underneath these trees which together with the already mentioned background made an appearance of a great open air meeting with all of nature as the environment. And what was the opening song? "Show Me the Way to Get Home?" NO. That mighty audience of approximately 5,000 people stood and with the choir reverently sang with bowed heads, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty." One could feel the throb of inspiration and the power of the Holy Spirit. Did they mean it? Never have we heard singing with more meaning nor devotion.

Very noticeable also was the large white streamer across the front of the stage with large red and blue blocked letters on it bearing the theme of the Convention: "BUILDING TOGETHER A CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP." What a spirit of cooperation and fellowship! What a noble purpose! "Co-workers together with God"! This theme was not cast aside but loyally adhered to in every session and form of meeting. Every message was a stirring one delivered not merely to be heard but unto the accomplishment of the purpose of the Convention. We listened to speakers of every large denomination, but no one could tell who was who by the message or attitude. All denominational prejudices were cast aside and homage paid to Christ as the Divine Son of God and the only hope of the world.

Think of the speaking personnel: Dr. Weigle of Yale; Dr. Athearn of Boston; Dr. Harper of Elon College; Dr. Thompson of Chicago; Dr. Mullens of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary; Dr. Poole of Christ Church, London, England; Dr. Vance of Nashville, Tennessee; Dr. W. O. Thompson of Ohio State; Mr. Kraft of Kraft Cheese Co., Chicago; Mr. Colgate of Colgate & Co., New York; Mr. Gamble of Proctor & Gamble, Cincinnati; Mr. Simms of Simms & Co., Limited of Canada; Dr. Webb of Canada; Miss Nann F. Weeks, Miss Mauss, Miss McSkimmon and a host of others. One would need to go to College many days before he would receive the privilege of sitting under such men and women and listening to their high ideals and noting their noble examples of service and devotion to their task. It was worth one year in college for any one to have been there and listened to all these men and women.

IV. Some Misconceptions.

The Religious Education movement has many enemies. Some think it is an effort of dangerous men and women to re-unite church and state. Some people are certainly wise in their own conceits. It must come largely from those who are afraid that if Christian principles are taught too freely in our public schools and elsewhere they cannot carry on successfully their present evil method of doing business. We do not want the church to dominate the state but we do severely need the principles upon which the church is built to dominate our places of business and legislative and judicial halls. Who will deny the fact that we need a living religion today. The Spirit of Christ should dominate all phases of life, not a part of it. When once this ideal will be accomplished and when all business men of every walk and profession of life have accepted it most of our trouble will have vanished. The Religious Education movement seeks to build up a symmetrical Christian life and only an ignoramus will deny the importance of this. The Sunday type of religion has failed and justly so. Now the demand is for a continual or daily type of religion that can be applied in our mutual relationships. We need more Christ-religion and less individual religion.

Then, a second misconception is that the Religious Education movement is a modernistic movement. We have met several persons since the Convention who were advised not to go because it was modernistic. Here is an instance when ignorance is certainly not bliss. The bliss would be if such persons would seek to gain a bit of knowledge. We declare without hesitancy that we have never been in a convention where there existed a better devotional spirit and where Jesus was more honored as being the Divine Son of God. We know that among the people and speakers present there were all kinds of Theological beliefs. The Religious Education movement does not try to impose any theological dogma on any one. Among the speakers one would find both conservatives and liberals, if they must be called such, just the same as one would find them in any church. No time was spent "chewing theological rags." No one fell into a trance or told their experience. We did dream dreams and see visions—dreams and visions of the all sufficiency of the Savior of the world and of the service we might render him, visions not impossible of accomplishment. One could behold on many faces the grim determination to go home and work out these visions. There was no note of pessimism nor optimism in the addresses according to the common notion of the terms. But instead a spirit of "go to it." No one felt like sitting down and with folded hands and a sigh exclaim, "It's no use to try, the world is hopelessly lost." Neither did any one feel like exultantly shouting, "God's in his heaven, all's right with the world." No, but in place of either of these attitudes was that certainty that the world is steeped in sin; that we have a tremendous task to tackle; but we have a "captain who never lost a battle" and under him we will put forth dogged efforts to win as much of the world as possible. Who dare deny the expediency of such a spirit? It is the spirit to fight to win in spite of a strong foe. It is the spirit of putting to flight the devil instead of he keeping us on the run; conquering in the name of Jesus who is King or Kings and Lord of lords. If the multitudes of men and women are ever won to Christ it will be through such a spirit.

V. Effects of the Convention.

It is estimated that the 7,000 delegates who were present would represent 24,000,000 Sunday school scholars and 20,000,000 church members. Think of the influence then if all these delegates carry the inspiration and help received back home and put it to useful purpose.

We trust that when in 1930 the next Convention will be held at Toronto, Canada, many may be prompted to go who have any faltering idea as to the nature of this great movement as a result of this Convention of 1926. It is time and money well spent, for no one can attend such a gathering and go away the same person either in amount of inspiration, degree of loyalty to Christ or a world view.

In conclusion let me say that we hope that more Brethren people will become interested in this great movement. We can continue to believe what we choose and use our own methods in teaching and preaching. But for the cooperative value and the help one receives we as a church should heartily support it. The movement is here to stay. Five Brethren were present—Mr. and Mrs. Albert Trent of Johnstown, Pennsylvania; Prof. and Mrs. J. A. Garber of Ashland and the writer. May God richly bless this movement and use it for the building up of his Kingdom. May he also richly bless the Brethren church in her mission to the world and may she find her place and influence in this great united effort to make this world a better example of the coming Kingdom of our Lord. He is coming again some day and may he find us all faithful to our task which he has assigned us.

May we have more Brethren present at the Ohio Council of Religious Education Convention to be held in Tiffin on June 15-18.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Man That Went Wrong

By W. I. Duker

TEXT: Then Samuel took a vial of oil and poured it upon the head of Saul and said, Is it not because the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance?—1 Samuel 10-1.

The story opens with a man anointed of God. There can be no story of man's success or progress else it starts this way, what a wonderful change it would make! Men and value. If the activities of all Christian peoples who find themselves busy in the church today would but begin this way, what a wonderful change it would make! men who now go about their tasks in the church with listlessness would be fired with the Spirit of Almighty God. Men who feel that the issues of all Christendom rest upon their shoulders would be led to understand that other men too, have been anointed. Men who are led by their selfish interests to unseemly conduct would bow in humble submission to the God who anointed them. What a wonderful change, we say, would come about if men were but anointed of God. But necessary as is the anointing of God, yet man must understand that God's anointing does not save him from many errors and possible final disgrace and disaster. Men who have been anointed by God often forget the blessing received and lose the strength and zeal for service. Some of the greatest sinners of Christendom have been men anointed of God. Samuel anointed Saul at the order of God. Saul began his rule with God's blessing. It is true that God had advised against the course taken by the Israelites. It was not his wish that a king should govern his people. But upon their insistence he anointed a king for them. He started Saul right. About this there can be no doubt. God never anointed a man against his will. Saul started right. But soon he began to make mistakes. Soon he forgot the wish and advise of God and was guided wholly by his own impulses and desires. It shall not be our purpose, Brethren, to mark the steps in this man's downfall in any regular order. We are not interested in that side of the affair. But the sad story of the fall of God's anointed is told with the hope that we may be able to guard against similar mistakes.

MISTAKE NUMEBR ONE. "Cursed be the man that eateth any food until evening, that I may be avenged on my enemies" (1 Sam. 14:24). An unadvised requirement. When a man must use force in righting wrong his heart must not delight in the suffering he necessarily must inflict. When a soul is lost and must of necessity be banished from the presence of God there is sorrow in heaven. God never delights in the suffering of humanity. If the ax must be laid to the root of the tree the husbandman grieves. All too often we take keen delight in the misfortune that comes to others through their sin. We look upon the wayward son or daughter and say, "Didn't I tell you?" Their suffering proves our power of prophecy and in it we glory. Then, too, our impatience and ill-will is kindled as the fight goes on and we find ourselves enjoying the fight not because we are putting down sin but because we are fighting. So it was with our King Saul. He had no sorrow for the unfortunate people who knew not God. Had it been today, our churches would be sending missionaries to the Philistines. They knew not God and so they should have been pitied and not destroyed.

In the enjoyment of Saul in pursuing the Philistines we are reminded of a certain father who while using the old time method of correcting his son, said, "Sonny, it is hurting me worse than it is you. I do not wish to thrash my son." "Then," said the weeping boy, "if you don't like to thrash me, why do you strike so hard?" Evidently some of the impatience of the father had gotten into the boy's back through the rod. A king should wield the rod or national rebuke with infinite kindness.

Saul was so anxious to become avenged on his enemies that he insisted that no one should eat until his anger had abated. But what was the result of this impatience and anger? Well do we recall many of our experiences while a young man upon the farm. Strange how God has us in his school before we realize it. Often while driving our father's team we became angry without just cause. Then we caught up the "lines" and struck out lustily only to have the lines wind about our body and the buckle on the end to sting us unmercifully. We can feel the "sting" yet! So it was with our friend Saul. In his anger he made a hard and fast rule and when the "line" came back, the buckle stung him, but the buckle in this instance was his own son. So, my friends, when we strike out in anger we ourselves are the ones to suffer. Poor Saul! Is your name Saul, my brother?

MISTAKE NUMEBR TWO. The Command of the Lord. "Now go and smite Amalek and utterly destroy all that they have and spare them not" (1 Sam. 15:3). "But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them" (1 Sam. 15:9). When we destroy evil we are not to gain financially in the work. Poor Saul wished to make his fight against the Philistines self-supporting. He reminds us of the minister who so organized his church that it was self-supporting. The members needed not to make their regular contributions. It was a wonderful plan and was the talk of the town. But he met with a sad misfortune. Just as soon as he had it well under way the church died. We are reminded of the old story of the man who taught his horses to go without feeding. He was successful with his experiment but was unfortunate in that as soon as they were well trained they died. So are all self-supporting religious organizations. What was the buckle on the line this time? "Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord he hath also rejected thee from being king" (1 Sam. 15:26).

MISTAKE NUMBER THREE. The envy of Saul toward David. When you envy a man who can do a given task better than you, you are making a most serious mistake. Saul should have welcomed any one who could have helped him in his kingdom rather than to have allowed envy to creep in and weaken him. Herein lies one of the greatest difficulties of the church. Men are too much like Saul today. Envy is allowed to run its course and destroy the work of God. Saul failed to realize that the kingdom was vastly more important than the king. If David could function in the kingdom Saul would have been a wise king had he sought to use David and given him responsibility and not to have grown envious of him. Men today, in the service of the church say, "Well if they can do it so well, let us see how well they can do it. We will just step back awhile and watch." But we always forget that there is no place to stand when we "step back." All we can do is to take a seat on Satan's grandstand and watch the children of God "carry on." Brethren, one of the most subtle of Satan's purposes is to have an active soldier grow envious and then take a seat on his "grandstand." Poor Saul! By the way, brother, where are you sitting?

MISTAKE NUMBER FOUR. Saul attempting to take the life of David. What is more natural than that we should attempt to take the life of those we hate? Envy, hatred and murder! What a company to run with, when we may have the company of the FATHER, SON AND HOLY GHOST! But like all stories of men who go wrong, the end is coming with surprising rapidity. Mistake number four is hard followed by another.

Our Worship Program

A DEVOTIONAL READING OF ROMANS
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE BETTER WAY—Rom. 10:1-13.

The attainment of righteousness by rigid performance of legal enactments is difficult, if not impossible; there is a better way—faith in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord—a way that is easy and open to all alike.

TUESDAY

UNBELIEF INEXCUSABLE—Rom. 10:14-21.

Everything possible has been done to encourage the Jews to call upon the Lord by faith, but they were rebellious, refusing to be taught, choosing their own way. The Jewish attitude is typical of that of many people today.

WEDNESDAY

THE BELIEVING REMNANT—Rom. 11:1-10.

Though Israel as a whole is rejected because of its unbelief, yet there is a believing remnant that shall be saved. So it has ever been that the masses of the people have been unresponsive to the Gospel appeal, but God is calling unto himself the few who will believe.

ENGRAFTED BRANCHES—Rom. 11:11-24.

The stock of Israel is consecrated to God and some branches thereof remain true and holy, but some through lack of faith have been cut off and Gentiles grafted on in their stead. But they have nothing wherewith to boast, it is simply because of their faith that they are made partakers of divine righteousness.

FRIDAY

GOD'S ULTIMATE PURPOSE—Rom. 11:25-36.

Now the final purpose of God became clear to the great apostle as the unfolding of a mystery and he sees both Jew and Gentile turning to God through the abundance of divine mercy. How marvelous God's wisdom and how stupendous his forgiving grace!

SATURDAY

CONSECRATION OF SELF—Rom. 12:1, 2.

This brief scripture bears a great and much needed message. As of old God required sacrifices of slaughtered beasts, pure and without blemish, so now he requires our noblest and truest selves, wholly given over to his will.

SUNDAY

SPIRITUAL GIFTS—Rom. 12:3-8.

"Let every Christian be content with his proper place and functions," cultivating a spirit befitting his task, remembering that all are members of the one body, Christ Jesus, and related one to another.—G. S. B.

MISTAKE NUMBER FIVE. Refusing to take advice from his friend and son. Jonathan advised father to deal gently with their common friend, Dávid. When we persistently refuse to listen to the advice of our finest friends we are pretty well along on the road to destruction. When Saul was urged to avoid mistake number five he rushed into a more serious one.

MISTAKE NUMBER SIX. Seeking the advice of a witch when he might have had the counsel of God. One of the sad evidences of our sinfulness is our willingness to be advised by the agents of hell. God knocks at our heart for years and we refuse to hear him. One of the emissaries of hell whispers to us and we rush to do his bidding. God was anxious to advise Saul, in fact he had done so over and over again, and yet Saul went to the witch of Endor! By the way, brother, whose advice are you following?

THE LAST MISTAKE. "THEN SAID SAUL TO HIS ARMOR BEARER, DRAW THY SWORD AND THRUST ME THROUGH THEREWITH, BUT HIS ARMOR BEARER WOULD NOT, FOR HE WAS SORE AFRAID. THEN SAUL TOOK THE SWORD AND FELL UPON IT" (1 Sam. 31:4). Even a common soldier would not lift his hand against the Lord's anointed, but Saul in his last act of his unfortunate life defied the Lord and took that which he could not give—a human life!

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Overflowing Cup

A Short Devotional by the Late Dr. Jowett

OUR SCRIPTURE

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever (Psalm 23:5, 6). Lord, all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee. My heart panteth, my strength faileth me: ... For in thee, O Lord, do I hope; thou wilt hear, O my God (Psalm 38:9, 10, 15). My strength faileth because of mine iniquity (Psalm 31:10). In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed; deliver me in thy righteousness (Psalm 31:1). I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord (Psalm 116:13).

OUR MEDITATION

My cup runneth over! Such is the measure of the bountiful hospitality of God. There is no leanness or meanness in his feasts. His provision is never scanty. His resources never come short of our necessity. Nor are they just level with our needs, leaving no margin of grace. The Divine Host welcomes his guests to overflowing bounty. "In my Father's house there is bread enough and to spare!" My cup runneth over.

This magnificent fulness dwells in every promise of the Lord, and it gives radiant distinction to all the ministries of his love. I look at my sin. It is the biggest thing I know. It is piled up like some gloomy, barren mountain in the landscape of my life. I can do nothing with it. If I set myself the task of removal, it is like yoking my weakness to the removal of a mountain, spadeful by spadeful, a helpless and a hopeless labor. And nobody else can do anything with my sin. My friends can pity me, but their pity does not redeem. They can ease my outer circumstances, but the ease is not the mother of vital peace. The awful fountain remains, and it mocks the finest resources of human friendship. It is the biggest thing I know, and I stand before it as impotent as a broken reed.

I am like the psalmist; "My strength faileth because of my iniquity." But if the good Lord mercifully draws near to my sin, how then? Then my biggest thing is vanquished by something bigger, even by the wonderful grace of the Most High. "Where sin abounds, grace doth much more abound." It is like some parochial hillock set in the presence of the Himalayas. Nay, that comparison is ill-suited to express the glorious might of the grace of God. I find a better comparison in some sandhill which children have been piling up on the shore throughout a long day; and God's great sea rolls in, wave upon wave, depth beyond depth, and in its majestic advance the hillock crumbles away, and is levelled with the sandy plain. Where the hill abounded, God's vast sea doth much more abound!

Sin finds its master in grace. The big thing can be buried in the bigger thing. And divine grace is the only bigger thing that can ever be found. But the grace is so wonderful and so abounding that our sin is lost in its infinite depths, as an unclean thing can be dropped in mid-Atlantic and buried in the depths of the sea. God's grace does not just measure up to our sin; it rises above it in overmastering grandeur. We are more than conquerors.

And how is it with my common necessities—the care that pinches me, the sorrows that beset me, the lean circumstances which touch and chill me as with fingers of ice? How is it with human grief and pain? They are big things; the only bigger thing is sin. But these are big and far-stretching. They journey with man wherever man travels and wherever he dwells, whether it be among arctic snows or in the burning sun of the tropics. The gloom of sorrow is like the natural darkness, its circuit encircles the globe. And where is the antidote of human suffering and sorrow? Who has the magic touch which can wipe away bitter tears? Where is the physician, with wines and cordials in his wallet, which can remove the heavy stuff that weighs upon the heart? Where do our doctors of sorrows live, the skilled practitioners who can dispel heartache, and chase away the grief that saps the mind? Who deals in the secret virtue that is the master of sorrow? Who has the bigger thing?

Only Christ has the bigger thing. "Our consolations also abound in Christ." I love the fulness of the word "abound." Christ's consolations are not ministries which may or may not be equal to our griefs; they overtop them like great waters. Earth has no sorrow that heaven can not heal. There is no grief standing in insolent pride outside and beyond the consolations of grace. Our sorrows may abound, but Christ's consolations more abound. Thus it is that our sorrow is transfigured, and thus it is that "at midnight Paul and Silas, flogged and bleeding, sang praises unto God, and the prisoners heard them." Our Lord's ministries are always abounding. In his grace our cup runneth over.

OUR PRAYER

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! Thou art the strength of my life; thou art my joy and song. Thy mercy is my confidence and thine almighty arm is my strength. Of the cup of thy salvation do I drink and rejoice in thee all the day long. May all thy people praise thee for thy goodness and mercy. May they trust in thee and serve thee. Amen.

PRAYER

O Merciful God, be thou now unto me a strong tower of defence, I humbly entreat thee. Give me grace to await thy leisure, and patiently to bear what thou doest unto me, nothing doubtful or mistrusting thy goodness towards me; for thou knowest what is good for me better than I do. Therefore do with me in all things what thou wilt; only arm me, I beseech thee, with thine armor, that I may stand fast; above all things, taking to me the shield of faith, praying always that I may refer myself wholly to thy will, abiding in thy pleasure, and comforting myself in those troubles which it shall please thee to send me, seeing such troubles are profitable for me, and I am assuredly persuaded that all thou doest cannot but be well; and unto thee be all honor and glory. Amen.—Lady Jane Grey (1537-1554.)

Joseph's Fidelity

Scripture Lesson—Gen. 39:1-23.

Printed Text—Gen. 39:1-6; 19-23.

Devotional Reading—Prov. 4:10-18.

Golden Text—Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings.—Prov. 22:29.

LESSON LIGHTS

After Jacob had met Esau, and they had parted in peace, he went to Shechem, thence to Bethel, where he had the vision, and finally settled at Hebron, the home of his fathers. Here Joseph grew up till he was 17 years old, a lovely, well trained, godly young man. The ten older brothers were trained in the worldly period of Jacob's life, and among heathen associates, while Joseph was brought up under better influences than his elder brothers in his father's wiser and more religious years.

He was his father's favorite, very likely because of his sweeter disposition, for his older brothers were rough men, more like the modern Bedouin while Joseph was quicker of intellect, handsomer in face, with a winning and pleasant manner, Jacob was not only partial to him, but he showed this in many ways; one of which was in giving him the sort of robe which was worn by the leisure class, the masters, while the brothers must wear the coarse and common robes of the workmen. Then Joseph had dreams of greatness beyond the greatness of his brothers, or even of his father, and in the innocence of his heart told the dreams. In addition, he told his father when he saw evil done by his brothers, probably only because Jacob wished him to, without any personal malice. The jealous brothers therefore hated him, and when at last they saw their chance they sold him into Egypt as a slave—thus putting in motion the strange series of happenings which made the dreams come true.

Favoritism in the Family

"It is wrong in itself. The dull child, not the bright one, the weak, faulty child, not the strong, perfect one, really needs the most praise and encouragement, the most help and favor. Then favoritism usually spoils the child, cultivating pride, self-conceit. Not many of us can stand petting, pampering, and flattery. It is unjust to the others, too, to choose one for special preference and distinction. Once more, favoritism naturally draws upon the favorite the hatred and envy of the others."—J. R. Miller, D.D.

What Egypt Meant to Joseph

Egypt was at this time the most flourishing kingdom the world had ever known. It was cultured in the arts,—in learning, in architecture, printing, writing, weaving, etc. So that when Joseph came from his father's black tent among the beautiful hills and pasture lands of Canaan, and entered into the cultivated city life of Egypt, "it was a bewildering sight to the shepherd lad, telling him of beauty, wealth, and gaiety, such as he could not have believed possible."

Now all these things were (1) a trial and test of Joseph's character. He grew strong by resisting them, by holding on to the true God, by retaining his purity, like the swan sailing undefiled through the sewers of Paris, like the lotus flower of Egypt keeping its silvery whiteness while resting on muddy waters. He knew about evil, as he had never known before, but by observation, not experience. (2) They broadened his outlook, they enlarged his nature, they furnished him with culture and polish which he would need in Pharaoh's court.

Joseph as a Slave

Joseph as a slave. The chief alleviation of Joseph's bondage came from himself. His spirit was not broken by his unfortunate position, but even as a slave he did his best, "and the Lord made all that he did to prosper in his hand." The result was that he was soon raised to a high position in Potiphar's household, and had general control of all his affairs. Even now, "a slave brought up in the house is admitted to all the family councils; he is allowed to trade, or to engage in any business on his own account; and he may, in fact, do just as he pleases, provided he proves himself a bold fellow, who may be relied upon as ready and able, in case of emergency, to wield a sword in defense of his master."—Kitto. "When his fellow-servants were squandering the golden moments, Joseph was filling them with activities. When they were content with a good surface appearance, he toiled upward to success from carefully laid foundations. ... They often pointed to him with envy, and perhaps said, 'He is a lucky fellow.' They did not think that his luck was his character, and that his character meant God."

Joseph Resisted Temptation

Self-control is one of the most essential elements to a successful life. The power to resist temptation, to say "No" to the appetites of the flesh and to every seducing influence is a great and divinely bestowed gift. Joseph had that power. He resisted temptation (1) by recognizing the fact that it was sin against God, and (2) by recognizing the fact that it was treachery toward his master. To have yielded would have been to lose all he had gained, and blot out his unknown future. It is most striking to see how Joseph, out of pity for his master, refrains from accusing the wicked woman. "More men could be found who could thus have spoken to Potiphar's wife than one who could have kept silence when accused by Potiphar. For his purity you will find his equal, one among a thousand; for his mercy, scarcely one."

When Faithfulness Counts.

When faithfulness counts. It is easy to be faithful to God and duty when all men speak well of us. When the sun is shining, and the path is clear before us, and our bodies are strong and our hearts are singing. When our plans succeed and our dreams come true. Who could not be good, then, without half trying? But it is hard to be true to one's best when our well-meant endeavors meet opposition, sometimes the opposition of those nearest and dearest to us. When sickness comes, or poverty. When we are ridiculed, and slandered, and unjustly accused. When our plans fail, and our hopes seem far from fruition. When all the world is dark, and all the future gloomy. Most lives fall into such conditions, as Joseph's did in the events we are to study; and one of the chief inspirations coming from Joseph's history is the splendid way in which he met his troubles.

Universal Week of Prayer. This was approved and observed with good results.

The first Sunday evening of February, Rev. Longenecker and a group of his young folks of the Bethel Church of the Brethren, were with us and presented the play entitled "Mrs. Ling's Conversion." This is a Missionary Play and makes a strong appeal in behalf of China. Some of the curios and material used in the play came from their own workers in China, thus making it all the more interesting and touching. The play was presented to a full house which responded with a liberal offering, half of which was given to their China Missionary fund and the other half reserved for our own missionary work.

In keeping with the Lenten season appropriate services were held during the month of March. A quiet "round up" was also made with a view to finding new recruits for Christ and the church. As a result of this 14 were baptized the week following Easter.

The next feature of special importance was the presentation of the picture "Lest We Forget", and a stirring address by Hon. Chas. Haffke, Field Secretary of the Anti-Saloon League of Nebraska.

Mothers' Day was observed in a special way. And the following Sunday the graduates of the Carleton High School, with their instructors and friends, came to us for their Baccalaureate service. Last Sunday was the date of our spring Love Feast and Communion service. Next Sunday is Memorial Day and we hope to have a service in keeping with the day.

Upon our bulletin board this week appears this slogan:

"Garments of Righteousness never go out of Style."

Our business is the putting on of these garments. Therefore, pray for us Brethren, that his Name may be exalted.

An Unusual Program

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of our church at Bryan, Ohio, has consented to share with the Endeavorers of the brotherhood some of the interesting features of a very successful Christian Endeavor program rendered in his church. He says: "I was asked sometime ago to lead the C. E. meeting for May 16th and had a very wonderful service on the subject: 'Using the Bible.' The enclosed material was asked for and kindly and graciously sent to me and was read by different Endeavorers during the services that evening."

Every message written in response to his appeal is good and will be an inspiration to our readers.

We hope other Endeavor leaders will be thoughtful enough to share portions of a good program or other interesting feature of their society work with the brotherhood. Also, we pass on a suggestion made by Brother Riddle that societies find it interesting to plan "a California Night, or an Indiana Night, or any other state night in Christian Endeavor, having everything coming from people within that state for one evening." It is an interesting suggestion, and we hope some society will find it profitable. Let us hear of your results from this or other programs.—The Editor.

What Books of the Bible Have You Found Helpful to You as a Business Man?

My favorites run to the New Testament—Matthew, Mark, Luke and John—to the story and Life of Christ. In my humble opinion these books and their early story of "his life" seem to offer much food for thought.

With very best wishes, I am,

Sincerely,
FRED L. BALL,

The Bible as a Life Guide

Dear Brother Riddle:

I understand that you are planning an outstanding meeting of your Christian Endeavorers for the evening of May 16.

I take pleasure in writing this word of greeting to that gathering of young people, and only wish that I might be present in person. We seventy-seven thousand young people in Ohio are too many for any one State President as a parish of visitation, but we are not too many when it comes to the great tasks of cooperation and Christian Service needed all over our great state.

And in order that we may all the more effectively render such service allow me to point out the one central need of our lives. That is greater devotional development. We need the Bible with all its spiritual forces.

Read it without previous prejudice. Let it speak its message unto you about Christ and redemption. Let it have the right of way in your heart. Remember it is the Word of God. He is talking to you. It is more important to have him talking to you than even your talking to him, important as that is in the life of all Christians.

I believe that the great secret of tomorrow's progress in the Christian church is a return to the Book. Let our young people of today set the pace and as leaders of tomorrow its central place in the lives of men is assured.

Most Sincerely,

ORRIS H. HAULMAN,
State President of Ohio C. E.

The Bible and Progress

My Dear Endeavor Friends:

If I were going to settle down in a new town, one of the first things I'd do would be to go to the local book store and find out how many Bibles they sell every year. If it were possible I would try to find out from the Post Office, if they had any way of determining it, how many copies of the Bible had come to other people of their community through the mails.

My reason for this action would be that wherever you find the Bible purchased, read and used the most you will find the best type of progress.

North America and South America are cases in point. South America, Catholic and without the Bible is literally centuries behind North America with a great Protestant influence and with the Bible.

Bible salesmen, called colporteurs, usually precede the traveling salesman of modern progress, just like the Missionary precedes the tradesman in all the foreign missionary fields.

What is the conclusion of these? A Bible reader and Biblically informed person actually has a better chance of material success than one who does not know it all. If you don't believe this, investigate the slum section of any big city and you will find it so.

Naturally I send my heartiest personal greetings to you. With best wishes for not only a great meeting tonight but continuously, I am,

Very truly yours,
FRANK L. FREET,
Executive Secretary of Ohio C. E.

The Bible as Literature

If one had to choose between a mastery of the English Bible and a College education, it would be far better to choose the first. So says the Professor of English Literature in one of America's greatest Universities. At first thought this will seem an astonishing assertion, but I believe it can be fully justified. For that person who has mastered the English Bible will have a knowledge of the English language in its finest form; he will have acquired a penetrating insight into human nature as it really is; he will be conversant with an important field of human history; he will know the most satisfactory of all philosophies and the most exalted of all ethical systems; and above all, he will have become acquainted with the Way of Life as it is revealed in Jesus Christ the Son of God.

ALVA J. McCLAIN,
Professor of Theology in Ashland Seminary.

Bible Commands

There is nothing in God's Word that should strike us as forcibly as these words—"Thus saith the Lord." Christianity is a positive religion. It is a religion of "doing." It is more than a religion, it is a life. And life is made up of actions which must be either positive or negative in their content.

Jesus, when he was about to ascend to the Father, made this statement: "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations—teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I HAVE COMMANDED YOU." Therefore we can safely say that the whole propagation of God's Gospel hangs on the obedience to the Bible Commands. When Jesus was asked what one ought to do to inherit eternal life, he made this reply, "Keep the Commandments." At another time he said, "This DO and thou shalt live." The positive aspect is ever present in the words of Jesus.

You will remember that Jesus never abrogated the Old Testament commands, but rather enlarged on them and made them more meaningful. Just read the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5, 6, and 7) with this thought in mind, and you will be able to grasp its full meaning.

This thought to close: When Jesus was asked which was the first great commandment he made answer after this fashion,—"Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy mind. This is the great and first commandment. And a second like unto it is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Now note his next words: "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Commands were for obedience and must be kept as a law.

Ohio C. E. Secretary for Brethren Churches,

The Practical wisdom of the Bible

The Bible contains the most practical wisdom to be found within any book. The purpose of the Bible is to make clear the way of life. As such, it comes to us out of the lives of men and women lived amid the varied circumstances of life. The truth set forth in the Bible finds men and women at greater depths and higher heights than any other book. Thus, the Bible goes back into life. By this means it helps those who respond to its living message to develop a peculiar life like unto that which is clearly set forth in the Bible itself.

The Bible was not written to teach Geography, nor History, nor Science, nor Philosophy, nor any other subject as such. The Bible presents the best of truth found within any of these fields of human knowledge, but the truth thereof is presented in a practical way, and it impresses one as being applicable to the situation of life in which he finds himself. For this reason men of all walks of life have found within the Bible illumination, instruction and inspiration that have made them commensurate to the heavy responsibilities devolving upon them. This has been generally characteristic of right thinking parents, teachers, business men, lawyers, doctors, and statesmen. Great leaders of thought and human endeavor have freely testified to the immense help which they have received from a knowledge of the Bible. And many of these have confessed with the knowledge acquired in their youth proved of greatest worth.

Teaching the Bible, From the Standpoint of a Sunday School Teacher

The Bible is the greatest book in the world. It stands supreme because it tells of supreme men and women. It is a book of books and the Book of books. Each volume is complete in itself. Yet the whole Divine Library is a unity of such a nature that the removal of one book would cause it to be lacking greatly in its wondrous message. It is also the best literature and history that the world has.

As a guide in the life of a Sunday school teacher the Bible stands without a peer. It is truly an "impregnable rock of Holy Scripture." It is the only true story book of a teacher's childhood experience; a fashioner of his vigorous, early manhood; a shepherd's crook of his latter days. It will give him "grace and glory"; lead him beside still waters where green pastures abound; comfort him in hours of distress and bitter agony; and save him eternally.

The greatest teacher of the Bible is the Sunday school teacher. God bless the hundreds of self-sacrificing men and women who, with no abatement of energy and zeal, labor to make Jesus Christ known. Know Jesus Christ as the Word who was, is, and shall be, the only perfect Man and the only perfect God. Love him accordingly. Teach men and women concerning him. Let them hear of his cross, death and resurrection. Says one Sunday school pupil, "I first learned to love my teacher, then I learned to love my teacher's Bible, then I learned to love my teacher's Savior."

Bible School teachers! You remake the world. Go about your task carefully, patiently, readily, and reverently. Glue your mind to God's Book for all else shall fail. Study it to be continually wiser and practice it to be safe. Teach it to wayside pilgrims as the veritable spring of the ages. And your soul, like the stars of the morning, shall shine in the firmament forever and forever.

M. A. STUCKEY,

Field Secretary for National Sunday School Association.

Why Should Every One Have a Knowledge of the Bible to be Educated?

One great man has said, "No one is educated unless he has a knowledge of the Bible."

No matter how much college training one has he would not be educated unless he had made a study of the Bible, for, we are told by great professors of literature that the Bible, the Word of Life, contains not only the highest poetry to be found anywhere in literature, it contains the essence of all religion, the finest historical prose, story-telling, dramatic literature, oratory and essays. It is classed by our best educated men as, "The Greatest English Classic"; is the foundation of Modern English Literature. The practical wisdom expressed in the Book of Proverbs has not been surpassed by any of our modern wise men.

As boys and girls at home we were all very fond of reading, and when our supply of books of fiction were all read and we would be wishing for more mother would say, "Read the Bible if you want a story book, there are true stories in it." True it is, and one should encourage and help the youth to make the right use of the Bible, for he does not realize the wealth of material in the Scriptures.

The Bible is a book which we may look on as touching the soul of the race as a whole. For this reason if for no other we must hope to see the study of the Bible begin to take its place in the study of English literature.

How then could one be educated and not have a knowledge of the Bible when we find in it the highest forms of literature, the fullest satisfaction of our passion for truth, and the only true meaning of the Way, the Truth and the Life.

The Meaning of Our Flag. Proverbs 14:34

"We pledge allegiance to our flag, and to the country for which it stands, one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." This is our pledge that we take when we salute the flag. Do you know it? Do you know the meaning of those words? They are rather large words, aren't they? We might talk about the meaning of some of them. Pledge means to promise. Allegiance means to be true to or to be faithful to. In other words, this pledge means that we promise to be true to our beautiful red, white, and blue flag and that we will also be true to our United States, for which the flag stands.

A small boy, named Dick, was standing on the street corner one morning. He had been sent on an errand by his father, but as he was half way to the place to which he was to go, several of his chums met him with the usual signals. Soon they were telling him their latest plans to have a big time. Now Dick did not mean to forget his errand, but he was so interested in the plans for a hike and loads of other fun that he did forget all about his errand. When he did remember that he had work to do he felt very sorry. He did not really want to go on his errand when the rest of the boys were in the midst of having a good time. Dick thought several minutes about matters. Then he decided that he would be loyal to his father and obey him. He told the boys he would see them later and then off he went and soon he had done his errand and was home.

Now it happened that Dick's father went down the other side of the street when Dick was talking to his chums on the street corner. At first, he felt rather angry that Dick was not hurrying on with his job, then he remembered his own boyhood days and how hard it had been for him to work when he wanted to play. When he saw Dick leave the rest of the gang and go on with his work he felt proud of him and when Dick got home, he was glad that he had accomplished his task and gone home for he found the family all making plans for a big outing. My, but he was glad that he had been loyal and true to his father. He felt that it payed to be obedient. Besides the fact that he was glad to find that his folks were planning an outing, Dick found that he felt good inside just because he had done his duty instead of shirking. Did you ever notice how much happier you feel when you have done your duty?

Well, our topic this time is about being loyal to our flag, isn't it? I wonder if you see any relation between the idea of being loyal to our parents and being loyal to our flag. Let's think real hard together and see what relation there is between these two things. When we are loyal and true to our parents, we obey them and do what they want us to do. Likewise when we are loyal to our flag and the country for which it stands, we obey the wishes of our country. Does that sound funny? Do you think that our country has wishes? Well, it is this way. The wishes of our country are written down as laws. There is the constitution of the United States, and there are other laws of our country. These are the things that we must follow if we want to be loyal and true to our flag. Moreover, we can be loyal to our flag by being good and living good clean lives. We are told in our Bible that good people are an honor to any nation.

There are not many wishes or laws of our country that you, as a junior citizen would be apt to break but as you grow older you will be tempted and it would be a good thing to resolve now to be true to your country. There are laws about driving your automobile too fast and endangering the lives of others; there are laws about respecting the

In our work in Argentina we have not appealed for hospitals or doctors because these needs are already fairly well supplied. In Rio Cuarto there are thirty-seven titled doctors besides a number of "curanderos" or self educated healers. These latter are however, being eliminated. A recent law does not permit anyone without title and authorization to treat patients or prescribe remedies or even habitually recommend treatments whether he accepts pay or not for his service. This is a law dictated to protect the caste of doctors who by having a monopoly can make their scale of prices and suit their convenience in treating patients. Doctors charge from two to four dollars for a consultation and double that for a visit and if the visit is to the country there is an additional charge of eight dollars for each league (three miles). Few of them will make a visit at night. Maternity cases cost from one hundred dollars up, and surgical operations according to the wealth of the patient.

There are hospitals but few trained nurses, the doctors preferring to do in part the work that nurses do and employ cheap unskilled helpers for the rest. As a result patients often receive poor care in the hospitals, and in the charity hospitals where the attendants are Catholic nuns it is the common complaint that patients who refuse to comply with the Roman rites are neglected and frequently die because of neglect.

Under the letter of the present law a trained nurse would be in danger of prosecution unless working strictly under the direction of an authorized physician. Of these I suppose that there are very few in the country who have experienced conversion and have an interest in the salvation as well as the health of the patient. There is therefore a great need of Christian physicians in this country and of evangelical hospitals. There is a movement started to provide a union evangelical hospital and it should have the support of all denominations.

In Laboulaye we have a rather remarkable case. A man by the name of Perez, who is scarcely able to read or write, and who until two years ago lived in the country and was known as "el chanchero tuerto" or "one-eyed hog raiser", began to be known as having a gift for discerning the ailments of people and advising them what to do in case help was possible. He was so successful in treating people with simple herbs of the camp that he could no longer attend to his work on account of his visitors, and his wife washed clothing to help to support the family while he attended the sick gratis.

Finally the people healed began to give him gifts of money or produce, chickens, sheep, etc., and these he refused to touch, leaving his wife to attend to the business end of the house. Then they moved to town and patients came to the number of several hundred a day. A year ago when I visited Laboulaye he came to church and became interested in the Gospel and has continued to come, and he and his wife are now candidates for baptism, but Brother Istueta, the pastor, is proving them and teaching them so as to make sure that they are truly converted, for they now have a wide influence.

In the month of March, during the elections, the dominant political party wanted Mr. Perez to help, but he refused to take part and as a result the politicians joined with the doctors to persecute him. He was charged with causing the death of an old drunkard who died, who had gone to Perez but was refused treatment, because he does not accept anyone whom he believes to be beyond his help.

On this charge he was put in the "calabozo," a room scarcely six feet square, without bed or even chair and for four days was not allowed to leave it and for nine days was kept without permission to speak to any one. Meanwhile they searched his house for drugs and found none. Brother Istueta helped the family in their trouble and through an attorney whose wife had been healed through Perez, secured a transfer of the case to Rio Cuarto. He was brought here a prisoner and presently the daily papers began to publish articles against him, inspired by the opposition. I wrote in reply, exposing the rank injustice done him. The judge here is a friend of mine, having been a fellow professor and he soon left the poor man out on bail. Meanwhile his wife was in our home in a critical condition as she suffered from heart attacks on account of the nervous strain from the trouble. The family of three children was cared for by one of our believers in Laboulaye. Happily all are at home together again, but the case will probably drag along for a year or two.

As a result his conversion to the Gospel has been widely advertised and many new people are inquiring about the Gospel in Laboulaye. He gives out tracts to all who come and has wall texts in the waiting room, and Brother Istueta goes frequently to teach the crowds that are in waiting. As he gives no drugs or prescriptions and receives no pay it will be difficult to convict him of being a lawbreaker, and if he continues to give a faithful testimony to the Gospel and to point people to Jesus as the Savior he can be a valuable helper in this atheistic land. We therefore ask the special prayers of the Brethren at home that God may use this new convert to the salvation of many. C. F. YODER.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

May Day celebration was set for Wednesday of last week and a good many visitors from out of town came but the weather was so bad that it was postponed until Thursday when we had a beautiful day and a good crowd. The event went off as planned and reflected credit upon the College. Miss Helen Price, of Nappanee, Indiana, was crowned May queen. Many out of town guests were here to enjoy the event.

Dr. Bell stopped off here on his way home from South Bend, where he filled the pulpit for Dr. Beahler who was here last Sunday for the dedication of the new church, which will doubtless be reported elsewhere. Dr. Bell is making commendable progress and has met with good response wherever he has gone. Our goal is to have every church give at least something more than it did in the former campaign. Some have more than doubled their former gifts.

It is sometimes asked if the College will ever get done with asking for gifts. The answer to this just now is that we have no choice at this time. Organizations over which we have no control compel us to make this canvass. The city and local canvass will be arranged for soon.

The Girls' Glee Club of Ashland High School, about 40 in number, recently sang at our chapel. I dare say it was the greatest number of Ashland High School students ever in the Chapel at any one time.

Commencements such as Graduate recitals are being given as per the schedule printed in the last number of the Evangelist.

The Junior-Senior Banquet was held last Thursday in the basement of the new church, the W. M. S. serving it. The room with its new kitchen, etc., affords an ideal place for such events.

The Girls of the Y. W. C. A. held the annual May supper on the campus last Thursday. The money is used to send delegates to the conference at Lake Geneva. Very helpful and important.

Summer school promises to be about as big as we are able to care for considering our capacity.

The campus is looking fine and I wish all the friends of the school could see it now.

Do not forget the Alumni Banquet in the new church Tuesday, June 8. All alumni reading this are invited.

John Miller, son of Dean and Mrs. J. A. Miller, who graduates here this June, has received an appointment at Ohio State University as assistant in Zoology for the coming year where he will do graduate work in that field.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PITTSBURGH

Although it has been but some six weeks since the Pittsburgh Church has been heard from through the columns of the "Evangelist", several things of import have transpired in the interim.

Our last report conveyed the information that, at the Easter morning service, the church had called two additional Deacons in the persons of Brother Harry Schultz and Brother Clyde A. Garland. On Sunday morning, April 18th, these two brethren, amidst a very, very impressive and dignified service, were ordained. The charge was delivered by our own pastor, Rev. Lynn, and in the ordination service he was assisted by Elder W. G. Gans and Rev. W. S. Bell, the latter being in Pittsburgh on that day in the opening of the campaign for the Ashland College Endowment Fund.

On Sunday evening, April 25th, the Lord permitted us to once again gather around his tables and engage in the holy ordinances of Communion. The service was carried out with the impressiveness and dignity that usually attends such an occasion. There were 111 individuals at the tables, and to 7 sick and "shut-in" members was administered communion in the afternoon, making a total of 118 members participating in the service, which is a rather goodly number and probably some in excess of the number who have engaged in the Communion service for several Communion past. We were privileged to have with us at the Communion, Dr. Bell, who had hurriedly returned from Kittanning, and who, in fact, did not arrive until the ordinance of feet-washing was under way. Dr. Bell, as stated earlier in this report, had been at the Pittsburgh church the preceding Sunday in the interest of the Ashland College Endowment Fund, and when he returned to Pittsburgh for the Communion service, it indeed gave us a great deal of happiness to have our pastor announce to Dr. Bell at that service that the members of the Pittsburgh church had subscribed $5,000.00 to the campaign. In passing, it is, of course, not proper for us to say too much along this line; nevertheless, we are pointing with justifiable pride to the loyalty the Pittsburgh church has for old Ashland, realizing the wonderful work she is doing throughout the brotherhood in training young men and women, and further realizing that such work cannot be made possible and that the College cannot hope to maintain the high standard required of her, without the financial and moral support of the brotherhood. The pastor and officers are happy to know that the Pittsburgh Brethren have done their bit toward helping Ashland to maintain that standard.

The early part of this month we loaned our pastor to the work at West Kittanning to conduct a two weeks evangelistic campaign. Rev. M. A. Witter, the pastor at West Kittanning, came to Pittsburgh and preached for us the two Sundays Rev. Lynn was in West Kittanning. Rev. Witter delivered an interesting Mothers' Day sermon on that day. The campaign at West Kittanning could very properly be classified as successful. The first Sunday, about 17 boys, nearly the entire class of boys of ages 10 to 14, responded. The field is a hard one to work. Most of the boys came from homes having no religious atmosphere whatsoever, which is true of the large part of the community. However, this "business of religion", if we may be pleased to call it such, should lead us into these hard fields, so that the indifferent ones might be led to know the way of salvation.

On Sunday, May 16th, Wayne Brokaw, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Brokaw, (the mother being the former Miss Mary Altman) was blessed; on Sunday, May 23rd, Ira Carl Lang, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Karl W. Lang, received the blessing. Mrs. Lang will be remembered as the former Miss Eleanor Wilcox, an active church and Sunday school worker, and the daughter of Ira C. Wilcox, one of our deacons.

On Thursday, May 20th, the Women's Missionary Society held another supper. This supper, while not as largely attended as the one on Washington's Birthday, netted the Society a considerable sum of money, somewhat over 100 suppers being served. The proceeds of the supper are to be used for the same purpose as that for which the proceeds of the other supper were used; namely, the purchase of a carpet to make our church home the more attractive. The church is badly in need of a new carpet for the main auditorium, and the ladies are to be congratulated and commended most heartily for the very fine efforts they have been exerting to accomplish that end.

Under the able teaching of Rev. Lynn, the attendance at the prayer meetings has been good.

The attendance at the morning church services is very good, generally speaking, while the attendance at the evening services is only fair. From the reports that come to us, this is true in all the churches, both large and small, throughout the city; in fact, we are inclined to believe that, in proportion to the membership, our attendance is higher than at some of the larger churches. Rev. Lynn's fine delivery still remains upon the same high plane of quality. It seems impossible to stay his power of oratorical ability, even if we had any desire so to do. The fine preaching of Rev. Lynn, together with the beautiful music rendered by our efficient choir, combine to attract to our Sunday evening services those who might otherwise be disinterested, which is the experience of other churches.

No little credit is due our own noble choir for the very fine music they render from Sunday to Sunday. Our choir is enjoying success never heretofore attained. The choir is under the able directorship of Mr. John MacCrum. He is well qualified to perform the duties of choir director, as he is a thorough musician. The choir is planning to have a musicale on Sunday evening, June 6th.

Assistant Recording Secretary.

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

Having been reminded of Carleton's dues to this section of The Brethren Evangelist, I submit the following as a partial report of the past nine months:

Carleton continues to have its share of the "regular", "usual services." Some churchmen claim that it is the "usual service" that kills attendance and interest, while variety and special services win and hold the audience. I do not mention this to criticize the above statement, but rather to point out that here, as I imagine is true elsewhere, much time is spent in the valley, rather than all mountain top experiences. In fact I am not too sure but that the figure as we use it has become reversed and the valley experience becomes the more profitable. Because in our regular services an effort is made to have the spirit of worship paramount. The congregation assembles, not to hear a sermon, or special music, though these are present, but primarily, to worship God, in prayer, song, and the study of his Holy Word.

Along with our regular services we average about two special features per month. When it is convenient we share with and receive the cooperation of the Methodist brethren across the street. (For a number of years these two congregations have held union services on Sunday evening. One night the service is in the Methodist church, the next it is in the Brethren church). We likewise share and cooperate with them.

The following items are gleaned rather hurriedly from our record:

Last August while upon my vacation and attending our National Conference, the doors of our church were closed to the public for worship, and the building repaired, redecorated and varnished inside, and painted outside.

September was spent preparing for the rededication and re-opening service, and the passing on to the membership and various organizations the good news gleaned at National Conference.

October found us observing Promotion Day. At this time about 60 children were promoted. A delegation of 10 motored to Beaver City for the purpose of attending the Midwest Conference which convened there. This was a real treat for the writer, because it gave him an opportunity to push on westward and become acquainted with more of like faith. The following week Rev. M. A. Stuckey spent two nights and a day with us. His sojourn with us was both profitable and enjoyable. We covet his return.

During the month of November preparations were made for a real "western winter." Now that the mercury has reached the 90 mark, I feel that I can safely say that the winter is over, and that it was very mild, at least in this part of the state. But nevertheless, our fall visitation was made, Love Feast and Communion services held, and a Union Thanksgiving service. Some places folks are too busy with their work, or preparations for a "big dinner" to render thanks unto Jehovah. But it is to be said to the credit of the citizens of Carleton and vicinity that they assembled to the tune of a house full, and thanked God for his goodness to them. The service being union, the offering lifted was given to the Near East Relief work. The month was closed and December opened by motoring over to Falls City and attending the silver wedding anniversary of Rev. and Mrs. A. B. Cover. This afforded us a peep into the Falls City Brethren church. We were accompanied on this trip by Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Miller. It is needless for me to say that it was a pleasant trip.

Golden Rule day was observed next in order. Plans and preparations for the Christmas season were then laid and worked out. Several of the teachers had Christmas parties for their classes and on Christmas eve the Sunday school as a whole presented a very impressive White Gift service. The last evening of the old year and the first few minutes of the new year were spent by a goodly number assembled in a Watch Night service. From the standpoint of numbers the meeting may not be considered such a wonderful success, but when it comes to the fun, music and meditation of the closing moments of the old year and our passage into the new, all are agreed.

Having entered upon the first day of the new year thus, we closed it with our annual business meeting. The reports of the various organizations were read and approved. The majority of them showed progress and a healthy condition. Among the recommendations of the pastor, was the observance of the

Salvage

A Boston plumber once bought a wreck for a few hundred dollars. It was a steamer which two wrecking companies had tried in vain to float. With a gang of men whom he hired, this plumber at last got the vessel off the rocks and into a nearby harbor. Then he spent considerable money in repairing the ship; but on the outbreak of the war, when vessels were in great demand, he sold his "wreck" for $197,000.

Many a hopeless human wreck has been abandoned in similar fashion by his friends, but has fortunately come under the consideration of some Christian worker and has been pulled off the rocks and refitted for the storms of life and has proven to be immensely valuable. Salvage pays. Perhaps you know a non-Christian neighbor whom you think cannot be reached. Select a good tract and ask him to read it. There is at least enough curiosity in the average person to read a short message, and like Zacchaeus who climbed a tree because he was curious to see Jesus, a glorious conversion may follow. Just try it.

Preparing for Evangelism

A statement was recently released by the Committee on Evangelism of the Ohio Council of Churches that nearly two-thirds of the people of Ohio are outside the membership of the churches. That is a challenging statement, almost depressing, if true, and our observation suggests no reason for doubting it. Many religious leaders are pessimistic about ever being able to effectively carry the Gospel to this great mass of people, except through united effort. Consequently effort is being made to enlist all Evangelical Protestant churches in a great interdenominational evangelistic movement in 1927, for the purpose of planning which a conference on evangelism is to be held at Columbus, June 28 and 29.

It is not likely that the situation with regard to the proportion of the unchurched folks is any more serious in Ohio than throughout the country. In fact, we imagine the figures are fairly representative of the general situation, especially in view of the proportionately small number of people in any community who attend church or show any interest in its welfare. Such a situation is serious enough to demand the earnest attention of all Christian people. And any move to bring about a concerted effort and to stir every church to do its best, whether individually or in cooperation with others, is highly commendable. And it is not too early to begin planning in all our churches an intensive and far-reaching evangelistic campaign.

But along with such planning—and, in fact, more important,—there should go earnest prayer for revival and real effort to prepare our churches to yearn for and to work for the salvation of lost souls. Nothing is more important than prayer as a forerunner to evangelism. It is indeed the first essential to any religious endeavor, for before man can accomplish, the Spirit of God must be implored and his empowerment, guidance and convicting office enlisted. And by prayer the people of God must themselves be prepared for the blessing of heaven. All this is saying nothing new; everybody knows it and many are saying it. But it is so vital and absolutely essential that it needs forever to be continually re-stated and re-enforced.

The urgency of prayer as a preparation for a great sweep of evangelism is being set forth by more than the religious press and preachers. The Toronto Globe in an editorial utterance early in the year said:

"Prayer is the secret of revival. Prayer asks God to do for us what we cannot do for ourselves. There has never been any great Christian revival in history that was not preceded and brought to pass by the prayers of Christians. A lukewarm church cannot win converts—it has nothing attractive to offer. But when any local church or group of Christians is on fire with love for its Savior and Lord, and is demonstrating in daily walk his supernatural life and the 'fruit of the Spirit,' there will be plenty of onlookers who will desire all this for themselves."

And the need of a great religious revival is beyond question. It is needed for the sake of the churches themselves. They must save their own lives; they must combat the spirit of indifference that tends continually to settle upon them; they must keep virile and vital and spiritual. They must ever keep keenly aware of the fact that they are commissioned to save the lost and to preach the Gospel to every life. The compassion of the Master for the multitudes distressed and scattered as sheep having no shepherd must be continually re-incarnated in the lives of his disciples. The love of souls must be kept real and vital; the flood of evangelism must be ever flowing; men in the grip of sin must be released and brought into a vitalizing touch with the Gospel. And to this end revivals must needs be conducted.

Moreover there is a need of a great sweeping tide of evangelism because of the saving influence of such a movement on the social, business and civic life of our nation. Every one who reads knows how weak the social pulse is today. Business has its defaulters and grafters. Industry is surcharged with selfishness; much of capital is still inhuman, and labor is often bitter and unreasonable. Politics is commercialized; bribery sits in high places, and lawlessness is unafraid. In every line men's consciences have been outraged and their ears have become deaf to the appeal of righteousness. And it is becoming more and more evident that we are sadly in need of a genuine revival of religion, religion that not merely makes a man shout and sing, but changes his life and affects his every relation. That is what we are being told is wrong with us by men in high station almost every day. No diagnosis could be truer and no cure more urgent.

One of the best known of New England mercantile firms is the Wm. Filene's Sons Company of Boston, as well known in the east as the Marshall Field and Company is in the west. In a letter made public a few months ago and signed by Edward A. Filene, president of the company, is found the following statement, which strikingly parallels the sentiment that Roger Babson is so frequently preaching:

"I have a growing conviction that . . . there is need for a nationwide religious revival, if the church is to regain in this generation a position of effective leadership in the public mind. In theory, I have always been opposed to, or at least doubted the efficacy of religious revivals. But when I think of the enormous forces of hate and destruction let loose by the war, it seems to me that nothing short of a great religious revival will have the power to check these forces . . ."

Truly, religion is no longer considered an ethereal something, unworkable in our work-a-day world, and the spirit of revival no longer a mere bubbling-up of the emotions. The spirit and teachings of Jesus are proving the saving salt of every situation and the regenerating power of every life, and to extend their influence in the lives of men is the most practical and genuine service. Let us not lose faith in the place and power of evangelism, nor fail to make the most of it for lack of prayer and planning.

The Rights of Religious Minorities

One of the outstanding dangers accompanying the boiling of the political pot of Europe is that some minority group shall be denied religious liberty, which is such a highly prized legacy in this noble land of ours. The strong arm of the Catholic church is ever extended to snatch away such liberty, where conditions favor such a policy. There is a growing American interest in the protection of the religious rights of the various small racial or sectional groups, and this interest finds expression in an organization known as the American Committee on the Rights of Religious Minorities, of which Dr. Arthur J. Brown is chairman. This committee has no official authority to correct abuses; it merely seeks to accomplish results by appealing to public sentiment. It does not concern itself with the nationalistic aspirations of any minority group, but limits itself strictly to effort in behalf of their religious privileges. It is very impartial in its expressed purpose, but the fact is, if it is to really accomplish the work to which it is set, and prove itself true to its name, it must often appeal for sentiment against the encroachments of Roman Catholicism.

Such an expressed purpose is entirely worthy, and the steadily increasing number of nationally prominent men to ally themselves with this movement bespeaks a growing interest in the distressed condition of the small, unfortunate and often suffering groups of the Old World. Dr. Brown said in a recent report:

"The failure of the United States to enter the League of Nations does not mean that Americans are not interested in the problems of the old world. Although outside the League, the American people have shown a strong interest in the sufferings of people impoverished by the Great War and have contributed millions of dollars toward European and Asiatic charities. It is unthinkable that Americans should be deaf to the cause of common humanity merely because their government has not joined an international organization, and it is equally unthinkable that their government should regard such activities with disfavor."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

"A Tract a Day," suggests Brother Porte. What an influence we would wield, if in all sincerity every one of us made an effort to pass some truth on to some one every day!

Ohio Endeavorers have their attention called to the state convention at Columbus, June 22-25. Prof. J. A. Garber urges attendance and Brother H. M. Oberholtzer of Columbus assures them of a jolly time at the Brethren rally.

From Clay City, Indiana, we learn that Brother Victor Leatherman is closing his work there with the close of August and that this splendid little church is in the quest of a pastor. Brother Leatherman has evidently made for himself a large place in the life of this community and church and the church is said to be in good condition.

Brother and Sister W. R. Deeter recently visited and conducted a two-weeks' meeting at Udell, Iowa, a former pastorate of theirs, and their services were greatly appreciated. Brother Deeter is pastor of the church at Portis, Kansas, where he is doing a constructive piece of work.

Brother George E. Cone, pastor of the Milledgeville, Illinois, congregation, informs us that his church has been suffering severely during recent months from the loss of members by death. Such a situation ought to constitute a challenge to those who remain in that church or any other church to fill up the ranks that the army of the Lord may not be weakened, but may go forward with undiminished vigor and power against the forces of evil.

Brethren people who are in the habit of attending General Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, will welcome the information that this religious center is being made safe from a health standpoint by carrying out the recommendations of the Indiana State Board of Health with reference to the permanent sanitation of the grounds, according to a statement over the signature of the State Health Commissioner, Dr. W. F. King, in this issue of The Evangelist. This ought to mean a still larger attendance at our conference, as well as an increased patronage of the numerous other notable events scheduled for Winona Lake.

"Rev. Charles W. Rush went to his death through a terrible accident at Fort Scott, Kansas, where he was pastor of the Church of the Brethren," we learn through the Long Beach, California, church bulletin. "Brother Rush's clothing was caught in the belt of a big rock crusher, causing him to be whisked into the machinery and twisted around a line shaft during 100 or 200 revolutions, before the machinery was stopped on account of the same, and he was discovered with his clothing torn to shreds, and practically every bone in his body broken." We join in extending sincerest sympathy to his loved ones. He was a former member of the Long Beach church and was there ordained to the ministry.

Brother H. E. Eppley writes of the closing of his five-year pastorate in Huntington, Indiana, and it seems that it must have been a rather pleasant experience, judging by the numerous expressions of respect and good will he and his good wife received. Of course the parting with friends is never a joyous occasion, but Brother and Sister Eppley had occasion to rejoice in the assurance that their stay and work in Huntington were abundantly appreciated. Brother Eppley announces that he will devote himself to evangelistic song directing during the coming year, beginning this fall, and he is now inviting engagements. He is to be addressed at Winona Lake, Indiana.

President Jacobs in his College News mentions the very inspiring and popular commencement address of Bishop W. F. McDowell before the Ashland College graduating class, but he fails to make reference to the excellent baccalaureate sermon, which was delivered by the president of the institution, Dr. Jacobs himself. We are privileged to pass on to our readers a digest of it in this issue. Two features of this commencement impressed us as having special significance: first, the large graduating class, largest in the history of the institution, and of such size as to indicate that Ashland College is no longer a really small college, and second, the manifest loyalty and enthusiasm on the part of the alumni, which bespeaks a future support that will guarantee a continued growth and increasing usefulness on the part of the institution.

The many friends of Brother H. V. Wall will regret to learn the sad news that reached the Evangelist office through the medium of the Long Beach church bulletin of his stricken condition. The item reads as follows:

Dr. H. V. Wall was suddenly stricken with a stroke of apoplexy during the night following last Monday evening. The sorrow and deep sympathy felt for Brother and Sister Wall has been felt at every service this past week. On Wednesday, Evangelist Ashman and the pastor anointed Brother Wall and since that moment the pastor at least, has had assurance that God will, in his own way, restore our brother to health, serious as this trouble is. The value of Brother Wall to our work is hard to estimate. It almost looks to us as if Satan has made his first attempt to discourage and defeat us as we set forth on the enlarged program for the work here. But, though Satan is mighty, our God is all-mighty. God can bury his workmen, if need be, and yet carry on his work. God makes no mistakes. His will, whatever that may be, be done. In the meantime, let prayer ascend mightily for our Brother Wall.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, makes report of the College Trustees pledge to the amount of $6,000 and only a portion of them have as yet been canvassed. This puts the dial hand around to $26,000, and from what we are hearing, Brother Bell is expecting to keep the hand going around at a very encouraging speed. Remember, this is your work, and you can help in other ways equally as necessary and effective as the giving of money, one of which is the giving of your heart in prayer to God daily that he may bless this most vital undertaking of our church. If it is a good work, it is of God and God must be implored to find friends for his cause. And prayer must surely be going up, for friends are being found, and they will be found in increasing number and with deepening consecration. One of the trustees whom God is blessing in a material way, remarked in a private conversation that he was in business for the Lord and that his purpose was to help finance the church. We have faith that God is going to raise up more and more of that kind of substantial friends for Ashland College, and that their future is destined to grow continually brighter because of them.

Dr. Charles A. Bame reports the dedication of the new church at Ashland, Ohio, where he is the able minister, and where he has done much to inspire the people to the accomplishment of this great work. Dedication day was a great event in the history of the Ashland church, the culmination of much struggle and numerous undertakings, the realization of a great hope, the meeting of a long-felt need and the answer to many a prayer. It ought to be, and doubtless is, the beginning of a new day for this church, which is more strategically located than any other church in the brotherhood, by reason of its being at the center of Brethren activities. It is a beautiful, substantial, commodious structure, such as the south side of Ashland has need of, and it has come into being as the result of hard work and sacrifice on the part of local membership, though its service to the student body gives it a claim on any possible support on the part of the brotherhood. Dedication day was also a great day because of what we heard and saw—Dr. Beachler's convincing and moving sermon of the morning and his masterful conduct of the money-raising campaign through the day, the scholarly and reassuring sermon of Dean Miller in the evening, the numerous musical features, the splendid fellowship of the afternoon and other contributing factors,—these made it a day long to be remembered.

The Challenge of the Hour to the Brethren Fraternities

Watchman, What of the night? Isaiah 21:11

By Freeman Ankrum

In this account related by the prophet, there is symbolized an oracle concerning Edom. Reference is being made to a time when the Edomites were endangered. As the people of the threatened city questioned the prophet, he gave them enigmatic answers implying that while the immediate future may look bright, danger and calamity are impending. Although it is a far cry from Isaiah's day to the present century, the question asked by the citizens of the city of the watchman on the wall is a timely question, even more so than when the events occurred, which are referred to in this chapter of the prophecy.

America has had over two hundred years of Tunkerism and there have been some valiant watchmen who have paced the lengths of the walls separating the church from the world. Ever and anon their cries have rung out upon the air, announcing the approach of the enemy. There may come from time to time the thought to those who are vitally interested in our beloved fraternity that our forefathers may have patrolled the walls in vain, and that the thread of descent has been broken with no one to take up the cry. They who took the word of God, no man writing their creed, gave to the world the thought, that anything more is too much and anything less is not enough. Have we strayed or been led away from the principles of our fathers? If we have not, are we not drifting in the great backwash of the world's immorality? What of the prayerful watchfulness and sacrifices of the man we all respect and revere.—Alexander Mack? What of others among whom we mention Becker, Libe and Saur?

They counted the cost and it was a cost of home, native land, the scenes of youth and the burial grounds of their fathers, all and in all like unto the leaving of Abraham for a land he knew not. Persecuted and threatened with even severer afflictions in the land of their nativity, exiles crossing the Atlantic with its passage of death that they might make other homes in the New World where they could have for themselves and their children religious liberty. Who can say that there was not behind many a cabin wall along the Wissahickon, at White Oak or Ephrata or many other places that might be mentioned, sad hearts yearning and longing for the green fields along the banks of the Eider? With the voice of the wind moaning through the pines and the leafless trees of the forests, the drifting snows on the cabin floors, and surrounded by the Indian and the animals of the wilderness, can you blame them when in fancy they walked again by Eider's crystal stream, breathing again the pure air of the mountains, meeting their friends and once again happy in the old home? Perhaps the crashing of an age old oak in the forest would bring them from their reverie and they would sturdily face the fact that they had come to endure all this that they might serve the Lord in his own appointed way. The snows have drifted for more than a hundred years over the rounded mounds where kind hands placed them, but the cause they loved so well, and for which they sacrificed so much still lives. The challenge today to us who stand in their places, is that we might acceptably and efficiently hold up the cause of Apostolic Christianity. We have espoused the cause for which our forefathers suffered so much and for which Christ died and may God help us that we may not prove false.

Personally, as one yet young and who happens to be a direct descendant of Alexander Mack the founder of Tunkerism, there comes a feeling that we cannot as members of the various Tunker fraternities efficiently and acceptably hold up the cause that our forefathers planted upon the shores of America unless we unite our forces, husband our resources and mutually strengthen one another. America has finally in a number of instances accepted those principles which our forefathers advocated, such as anti-slavery, Prohibition and even at the present time is not as hostile to the idea of non-resistance as in former years. Can we as churches and as different fraternities, who differ only in a small percentage afford to be less charitable than those forces who have outwardly and persistently refused nationally to advocate or honor those principles for which we stand? Can we afford to sacrifice national or even world wide attainments because of a few minor differences?

Perhaps there has never been a time when there was needed as much as now the union of all forces who have in common the defending of the Old Book, and the upholding of the Lord Jesus Christ and his advocated teachings. The world is afire, and, as Nero of old, instead of manning the hose, or mounting the walls, we call for the instruments of music and proceed to make merry in the face of heart-rending tragedy. We need men today who will pace the walls and in answer to the questioner within the camps tell him the truth and not alone what may please his ears. All too many times have the watchmen left the walls unprotected while they have consorted with those whom it is their duty to watch over and protect. Today is not a day when we can safely leave the citadel of our city unprotected. The enemy has used every subterfuge to undermine our choicest possession, the Bible, and has today endangered the Christian nations of the globe until men in high position are throwing up their hands in admission that if calamity is averted the Christian people must do it. While the watchers were dozing the enemies of light entered the churches and at many places have caused their capitulation.

Instead of a blood red Gospel there is a bloodless, fraternal, social Gospel. The Sacrificing blood of Christ is forgotten in the idea of "The Brotherhood of Man." To some, religion has become a mockery or a cloak to put on at appropriate occasions, it is a mere covering, not a cleansing and transforming power that drives the individual out into the highways and byways seeking those who have not experienced its touch. The Devil has assumed the cloak of the angel of light and deceived the very elect. Surely the time has come when we should think of the words given us by our beloved founder, Mack: "If in your associations you should come in contact with men who appear more holy than John, with more fiery zeal than Elias, more wonderfully miraculous than Moses, more mild, meek, humble, and spiritual than Christ and his Apostles, but do not walk in the doctrine of Christ, our crucified Redeemer, as it is recorded in the New Testament, and desire to lead you away from keeping the simple commandments of the Lord, Christ Jesus, you may be assured in your heart that they are false prophets and deceitful workers. Close your ears against their pernicious teaching."

Surely the author of the above words must have felt the inspiration of a higher power when he gave us those words two hundred years ago, which are so timely and so applicable to this modern age. With our state penal institutions crowded as they have never been before, and crime rampant on every hand until life and property are not safe anywhere, we have men pacing the walls and crying out that the day is growing brighter, the clouds are slowly disappearing and eventually the darkness will have been entirely dissipated. This day when the pews are but thinly populated and the coffers of the church contain little or nothing, while the seats in the places of amusement are full and the treasures of these institutions are running over. Apparently the day has come when the criminal element controls the majority. Legal favoritism has been mentioned so often that it has come to be taken as a fact. Homes have become mere cafeterias, handy places to sleep and storehouses for clothing.

Surely in the face of all the threatened catastrophe at the present time there should be the strengthening of every place in the walls and the union of every force of like faith. The moral signs are already at hand indicating that the day is already far advanced and will not be of much longer duration. There is no time to be lost, the burden has become heavier with the nearing of the end, the watchmen must increase their pace, strain their vision and shout loudly from their places of vantage to the hastening, restless throng.

The challenge of the hour to Tunker fraternities is the challenge to march shoulder to shoulder, on common ground against the oncoming destroyer of the fundamentals of Christ. The hosts of evil may differ on many things but they are united and inseparable on one purpose and that is to destroy the Divine Son of God. Temporal differences should not be allowed to be made permanent. Time itself has covered with flowers of forgetfulness many non-essential differences. The great fundamentals and they alone remain. I may be pardoned for thinking and also for stating that the Tunker fraternities are the custodians of the world's needs. As far as any limited knowledge is concerned no other can hand to seekers after the Lord Jesus Christ the New Testament and tell them that its contents constitute our creed. No, by uniting under one common head we cannot save the world, that cannot be done. What can be done is to pluck from the quicksands of death two where one has been saved before. The challenge is to us to pace the walls and cry out to the world in a language and manner that will be unmistakable, the dangers of the hour. As long as the gaps are left in the walls the watchmen cannot make their rounds. Surely God who has blessed both could look with more favor and added blessings when the ranks that have been broken present a solid front to the enemy. We of ourselves can do nothing, he can do everything.

"Got any rivers you think uncrossable?
Got any mountains you can't tunnel through?
He specializes in things thought impossible;
He does the things others cannot do."

While we chase and have chased our favorite phantoms, the name of Christ our Lord has been dishonored and his glory trailed in the mire, men and women have thrown up their hands in sinful hopelessness and discouragement and have sunk to rise no more. Who knows how much of this may be laid at our door? The world, the Book, and the Divine Son of God himself challenges us to arm in arm, side by side confront the foe, ere the evening come, and the battle be over. Then and then only will we be able to accomplish and realize how fully Matthew 28: 19, 20, Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and LO I AM WITH YOU ALWAYS EVEN UNTO THE END OF THE WORLD.

A Christian Giver's Decalogue

1. First give your own self unto the Lord (2 Cor. 8:5).
2. Inasmuch as God "giveth to all life, and breath and all things," and "in him we live, and move, and have our being" (Acts 17:25, 28), therefore recognize God's ownership of all your life, body, mind, will, affections, substance; and acknowledge your stewardship by sharing with him the benefits derived from all.
3. As 'a faithful and wise steward' (Luke 12:42), and in view of God's "Unspeakable Gift" (2 Cor. 9:15), invest every capacity and power of life governed by the meaning, opportunity, richness and hope which God's gift imparts to life.
4. Stand without fear on this promise: "God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye always having all sufficiency in all things may abound to every good work" (2 Cor. 9:8).
5. Give, but "not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 8:7).
6. "Bring all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:10).
7. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him" (1 Cor. 16:2).

8. "Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it" (Prov. 3:27).

9. "Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most High" (Ps. 50:14).

10. "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase. So shall thy barns be filled with plenty * * *" (Prov. 3:9-10).

REFLECTING THE ETERNAL

When the great Bunsen lay dying, he looked up into the face of his wife, who was bending lovingly over him, and said, "In thy face I have seen the Eternal." What a portrait of a Christian comforter that is, and of the beautiful ministry of comfort in our lives. It is the face of God seen in our face, as we bend above the fainting lives of our falling and fallen brothers. It is not merely a telling or a giving of something; it is an unveiling, a disclosure, an enabling; it is the impulse of the Divine pressing through all that we are, and making our friend feel what George Eliot once called "the touch like baptism."—The Continent.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

V. Elder P. J. Brown

By Martin Shively, D.D.

Among the men whose voices were easily heard above the roar of the ecclesiastical tempest of forty years ago, none occupied a more conspicuous and worthy place, than the subject of this sketch. From the standpoint of those niceties of speech, which distinguish men in public address, he might not have been accounted a great orator; but he was a splendid thinker, and when he spoke, he always had something to say, and he said it so convincingly and fearlessly, that folks were compelled to hear. Those whose cause he championed, heard him with delight, and most of those whom he opposed, were cowed into silence. His English was faultless, but it was unembellished. That he could use an embellished style of speech, was beautifully demonstrated in his masterly address at the Dayton convention, June 6, 1883 where he sounded the key-note of the organization which was there effected,—an address built round this declaration,—“Our creed is the Bible, the perfect law of liberty, interpreted in the light of common sense, and the best scholarship. Other creeds have we none, and will accept none, though we be called rebels, scismatics and fanatics.” The circumstances under which this utterance was made, after years of controversy, resulting finally in division, made it thrill every hearer to the point of ecstasy. And in the days following, never a crisis developed when he did not have a message full of wisdom, cheer and hope. He could not endure shams, and he had an almost uncanny gift in discerning them. And in his philippics against them he could be as merciless as death. His membership in the church militant, was a militant membership, for he knew what he believed, and why, and was absolutely without fear in the defense of his position.

Brother Brown was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, one of the summit counties in that rather mountainous state. Like the hills which are there everywhere in evidence, it has produced a splendid group of rugged men, not a few of whom held distinguished positions in the early Brethren ministry. In fact the communities adjacent to Myersdale and Berlin, have produced an unusually large group of the stalwarts of other days, and they are not without men of the same type in this day. These are sections made up, largely of folks whom we call the Pennsylvania Dutch, steady and high minded people. Brother Brown was one of these, and his speech betrayed his descent even to the end of his life. He was a man of middle height, well built, with muscles of iron. The hard work of his early life, contributed largely to the development of this powerful physique, and stood him in good stead in heavy drain which his later years brought. He studied dentistry as a young man, and until the end of his life, he served mankind in this field, as well as in the ministry. In the old days, when it was, by many people, thought to be a sin to pay a preacher for the services he rendered, he carried his dentists tools with him, and extracted the bad teeth of his stingy Brethren, and made false teeth to take the place of those which he had removed,—a service for which they were quite willing to pay, and thus he made a living for himself and his family. His tools were primitive enough, for he carried a pocket vulcanizer, which I warned him once would blow up, but which never did, and his dental work was quite as good as his sermons, and no higher compliment could be paid to

it. When his forceps gripped a painful tooth, that tooth gave no more trouble, because it came out of its setting, no matter how firmly established.

Brother Brown came to Wayne County, Ohio, in 1864, settling at Congress, where he lived until the end of his life. He had lived also in West Virginia, coming to Congress from there, though I know not when he had left his native hills in the Keystone state. He was ordained to the eldership in 1879, and grew rapidly into prominence in the denomination, which was then known as the German Baptist Brethren, having served as a member of the Standing Committee, the highest position attainable in that body. Both he and Brother Keifer were members of the Fairhaven congregation, serving as pastor there at various times, but in a large way, he was pastor of the entire brotherhood until the infirmities of advancing age made retirement imperative. Here he lived until the Lord whom he had so faithfully served, called him home to the rest which remaineth for the people of God.

I met Brother Brown first, in 1886, while I was a student in Ashland College, of which he was then a trustee. I saw and heard him first in action, at the first conference of the Brethren church, held in Ashland in 1887. No man could have been more kind or helpful to a young preacher, than he was to me, and a friendship grew up between us, which never waned until he was called home. His letters, of which I received many, were always helpful and encouraging, the last one having been written only a short time before his death, and which is still in my desk, gave evidence of a mind as clear, and interests as varied, as that of a man many years his junior. He is held in grateful and loving remembrance by all who knew him, and as I stood by his grave in the Fairhaven cemetery not long ago, bare of head and bowed in heart, there passed in swift review before me, the heroic life he had lived and the splendid service he had given, and I thought of the devout wish of the Psalmist, who must also have been thinking of a life worth while, when he said, “Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last days be like his.”

There were giants in those days, and P. J. Brown was by no means the least of these.

Ashland, Ohio.

WHY?

We have saved the soul of the man that killed.
We have turned to shrieve the thief,
We have worked and prayed, and have seen them made
And gave him our belief;
But for her that fell have we fashioned hell,
With a faith all stern and just.
It was so of old; and no man has told
What our Lord wrote in the dust.

For the men who thieved, and who killed and lied,
Who have slain the woman's soul,
We have worked and prayed, and have seen them made
All clean and pure and whole;
But we drive her out with a righteous shout
In our Pharisaic trust.
So the man goes free; but we did not see
What our Lord wrote in the dust.

The American Idols

By Floyd Tabor

("Bachelor's Oration" at Ashland College Commencement Exercises)

Man is by nature an idol worshipper. We think we have passed the stage of idolatry. But in a very true sense every race, every nation, and every individual has an idol or a number of idols which it worships. And the United States of America is not exempt. We have our national idols, and worship them with just as zealous devotion as the humblest African savage bestows upon his images of wood and stone.

Edgar Allen Poe pointed to one American idol when he said, "The Roman soldiers used to worship their standards. The Roman standard happened to be an eagle. The American standard is just one-tenth of an eagle—a dollar. But we make all even by worshipping it with a tenfold devotion." The statement is made so often as to become a truism—that the great mass of Americans measure success in terms of the dollar mark. When we pass the fiftieth milestone, and are nearing the end of the road, if you are riding a Rolls Royce, while I am trudging along on foot, your life is a success, and mine is a failure. We worship success, and we worship the dollar which brings success. This attitude has made us the richest nation on earth, and has made us proud of that fact. It has made us known the world over as a nation of money-grabbers and millionaires. A French text book commonly read by children in the schools of France contains this significant statement concerning the classification of railroad passengers: "Public officials, millionaires, and Americans ride first class." Not only in France, but in every nation under heaven, we are noted very largely for the fact that we worship at the shrine of the almighty dollar.

A second idol which calls forth the adoration of the American people is pleasure. Our annual offerings to the Goddess of Pleasure run into figures which stagger us and mean nothing to us because of their very bigness. They are half as large as the crushing war indemnity exacted by the allies from Germany, and which she demands two generations' time to pay. They would support every mission station in the world for over fifty years. A small portion of of these offerings has built up within a few years the next to the largest industry in the United States, the moving picture business. No matter how penurious we may be in our offerings to the God we worship on Sunday, we make up for it in our lavish worship of the Goddess of Pleasure during the other six days...

But I have in mind another American idol whose worship is more deep seated than either of those I have mentioned. This idol does not demand such ostentatious display in its worship as the other two, and so is more easily overlooked. For that reason it is far more dangerous than they. Its method of seducing its victims is so insidious that few of its worshippers realize their plight or would recognize their idol if they heard his name. Nevertheless he wields a mighty influence over his followers, and nearly every one of us is in his train. He is the great American idol of speed.

His power is felt ceaselessly in industry. The wailing word of every factory in the land rings out—Hurry, hurry, hurry—rush, rush, rush,—speed, speed, speed. Even though your back is aching, your health is breaking, your arm is quaking, still the cry is dinned into your ears—speed, speed, more speed. It is shouted by every official, from the manager to the lowest straw boss. It is roared by the machinery, as it heartlessly grinds and crushes and mangles its past victims and reaches out its clutches for new ones, crying with a fiendish laugh—speed, speed, more speed.

And this idol of industry has made his sway felt in every department of our lives. Even in our school system he wields a mighty scepter. From the time a child begins in the kindergarten he is hurried and rushed and crowded. If he shows enough intelligence to grasp the work of his own class, he is skipped into the next grade, and has to redouble his speed to catch up. He is urged to rush through high school in three years instead of four. And by the time he gets to college he is so used to speed that he falls naturally into the hurry and scurry and bustle of college activities. And by the time he leaves college he is so thoroughly imbued with the habits of perpetual activity and speed that they continue throughout his life. And the sad part of it all is that in our hurry and scurry and rush to get through life as rapidly as possible and do as many things as possible, we never take time to think. A college should be a place where young men and women learn to think. But instead it is a place where they are too busy to think. And if by his own volition, without any encouragement, some student does take it upon himself to spend some time in quiet, constructive thinking, and if by some miracle he is able to find a quiet place in which to do it, he is immediately sought out by a dozen organizations and activities, and tormented beyond measure, until in desperation he leaves his thinking, and jumps into the activities with his fellow-students. The thinking goes undone. The thinker is undeveloped. And the world goes on, still waiting in vain for leaders who can think.

If we are to produce men of renown, men of prowess, men who can do things worth while, men who will lead this old battle scarred world into a new era of justice and peace and righteousness and happiness, we must produce men who can think. Every great forward step in the world's history has been directed by a man or a group of men who took time away from the hurry and scurry and bustle of life, just to think.

We like to picture the apostle Paul, ceaselessly active, travelling up and down the highways and byways of the old Roman empire, and by his journeys transforming that empire and making a new world. We forget that before he made those journeys fraught with so much moment for the history of mankind, he spent three years in the desert, just thinking. And those three years made the apostle Paul the power that he afterward became.

We like to see Martin Luther nailing his theses on the door; we like to see him stand defiantly for his convictions in the Diet of Worms; but we forget that before those theses and before the Diet of Worms, he spent years secluded in a monastery, just thinking—thinking his way through the problems that confronted him, and reaching the convictions that have shaken the world.

If we are to produce men like Paul, men like Luther, men worthy to stand among the great of all time, men who will leave their impress on the world, we must produce not only men of activity, but also men of thinking. Thinking without activity is fruitless; but activity without thinking is vicious. And we are in very grave danger of committing the latter sin. Let us break down this giant idol of speed and activity that has such a death grip on us, let us break away from the ceaseless round of activities, and let us take time away from the world to think. And then we will be the ushers of a new age. Then we will make our activities count for good. Then we will be worthy of the name of college graduates.

Ashland, Ohio.

A convert in Uganda it is said was asked if he would undertake a certain task. He replied, "It is not for me to choose my work. Tell me what to do; I am ready to obey." How gladdened would the heart of many a minister be if his converts and workers in the church were thus ready for the work at hand; yea the heart of God would be made to rejoice.—Editorial in Herald of Light.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Some Unique Features of Christianity in Its Inception and Spread

By Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

(Baccalaureate Sermon at the late Ashland College Commencement)

TEXT: That I may know him—Philippians 3:10

On such an occasion as this, there are many questions which might rightly claim our attention, but it occurs to the speaker that the Christian college should not pass by such an opportunity to stress some fundamentals of Christianity. Hence the theme. I make no apology for the selection of this theme, notwithstanding the College has many interests other than religion.

1. It is well to note in the outset that Christianity was unique in that it went forward by what became a really new art, viz., preaching. Under its compelling urgency, this art spread until the preachers of the Gospel became the world's foremost orators. But what is vastly more important, is the underlying reason for preaching. Did not Socrates and Plato sit under some favorite plum tree, or on the porch of some customary temple, or at some familiar gate and WAIT for the youth of their day to come to them? Why not so now? For two reasons, first, the message was urgent. It could not wait. Secondly, the messenger was on fire. He could not wait. He had seen a great light and was so overwhelmed by the story of the Good News that out of that abounding new experience, he was compelled to seek out those whom he wished to hear it.

Now, I see no reason why all you graduates should not individually and severally contribute towards the Christianizing of the forces of our American life. Art graduates, 17; Science, 4; Education, 25; Seminary, 14; Music, 9; Oratory, 2—all of you are under peculiar obligations each in your own way, to assist in helping men to come to know him.

2. Christianity is unique in point of time for its inception. It did not just happen. Jesus can not be regarded as the produce of his time and hence be either explained or explained away. It is sometimes said that he came upon the scene when Rome was tottering and when Judaism was decadent and that he was fired by the oppression and corruption of his day, and he doubtless was, but that alone did not bring him forth as a preacher of righteousness. He was not an opportunist as the founders of many so-called religions have been. He did not awake one day to find himself in the possession of a programme, which when put into operation would make him both comfortable and famous, as many modern religionists have done.

Nor do his geographical surroundings possess elements sufficient to explain his advent. He lived near the sea, we are told, and must have seen the great Roman galleys of war go by on their way to world conquest. He lived near the trade routes and must have seen the eastern men going west and the restless western men going east. He might have even seen the blond Nordics from far away northern Europe. He must have been moved by the same spirit that later made Columbus turn his visionary gaze past the gates of Hercules. He lived in a semi-tropical climate and so on.

As if he lacked completeness and had to have completeness added! As if he needed some external thing to set him off and finish him up! As if he could be set down categorically, thus, 1. Jew; 2. Oriental; 3. Carpenter; 4. Galilean; 5. Teacher. In that rather stimulating little book, "The Man Nobody Knows", this element of his character is JUST THE ONE THAT IS NOW ALREADY BEST KNOWN AND MAGNIFIED. There is small need to stress the externalities of Jesus but there is need that one should come to know him in that transcendental, spiritual, and inner sense. That is the Jesus which nobody knows, if there is such an unknown personage. He is often called the Carpenter of Galilee, but there have been thousands of carpenters before and since that day. And, furthermore, what is a carpenter with adz, and square, and plane, when the world is on fire? Teacher? Yes, the world's greatest and yet there have been teachers.—Plato, Arnold, Mann, Hall, all possessing those qualities of heart which make them the teachers of not only their age but every age. And what is a teacher, with rule of thumb and books when men are lost to every high sense?

Christianity is unique in its very inception in that its founder came, not by will of man, but out of the great plan of God so that the world through him might be brought unto himself and be saved.

3. It takes the history of the whole compass of his majestic life to give anything like a reasonable account of his mission, his conception, birth, life, death, resurrection, and ascension. This is unquestioned. The Roman Catholic church even goes back to the conception of his mother, she must be without sin and his father must be God. His virgin birth is clearly set forth in the Gospel of Matthew. He must be divine. He must possess deity from the very beginning.

Our Worship Program

A DEVOTIONAL READING OF ROMANS
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

CONTROLLING PRINCIPLES—Rom. 12:9-21.

The apostle here pours forth directions for the moral and spiritual life that cannot be superseded anywhere; they are vital and of permanent value and will solve all difficulties, because they are founded on love.

TUESDAY

OBEEDIENCE TO RULERS—Rom. 13:1-7.

Civil power has divine sanction and it must be obeyed. It exists to promote the well-being of all, to punish the wicked, not the good, and so it has no terrors for those who render obedience, which is the Christian's duty.

WEDNESDAY

BROTHERLY LOVE—Rom. 13:8-10.

There is one principle which must control all our relations toward men, love. In any of the affairs of life here is to be found the root of all proper regulations.

THURSDAY

A MOTIVE FOR CHRISTIAN CONDUCT—Rom. 13:11-14.

The day of our final salvation is near, we are warned. We must therefore cast off our evil ways, gird ourselves with the armor of light and shun sin and self-indulgence.

FRIDAY

RESPECT ANOTHER'S SCRUPLES—Rom. 14:1-6.

Those who have grasped a fuller meaning of the Christian faith should be considerate of those who may be unduly scrupulous regarding particular practices. Neither should they be censorious.

SATURDAY

OUR LIVES INTER-RELATED—Rom. 14:8-13.

We must be concerned about and considerate of one another, because our lives are so inter-related, and Christ who is Lord of all, will hold us accountable.

SUNDAY

PEACE AND UPBUILDING—Rom. 14:14-23.

Our conduct and indulgence in unimportant matters should be determined not by personal inclinations alone, but by consideration of peace and the greatest mutual building up in character.—G. S. B.

He does not achieve dignity, whatever that may mean, as we may do, to use a popular expression. The Christian believers have held for a long period of years to his pre-existence, which belief the Bible account sets forth.

And then, there is his death. Why did he die? 1. Because he had offended the Roman government. 2. Because the Jews wanted him out of their way. 3. Because he thought that if men would not yield to the persuasions of his innocent life, they would to that of his death. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." 4. He died like a martyr, as Lincoln did. Yet, this death can not be explained by any of these. His death, to the believer, was essential for the salvation of mankind and so the cross becomes the center of Christianity.

But his death is not enough, he must arise, be glorified, and reign. He must ever live so that the Christian prayer becomes a thing of reality and power. The Master himself taught men to pray, and the whole Christian fabric is built upon the fact that Jesus was and is the Eternal Son.

The Class of 1926 has the distinction of being the first to graduate from this fine new church building. Others will sit where you now sit and hear words more precious than mine have been this afternoon. But, young people, the world will drag on and life will be as unhappy as now, prospects will be no brighter, and vantage points no higher, unless you each do your duty. College people are under peculiar obligations to the long historic past but none the less so to the future.

Let us so live and achieve that when sunset and evening star call we may go forward in heroic mood, with faith undaunted, and with a life behind us that has been victorious through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Ashland, Ohio.

Ten Ways to Spoil a Good Sermon

For Laymen Only

1. Hesitate about going to church, and then decide to go "as a matter of duty." This makes us feel like martyrs or "pillars of the church," either of which diverts our attention from our real spiritual needs.

2. Be peeved because somebody else got to church on time and "took our regular pew." And while we are doing this we might also feel indignant because a late-comer has to tramp all over our feet in getting past us to a vacant seat.

3. Feel disgusted because the hymn book in this (not our) pew is wabby. Also refuse to sing because the hymns are too high or too low for our voices. If we cannot get the proper kick out of those things, we can try being disturbed by Sister A. "screeching out of tune" and Brother B. "bellowing like a bull."

4. Be critical of the way the choir sings—and dresses. Remark to our companions, "I'll vote for black gowns instead of bare arms," and then add this postscript, "That anthem's as old as the hills, and still they can't sing it." The finest effect can be secured by blaming the preacher for having "that kind of a choir."

5. Let the minister do all the praying—by no means pray for ourselves, not even a tiny little prayer! Usually this leads us to see that the minister never prays for us—he always prays for himself and a few intimate friends. By this time we are sure there will be nothing in the sermon for us.

6. Right at this point begin to wish we had gone to another church—that one with the "popular" minister. At the same time we may also wonder about "lining up" with those who think we ought to get a new minister.

7. As the minister begins to preach, settle down to watch for statements that "hit" those we do not like. Just to make the game more interesting, also watch for evidences of "modernism" or "fundamentalism." And then if that does not speed up matters enough, watch for evidences that he is preaching to himself and family as much as to anybody else, if not more so.

8. Pay a great deal of attention to the minister's grammar, mannerisms, dress, and mistakes in pronunciation. We might also wish that he had a better voice and didn't wear those "big black-tired" spectacles.

9. Never once remember that we are not the only persons in the congregation, and that the minister cannot devote all the time to what suits us. Anyway, what right has he to say so many things that cause people we dislike to nod their heads in approval if they don't actually say "Amen" right out loud!

10. Suddenly remember that we would have been better off at home reading Dr. Pennyword's syndicated tabloid in the Sunday paper, or fishing around on the radio for a pleasing voice and a "snappy choir."

If we do all of the foregoing, or any five of them, we will find ourselves looking at our watches regularly along about the "secondly," and wondering how much longer the Old Wind-Bag will hold out. And when it is all over we will go home entirely unconscious of the fact that what was "dry as dust" to us was a message of encouragement and renewed hope to some others who came to the Lord's House that day in a spirit of humble piety. But why worry about that! Conference is only five months off, and then we may get a new preacher. Wonder if the flivver's tires are all "up?"—Frank Wade Smith in Western Christian Advocate.

The Redemptive Passion

Probably never in Christian history was there a larger body of secondary devotion and secondary relation to Jesus Christ than at this hour. It is not all meant to be secondary, but no relation or devotion to him can be primary that lacks the redemptive quality. We cannot get a Christian civilization except by way of spiritual redemption. "If we aim at reform or civilization, we shall fail. If we aim at redemption, we shall win." Jesus never got away from the primary position. He had not two centers for his life. And just as I can see no other level for life than Jesus's level, so I can see no other center for life than Jesus's center. We can never stand in true relation to him except by standing all the time where he stands—at the redemptive center of life and personality.

This purpose of redemption is what gave unity to his life, that set its key, determined its direction, created its spirit, and made it all of one piece. This gave direction to his earthly life as it began and kept it going steadily ahead to its end. This redemptive passion kept his whole life together in an evenly balanced, unbroken unity. This keeps it one through the centuries. What he was yesterday he is today and will be forever. The redemptive passion of Christ did not begin at Nazareth and end at Calvary. From before the foundations until this hour the Redeemer works. He was tempted over and over to become a reformer, a wonder worker, a superior teacher, but he kept on the high level and at the true center through it all, the redemptive level and the redemptive center. And there is no other way.—Bishop William Frazer McDowell, "The Interpretation of Life," in the Christian Century.

WAITING HIS TIME

So, then, ye who cannot do things ye would, ye spirits in prison, ye much-hindered and disappointed souls, ye men and women of struggle and sorrow, scattered in every congregation and outside of all, earth does not exhaust your chance. Your redemption from these cosmic bonds draweth nigh. Sometime and somewhere ye shall find your opportunity. O rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him; and he shall give thee thy heart's desire; and bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.—John Hunter.

The Quarter's Lessons Outlined (From Illustrated Quarterly)

A PAGEANT OF OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY

Many events are now being shown in moving pictures, where they are seen enacted before the eyes of the audience with the vividness of reality as they actually took place.

With something of the same vividness and reality the events and the persons we have been studying this Quarter should pass in review before us, so that we may see all the events and persons as parts of one great movement, and thus make a lasting impression on our memories and characters.

There will thus pass before us:

I. The Procession of Events from the beginning of creation to the elevation of Joseph.

Time. Unknown ages in the past to about 1700 years B. C., when we have the beginnings of a more definite chronology.

Place. The vast universe, the making of this world: Babylonia, Egypt and Palestine.

II. The Portraits of the Chief Persons with the places where each event occurred, and each person lived.

In reviewing these we should recall

1. What each teaches us concerning God our Father.

2. What each shows us concerning the progress and training of man.

3. What light shines from them on our path; what principles are revealed or exemplified that may guide us in our duties, what comfort or help we may gain for our daily needs.

THE PREPARATION OF A HOME FOR MAN

The scene of God's marvelous works of Creation.

The scene of God's wonderful Redeeming Love in Jesus Christ.

THE CREATION OF MAN TO LIVE IN THIS HOME

The forming his body from dust. The creation of his soul breathed into his body. The creation of Eve. Their first home, their work and dominion.

THE BEGINNING OF MAN'S EDUCATION
The story of the temptation, and the yielding to it of Adam and Eve.

The necessity of tests of obedience in moral education.

RESULTS OF THIS FIRST EXPERIMENT
What was the result to Adam and Eve?

Why was it best that they should not remain in the Garden?

The story of Cain and Abel.

THE NEW BEGINNING

Noah and his sons, the three great races of men.

THE BEGINNINGS OF THE HEBREW NATION

1. Abraham, the Hero of Faith; born in Ur of the Chaldees.

To what did God call him? Why was it an act of heroism and faith to go? To what country was he sent?

What great promises did God give him? (Gen. 12:1-3; 12:7; 13:14-17; 15:1-5; 15:6; 15:18; 17:1-10; 17:19; 21:12; 22:16-18). What

The Teacher

Lord, who am I to teach the way
To little children day by day
So prone myself to go astray?

I teach them knowledge, but I know
How faint they flicker and how low
The candles of my knowledge glow.

I teach them power to will and do,
But only now to learn anew
My own great weakness through and through.

I teach them love for all mankind
And all God's creatures, but I find
My love comes lagging still behind.

Lord, if their guide I still must be,
Oh, let the little children see
The teacher leaning hard on thee.

—Leslie Pickney Hill.

faith did it require to believe in the far distant realization of these promises?

Tell the story of Abraham's only recorded war against far greater numbers. Tell the story that proved that Abraham was a man of peace, and that he was unselfish.

Tell the story of Abraham's failure in faith when he went down into Egypt. Tell the story of his prayer for Sodom. Tell the story of his offering to sacrifice Isaac, and how it came out. Why did it require the largest faith possible? (Heb. 11:19).

In view of these facts:

What were the chief characteristics of Abraham? Was he worthy to be the ancestor of the Jewish nation? Has there been any better? Can you see a growth, progress, in his life?

2. Lot, Who Ran a Risk and Lost; the son of Abraham's older brother.

Tell the story of Lot. His choosing the best pastures instead of offering them to his Uncle Abraham. Pitching his tent toward Sodom. Dwelling in Sodom. Destruction of Sodom.

A character sketch of Lot.

3. Isaac the Peaceable; the son of Abraham and Sarah; the son of the promise.

The story of his marriage to Rebekah. The difference between their characters. The childless home. The coming of the twins. A character sketch of Isaac.

4. Esau, the Waster.

What was the best thing Esau possessed? Why and for what did he sell it? Was it a fair bargain? Would God's purpose have been carried out if Esau had kept the birthright? Should he have sold it even so? What birthrights are sold today?

A character sketch of Esau.

5. Jacob the Shrewd.

Why did he buy the birthright from Esau? Did Jacob know that he was best fitted for the birthright? The story of how Jacob and his mother obtained the birthright. Doing right in a wrong way.

The story of the dream-ladder to heaven. Was this the means of Jacob's conversion? Can you see a change in his life afterwards?

Jacob at the home of Laban. Jacob as a business man: was he too clever and shrewd?

Jacob wrestling with the angel at Peniel. Jacob and Esau reconciled. Jacob's new name. Character sketch of Jacob.

6. The Twelve Sons of Jacob.

Where were they born? Who were their mothers? Name the twelve tribes; the twelve sons became the twelve tribes.

What was the character of the sons (omitting Joseph)? Can you trace any reason for their character in (1) their mothers; (2) their birthplaces; (3) Jacob's character?

7. Joseph the Faithful.

The character of Joseph as contrasted with his older brothers. What advantages did he have over the others? Joseph the favorite son and its influence.

Was he wise to tell his dreams? How and when were they fulfilled?

Was it his duty to report to his father the wrongdoings of his brothers?

Tell the story of his being sold as a slave. To whom? What was his religious character as a slave? The tragedy of his father. Show God's providence in this bitter experience.

Joseph in prison and what came of it. Show the steps by which he came to be ruler over Egypt next to Pharaoh.

Joseph as ruler of Egypt. Is there a trace of Jacob's shrewdness here? The conditions of feeding the people, were they too hard? Compare with famine experience in our day.

Joseph and his brothers. What could Joseph have done if he had wished for revenge? The reasons for his harshness. Would it have been wise to forgive them at once if their characters had not changed? What proved the change in their characters?

An Example of Missionary Endeavor

A remarkable instance of missionary enthusiasm and efficiency was reported in the Christian Endeavor World some months ago. It is so inspiring and exemplary that we pass it on for the benefit of our Endeavorers. It is the missionary committee of the Emmanuel Presbyterian church of New York, and it is said to have been so active that it was necessary to give over a whole meeting to a report of its activities.

This church is located in the most densely populated district in New York, 500,000 people living within the square mile of which the church is a centre, 97 per cent of them Jewish. It is a missionary enterprise of the First Presbyterian church of New York City; and as there is no necessity to contribute to the church expenses, the Christian Endeavor society turned their attention to missionary giving as an outlet for their desire to give for their Master.

In 1923 the members raised among themselves $80 which was used to pay a year's tuition for two Chinese girls who wished to study to become missionaries in their own country. Last year a fair was held to raise $100 for another year's tuition. The result far exceeded the expectations, as the sum of $500 was raised. This was used in several ways. The tuition for the complete course was set aside for the two girls until needed; and the balance of $200 was given to Concord Hospital, Shanghai, China; Ganado Mission School, Ganado, Arizona; Sheldon Jackson School, Sitka, Alaska; and to the Near East Relief. Contributions were also made to the Church Deacons' Fund, the Christian Endeavor Fresh Air Fund, and to the Southern Manhattan District union.

The missionary committee also reported sending a case of 425 Bibles and hymnals and other case of religious literature and magazines to the State prison-camp, Atlanta, Georgia. They also paid for the cost of sending 268 books to the Hospital Book Society of New York City. The society has taken a special interest in the Sheldon Jackson school at Sitka, Alaska. Their third annual gift last Christmas consisted of 183 toys.

Miss S. Begloff, the chairman of the missionary committee, writes, "The spirit of giving is one of the outstanding features of the Emmanuel Christian Endeavor Society, and its members have enjoyed the work so much that they hope and trust they will always be able to give their gifts in his name and for the advancement of his work on earth."

Something New

Keep your society bright and fresh. To do this, it is not necessary to make a fetish of novelty, but merely to do a little planning ahead. For instance, the prayer meeting committee may easily manage it so that each meeting of the entire year will incorporate just one new plan. Some topics suggest the plan without further search. One calls for a question-box, another for an outdoor meeting, another for a joint meeting with the Juniors and Intermediates, another for a patriotic meeting, and so on. You will save your novel plans for meetings that do not carry the stamp of freshness in their topics.

And remember: only one novelty to a meeting. It may be a leaderless meeting. It may be a meeting all of prayers, or all of illustrations, or all of quotations with comments, or all of one-minute essays, or all of answers to questions. Changing the position of the chairs is a sufficient novelty. Introducing a society quartette is ample change. A ten-minute speech by some bright outsider will make a notable meeting. A reversed meeting, with the benediction at the beginning and the leader's talk and opening prayer at the close, will be remembered.

Christian Endeavor has developed a multitude of these ideas—far more than fifty-two of them. And as you use them one year, note how each one works, and pass your experience along to next year's prayer meeting committee. The same programme of novelties may be used with entire effectiveness year after year.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

(Topic for June 27)

Radio Messages from Japan Micah 6:6-8

Hello, Junior Christian Endeavorers of America:

When I was talking to our missionary teacher, the other day, she told me that I might talk to you today over the radio. I think it is nice that we boys and girls in other countries can talk to you Christian boys and girls in America. My teacher told me that you had received these radio talks from quite a number of the children of the world in different countries. I think that is wonderful, don't you?

My name is Meno Kiwari. I am nine years old. I have been here in the Mission school since I was a very small boy. I was too small when I first came here to realize what a blessing it was that I could grow up under Christian training. Would you like to hear the story of my coming into this wonderfully kind place?

Years ago when I was only about three years old, my father and mother and I lived in a small hut far away from the cities, near one of the mountains of Japan. We were very poor. Mother and father worked whenever they could find any work to make enough money to get us food and clothing. One day when father was in a little village several miles from our home, there was a man who came to the village and talked to the people. This man seemed to be very kind and very wise, for father saw him helping some people who were sick.

Do you know that when people are sick, over here and they have the doctors of our land try to help them, they nearly always get worse instead of better? There was one man who had cut his foot and had gotten dirt in it so that it became poisoned. He called for a Japanese doctor and what do you think that doctor did? He kept sticking the sick man with red hot needles to let out the evil spirit as he called it. When the kind man that father saw came to town, he put medicine on the cut foot and he got it all clean, then he bandaged it up. Soon it was better and the poor man could walk again. Another thing that father saw the kind, visiting man do, was to help a little child who had a fever. The Japanese doctor had been making this child worse by the treatments that he was giving. The kind doctor cooled the child's fevered body and gave the parents some medicine so that soon it was all right too. Can you imagine how surprised my father was to see anyone who could do such wonderful things as that? We did not know that there was anyone in the world who could really make sick people well again.

After seeing all these things, father was naturally interested in hearing the message that the missionary, for that is what this kind man was, told. There was a great crowd gathered around as the wonderful words about Jesus were told. When the wonderful message was finished, many people promised to love Jesus and to live better lives for him. Father was among those who were converted. When he came home and told mother and me, mother wanted to hear the missionary too. I was too small to know much about all these things at the time. Mother did not get to hear the wonderful words of the preacher for when we went to the village the next day the preacher had left and was preaching at some other place. Father taught me to say, "I love Jesus," and he and mother learned to pray but they could not read the little Bible that father had gotten, for neither of them knew how to read.

One day about a year after all of this happened, I got very sick. Father and mother loved me very much and they did not know what to do for me. They did not want to have the Japanese doctor for father said the Japanese doctor did not know what to do for sick people. Several days passed by and I kept getting worse. Finally father and mother talked and talked together and decided to take me to the missionary doctor. It was a very long trip. We traveled for days. Father cooled my head and helped to keep me as comfortable as he could by the methods that he had seen used in the little village with the sick child there. Finally we arrived and the

Tales of Tribal Customs. No. III

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

Chapter I

A Witch Doctor's Conversion

Rabolo (bananas), the chief, sat in his village. It was a time of peace, a period of welcome sensation even to the warlike African from the strenuous activities of war.

Around him played some of his numerous children, for Rabolo had many wives. His enemies, the Balendu, a warlike tribe living near his border had often been defeated by him in battle. Rabolo thought contemptuously of the Balendu. They were a mixture of the Nile Negro with those from the Western Sudan, the land of the setting sun, and had not indeed the strength and virility of his own race. The rules of tribal warfare gave him two-thirds of the spoils and every time his men returned victorious from battle with the captured wives of the victims they had slain, only one-third of them were allotted to other men, and these were divided among those only who had proved themselves to be heroes.

He watched the children as they played with crude sticks and stones, the African counterpart of the English game of hockey. Katalanu (ants) was the most skillful of all. He was proud of Katalanu who after his own death and that of the eldest of his brothers, would succeed him in the chieftainship. Obim was not half so clever. He watched him in his awkward play with his ape-like motions, "He was well named," he said, as he thought ruefully of the Balendu mother who had died shortly after his birth, died from homesickness, no doubt, for her own people and her own husband.

Opiera (back) was the son of an Aluru woman. "'Twas worth while," he thought as he watched him, "worth while to pay the dowry demanded even from a chief like himself for women of his own tribe. For he was proud of Opiera's strength and skill. There was little Aeinge (arm). He would be selling her now soon to old Omindian, the witch doctor. True Omindian had many wives and Aeinge was but a child, but Omindian had sufficient cattle to pay well for her. In fact some of these cattle were already in Rabolo's herds for among the Aluru wives are frequently bought on the installment plan.

Aeinge loved Obongo (cloth) but not by her own choice nor by his would she be given in marriage, but by her father.

Omindian was a cruel man, this witch doctor, but always, so Rabolo soliloquized, it pays to have a witch doctor for a son-in-law. When the child of Olei (the axe) his enemy, had died and Olei had accused his daughter Atero (the arrow) married to Unona (the eat), of witchcraft, how much it would have meant to have had Omindian for a son-in-law then! For when Atero had to pass through the poison ordeal if Omindian had been his son-in-law then, he might have given Atero something innocuous instead of that dread poison which had terminated her life. And when Oiyi (the crocodile) his second son had suffered from that dread disease, the yaws, Omindian might, had he been his son-in-law then have given him some healing balm, instead of isolating him in that little hut near the road, with only water and "bel" porridge to eat, until he died, not from the disease only, from which one may recover, but from starvation and confinement. An astringent might have been given for Oyobo's (the buffalo's colitis) and a gruel for the inertia of Osogo (the bone) instead of handling the cases in exactly the opposite manner, if Omindian had been his son-in-law then.

And that green paste which he had daubed on the ulcers of Otumu (the breast) ah well, it would pay to make friends, if possible with so dangerous and deadly a foe, even though little Aeinge must be sacrificed.

For in Africa a witch doctor has great power. Absolutely in league with the demons and other powers of darkness, administering his concoctions of dangerous poisons, or of innocuous herbs, indiscriminately, according to avarice or hatred, and not according to the needs of the patient, small wonder that the great chiefs like Rabolo, whose powers and prowess are merely physical, and who are not in league as is the wizard with the occult, should desire to form an alliance with him.

Rabolo shuddered as he thought of the ordeal through which he might have to pass if the poisoning of Aremo (blood) was found to have been by his own hand. He must make Omindian his friend, and as speedily as possible a member of his family. Else who would stop the ordeal gourd with its crushed mimosa for him, Rabolo, that it might not leak on his own guilty hand and remove the mimosa for the one who should have been previously chosen to bear his guilt? He roused himself and looked around him once more. The children had ceased playing. Each was now busy about his or her own village duties. Aeinge and Alatin (the child) the only two remaining unmarried daughters of Rabolo, were busy bringing eleusine grain for the making of beer, from the small thatched granary built of interlaced twigs, infilled with mud.

Aeinge was about nine years of age. Alatin was only five and would probably not be betrothed for two years to come. As they had no younger brothers, Rabolo himself would receive the marriage price of both, it being the customs for the sons to receive the marriage price of elder sisters. Aeinge would bring him a good price. Her skin was very dark, a mark of special beauty among the Nilotic negroes, who are the darkest of all the dark skinned races of Africa. Her hands and feet were exceptionally small, and she bore the usual tribal characteristics of an especially long fore-arm with rather more than the usual grace. Her abundant hair now hung loosely about her face in marked contrast to the numerous plaits of the married women. Already her lips had been pierced and a stone pencil inserted through each. She wore no clothing whatever, not even the tail of string which she would don after her marriage and which would be her badge of servitude. Alatin was her counterpart in many ways, possessing however less of beauty and grace. The two girls slept in a separate hut under the professed care of old Akama (body) although chastity even among young girls was a thing unknown. Aeinge had been betrothed at seven. She would be married at ten. Meanwhile she continued to serve her father, and even now as we have seen, was engaged in the preparation of the beer made when honey was not in season from the eleusine grain, and consumed indiscriminately by both sexes, each sex, however, drinking separately. The village was surrounded by a dense thorn hedge, just inside of which was a stockade of stout poles, supposed to be a protection from marauders without.

Missions to Lepers

At the annual meeting of the American Mission to Lepers in January the reports of officers and addresses of missionaries indicated a high degree of devotion to and general interest in the work of cleansing lepers in the Master's name. This was well brought out by the Treasurer, Mr. Fleming H. Revell, who called special attention to the economical management of the Mission's funds, which makes it possible for the Mission to own and manage, in conjunction with the British Society, seventy hospitals and asylums, besides aiding in special ways many others, and all this on the very limited income of less than $200,000 annually. The receipts for the year 1925 were $169,729, a gain of $23,000 over those of 1924.

Dr. H. A. Lichtwardt, of the American Presbyterian Hospital in Meshed, Persia, told about a group of 120 lepers who live in extreme poverty and neglect about two miles from his hospital. These lepers lack the initiative to come two miles to the hospital for treatment, so he proposes to go to them with both medicine and the comfort of Christian teaching. "We have health and strength and clothing and food," he said in conclusion, "we have a message of salvation which comes through knowing Jesus Christ, and these people are living in misery and degradation, having none of these things. We must give them the light and the life and the hope that comes through actual physical cure and through knowing the Christ, the Great Healer."

Dr. Donald Forman, of Naini, India, told how the leper colony there has been rid of epidemics of hookworm and malaria, which retard the beneficial effect of the treatment.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

A LEADERSHIP THAT LEADS

The church is indebted in a large measure for the management, plans and directing of its educational work to THE BOARD OF COLLEGE TRUSTEES. This Board is composed of thirty-five members, three of whom represent the City of Ashland, Ohio. These men are chosen by the District Conferences and represent our churches from different parts of the United States: They are elected for three years and meet annually in Ashland, Ohio, in transacting the business of the College, the selecting of teachers, passing on diplomas granted and outlining the general policy of the institution.

The members of the Board are carefully selected and include men of high standing in the business and professional world. For example in the legal profession we have Judge F. O. Switzer of Indiana, an Alumnus of Ashland College, and Attorney Orion E. Bowman of Ohio, who is President of the Board, also Ray Emmert of Iowa, a successful attorney of Des Moines. Among leading business men, we have E. L. Kilhefner, Frank Lichty, George T. Ronk, Henry V. Wall, A. C. Hendrickson, E. E. Lichty, William Shaffer, Glenn Locke, E. J. Worst and A. R. Bemenderfer. This list of men include oil operators, bank directors, manufacturers, builders etc. We have one banker, Frank Clapper of Louisville, Ohio. Also a director and Superintendent of Schools, Professor J. H. Young of Sylvania, Ohio. In the list are men of high standing in the agricultural districts, such as C. Rowland, Samuel P. Hoover, E. F. Miller, Ingvall Johnson and D. W. Early. Representing the ministry and church policy are such men as A. B. Cover, G. C. Carpenter, L. S. Bauman, R. R. Teeter, C. C. Haun, W. C. Benshoff, J. Wesley Platt, J. C. Beal, H. F. Stackman, Charles H. Ashman and W. S. Bell.

The city of Ashland which has in the last few years taken special interest in the College and gave $50,000.00 toward the erection of the new Library Building, who with the county of Ashland is planning to put on a big Financial Campaign this fall to duplicate our church Endowment Campaign; is represented by three trustees, who are elected annually, the men now serving are the representative business men of Ashland—J. L. Clark, P. A. Myers and George Hildebrand. Edwin E. Jacobs, president of Ashland College is an ex-officio Member of the Board.

The service given by the members of the Board is a service of love, for they receive no financial compensation and besides pay their own traveling expenses. These men have the interest of Ashland College on their hearts and are doing their best to make it one of the leading colleges in America.

In planning THE ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN TO MAKE ASHLAND A STANDARDIZED COLLEGE, they are leading the way, less than half the members of the Board have been solicited and at the present time they have contributed $6,000.00 to the MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN. Among these gifts we have a few of $1,000.00 and have every reason to believe that the gifts of the Board of Trustees will go over $10,000.00. THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES MOVES THE HAND ON THE DIAL THIS WEEK $6,000.00 NEARER THE GOAL—LET EVERY MAN AND WOMAN STAND WITH THESE MEN AND HELP PUT THIS CAMPAIGN OVER.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Commencement passed off as scheduled. Bishop McDowell of Washington, D. C., gave the class address in the new church. All other commencement events were held in the College Chapel except the Baccalaureate services.

The Annual Alumni Banquet was a brilliant affair. It was the first held here for a period of years and was well attended, over 140 being present. This gave an opportunity for those to attend who can not get to Conference. So I think that two such events, one here in June and one at Winona in September solves the problem.

The graduating exercises were well attended and the young people did well. The class was seated on the platform and numbered an even 80. The usual orations, etc., were given and the usual degrees conferred. No honorary degrees were voted this year.

The Summer School opened Monday, the enrollment will be reported later.

There were the usual number of parents and friends in attendance. When the students had gone the Hill for a few days seemed lonely. Then Summer school started and all is activity again.

Practically all of the graduates have definite plans for the coming year and those who desired to teach have places. We could have placed even more men than we had, as men who are familiar with athletics are always in demand.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

AFTER FORTY YEARS

After forty years of waiting, longing and praying, the Ashland Brethren church has a church building. It was dedicated to the Lord for service and worship, May 23rd, 1926. Dr. Wm. H. Beachler was the main man of the day and did his part in his usual effective way. Arriving professedly tired, he did the work of the day without any sign of fatigue, selling church investments in three services and ending strong in his final and successful appeal for the last thousand of the day in the evening service on five dollar pledges and gifts. He preached the first sermon of the day. His subject was, "The Church as an Investment." In the afternoon service, addresses were delivered by the President of the City Ministerial Association, Rev. Newton Moore, and a leading citizen, Mr. Harry Hess, nephew of the late Dr. Hess, giver of generous sums to the College in the recent past. In the evening, Dr. J. Allen Miller just back from a three-months' tour of Europe, Egypt and Palestine, preached the sermon.

Splendid music by the Choir, the Men's Glee Club and the Girls' Glee Club, Miss Coons on the harp, and The Chater Trio on their violins, all made the day replete with joy and gladness. And the people had a mind to give. While we came $20,000 dollars from the goal of having the entire cost pledged, we were well pleased that we had come that near. Three-year pledges were taken for $18,000. This we think, is quite commendable for this small kroup of less than 200 active members and doubly so when you remember that this church is composed so largely of people who have been giving to Ashland College every year—ah, every few weeks—for all their lives. A pipe-organ not yet installed is the gift of public-spirited citizens of our city; its total cost will be some five thousand dollars and is an added blessing that this church did not expect to have for years to come. One thousand dollars was the gift of another of Ashland's richest men.

Next Sunday we shall have baptism in our baptistry. We hope and expect that this shall be often repeated and the beginning of greater things in Ashland Brethren history.

History of the Congregation

The First Brethren Church of Ashland, as now constituted, and as formally incorporated in the state of Ohio on October 30, 1917, is the successor to the German Baptist Brethren which was organized in Ashland by Elder S. Z. Sharp in 1879. Passing through the reconstruction period of that time the local church was left without any particular oversight after March, 1883 until the reorganization later in the same year.

In the early years of the church there were times when no special minister was designated as pastor, but the preaching was done by different ministers who were members of the local congregation.

For more than forty years the congregation worshiped in the chapel of Founder's Hall, Ashland College, and much of the preaching was done by either the president of the college or by one of the members of the faculty.

was accepted and once more plans were drawn and the beautiful and commodious church now standing on this tract of land was begun in September, 1925.

Brief Description

The architecture of the church is Gothic, executed in red rug brick with chocolate mortar trimmed in art stone.

The main auditorium has a seating capacity of more than 300 with a possible increase to 750 by opening the gallery and Sunday school rooms at the rear. These rooms have been assigned to the Beginners, Primary, and Intermediate departments of the Sunday school; three departmental rooms below, and four above.

The auditorium, a rectangular structure 50 x 80 feet was placed lengthwise to the street that future additions might easily be made without marring the present building. Two approaches were thus made possible; one in the main tower to the pulpit and choir rooms; the main entrance admits to the Sunday school rooms, the main auditorium, and by stairs to the gallery and basement.

At the front of the church is the pulpit, a part of which is the organ console and just behind, and above one step, is the choir with entrance rooms on either side. These rooms will also be used for robing rooms during baptism, for between them is the baptistry, a beautiful and commodious cement pool with facilities for warming the water and changing the depth.

Above the baptistry and to the rear of the choir is the organ loft and through four ample openings will pour forth the colorful tones of the fine organ. To the left of the baptistry is another splendid room which may be utilized for a study, office or small class room. Another good room is located in the tower above which is the bell donated by a friend of the congregation.

The entire floor of the main auditorium is covered with velvet carpet underlaid with a deep padding so that complete silence can be maintained in the seating of the congregation.

The windows are an example of beauty and harmony, in blue and amber, designed especially for this structure and architecture. The finish of the main auditorium is in red gum, stained to a dark mahogany color with all furniture stained to match. The entire furnishings of the auditorium interior were presented by the ladies of the church.

Few basements can compare with the one in this church. Located on the side of a hill, the east side of it is entirely above ground. The floor is of maple over cement. The walls are all treated against water and dampness, and the entire room is fit for any service which may be demanded of it. A ladies' rest-

BUILDING COMMITTEE

FRONT ROW:—Mayor B. Frank Zercher, J. L. Hamilton, Dr. R. R. Teeter, Chairman, Andrew Miller, Secretary-Treasurer.

A few small gifts came from brethren not members of Ashland's Brethren church, but none that made much of a dent in the total. For these small gifts we offer our thanks; but we feel that we have a right to other gifts from Brethren who have money from many places. Nothing is planned in this church that does not include students and gifts here will mean blessings to them in the crucial time of their lives when a splendid service and a good going church will mean much.

Last night, we hold our Communion Service on Memorial Day evening so that the students could avail themselves of this service, since they would miss it at home. We are sure we have a claim here; we hope others will see it that way and help.

About fifteen years ago a lot was secured on Main street and plans were drawn for a church building, when it was decided by the congregation that the time was not ripe for the building and the plan was abandoned. About eight years ago another lot was secured on a residence street, but near the center of the city, and plans were again drawn for a more pretentious church than had been formerly planned, but war prices for all construction work at that time caused the building program to be again postponed. However, in March, 1925, Brother E. L. Kilhefner purchased a tract of ground with a frontage of 151 feet and a depth of 210 feet, one and one-half blocks from the College, which he offered to the church as a gift if they would proceed to erect a house of worship thereon. The gift room and toilet are at one end of the basement and a toilet for the men at the other end. A commodious kitchen well equipped by the ladies of the church will supply the necessities of the church along social lines and together with the big basement auditorium, will provide for the functions which this church has heretofore been denied. Well lighted and ventilated, no group will find a better meeting-place than this for almost any proper church function. The heating system of vacuum vapor already well tried and tested, have proven most satisfactory. A huge fan in connection with the forced-air ventilating system will provide a continuous circulation and change the air every few minutes.

To Reep and Spreng, architects of our city, and Mr. Howard C. Reep, designer; To Snyder Brothers, Contractors, of Carey, Ohio, and Mr. Grover C. Snyder, who personally supervised the construction; to the Building Committee, whose picture and names appear elsewhere, who spared neither pains nor time to perfect, complete and economically to construct this building; the church and people of the city of Ashland owe a debt of gratitude.

Many splendid comments are heard from our citizens about the beauty and symmetry of our church. It is located in a good neighborhood, far away from any other church and needs but a unified, consecrated, faithful, working membership, to make its mark of growth, numerically and spiritually and become the power in our city that this fine group of people ought to command. Pray for us that we may measure up to the demands of our opportunity. Help us if the Lord leads you to do so.

CHARLES A. BAME, Pastor.

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

Our little church again faces the proposition of securing a pastor.

Brother Leatherman has been with us for about three years. He has been a splendid preacher for us. During his pastorate here he has not only become beloved by the people of the church but through his church work and his interest in, and support of the general community uplift, he has won the good will and highest respect of the public generally.

In fact, it seems that just at the time when conditions have become most favorable for him to do the greatest good, he is called to a larger church where we trust he will, if possible, be of greater service to the Master.

During his stay with us the church has not only had a reasonable growth in numbers but it has likewise increased spiritually, having been fed on the real food of the gospel.

Though we are sorry to see him leave we are glad of the fact that he leaves the church in a good, healthful, growing condition. The fullest harmony prevails among us and we trust the Spirit will direct in filling the position made vacant by his departure. He is to leave us September first.

We are sure it is the desire of our whole people that the Master's will may guide us and that he may send us such a servant as will be able to do his will and bring the greatest glory to his name in this portion of his vineyard. MARTIN R. GOSHORN.

HUNTINGTON—FIVE YEARS

The writer moved to Huntington, Indiana, five years ago April first. On February fourteenth his resignation was read and on May sixteenth the work was formerly closed. Many problems were faced during this period. There were some steps in a forward direction and which should tend to make the work at Huntington stronger and mean much for future building. It is the conviction of the writer, without going into details, that the Huntington church is in as good condition to go forward and build substantially as it has been at any time in its history. May it ever go forward in the work of the Master.

Community Farewell

During the entire five years we lived in the same community. On Friday, May seventh, the writer and his wife went down to the business district to do some shopping. When we returned we found the house full of neighbors, the dining room table had been drawn to its full capacity and was stacked with "cats," in the kitchen the ladies were preparing more "cats", and the welcome we received to our own home when we opened the door was "surprise." And it was indeed a surprise. Not a hint of the plans had reached our ears. A wonderful dinner was served in a short time and a jolly time indulged in by all present.

Ministerial Farewell

On the following Tuesday evening the ministers of the city and their wives prepared and gave a farewell dinner in our honor. An unusually large attendance greeted us and a most delightful dinner was served. After the dinner, speeches of a complimentary nature and mixed with well wishes were made by all present. It was a very pleasant manner to retire from the vice-presidency of the association and to bid farewell to fellow pastors.

Church Farewell

On Monday evening following next under the pretense that we were to eat supper with one of the families of the church we were again surprised. This time we were allowed to get to the home. After a short time had passed we were told we must attend a special board meeting at the church. When we arrived we found the basement filled with tables and loaded with good things to eat. The church was there almost 100 per cent. Only a few were missing. Everybody seemed to be trying to do their best to give us a happy farewell. After every one had shared the sumptuous supper we were informed that we had to sing. Of course any one who has ever gone through something like this will know we could not sing much. However, after we had tried, a mysterious package made its appearance and was given to us. In it was a handsome and very valuable present. After a little more visiting all went to the church auditorium where solos, duets, quartets, readings, and mass singing were enjoyed. It was an evening not soon to be forgotten. Thank you, Huntington, we will not soon forget. May the Master of all abundantly bless and prosper you.

Future Program

We are now located at Winona Lake in the Jackson cottage on the Island. Our address will be L. B. 266. We will be here during the entire summer and will have charge of the motor boats. Work will be taken in the Rodeheaver school of music to further prepare for the work of song directing. Beginning at the close of the National Conference I will be engaged in this work. Any church wishing a song director during the coming season should arrange for dates at once. This early announcement is made to give Brethren churches first opportunity. H. E. EPPLEY.

UDELL, IOWA

Rev. Deeter of Portis, Kansas closed a two weeks' meeting at the Udell Brethren church on Sunday, May 16, 1926, with three services and a basket dinner on that day. He was accompanied here by his good wife who helped with the song service.

The people of Udell and vicinity were indeed very glad to have Rev. Deeter and wife with them again even though their time was limited.

They visited in many homes while here and had invitations to more homes than they could visit, as their stay was limited. It was a very busy season of the year for the farmers, but the attendance was good and the interest also was very good.

There were no additions to the church during the services but the members were very much strengthened and we feel that the church and community was helped very much by the meetings.

Rev. Deeter was pastor of the Udell Brethren church several years ago and the members and friends are always glad to have him and his good wife in the community whenever they can be here.

Communion services were held at the church on the last Friday evening during the meetings. The attendance was very good and the services were enjoyed very much by all present.

The church extends their best wishes to Brother and Sister Deeter in their good work.

They decided that they wanted me to become educated so that I could preach about Jesus. That is why I am staying in the Mission school. When I have been taught how to preach, I am going back to the part of Japan where I used to live and my parents and I are going to teach people to be Christians and live better lives.

IN THE SHADOW

GRUMP—Jessie V. Grump, daughter of George and Mary King, was born at Paw, Indiana, September 15th, 1872 and departed this life Sunday afternoon, May 16th, 1926, aged 53 years, 8 months and one day.

September 21st, 1890, she was united in marriage with Henry Grump and for thirty-six years they shared their joys and sorrows of life together.

July 26th, 1903, she gave her heart to God, and united with the Brethren church at Roann, to which she has ever been true. To know her was to love her, for she was a kind and unselfish neighbor and friend, always ready to lend a helping hand in the time of need. But God called her and she answered the call, leaving behind the faithful husband, a loving mother and many relatives and friends. The father and three sisters preceded Jessie in death many years ago and our thoughts today are of that yonder home where if we faint not we shall meet our loved ones face to face.

The funeral services were held at the Roann Brethren church, the pastor, O. C. Lemert, officiating. The sympathy of the Brethren and friends of this district are extended to the bereaved family.

O. C. LEMERT.

GYGER—Sarah Ann Gyger was born in Lawrence County, Indiana, February 24, 1852, and died at her home in Milledgeville, Illinois, June 2, 1926, aged 74 years, 3 months and 8 days.

In 1861 at the age of 12 years she found her Lord and was converted but because of parental opposition was not baptized until on February 8, 1870, when she united with the Baptist church. On January 27, 1909, she united with the Brethren church of Milledgeville, Illinois, and has remained a consistent Christian to the time of her departure.

December 7, 1871 she was united in marriage to Jacob B. Hart. Six children were born to them, two having preceded her to the other world, also the husband died February 2, 1916.

She leaves to mourn her departure the four children: John S. Hart of Chicago, Illinois; Arthur L. Hart of Milledgeville, Illinois; Mary E. Burns of Sterling, Illinois, and Nelly M. Dunkleberger of Milledgeville, Illinois; also the niece, Grace Short Morley of Sterling, Illinois, these with their children.

She was a woman of kind disposition and her house was ever open to any of her relatives and friends. Services held from residence of the deceased by the undersigned.

GEO. E. CONE.

KERR—Daniel Kerr, a highly respected citizen of Jackson Township, Cambria and a faithful member of Munday's Corner Brethren church for many years, died very suddenly at his home on April 21, 1926. Brother Kerr was in his usual health and had been at church and Sunday school the last Sunday of his life. Brother Kerr was a man of many good qualities, a kind and affectionate husband and father, one of our most regular attendants at all church services. He is most sadly missed in the community, church and home. In 1878 he was married to Miss Josephine Davis, and would have celebrated his golden wedding shortly. He leaves to mourn their loss nine children, four boys and five girls, all members of the Brethren church.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, assisted by Brother George Jones, then of Conemaugh, a warm friend of the Kerr folks in the Munday's Corner church and were very largely attended showing the esteem and respect in which Brother Kerr was held. He is survived by his faithful companion, Sister Kerr, who feels her loss very keenly. May the dear Father comfort this sad family and keep them till they all meet on the Other Shore.

J. L. BOWMAN.

OUSLEY—Claude Lee Ousley, son of Grant and Elizabeth Ousley, was born in Brocton, Illinois, July 23, 1890, and departed this life May 9, 1926, aged 35 years, 9 months and 16 days.

He came to Kansas in early boyhood with his parents. He was married to Anna Sarah Stull at Hutchinson, Kansas, on October 12, 1910. To this union were born four children, Ethel, now 14 years old, Ruby, 11 years old, Ida, 8 years old and Maxine, 7 years old. He leaves his beloved wife and four daughters, one full brother, Clayton Ousley of Arlington, Kansas, and three full sisters, Mrs. Myrtle Stull and Mrs. John Clark of Arlington, Kansas, Mrs. Oddis Oldfield of Wichita, Kansas, two half brothers, three half sisters and other more distant relatives and a host of friends, to mourn his passing.

Claude united with the Brethren church of Mulvane, Bethel congregation, and was baptized January 28, 1924 by Elder Thos. F. Howell. He was a good neighbor in all times of need. He was a good citizen and well liked by his neighbors. He was a kind husband and loving father.

Funeral service conducted by his pastor, H. W. Anderson, in the Arlington M. E. church, assisted by Rev. Alexander, and the body laid to rest in the Arlington cemetery.

H. W. ANDERSON.

for leprosy. Some improvement and a few cures can be credited to the chaulmoogra oil treatment, but he has high hopes that within the next decade an even more effective remedy may be discovered with which to combat the leprosy menace.

The leper situation in Europe was described by Dr. J. E. Abbott, traveling director of the Mission, who spent the summer investigating leper conditions in eight European countries. On the whole he found few lepers except those coming from colonial possessions of the various countries.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ON TO COLUMBUS

A personal letter from Brother H. M. Oberholzer, pastor of our church at Columbus, has this reassuring word:

"We are going forward with the plans for our part in the Christian Endeavor Convention. We plan to have the denominational rally in the Brethren church, refreshments to be served by our local society."

This assurance of a good time with Brethren Endeavorers in the Capital city implies an invitation to all Ohio Brethren Endeavorers. The date for the Convention is June 22-25. And the denominational rally is scheduled for the afternoon of the last day, which is Friday.

On to Columbus, ye Brethren Endeavorers of Ohio!

J. A. GARBER.

NOTICE

Beginning at the close of the National Conference I will be open to calls for evangelistic song directing. My entire time will be devoted to this work during the winter season. Any church desiring a song director for a meeting may write me at the address below. All inquiries answered immediately.

HEALTH CONDITION AT WINONA

June 1, 1926

Dr. Wm. F. King, State Health Commissioner, visited Winona June first and made the following written report:

"Together with Mr. Lewis S. Finch, Sanitary Engineer, and Mr. I. L. Miller, State Food and Drug Commissioner, I have made a visit of inspection to Winona Lake.

"The recommendations made by the State Board of Health in reference to the permanent sanitation of the grounds at Winona Lake are being carried out both by the officials of the Town of Winona Lake and the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference.

"The water supply has been tested in the Laboratory of the State Board of Health for eight months past at regular intervals and has been found satisfactory in every instance. There has not been a single case of Typhoid Fever since July last at Winona Lake.

"The Town Board is carrying out plans for complete purification and disposal of all sewage. A Sanitary Officer is in charge of all matters pertaining to sanitation. All milk sold on the grounds is completely pasteurized, and every possible precaution for safeguarding the public health is being carried out.

"Both the officials of the town of Winona Lake and of the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference are to be congratulated and commended for their interest in the welfare of those who will attend the Winona activities the coming season."

Shall the Preacher Lead or Follow?

In this question, we are concerned not so much with organization and method as with ideals and conduct. In religious organization the preacher very naturally carries a consciousness and assumes the rights of leadership, and there is little disposition to question his right or to deny him the privilege. But far more important is leadership in setting standards of thought and conduct, in determining what shall be considered right and proper, what an asset and what a liability, what shall be looked upon with approbation and what with disfavor. Who or what shall be the deciding factors in these things? To whom shall be allowed the leadership? Whose by right is the leadership and the responsibility? Is not the minister first and above all responsible for becoming the moulding, determining influence in giving quality and conscience to a community or group? Or shall he allow it to be exercised by other personalities or forces who are less sensitive to the divine will and way? (And perhaps it should be said that it is not so much the prerogatives of an office as the rights of a spiritual leadership that we would defend and emphasize. And it is to be granted that such leadership may be found among the laity as well as among the ministry, but it is only fair to expect more uniformity of high spiritual grasp among the ministry because of their training and set purpose). It will make a vast difference on the church, on the community and on the minister himself, as to whether or not he exercises such a leadership.

The Evangelist believes the minister is the logical leader for setting moral and spiritual standards, and by virtue of his position, is divinely responsible for so doing. The minister ought to make himself such a positive and outstanding influence by every right and sensible method in the lives of the people with whom he mingles that they will look to him for guidance as naturally as a pupil looks to his teacher for the solution of his problems in school. He ought to assume the task of directing, fashioning and censoring the ideals and conduct of his group with such aggressiveness and force of leadership, and withal such wisdom, and tact, that no standard that has met his reproach can be adopted without suffering a sense of public disapproval, and no untoward movement can be set going without reckoning with his censure.

Such positive, aggressive leadership was exercised by the great prophets of God in Ancient Israel. Those stalwart men stood on their watch-towers to spy out the signs of the times and to interpret them to the people so as to guide them in the right way and to help them to avoid all danger. Such was the mission of the rugged prophet

Elijah, who was gripped with the conviction that he was divinely commissioned to the task of measuring and censuring the conduct of his people. There dawned upon his consciousness the great idea that man does not live by bread alone, nor nations by sheer force, and Israel, he conceived, was to be the bearer of this idea. She was not to be a common nation, following after the ways of her neighbors, but was to become a righteous and a pure people. With holy zeal he sought to keep his people in line with that ideal, and when the king was guilty of gross injustice and a crime against a poor peasant, he rebuked him, and when the people were corrupting the worship of Jehovah by joining in the worship of Baal, he chided them for their duplicity and challenged them to return to the true God. Amos, under the spell of a divinely imposed responsibility for attempting to turn the hearts of the people in right paths, appeared suddenly in Israel where they were gathered in festival mirth, and with holy gravity proclaimed his stern message, which drowned their merry-making and silenced their festive songs. Micah, acting as conscience for his people, stirring up their minds to the things that were wicked and displeasing to God, said, "I am full of power by the spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and unto Israel his sin."

Surely the consecrated messengers of God today ought to stand as leaders and moulders of the thought and life of the people, and so they are, if they are true to their high calling, and so they ought to regard themselves, and to be regarded and respected. They will not stand forth in their respective communities in the solitary grandeur of the pioneer prophets of the Old Testament, because they are too near us and too human, but they should be to us indeed as men of God whose lives witness for him, whose activities and influence manifest his spirit, and whose words proclaim his truth.

But, if perchance the preacher shall not be able to determine the accepted standards, if after his most aggressive and wisely exercised influence he seems unable to stem the tide of spiritual indifference and moral laxity, if men, instead of following his leadership, ignore his efforts, turn a deaf ear to his plea for spirituality and ridicule the high principles by which he would have them govern their conduct as too utopian, what then? Shall he relinquish his leadership, cease striving to bring others up to his high plane and fall in line with the popular wish and way? Shall he compromise his ideals and give approval to a lower standard of acceptable conduct and possibly partake of the lesser things himself, sufficient at least to avoid the stigma of being narrow and puritanical and old-fashioned? Or shall he, and should he, take his stand boldly and determinedly for what is truly Christian and persist in trying to bring people up to his way of thinking and living, even though with little apparent success? Should he throw himself against the current, be faithful and true to the light that is his and do his utmost to stem the tide, though he fail, or should he, and would it be wiser, when he sees the crowd is unwilling to follow him and accept his lofty ways, to turn and follow the crowd on lower paths, rather than be deserted and become unpopular, and perhaps be ridiculed and even persecuted?

It is no uncommon temptation, nor is it easy always to face, and yet there is little doubt as to the right or wrong course of action. He who is truly a man of God cannot long halt between two such opinions. For him to whom the divine presence is a great reality, there is no alternative to the right way. Under the clear light of duty there appears no choice, and the preacher ought to be in possession of that light, or if he has it not, ought to make its possession the supreme aim of his life. "If he lacks wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not" (James 1:5). "For the Lord giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding" (Prov. 2:6). If he is weak and feels the strain of the temptation, let him remember that the great apostle to the Gentiles felt the strain of a similar temptation and he says, "At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me; . . . Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me and strengthened me" (2 Tim. 4:16, 17). And from the Lord will come the assurance as it came to Paul, that "My grace is sufficient for thee" (2 Cor. 12:9). And being "strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness" (Col. 1:11), he will be able to stand alone if necessary, or to suffer persecution for Christ's sake, "that he might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God" (Col. 1:10). He who is a servant of the Lord, must remember that his stewardship is unto the Lord, that he must obey God rather than man, and that there has been made no provision for altering the standards. If he neutralizes his message, how shall it be the saving salt to the earth? If he hides his light under the measure of expediency, how shall men be directed to the purifying light of the Gospel? Indeed he dare not compromise his stand, nor turn from his leadership to become a follower of the crowd. He must be a creator, and not a creature of accepted standards.

If this way be hard, have courage and confidence, for time will vindicate the right. The world may not follow you now, but it will bless you later. It may stone the prophets today but tomorrow it will honor them. It may turn a deaf ear to your present pleadings and may follow in the way of the popular, but in a little while it will be cursing the forces that opposed you. The popular ways and movements are seldom of abiding worth; they satisfy but for a moment. William J. May has said, "There is a seed of the eternal in the good and true, which makes them indestructible, and some germ of decay at the heart of every false and evil thing which makes its popularity as the flower of the grass." The fads and fancies of men are soon gone, and those who major in them are soon forgotten. But they who persist in the championship of the good and true, who stand upon their right to leadership in moral and spiritual standards and who refuse to compromise or to become followers in the lower walks of men are doing a work that will abide through all the fickleness and changing currents of men, and their names will be honored with their deeds. Let there be no relinquishing of leadership, nor lowering of standards. Call men to the heights and hold steadfast. Such service, after it has undergone all the fiercest and fiery tests of time, will remain to the joy of the soul and the glory of God.

A Ten-Point Indictment of the Movie

When Congressman Upshaw appeared before the House Education Committee some time ago to plead for his bill for federal regulation of the movies, he went against a stone wall of opposition, and it seems that he made about as much impression on the committee as a fly on an elephant's hide. There is no interest more strongly financed and none more thoroughly organized than the movie trust and none, unless it be the daily press, exercises such a widespread and powerful influence on public opinion. We glory in Mr. Upshaw's courage, but it will require long and hard work, and the united effort of every Christian people throughout the land to finally bring about the regulation that is necessary, if the morals of our young people, the sanctity of the home, the spirituality of the church and the vitality of our national life are to be safe-guarded. But all such efforts, though isolated and comparatively ineffective, are to be commended for the little dent they do make. And possibly the dent made by Mr. Upshaw was not as inconsequential as might have been thought, in view of the wide circulation that has been given his indictment against the movie industry. He indicted twenty-five per cent of the movies on the following ten points:

1. Long drawn-out kisses.
2. Insidious and lascivious embraces.
3. The shocking, voluptuous absence of clothing.
4. The unholy sexual appeal.
5. Bedroom scenes as the ante-chamber of immorality.
6. Swapping wives as a social habit.
7. Making heroines of harlots and heroes of libertines.
8. Sodom modernized on American soil.
9. Gilding of sin by the "scofflaw."
10. Drinking of illicit liquor.

It is likely that many will think Mr. Upshaw has been very generous in putting his percentage as low as twenty-five. It would seem that the pictures that do not come under the condemnation of some of these points are a small minority.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Are you lifting your bit? See Brother R. F. Porte's Tract Promotion Corner. He suggests how to do it.

You are favored this week with another of Dr. Florence N. Gribble's interesting and informing stories of African customs. We are greatly indebted to her for this service. And the missionary appeal of these articles ought to stir our hearts.

A two-fold report comes to us from Whittier, California, where Brother A. V. Kimmell and his good people were led in an evangelistic campaign by Brother Charles H. Ashman, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Notwithstanding the fact that Whittier is said to be a hard field for revival work, twenty-one confessions were received. These two brethren evidently proved congenial yoke-fellows. Brother Kimmell speaks highly of Brother Ashman as an evangelist and the latter's portrayal of the condition of the work at Whittier speaks highly of the ability of the pastor as a servant of God to these people.

Our correspondent from Sunnyside, Washington, reports a unique Easter service that was conducted on a mountain top nearby, a union affair in which the Brethren church participated. As a result of a union Passion Week service conducted in cooperation with the Church of the Brethren, eight souls were added to our church at that place, making sixteen additions during the year. That the foreign mission interest runs high is evidenced by the magnanimous gift of $1438.34 which that church made. The leadership of Dr. J. C. Beal, the pastor, is being blessed of the Lord, and the church has recognized it and has retained him for another year of service.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, tells the Evangelist readers of the splendid gift of the student body and faculty, and it is certainly one worthy of our commendation. Never before has a graduating class undertaken such a challenging task as that to which the class of 1926 has set itself. These graduates, as is usually the case, are not loaded with money, it will mean real sacrifice for them to pay their pledges as the payments come due periodically, but we dare to believe they will make good, that there will be as small or smaller shrinkage in fact, than in a like amount from any church in the brotherhood. The faculty also has done a very noteworthy thing. Surely these who are most vitally interested and on whom the burden falls the heaviest, have by their gifts issued a challenge to the brotherhood. This $11,848.50 added to the $26,000 previously reported puts the dial hand around to $37,848.50.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter tells us of the dedication of a new church at Winchester, Virginia, a growing mission promoted by the Maryland-Virginia District Mission Board. It is the first unit of a plan for an adequate church plant which they hope to complete as the needs and funds dictate. The mission is said to be situated in a very promising section of the city and those in charge seem to be enthusiastic about the future of the work. Our Brethren of the Maryland-Virginia district are to be congratulated not only for this particular accomplishment, but also for the growing missionary zeal and vision which caused them to take up this point and to center their efforts upon it. This district possesses some of the finest prospects of any district with which we are acquainted, and with the aggressive policy and wise leadership such as has been more and more manifest in recent years, we may look for some real church extension in this part of the brotherhood.

Some folks join with the Psalmist in declaring "In thee O Lord do I put my trust," and then retire and worry half the night away, as if they feared the Lord could not quite be depended on.

A noted English preacher complainingly asks: "Why do church-going people confine themselves so largely to denunciation of bad plays, and show so little appreciation of those that are really good?" Perhaps it is because they are given so little chance at the really good plays; they are seldom offered on the local market.

The British Weekly says: "We are not at the moment raising the question of the rights or the wrongs of the Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which secured Prohibition. We are only saying that Prohibition rests upon such a body of religious and passionate conviction, that no body in American politics will touch it for years or forever."

To improve the use of the dramatic method of religious education in the churches, the Committee on Drama of the Federal Council of Churches announced recently the establishment of its third summer school and the publication of the second volume of religious dramas.

The School of Religious Drama will be held in affiliation with the summer school of Auburn Theological Seminary from July 12 to July 30.

The writing of religious drama and the organization and directing of pageants will be special features.

Personal Liberty

By W. I. Duker

ELDER W. I. DUKER
Pastor Brethren Church, Elkhart, Indiana, and Public School Principal at Goshen, Indiana

There can be no question but that the interests of the church are associated closely with the government of the land under which the church exists. We are asked to pray for our men holding prominent places in the civil government of our country. The church is aided or retarded in its work as the government aids or retards the moral issues of the day. The government's purpose is to aid us morally, the church's great purpose is to aid us spiritually. The work of the church should have as one of its "by products" the moral issues of the day. So the two great agencies work together.

The most unfortunate thing that we have to combat, or rather one of the unfortunate things, arises from a "catch phrase" that seems to be taken from some fundamental principle of government and becomes universal in its use. We seldom stop to analyze, or to seriously consider any saying that is common. Some one has said, "Let me write a nation's songs and I care not who writes its laws." With equal positiveness may we say, "Let me give a nation its slogan and I care not who writes its laws." A catch phrase, made so by its similarity to some important saying or law, soon may become the slogan of a people, in spite of the fact that it may be altogether false in its conclusions. For example, some one long ago said that "Honesty is the best policy." This saying became a household motto. It is unquestionably true. But, put just as it has been, men governed by its evident truth have remained honest for policy's sake. And the man that is honest because it is the best policy surely has missed the greatest benefit of honesty.

This bit of reasoning, or perhaps you would prefer to have me say, "this bit of preface", leads us to one of the most common errors with which we battle today. The slogan of "Personal Liberty" is the most mis-leading of all slogans good or bad. When the colonies were considering their separation with their mother England, the only question before the people was "representation." It was not a question of personal liberty. It was not the thought of our leaders that our personal liberty was at stake. All we were asking was that in the affairs of law and enforcement we were to be represented. In fact the question of law enforcement as practiced by English authority was just a bit under criticism at that time. We were not entering the terrible struggle that our personal liberties might be safeguarded. We repeat—the only real question at that time was the question of "representation."

Patrick Henry, in his famous speech was asking for freedom from England. He might have said, "Give me liberty from English rule, or give me death." The question of personal liberty was as far from his mind as was any other irrelevant question. America was not intended to be the home where unbridled license was to supplant law and order. Were Washington or any other of the early fathers to return today they would be among the first to decry our present idea of "Personal Liberty."

All of the great issues today that have their ramifications in the moral questions of the hour are related in some way with this thought of "personal liberty." Every time that from pulpit or pen, comes some warning that relates to the conduct of the individual, some one is sure to insist that this is the "land of the brave and the home of the free." We have allowed this sly propaganda to be poured in upon us until we are actually being led to believe that America is the home of unbridled license. In fact, we have often failed to secure that measure of support necessary from our pews because there seems to be a feeling that we are attempting to interfere with man's freedom. Many of our lads who fought in the last great war now insist that after they fought to establish and perpetuate our freedom on the high seas they have returned to find that same freedom refused them back home. We have always held the highest esteem and respect for those who have been compelled through a sense of patriotism or compulsion of law to serve their country in the "field," in fact, we too have given a brother in this struggle. But we can never grant that any man or set of men may be privileged to speak with authority while defining the "freedom of America," unless they hold fast to the principles upon which America was founded. What America needs today is not more freedom from law but more respect for law. It is only by respect for law that the Americans bought with the blood of our forefathers and maintained by the blood of our sons and brothers can long endure.

Let us go just a bit deeper in the "workableness" of this proposed liberty.

Suppose that in the home where all good Americans should be trained, personal liberty should be practiced. The child should be allowed to do as it pleases in matters that have to do with this individual conduct. When called in the morning, "personal liberty" insisted upon a few hours of sleep. When asked to assist in the cares of the home, "personal liberty" pleads to be excused because he much prefers to busy himself with tasks more to his liking. Again, he prefers his brother's coat to his own and delighted with the rule of the home which is pronounced in the "absence of rule" he secures the coat and goes happily on his way. The absurdity of the whole affair is evident.

Or again, how would this rule of "personal liberty" work in the school? We have always prided ourselves that the school of our land was the truest type of American democracy. Not in its class room government but as it is related to those who may enter. One lad decides that he does not care to enter. Another that a late entrance will please him better. After he has entered he decides that school is not what he had hoped it to be and so he leaves the "democracy." Already the absurdity of the whole proceedings prevents the necessity for further illustration.

But, some of us may say, "Surely you will admit that America was settled by men and women who came here to find religious liberty. America is the land where a man may worship his God as it may please his own conscience. Or if he happens to have no belief there is no one to say to him nay." Yes this is all true. In it we place no little pride. America is the land of religious liberty. But let us analyze religious liberty. Does this mean that anything you wish to do being actuated by a religious conviction is permissible? Not at all! Some few years ago a people said that it was their conviction that a man might have two wives at the same time. The law of America was not slow in asserting its mandate. Polygamy was outlawed in spite of religious conviction. Suppose that you had a religious conviction that property should be held in common and should quote Scripture in defence of your position. Would it be wise to risk taking a part of your neighbor's wealth to make the distribution equitable? Religious liberty is dominated by the rights of the individual, not of the one who wishes to practice this said liberty but rather by the one upon whom it works a hardship.

We are in a fight today as we have always been. It is the old Garden experience. If Cain wishes to take his brother's life, has he not the right? Was he his brother's keeper? Sometime ago a group of ministers in convention had gathered out upon the lawn for a brief rest and recreation. An old gentleman passed that way. He paused and asked permission to "get into" the group. Permission was gladly granted. It was quite evident by his appearance and language that he was not a "minister." After a few words of greeting the old gentleman said, "Well, gentlemen, one thing is sure. I am responsible for my soul and you are responsible for your soul. No one is responsible for another's conduct." Brethren, if this old gentleman was correct there is no excuse for a minister. If we are not responsible for the souls of others we had better engage in some profession that will bring in more rapidly the comforts needed for our families. We are using this incident because it is so typically true of the attitude of the many who insist upon personal liberty. Each man for himself and the rights of others becoming subservient to his wishes.

There is no such thing as "personal liberty." A recent writer had this illusion, "Over the crest of the hill the Promised Land stretches away to the far horizon smiling in eternal sunshine." The picture is all nonsense. Long ago Plato said that he drove two horses. One white and tractable, the other black and fractious. Jesus said that two masters sought man's allegiance, one God and the other mammon. Paul said that his soul was the battle ground of two forces, one of which he called spiritual and the other flesh. Here is the conflict. That which is today called personal liberty is sin.

When the call is made to the heart yet untouched by the finger of God there is no promise given that this heart may be governed by its own personal likes and dislikes. Rather the opposite is true. We are asked to submit our wills to the sovereign will of God. It is not a question of our liberty, but rather of obedience to God. All through our Christian experience our liberty must be controlled by the demand of God. If we want liberty to do as we wish and desire, being governed by our carnal desires we must never enroll under the banner of King Emmanuel.

So is the question of personal liberty in the matter of law enforcement today. If we wish personal liberty we must become an outlaw. Our hand must be against the interests of our brothers. We must disregard the rights of others and insist upon our selfish pleasures. We must do as we wish and if this line of conduct breaks the hearts of others we must justify ourselves by insisting upon a man's right to "Personal Liberty."

But we are led to believe that out of the storm of today, tomorrow's sun will shine. We cannot be confused in our thinking for any length of time. He who insists upon allowing himself to be governed by his selfish likes and dislikes and then to justify himself, will soon be found out. America will become the land, not of unbridled license, but rather a land where law and order shall more nearly give us the right to be called a Christian nation.

Ultimate Aims

By Prof. C. Alonzo Byers

One time there was a great sculptor who spent all his life chiseling out upon the slow yielding marble his ideal figure of a human being. But each day he worked his vision grew. He was never satisfied with the work he had just completed. The years passed by; the sculptor figure still more stately and sublimely stood. Each day the artist labored on in spite of age. Perfection seemed assured to crown his life, but evening to his penetrating eye saw less perfection than at dawn. At length one morning upon his scaffold death stayed his wrinkled hand and bade his form be cold and still. But the upturned face even in death wore no less a radiant countenance than the powerful and divinely appearing figure he wrought upon an hour ago. Yet beneath the statue on its base was carved the word "Incomplete." And behold the face within the shadow of the bust wore a smile of joy as saintly and genuine as this world has ever looked upon.

Indeed what a truth this may be in the life of everyone. Incompleteness is written across the brows of the greatest geniuses as well as those stars of lesser magnitude. For no one is ever all he is capable of being here. We are only in this life as it were the initial pages of a magnificent book, we are not able to look through even in our highest dreams. Man's earthly grasp is very finite but he reaches farther, and this only serves to make his longings and thirstings more mysterious. For who has felt the depth in beauty and perfection of a blooming flower or who can discern the meaning of the smallest atom of dust? We can reach for those life giving thoughts that appear to be within the center of gravity in our favor but how grandly it is planned that we cannot grasp them. Browning said, "Man partly is, and wholly hopes to be," and Lowell expresses it from another angle, "To let the new life in we know desire must be the portal. Perhaps the longing to be so helps make the soul immortal."

There is not a normal desire to reach beyond that which we know nor a singly dream however unintelligible that has ever touched the human heart or a hope that has pierced the clouded night but has its realization beyond our little horizon. There are some grand thoughts I often feel but they move about like birds that are out of sight or some far off murmuring sound but are faintly intelligible to me. There are feelings which pain the heart but they will not admit of interpretations. There are sounds which stir with every breeze and pour forth music that touches faintly a responsive cord in my being. We live, but in this life we only touch and embrace such a small world. We feel the spell from an outside source, a mystery from an unseen sky that echoes again and again in the deep chambers of ourselves and will not die.

"All shapes and sounds have something which is not of them;
A spirit broods amid the grass;
Vague outlines of the everlasting thought
Lie in the melting shadows as they pass;
The touch of an eternal presence thrills
The fringes of the sunset and the hills."

It was Agassiz who felt this spirit when he would not sacrifice the significance of the wonders in his own back yard for a trip to Europe with rich financial reward. Perhaps in our highest moments, moments of ecstasy, if we place our ear close to the ground we may be able to hear the grass blades speaking to us or the fertile cold earth expostulating on the immortal existence of man.

The other day while digging a small hole in the ground I stooped down very low to scrape out the loose earth with my hands. The scent of that soil teeming with life and potential power was a pleasure beyond description. I remained a few moments in that position. I have thought quite often since how near one comes to his own sometimes when he least expects it. Both we and it bear the finger-prints of God.

When we can feel a presence in the stars above, in the gladness of the morning sun, in the somber twilight, in all the forms of life that we behold that is greater than our own, I believe then and then only will we truly live. I cannot help but believe that each growing self is the true intimation of what he may actually become; that most of us have latent capacities to become sons of God and see all things in reality if it were only capable of being developed now.

Each may be upon an unending journey, a thought, if I know myself. I am not able to conceive of. And yet the joy of a life is in its onward march. For what is more beautiful, than a soul returning each day a little nearer to the fountain-head of its own real existence.

Truth, Beauty and Goodness are limitless and eternal, they are man's goals but attainable objects only to a small degree. They are also his highest and holiest endeavors. This is man's reach but not his grasp. Death intervenes which may be defined perhaps as that which separates the shadowy from the real, or it may be a term for that which lies beyond what we are now able to understand.

Our ultimate aims lie in this realm of promise. Thus a life well lived even to its final end is so much richer than when it began and whose noble thoughts still float over our sky "like great white birds." The failures and the lack of completeness here will be rounded in its fullest there. As Andres Del Sarto expressed it when he knew he possessed all but the fire of genius:

"In heaven perhaps, he chances, one more chance—
Four great walls in the New Jerusalem,
Meted on each side by the Angel's reed,
For Leonard, Rafael, Angello, and me
To cover,—"

How pathetic these words seem and yet how joyful and inspiring to feel that when failure or incompleteness has crowned our utmost endeavors here we are able to pass over into the real and round the work in its completeness.

And what an argument is this for a pure, clean life, when all we desire and hope for and cherish of the True, the Beautiful, and the Good shall live forever with us, that the promise of immortality is in the noblest dreams and deepest longings we entertain!

For in this life sometimes
We know not why,
We come so near to death
But cannot die.

And when in dreams we've reached
The height this home can give,
We seem so near to life
But cannot live.

And thus when our friends do pass out of this life we stand as it were on the shore and watch the ship sail away until it passes entirely from our sight and we have waved the last goodbye. The change is in ourselves, the ship still goes sailing on.

And thus in conclusion would it not be well to feel with Browning:—

"All we have hoped or dreamed of good shall exist
Not in its semblance but itself;—
The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard.
The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,
Are music sent up to God by the lover and the bard.
Enough that he heard it once, we shall hear it by and by."

The Ideal Sunday School Worker

By Dyoll Belote

(This address was delivered at the monthly meeting of the Worker's Council of the Bethany Presbyterian Sunday school, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, on February 15th. The address was delivered at the invitation of the pastor, Rev. V. D. Beery, and the subject is that suggested by the Rev. Beery.—The Author).

In speaking to you at this time on the subject suggested by your pastor I am not at all sure that I shall touch on just the points which may have been in his mind, nor yet if I shall make mention of all that might be discussed. It will be understood between us therefore that I am discussing the subject from the angles that have suggested themselves to me out of my reading and experience.

I. The Necessity of the Work.

It must be admitted that as surely as a child is born in sin and shapen in iniquity, so surely does the child need to be saved from the destructive power of that sin by the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit. Since that which is born of the flesh is flesh, it naturally follows that this transforming work can only be accomplished by a real work of grace in the heart.

It is to be admitted at once that the work of grace performed in the heart of a child is different from that which comes to pass in the life of the hardened sinner of mature years, but it is at the same time just as real and definite and as necessary as that accomplished in the hardened sinner. The manner and time of the Spirit's operation in either case is a matter that we can best afford to let in the Master's care.

Another argument for the necessity of the work is the experience of the workers of the past in reference to the average age of conversion.

A fair estimate gives it that about nine-tenths of all professing Christians become such at an age somewhere within the period represented particularly by Sunday school attendance.

The years from twelve to twenty-one are the highwater mark of decision to follow the Savior. The first high tide of decision is at the age of twelve. From twelve to sixteen the number is slightly smaller in proportion. At sixteen we have the highest peak of conversion. One-eighth of all Christians made the decision at this age. From this on there is a marked decrease in the number of conversions.

At nineteen years there comes another crest of the tide, but not so high as at sixteen. After this the decline is rapid until when we reach the twenty-fifth year we have a scant one per cent making the decision to become Christians. During the years from twelve to twenty-four 84% of the members of the church were converted.

From these facts we see how large a debt the church owes to the Sunday school, and we can appreciate how important is the work of this auxiliary.

The reasonableness of the work of the Sunday school is another argument for its necessity. We conserve the childhood of our offspring for all other purposes. Whatever we wish our children to become in mature years we encourage them to begin to be in childhood days. The youthful Handel, who was at six years of age found picking out chords on the piano, was not told that he must wait until he was old enough to understand music to begin to play, but rather he was encouraged in the way that later gave him that wonderful preeminence in the world of music. If we are so particular about the matters pertaining to the physical and mental life of our offspring, why not be as reasonable about the life of the soul?

But I am commissioned more particularly to speak of the WORKER in the SUNDAY SCHOOL. And under that term worker I am taking it for granted that we are to include all officers and teachers of the school.

1. Christians. It goes without saying, I suppose, that we understand that all workers in the Bible school should be Christians. I only mention it because I have known of a few rare cases where because of lack of available material one or two individuals of good moral character—but not professed Christians, were impressed into the teaching force of a Bible school. This I believe is a dire mistake. Please note that I did not insist that all the workers must be perfect Christians, for “there isn’t any such a creature.” But I do not see how we can expect an individual to press home the claims of a cause in which he or she does not sufficiently believe that they can personally espouse it.

And while I am speaking along this line I want to register my personal doubt as to the advisability of asking members of one denomination to teach in the Bible school of another denomination. I have seen it done quite frequently, and one of my early recollections is of the heated discussions that were aroused in a certain men’s class because the teacher was of a faith different from that of the school in which he was teaching. Very naturally he put his own denominational interpretation upon the lessons, and quite as naturally the men who were members of the church of which the school was a part resented such interpretation. USE YOUR OWN TEACHING MATERIAL, if you have to double up the classes until you can train an extra supply of teachers and workers. The same applies to superintendent or any other officer. I once went into a congregation of our faith on a Sunday when one of the special causes of the church was to be presented in the Bible school session. Noticing that nothing was being said I approached the superintendent—who was of another faith—and asked him about the literature which I knew had been mailed out to each school. “Oh,” said he, “You mean that bundle of programs that came last week? I got them all right, but I didn’t know what they were for so didn’t say anything about them.” Suffice it to say that he received enlightenment then and there.

2. Informed. In the use of the word that I have chosen to name the second characteristic of the Bible school worker I wish to be understood as including a number of things.

The first point which I wish to impress is that of the desirability of having the workers in the Bible school know THE BIBLE. No worker in the Bible school is going to be interested and actively engaged in the work of the school who is not an earnest Bible student. For until the truths of the Word have impressed themselves upon the mind and heart of the worker, how is that worker going to feel the necessity of imparting those truths unto others?

I want to hasten to add that I consider this one of the most vitally important marks of an ideal Bible school worker. I am not unaware of the necessity that the worker shall know something of the aims and plans of the Bible school workers of both the denominational and interdenominational Bible School Association, as well as the best and most successful ways of consummating the work of a school, but my personal experience and observation have brought me to the conviction that it is worth a sight more to the general progress of the school if the workers “KNOW THE BOOK.”

It is immaterial to me whether the teachers in my school understand all about the new-fangled theories about child training and development, but I am vitally interested as to whether that teacher personally knows the Lord Jesus Christ and can lead her pupils into friendship with him. I care far less as to whether that teacher understand the psychology of the child mind, but far more as to whether he or she knows the mind of Christ with reference to all God’s children. And that mind of Christ is revealed in his loving admonition, “Suffer the children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.”

Let me illustrate: In this very ward of our city there now lives a lady who served as a Bible school teacher in a school of which I was pastor some years ago. That good woman never read a book on psychology, and I’m not sure she would know one if she saw it. But she does know her Bible and when we were planning for an evangelistic campaign in the church I said to her, “Sister . . . I am looking for an ingathering to the church from that class of girls of yours.” “Brother Belote,” she said, “I have been praying for them and talking to them and I believe they are going to come.” When the invitation was extended during that evangelistic campaign the first one who came was a member of the class, and ere that meeting closed every girl in that class not already a Christian had surrendered to Jesus. And when I visited our church here in Morrellville a few weeks ago some of the first folks who came to greet me were some of those same girls—now grown to womanhood and with children of their own, whom that teacher led to Christ.

Of course we also include under this head the thought that each worker shall take pains and time to keep up with the best plans that are being used at other schools, as well as being familiar with the home, business, school and social life of the members of the school. No worker can do the most for the pupils and the school who is not acquainted with the people whom he serves and to whom he seeks to minister. I believe an intelligent understanding of the surroundings in which people have to spend their days will go a long way toward helping one to intelligently minister to their spiritual needs, and so the successful Bible school worker should know his constituency.

3. Equipped. I come to the third of the marks of an ideal worker at this point because it is somewhat related to the second. If we are to expect an individual to do the best work possible for us in the home, office, store, on the farm or in the mill we know they must have the best of tools. It is an old adage that it is a “poor workman who quarrels with his tools”, but we will not deny that one can make a cleaner cut with a sharp axe than with a dull one. So the Bible school worker should be provided with the best helps possible.

(a) Among these helps I will mention the possession of a Bible as first. And let it be the best one that the worker can afford. One of the best of course is a Scofield. There may be others, but none better and none whose orthodoxy is less questioned.

(b) Again I would include among the workers’ equipment a number of the best treatments of the Sunday school lesson, in addition to those issued by the denomination by which the school is sponsored. Not all the phases of the lesson are ever brought out in any one lesson leaf, and it broadens our vision of the truth to be taken to other positions from which to look upon the many sides of eternal truth.

(c) Besides these there is always the matter of chairs, tables, papers and cards for the children. Economy which denies a liberal expenditure of money for those helps which facilitate the work of those who are responsible for the success of the school, is not economy but parsimony. Of course if a teacher is using the multiplication of accessories as an excuse for poor lesson preparation or inadequate knowledge of the Word it will be well to call a halt on the expense and insist on a better preparation or the resignation of the teacher. But in no case is it fair or Christian to expect the workers in our Bible school to “make bricks without straw”, nor yet for us to expect them to both gather the straw and still make the same number of brick. (No intent to play on the word brick).

4. Consecrated. Some may have already wondered why I did not place this characteristic as the first in the list, and maybe it should have been so placed. For there can be no doubt that unless there is a very definite act of consecration on the part of the workers the trials and disappointments of the work are very likely to cause many to desert the ranks before even their term of office is expired. And beside God can best use dedicated vessels, and the more complete the dedication the larger the blessing he will pour out upon the one making the surrender.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Baccalaureate Sermon

(To Graduating Class of Carleton, Nebraska High School)

By C. R. Koontz

"We finish to begin," said Dr. Poling recently. The Class of '26 has finished—what? The course of study prescribed for them. They have also finished their High School Days. They have come to the house of God for their "farewell message"—as I understand the meaning of the word Baccalaureate.

It may be said of them "They have finished." But I dare say that amid the pleasure, the joy, and probably a tinge of sadness, of the present, they are not stressing the "WE Finish" as much as the "TO BEGIN." Their Commencement is taking on more the air of a beginning than an ending.

If I may speak for them yet again, I must believe that there are certain questions in their mind that will not go away until they are answered, namely

If they are to begin, What are they to begin?

If they are to go upon their quest for truth, in which direction?

What shall be their standard of value?

If they are to live a life, what kind of a life shall it be?

My friends of the Graduating Class, in the statement of these questions, I have tried to sense your thoughts, and if in them I have restated one or more of your own perplexing questions, I desire to speak to you in a suggestive way.

First, may I suggest that you keep ever before you the motto that you have so wisely chosen. "He who findeth knowledge findeth life." You have viewed history, and know something of its great events; their causes and their results. You have become acquainted with some of its noble as well as ignoble characters. Probably you have set some of them up before you as your ideal. Literature, with its exquisite forms and inspired imagination, has beckoned to your spirits. Science, the cold and accurate voice of organized knowledge, has doubtless made its unimpassioned and enlightened appeal to your reason. The languages, ancient and modern, have tried to unlock for you the door into the life and thought of other peoples.

You are to be commended on the selection of such a motto. For knowledge is a glorious thing. It emancipates the mind; steadies the will; and inspires the heart. And yet "knowledge without common sense," says Lee, "is folly; without method, it is waste; without kindness, it is fanaticism; without religion, it is death." "But with common sense, it is wisdom; with method, it is power; with charity, it is beneficence; with religion, it is virtue, and life, and peace."

In the second place, may I suggest that, if you have not already done so, incorporate into the word knowledge of your motto, the content found in one of the statements of the Master Teacher: "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." By so doing I believe you will have the answer to the questions raised in the beginning. This you may treasure as the text of the evening if you wish something to carry away with you.

May we now notice this text, and how its content answers your questions:

1. Jesus Christ as the Way:

"Way" is a figure of speech not fully appreciated and understood outside the Roman Empire. Probably there is not another historical character better known to High School graduates than Julius Caesar. I might also add, and less loved. But in addition to, or rather I should say, in connection with his military campaigns and expeditions into the neighboring provinces, he conceived the idea of establishing a system of roads leading into the conquered provinces from his own kingdom. Thereby linking them with the kingdom. These roads are known as ways. The most noted of these was the Appian Way which was the main artery of Roman civilization. It was associated with law, government, commerce and culture. In the light of this can you think of a more illuminating statement than that coming from the lips of the Master: "I am the Way"?

Plato has outlined the character of the ideal citizen, but Jesus says: "I am the way." As the Appian Way leads to the heart of the Roman kingdom, so Jesus would say, I am the way to my Father's kingdom.

A DEVOTIONAL READING OF ROMANS
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

LIKE-MINDEDNESS IN CHRIST—Rom. 15:1-7.

Unity of believers is most desirable, but it comes about not by compelling conformity, but by thinking together and seeking the pleasure and welfare of each other, even as "Christ pleased not himself." Such an attitude of mind and heart is a grace bestowed by the God of patience and comfort.

TUESDAY

CHRIST'S MINISTRY TO THE GENTILES—Rom. 15:9-13.

In Christ is fulfilled the promises to the Hebrew fathers that their seed should become a channel of blessing to the Gentiles, from whom God would get for himself praise and glory. And to us also comes joy and peace from believing in him who is the fulfillment of our highest hope.

THE COMMISSION TO THE GENTILES—Rom. 15:14-21.

Paul, divinely appointed a minister to the Gentiles, assures us that his message was wholly authorized by Christ and tested by the power of the Holy Spirit. How dare any minister speak of any things save those which Christ hath wrought in him?

GENTILES DEBTORS TO JEWS—Rom. 15:22-29.

The Gentiles having been made partakers of the spiritual heritage committed unto the saints at Jerusalem, are under obligation to minister to their spiritual benefactors in the material things of which they are in need. And the principle here enunciated still holds good.

FRIDAY

IMPLORING INTERCESSION—Rom. 15:30-33.

Paul earnestly seeks the reinforcement of the prayers of the Roman Christians to the end that his ministry be not hindered and he be permitted to visit them. In Africa, in South America and in many fields in the homeland God's servants are still entreating fellow-Christians to exercise the ministry of intercession.

SATURDAY

HELPLESSNESS AND SOCIABILITY—Rom. 16:1-16.

The fine spirit of helpfulness and of kind consideration of others' welfare, the hospitality and sociability here set forth by the Great Apostle ought everywhere to be manifest among God's people. It gives fragrance and beauty to the fellowship of Christians.

SUNDAY

WARNING AGAINST DIVISIONS—Rom. 16:17-27.

Paul's warning is as applicable today as then, and is as sorely needed. The church has suffered much through neglect of that counsel. And finally, may the grace which he invokes on the church at Rome, be upon us all in abundant measure.—G. S. B.

2. Jesus Christ as the Truth:

So far in life you have been hedged about by your parents, your teachers, loved ones and friends. They have all been more or less instrumental in setting for you a standard of truth. But now the time has come for you to go out into the world, as we say.

There you will in all probability meet up with those that have different standards of truth. It may be a question in your mind as to which standard you shall accept. However dazed and perplexed you may become because of the flux of human opinion, look to Jesus as the true standard of truth and reality. Socrates had outlined great truths for the inquisitive youth of Athens and then said: "Cleave to them." But Jesus said: I am the truth. He was the truth about God, about man, and about immortality.

3. Jesus Christ as the Life:

The life of three score and ten years, or if by reason of strength it be four score years, is not all of life. Nor is the event spoken of as physical death the end. It is but the beginning, the commencement so to speak. In Jesus Christ we have at least a glimpse of real life. Said he: "I came that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly." Again, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." Abide in him and produce fruit.

So much is said in these days of ours about success. It is a word constantly held up before the young people. Do you ever read of Jesus using the term success? No. He uses rather the term fruitful. So I would like to suggest to you that in your eagerness to succeed, you include with it a strong desire to be fruitful in the fullest sense of the word as used in that wonderful allegory.

Therefore, my closing and farewell word to you the Class of 1926, as you move amid the freshness of the morning hours of life with your feet upon the very threshold of opportunity that you follow the way outlined by the Master Teacher; that you accept him and his standard of truth as your standard; and that your life shall be one of fruitfulness and abundance.

I cannot help but believe that you will welcome such a statement coming from Jesus, and that you will include it in your concept of the term knowledge, for there is nothing more hollow than mere knowledge. Therefore let it be thoroughly saturated with Christianity as it lay in the mind of Christ.

What lies before you now as the doors of Carleton High School close behind you is LIFE. Life in the making! Your Class Prophet will attempt to peer into the future and scan the destiny of each member. Whether or not the fond hopes of your classmates, friends and loved ones will be realized remains to be seen. But you are beginning. May you ever remember:

"He who findeth knowledge findeth life."

"I am the way, the truth, and the life."

Carleton, Nebraska.

a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light (1 Peter 2:9). Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Not every one that sayeth, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven (Matt. 7:20-21). But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law. If we live in the spirit, let us walk in the spirit. Let us not be desirous of vainglory, provoking one another, envying one another (Gal. 5:22-23-25-26).

OUR MEDITATION

Every day our lives are witnessing either for or against Jesus Christ. It is easy to determine which one. If we are witnessing for him, our lives will ever be radiant with the principles of the Christ-spirit, which are love, joy, peace, meekness, etc. Concerning love, it is the cardinal virtue of a Godly life, it is indeed the greatest thing in the world, it is the greatest power of the individual Christian, and he is bound to shed forth its light, far and wide. To neglect doing this, is to deprive ourselves and our fellowmen of a great blessing that is due us. It was the purpose of the Master for his people that they should take an active, devoted interest in others. "Ye are the light of the world," said Jesus, therefore, spread it forth. The world is a huge jury, and we are on trial before it. We dare not present a false testimony. We must declare the genuineness of our religion. It is said of Israel, that they were known among their idolatrous neighbors, by what they ate, what they said, and how they said it, and by what they wore. We too are living in the midst of a crooked and sinful generation, and are being identified by these very things, every day and every hour. Christ might have used some other way to make himself and his ways known to the world. He might have sent angels to preach and testify of him. He might have announced it through some great megaphone from the skies, but he didn't; just through you and me.

"As an open book, they our lives will read
To our words and acts, give daily heed,
Will they be attracted, or turn away,
From the Christ we love today?"

Put your hand on your own heart and ask yourself that question, and answer as before God. Our lives are telling for or against him. Isaiah said of backsliding Israel, "The show of their countenance doth witness against them." Yes, if Christ is in the heart, men will see him in our faces.

But where are we to be his witnesses? Every one of us, I believe, is under divine orders to be a world-wide witness for Christ. Other systems may draw their little circles about them, but Jesus said, The power and influence of the life of his followers must needs be felt to the ends of the earth. And to give anything less than the best we have, to others, is selfish to say the least.

The Christian then must in some way or other be "a daily witness", for Christ. It is not for me to know just how God wants to use you. Maybe he wants you to go to a foreign field, or contribute to missionary work at home, or make some contribution to Christian education, or perhaps best of all by the silent testimony of a Christian life in the community where you live.

OUR PRAYER

Dear Father, we thank that thou hast chosen us to be thy witnesses; and for the many men and women who have ever been true to this trust. We pray for grace and courage, that we too, by thy help, may live such lives before the world that other lives shall catch something of the beauty, and the joy and the reality of the Christian life. Help us we pray to live closer to thee each day. We thank thee for the forgiveness of our sins, and ask that we may manifest the same forgiveness and love to others, that thou hast shown to us. Use us to thy glory, and this we ask for Jesus' sake.

OUR SCRIPTURE

But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you and ye shall be witnesses to me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth (Acts 1:8). By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples; if ye have love, one for another (John 13:35). Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus (Acts 4:13). But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation,

Israel Enslaved in Egypt

NOTE—We are entering upon a six months' course of studies concerning the EARLY LEADERS OF ISRAEL, which should prove very profitable. We have already spent three months in studying the Book of Genesis, as a result of which it is hoped we have gotten a clearer vision and have had strongly re-enforced, the great spiritual purposes of the book. It is important that we have a thorough knowledge of the Old Testament, because it is the background of the New Testament. Augustine said long ago, "The New Testament is latent in the Old; the Old Testament is patent in the New." It is necessary therefore to a right understanding of the New Testament that we know the Old. Most especially interesting and important is a study of the beginnings of the Israelitish nation, and the great leaders of that people. It is to be hoped that as a result of this study, the great characters whom God used in preparing for himself "a peculiar people" shall become more real and their great qualities more vitally influential in our lives.

Scripture Lesson—Exodus 1:1-14.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 94:10-17.

Reference Material—Acts 7:17-21; Heb. 11:23, 24.

Golden Text—Jehovah will not cast off his people. Psalm 94:14.

LESSON LIGHTS

(Illustrated Quarterly)

The Book of Exodus

The name, Exodus is the Greek and Latin name for "Departure," because it describes the great epoch-making departure of the Israelites from their slavery in Egypt for the Promised Land. It was their birth as a nation.

The Ground for Pharaoh's Fear of Israel

(1) There was danger that the Israelites would grow stronger and mightier than the Egyptians. "As a race the Hebrews were more powerful than the Egyptians, remarkable for an active business life," and accustomed to an out-of-doors life through their labors with the sheep and on the farms.

(2) "Goshen is not a large tract of country; it is bounded on the north and south by deserts; it dwindles to a mere channel on the east; and on the west it is barred by the great city of Bubastis. A triangle of about ten miles in the side, with perhaps some minor extensions, is all that can be comprised in Goshen. If we make every possible allowance, it cannot have covered 100 square miles." But at their present rate of increase the Israelites were not only filling Goshen, but overflowing into other parts of Egypt. A stronger race settled in their very midst was an even greater danger than the same race within defined boundaries.

(3) The strong race was, however, a great danger even if it could be confined to Goshen. For "Goshen in the northeast corner of Egypt was in the region which enemies from the north (coming down along the shores of the Mediterranean) would reach first. What the king was most alarmed for was lest the Israelites should join any invading force and imperil the Egyptian supremacy."

The Treasure Cities the Israelites Built

In 1883-1884, Mr. Naville discovered Pithom, about twelve miles west of Ismailia, on the Wady Tumilat, through which runs the Sweetwater Canal, a canal of sweet, or Nile, water, which was made to give water to the hosts who made the Suez Canal. Near this were some granite statues representing Ramesses II. Here also were found the ruins of a city. The buildings were of brick, on some of which inscriptions were found from which it was learned that the ruins were of a treasure city named Pi Tum, "devoted to Tum" its religious name, while its civil name was Succoth, and that the founder of the city was Rameses II. The name Pi Tum in Egyptian seems without doubt the same as the name Pithom, in the English translation of the Hebrew form. Succoth, also, was inhabited by Israelites (Ex. 13:20), which would seem another argument for the identity of these ruins with the city built by the Israelites. The bricks were usually from 4 to 8 inches square and 1½ to 2 inches thick. They were unbaked, but very hard. "The treasure chambers occupy almost the whole of the old city, the walls of which are 650 feet square and 22 feet thick." "The whole space was divided into chambers, each with brick walls 8 to 10 feet thick, but with no windows and no doors." What is even more interesting, and wonderful in confirmation of the Bible history, is the fact that while the lower stories are built of well-made bricks, the upper rows are made of bricks with water plants, not straw, to bind them (Ex. 5:6-14).

What the Oppression Wrought for the Israelites

1. The oppression kept the Hebrews separate from the Egyptians, preventing intermarriages, and preserving them from debasing contact with idolatry.

2. Their oppressing united them into one nation, binding them together in common sorrows, dangers, hopes, and plans.

3. It tended to wean them from the desire for idols, those gods of their enemies, and lead them to the one God who alone could help them in their sore need.

4. In working for the Egyptians they were compelled to use Egyptian arts and appliances, to study the great national works and the noble architecture on which they were employed, and to become acquainted with weaving, the working of metals, the homes, and the literature which was written upon bricks. Professor Price says it "was an industrial training school in the foremost civilization of that day."

5. The oppression weaned them from Egypt, so that they were ready to leave when the time came which God had appointed. Otherwise they might have become so pleasantly settled in business, so encumbered with property, that, as many ages later in Babylon, they would not be willing to enter upon the hard and dangerous enterprise of journeying to Palestine, the only place in the world where they could accomplish their mission.

A WORLD SAVIOR

Jesus was a world man in size and reach. He did not come to the Jews. That was the door. He came through Jew door. But he came to the world.

He did not come to Palestine. That was only the doorsill. He stepped over the Palestine doorsill. But he came to the world. He died for the world, he said. He talked constantly about the world. At the last he sent his followers out on a mission to the world. He was a world man in reach and size.

And so the real Jesus follower is a world man in heart and outlook. It is a big thing to be a real Christian, bigger than some of us have taken in.—S. D. Gordon.

The Holy City

By Stephen Adams

Last night I lay a sleeping;

There came a dream so fair;

I stood in old Jerusalem

Beside the temple there.

I heard the children singing,

And ever as they sang

Methought the voice of angels

From heaven in answer rang:

Jerusalem, Jerusalem

Lift up your gates and sing,

Hosanna in the highest,

Hosanna to your King.

And then methought my dream was changed;

The streets no longer rang;

Hushed were the glad hosannas

The little children sang.

The sun grew dark with mystery;

The moon was cold and chill

As the shadow of a cross arose

Upon the lonely hill.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem,

Hark how the angels sing,

Hosanna in the highest,

Hosanna to your King.

And once again the scene was changed,

New earth there seemed to be;

I saw the holy city

Beside the tideless sea.

The light of God was on its street,

The gates were open wide;

And all who would might enter,

And no one was denied.

No need of moon or stars by night,

Nor sun to shine by day;

It was the new Jerusalem

That would not pass away.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem,

Sing, for the night is o'er;

Hosanna in the highest,

Hosanna forevermore.

Christian Education and Christian Endeavor

In the program of Christian Education, the Christian Endeavor society has a large and an important place to fill. It may be well counted as the Church's training school for her young people. It has been said that the Sunday school is for impression and the Christian Endeavor is for expression. While both organizations include the two elements, the Sunday school emphasis has been more on the side in instruction, and the Christian Endeavor emphasis has been strong in the line of active practical service, with a deeply devotional background.

Christian Education is not limited to the support of our schools and colleges, and to the program of instruction in the Sunday and week-day schools of religious education. It has to do, also, with the development of trained Christian workers for the various departments of church activity. This development is brought about through following the old adage, "We learn to do by doing." Here Christian Endeavor steps in and lends a hand, and through her program of varied Christian service helps to train leaders among the youth of today for the church of tomorrow.

The church, it is recognized, needs a training department for the young people, where the program of development will have a special appeal to the boys and girls of the teen age. This is provided by the Christian Endeavor society, and, at a time when so many life decisions are made, the proper atmosphere is created by the spirit of the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting of the model type and the challenge of the many committee activities which are suggested to the young people.

Youth is full of life and is eager to show action. To direct the energy and the enthusiasm of youth is the privilege—yea, the duty—of pastors and older church leaders. They must often take the initiative and give sane advice without offense to the inexperienced young people. We are often reminded that some times it is harder to help others to do things than to do those same things ourselves. But we must be willing to give the help for the sake of the potential leaders of the future who need the experience. It is counted as one of the important parts of the business of the church to develop leadership among the young people. Leadership training is most certainly a part of the task of Christian Education and Christian Endeavor provides a fitting field for that training. The Christian Endeavor service program is commended to any church that desires to solve wholly the problem of Christian education.—Rev. R. G. English, in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

BIBLES FOR CHILDREN A WORTHY CHURCH PLAN

The presentation of Bibles to children in recognition of their work in the church school is an important feature of the educational work of the Fairmont Presbyterian Church of Cleveland Heights, Ohio.

Upon their graduation from the primary department, the children are given attractively printed and well-bound copies of the Bible. As the first-year Junior work is based upon "The Books of the Holy Bible" by Georgia L. Chamberlin, the children at once learn to make use of their Bibles. These notebooks and the Bibles are the materials that make possible an adequate knowledge of and appreciation for the great stories of the Bible that appeal especially to children.

Theirs is a plan of giving Bibles to children that should appeal to church-school workers as being especially practical. To make Bible study for children more effective a revised edition of this notebook was recently published and a revision of the teacher's manual which accompanies it has just appeared. This book, "An Introduction to the Bible for Teachers of Children, by Miss Chamberlin, presents a working method for the teacher in guiding the Bible study for Juniors.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for July 4)

How Juniors Can Show Their Love for Their Country. Rom. 12:17-18

Once upon a time there were two little girls named Catherine and Elizabeth. They were sisters and they had one little brother, Bobby, who was only three years old. Catherine was nine and Elizabeth was eleven. On the day that I am to tell you about, these two little girls were seated on the edge of their bed talking things over very seriously. Their mother's birthday was just one week away and they were trying to think of some way to celebrate. First, they wanted to think of some way to earn money to get her a birthday present and second, they wanted to think of some way to celebrate when the birthday arrived. They decided to get permission to pick cherries and sell them, so that settled the matter of money, but the thing that they were puzzling over the most was what they should do when the birthday arrived. Elizabeth said that she believed she could bake a cake if they could find a time to do it when their mother was out so that it would surprise her. Catherine said that she would be willing to help with all of the work on that day.

Soon the week had slipped by. Catherine baked the cake on the afternoon before the birthday, while her mother was in town shopping. The two girls bought a beautiful vase with their money and their father bought some beautiful flowers for the vase. On the birthday morning the girls went to their mother's room, kissed her and wished her a happy birthday. Then they told her to go back to sleep and stay in bed as long as she wanted to, for they were going to get breakfast, take care of Bobby and do the regular morning chores. Catherine and Elizabeth had a good time all day surprising their mother by showing her how quickly and how well they could do all the work and let her rest. Then in the evening they had their big surprise, a big dinner and all the lovely birthday gifts. Just imagine how happy that mother was and what a pleasant birthday she had!

The fourth of July is our country's birthday. Did you ever think of it as that? It was on the fourth of July that our country became an independent country and began governing herself. How do you celebrate your country's birthday? Are we as nice to our country on her birthday as we are to our friends on theirs? We might think of some ways to celebrate this birthday on the fourth of July and help our country. We can not feed her cake or buy her flowers, but we can make her more beautiful by helping flowers to grow, and we might help her by giving to charities to feed those who are in need.

I like the suggestion made in one of our Bible verses about helping. The verse that I mean is the one in Romans that says, "Inasmuch as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." I think that would be a nice surprise for our country, by living peaceably and helping others to live peaceably.

Have you ever read the story in Nehemiah about a group of people who loved their country very much? It is a very interesting story and you will find a reference to it in this week's references. Those people loved their country so much that they worked both day and night for a long time serving her by building a wall that had been broken down.

We have a very wonderful country. Our country protects us from harm by having policemen and courts. It gives us freedom to worship God as we please. It makes us happy by building roads, and helping us in many other ways. It takes care of us by pure food laws. In fact, she does many more things for us than I can think to remind you of just now. I think it would be very nice for us Juniors to celebrate her birthday by loving her, by resolving to be peaceable citizens, by working for her and by promising to always obey her laws. You, Junior boys and girls, will soon be grown men and women and will have a chance to do big things for your country. If you begin now by doing the things that we have just been talking about, then when you have chances to do big things to show your love for your country, you will be ready.

News from Africa

Bozoum, par Bangui, French Equatorial
 Africa, April 7, 1926.

Dear Evangelist readers:

Perhaps a few words from Bassai station would be appreciated. The days are so very much the same that we feel we have no news to tell you. The rising bell at five o'clock in the morning, prayers, breakfast, preaching services and then work. Saturday and Sunday the schedule is different. The hospital buildings are coming along nicely under the supervision of Brother Kennedy. We are living in the two brick houses built by Brother Sheldon. The goats are living in new houses, too, so we feel somewhat in civilization.

To tell you how the missionaries spend their time would take too much room up in your paper. I know you would like to know some of the things God is doing here. While you pray he works and we see his wonder-working power manifested here. At all times we see also the power of the devil here.

Not long ago a Christian boy took sick all unknown to us. He fell over and the natives thought he was dead. They came to us and reported him dead, telling us that before he died he wanted them to bring him to Bassai and that he refused to appeal to the idols for healing. The men went to the village to prepare for the funeral when they found he was not dead and brought him to Bassai where he remained until he was well. Yapendi, a brother of the chief, took sick. He had tried to entice the Christian boy to lean on idols for healing but failed. When he took sick he refused medicine and had placed up outside his door the god of healing and crusted in it. He grew worse and died. His wooden idols were of no help. Our pleadings to him were in vain and he died a lost man.

Not long ago a boy in the village met with the chief in a quarrel and the chief took his two wives away from him to work on the new road. He destroyed his house and goods, consisting of earthen pots. The man was despondent and with a knife cut a large gash in his leg. He said he wanted to die. We talked to him and treated him and now he is getting well and wants to become a Christian. He has succeeded in getting back one of his wives and that is all he needs. The devil overstepped himself this time and God will receive glory to his name from it all.

No doubt you have heard before this that Nana was converted and gave up nine wives. He is the old man whose picture was placed in the Missionary paper.

Perhaps you wonder how we shepherd the church here. This is our greatest problem. Just now the government has most all the Kare tribe working on the auto road from Bozoum to Lia, and they can not come to services even on Sunday. We pray very much for them, for we know they are under very difficult environment to stand true. The soldiers are so severe with them and encourage the dance and gambling when off duty in the evenings. They are building bridges and at places several hundred camp in grass huts or in the open. While out itinerating we visited these places and gave them the bread of life at sunrise and at sunset just before they went to work and at the close of their day's work.

Pray very much for the Christians. One place we visited the soldiers who superintend the road remained some little distance from us and continued to gamble instead of coming to the services. Although we report many baptisms the devil is on his job here and tries in every way to take these babes in Christ. So weak many of them are and we need prayers to help them in their walk. We long for the time when we can have chapels in all villages and evangelists visiting these places to give them the word. It is encouraging to go to a far village and find some Christians standing true and preaching to their own people. Great is our responsibility here and the longer we are here the more we see it. Pray much and long for us.

Yours in his work.

Tales of Tribal Customs. No. III

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

Chapter II

A Witch Doctor's Conversion

Omindian had come to see his future mother-in-law. It was their tribal custom that aside from the marriage dowry paid to the girl's father, the prospective bridegroom must make the mother of each successive bride repeated presents for a period of two or three years. Omindian ordinarily dressed in a fantastic way, the chief garment of which was a leopard's skin. But a goat-skin was demanded by court etiquette when calling upon any one of his numerous mother-in-laws, or the mother-in-law to be. Not to have worn a goatskin would have been to pay a forfeit and this was something that Omindian carefully avoided doing. To have to make his mother-in-law-to-be presents was bad enough, he thought.

He therefore bought the least thing permissible, a piece of hippopotamus meat, for Atum (bow) was one of the few women to whom "hippo" meat was not "taboo." He concluded his visit without seeing Aeinge for which she was thankful, as she had a child's natural dread of the old wizard. Omindian's visits and presents continued throughout the year, and at the age of ten Aeinge was married.

The day had been set for the nuptials. Poor little trembling Aeinge surrounded by an escort of village girls slightly her junior, was taken to the hut in the harem of Omindian, which she was henceforth to occupy. According to the custom it was Rabolo her father who provided the wedding feast. For this purpose an ox was killed and the meat together with sorghum porridge was taken to Omindian's harem. The feasting and carousing lasted late into the night, and then Aeinge, shuddering with fear and a nameless dread, was left alone in her husband's village.

But the ceremony was not yet complete. She was to visit her home once more. The next morning, accompanied by all the other wives of Omindian as well as by her brothers, she returned to Rabolo's village where the second feast was celebrated, for Aeinge was yesterday a maiden and today a wife. This feast Omindian did not attend. It was not custom. Rabolo now presented Aeinge with a goat, with which, the fear and trembling of yesterday increased by loathing and disgust, she returned to her husband once more. But now into her life of sorrowful slavery came the missionary with her message. Day after day as the gospel was preached to her in her village, or in the gardens where she was hard at work, cultivating sorghum, the missionary came with the old sweet story. She was sorry for the little child wife, working beyond her strength in spite of the fact that not many months should elapse before she should become a mother, Aeinge's very sorrow brought her to receive with joy the gospel message, and the child clung to her missionary friend with a pathetic intensity...

It was night and raining. The elements seemed to increase Aeinge's agony within. Fain would she have called her missionary friend, but she was not permitted to do so.

Should a missionary deliver the child of Omindian the great witch-doctor? And so the malpractice of the native midwife was permitted. The storm increased in intensity without. The two-fold agony increased within, the awful throes of nature, and the inflictions of cruel heathen custom—until death came to relieve the sufferings too awful to be borne by one so young. It was another of the tribe's many tragedies. Yet awful as it was, it was mitigated by the fact that Aeinge's child-like faith enabled her without fear to enter the presence of the Lord whom she had learned to trust. Not even then can we write that mother and babe were buried in one grave, for in this particular branch of the tribe, women are not buried, their corpses being thrown out for the hyena's devouring rapacity.

Alatin now according to the custom that after death a man may marry his deceased wife's sister, became betrothed to Omindian. Aeinge had not been fully paid for, and to obtain Alatin it was necessary but to pay the balance due on Aeinge. For had not the

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

FIRST, JERUSALEM

THE FACULTY AND STUDENT BODY CHALLENGE THE CHURCH FOR LOYALTY AND SUPPORT OF THE ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN $11,848.50 PLEDGED.

In this campaign we have started out in the Apostolic method, in beginning first at Jerusalem (Ashland).

We want the Brotherhood to know that the people who are doing most for Ashland, are the teachers who are giving their lives, talents and efforts to build up a college of which all will be proud. We have a right to be proud of our Faculty, their ability, character and loyalty to the church. Our teachers are making financial sacrifice in the wages they receive, several of them having refused larger salaries from other institutions than they are now receiving. Not only this, but they are enlisted among the first in contributing to the Endowment Campaign.

The Faculty's Gift

EVERY TEACHER ON THE FACULTY has made a gift and stand 100% for the Endowment. The total gift of the Faculty is $3,790.00. There are no better qualified teachers in any educational institution to carry on college work. The College has been continually raising its standards for the past few years. After next year we will have four men with their Ph.D. degrees and most of our teachers now carry their Master's degree. The facts are, Ashland College offers as good training as any college in America and has met every requirement of the Standardized College, outside of the endowment, for which we will not have long to wait, by all present indications.

The Student Body Goes Over the Top

The young men and women who are receiving their education in Ashland tell with no uncertain measure, their estimate and love for the College. The Senior class this year, which numbers over 80, have done a handsome thing for the College in subscribing $5,800.00 to the endowment. They are saying their appreciation for Ashland, not with flowers, but with "greenbacks." No class could offer a better memorial than the class of 1926. Other classes have already made gifts, which added to the Senior Class gift, makes a total for the student body of $8,585.50. If you want to know what the Ashland students think of the College, look these figures over. THE GIFTS OF THE FACULTY AND STUDENT BODY IS A CHAL-LENGE FOR THE CHURCH TO SUPPORT THIS CAMPAIGN.

THE WHITTIER REVIVAL

It is the aim of the First Brethren church of Whittier, California, is to hold a Bible conference each year in the fall and a plain old-fashioned revival in the Spring. For the Bible Conference we use teachers both in and out of the Brethren church but for the revival we use pastors or evangelists of our own church.

This year several of the churches on the coast decided to share in the cost of getting one of our men from the East and Brother Charles H. Ashman of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, was invited to come. The church at Johnstown kindly consented to let him off for three months and he began the first meeting with us at Whittier, starting May 2nd and continuing three weeks. Brother Ashman and the pastor had worked together in meetings prior to this one and there was no question as to the personal pleasure which was to be ours. These anticipations were fully realized. Ashman's capacity in proportion to his size is really marvelous. This is capable of several interpretations.

The membership of the church had made faithful preparation for this meeting. Whittier is a hard place to hold revival meetings and get big results in numbers. This is a great church town and a revival is in progress in one or the other of the churches with very few nights of intermission from September until June. The city of Los Angeles is only a few miles away where speakers of world renown can be heard almost any time. The pastors of the local churches are men above the average preacher, for the most part and it takes a man with a message to get the ear of the people. The attendance throughout the meeting was very good, perhaps the largest and most uniform we ever have had. Many members from other churches enjoyed the sermons. Brethren from our other churches attended at different times. The hard task was to get unsaved people out. This was the weak spot in the meeting. Neither the evangelist or the pastor cared to use any sensational stunts to get a crowd. We did use the newspaper and other forms of advertising quite freely. Good singing was a feature of the meeting. The adult choir had one end of the platform and the boys and girls had the other and they sure made the building ring with their singing. Special numbers in song were given at every service and often numbers on different musical instruments were rendered.

Brother Ashman is a tireless worker in an evangelistic meeting. He is willing to spend and be spent. He is never discouraged. You do not have to make special plans to keep him in a good humor. His preaching was the best we have yet heard him give. There was not one "light" sermon during the entire three weeks. There is no need to say that he is absolutely true to every fundamental doctrine in the Bible. He can return to Whittier for another meeting any time he can get away. There were twenty-one people stepped to the front during the meeting. Some making their first confession, some coming for membership in the church. Fifteen have been baptized and received into fellowship and another baptismal service is appointed for next Sunday when most of the others will be ready and some who have come since the meeting closed will be baptized. The condition of the church was in a good way before the meeting began and if we are able to judge, it is now the best in her history.

A. V. KIMMELL, Pastor.

THE WHITTIER REVIVAL

Whittier is a difficult place in which to hold an evangelistic campaign. It is over-churched. It is a Quaker town, having the largest "Friends" church in the United States. The Quaker College is there. These Quakers spiritualize all ordinances. But, we have a thriving church, bearing a genuine testimony to the whole gospel in this place. The church building is modern and adequate. Whittier needs the Brethren church for more reasons than one.

The congregation is spiritual. They know and test the power of prayer. They are consecrated and zealous. They believe and have been instructed in the Whole Gospel. Under the able leadership of their pastor, they have come to love, know, accept, and live the entire Word of God. The fellowship among them is sweet. It is an inspiration to worship with them and a joy to preach to them the blessed Word. Unity, peace, and power prevail in their assemblies. We enjoyed every minute among them. They cared for our physical needs in a magnificent manner. They fell in line with our evangelistic methods whole-heartedly.

They recognized and appreciated the truth. And, how they did sing! For their numbers, we have never heard better singing as a congregation. All in all, we count our meeting with them, one of the very best and most enjoyable we have ever conducted.

Numbers are an index to victory only when they are related to local conditions. We count the meeting at Whittier with 21 confessions to be a success. The field is limited because of the town being overchurched and predominantly Quaker. Taking all things into consideration, we rejoice in the victory among the Brethren. We believe they shall go steadily forward in the Lord's Work until he comes.

Now, we could write columns about the beauty and advantages of this Southern California. We could add columns describing the grandeur of Grand Canyon and other places we saw en route. But, the Evangelist pages are not intended for travelogues, so we will refrain. We are now in the midst of a revival at Long Beach with public confessions from the first day and continuing at almost every service. We believe we will be able to report one of the greatest meetings in the history of the church here when we are through.

Evangelist CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

It has been some little time since Sunnyside was last heard from, so now we will try to tell of some of the things we have been doing.

I think our Easter service is the biggest thing, so will tell of that first.

We were one of the several churches from Sunnyside and the neighboring towns, to take part in the sunrise praise and prayer service, held on Big Snipes Mountain. The mountain is near Sunnyside and has ample room on top for cars to drive up.

A large crowd attentively listened to seven ministers give talks on the seven sayings of Christ on the Cross.

It was voted to hold a similar service at the same place next year and it is not unlikely that a precedent has been established for all time.

During passion week the Church of the Brethren united with us in a series of meetings, Brother Pike bringing the message on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and Brother Beal on Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings. Each church held their own Sunday morning service. Our hearts were made to rejoice when at the conclusion of that service eight children heard the call and offered their lives to the Master. What better gift could be made on this day of our blessed Lord's resurrection?

We are proud too of our mission offering on that day, which totaled $1438.34, and we thank the Lord for it.

We have been hearing from our pulpit, some fine sermons concerning Catholicism. Brother Beal gave them in answer to the open services which were held in the local Catholic church during the winter. Considerable interest has been shown and we feel that good will surely result.

We are glad to tell you that Brother Beal has been called to be our pastor for another year. The Lord is blessing his ministry here, sixteen souls having found their way to the Lord.

Holy Communion was observed on May first, with a large crowd in attendance.

Mother's Day was observed, with a splendid program. The church was beautifully decorated with cut flowers and potted plants, four of which were presented to our four mothers who had reached or gone past their seventieth year. Hearts were made tender and thankful too, as we paused to reconsider all that "mother" means and has meant to us.

Mother came first on that day, but father was not forgotten, for we know that without cooperation in the hope our training could not have meant so much—and so we thank God for mother and for father too.

MRS. OPAL BALL.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH

Winchester, Virginia, Dedicated May 23, 1926

The new church building at Winchester, Virginia, was dedicated on Sunday, May 23, 1926. Three audiences filled the church and all seemed pleased with the new building and the prospect for the church to grow in that unchurched and promising section of the city of Winchester. Only a small debt of a few hundred dollars remains and part of that is covered with pledges.

The preaching on dedication Sunday was done by E. L. Miller of Maurertown, J. M. Tombaugh and G. C. Carpenter of Hagers-town. The dedication ceremony took place at the evening service. Brethren Miller and Tombaugh preached able sermons and made strong appeals for funds with a good response by those present. Brother J. I. Hall preached on the Sunday preceding dedication and during the week and also a part of the week after, being assisted several nights by Brethren Miller and Carpenter. Services heretofore have been held in private homes and have been in charge of Brethren E. B. Shaver, R. S. Long, J. M. Tombaugh and others. A. T. Ronk conducted an evangelistic meeting some time past.

The building is the first unit, 30 by 40 feet and is of red brick with white cement trimmings and presents a pleasing appearance. There are two class rooms, one on either side of the vestibule, both opening into the main audience room. The basement is full size and well lighted and will afford additional room when it is completed. The baptistry is beneath the platform in the main room and has already been used.

The charter membership roll is now open and 35 have signed as charter members at last report. Nine of these were received by baptism and the remainder were formerly members of Brethren churches at other places.

The new Sunday school was launched on Sunday, May 30. The attendance on the first Sunday was 72. Charles Buhl is the wide-awake superintendent. All are anxious to work and see the Sunday school grow. The field is there and the Lord is saying to the members, "Go work today." Splendid results are expected.

An effort is being made to secure a pastor. A shepherd is needed at once to lead and direct in this new work. The people have a mind to work and if properly directed success is sure to follow. The community in the section around the church welcome the coming of the church. Other churches were contemplating building a church in that part of the city but will not likely do so since we have gone forward. It is up to the Brethren church now to possess the land.

A basket dinner was enjoyed by a large number in the basement of the church on Dedication Sunday. The long table through the center of the room was heaped high with good things to eat. Virginia folks are noted for their hospitality and the Winchester folks are true to their reputation.

This is the first new church to be organized in this district for some years. The District Mission Board has been interested in this work from the start and all the churches in the district ought to give full and loyal support to the district mission board. The trustees of the church and the mission board have practiced economy on every hand and have succeeded with an expenditure of less than $4,000 in securing a building valued at $6,000, which is a conservative estimate. Business men in Winchester were surprised at the low cost.

May the Lord continue to bless and guide and prosper this work, all to his glory and to the salvation of men.

G. C. CARPENTER.

The seven wonders of the world are the wireless, the telephone, the airplane, radium, antiseptics and antitoxins, spectrum analysis and X-rays. Compare their value to mankind with these seven wonders of the Middle Ages: The Coliseum of Rome, the Catcombs of Alexandria, the great wall of China, Stonehenge, the leaning tower of Pisa, the porcelain tower of Nankin and the Mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople. Or, again, compare them with the seven wonders of the ancient world: The pyramids of Egypt, the Pharos of Egypt, the hanging gardens of Babylon, the temple of Diana at Ephesus, the statue of Jupiter by Phidias, the mausoleum of Artemisia and the Colossus of Rhodes.—The Silent Partner.

TIMES OF STRAIN FOR THE SOUL

To every soul there come times when everything in which he has trusted seems about to give way. Human fellowships are often disappointments. The props do not always furnish support. The joys sometimes have a bitter taste. There seems to be no sure refuge, no place of comfort, no certain hope—except in God. We are driven to him by sheer force of circumstances. And always we find him a refuge and strength, and a very present help in trouble. He is without failing a source of comfort and spiritual refreshing. In him our hope is fixed and undisturbed.

It is not strange that the writers of the Psalms have so much to say about trusting in God. They are but voicing human experience; an experience of disappointment in things heavenly. Again and again it has come to pass that he who trusts in the Lord, and does good, not only dwells in the land, but is fed also; for "the Lord redeemeth the souls of his servants; and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate."—Selected.

bargain for Acinge been a bad one? Scarcely one year had she served him in the gardens, and then had died, not even leaving him the consolation of a living child. And so the dread day came when in exchange for six cows, the balance due on Acinge, Alatin in return became his wife. But Obongo, who had loved Acinge and after her tragic death had desired to have Alatin was accused of entering her hut—such accusations are frequent indeed and had serious weight in Alatin's case. If proven true, she would be put to death.

Her trial was to be a simple and to the native mind a very logical one. Dry flour was given her to swallow, the flour of Kaffir corn.

If she succeeded in swallowing it she would be thus proven innocent, but the consciousness of guilt, inhibiting the flow of saliva would prevent her swallowing it, and the death penalty would then be inflicted.

But Alatin swallowed the flour! Yet Ominidian was not convinced. He now prepared a concoction of wimbi flour and medicine which he boiled in a pot of native clay over a fire of intensest heat. If it boiled over, Alatin would be guilty. But the flour and medicine thickened and dried on the edge of the pot.

Still Ominidian was dissatisfied. In his rage he determined to put Alatin to another test, and he prepared a gourd with crushed mimosa, just as in the generation gone by he had done for Atero, the wife of Rabolo. And then cunningly displacing the mimosa at the strategic moment, the gourd had leaked upon Atero's hand. And she was proven guilty! But this time Ominidian's skill failed, for as he passed the gourd over Alatin's hand not a drop escaped!

A sudden thought seized him. What sorcery was this that was greater than his own? What power was this that exceeded the power of Jamkingo, native magic? "Alatin," he said, "tell me. Are you a Christian." Tremblingly Alatin stood before him. "I am," she said, "a Christian, like Acinge." Rage overpowered him. He raised his hand to strike Alatin a deadly blow. But the red sun was sinking in the west, a sign of approaching death for one who struck a blow beneath its departing rays. He spit toward it to avert calamity, then dropped his uplifted hand. Many were the prayers that had been offered for the missionaries and the native Christians for Ominidian's conversion. Instead of striking Alatin, he turned and strode toward the hut. Often he had heard the gospel, and now he cried out to God, the God who can save even so vile a wretch as himself. Then and there, he believed, and believing, was saved. His younger wives, including little Alatin, were freed and became the wards of the missionary. Ominidian humbly attended the daily service at the mission station, was baptized and used his every influence for Christ. Not many witch-doctors are saved and those who are, are usually saved as Ominidian was through the defeat of their own powers, and the quiet and courageous testimony of godly living by some member of their own families, in death as with Acinge, in life, as with Alatin.

Lost souls are perishing in heathen tribes today which you and I might reach. Let us go with our Savior to the ends of the earth, preaching his gospel which alone has power. His shed blood which alone has efficacy, and his coming again which alone is our hope, our inspiration, and our joy. Let us follow on, for the sake of his name, being "not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," even to an African witch doctor.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

TAYLOR-LENHART—At the Brethren parsonage in Milledgeville, Illinois, on the evening of June 9, 1926, occurred the marriage of Glenn Taylor and Miss Ila Lenhart. The bride is one of the Sisterhood girls and prominent member of the Brethren church of Milledgeville. Both of these young people were residents of this community and well known. They go immediately to take up their work on the farm near Amboy, Illinois. The best wishes of their many friends attend them. The ring ceremony was used. The bride's pastor being the one to officiate at the ceremony.

GEO. E. CONE.

RIDDLE-SCHERTZ—Charles E. Riddle, the Superintendent of the Brethren Sunday school at Tiosa, Indiana, and Miss Irma O. Schertz of the same place were united in holy marriage June 1st in the WHT studio at the Wrigley Building, Chicago, Illinois, by the groom's brother, Rev. E. M. Riddle, pastor of First Brethren church at Bryan, Ohio. Makers of the U S L radio and automobile batteries some time ago offered a free honeymoon trip of one week to Niagara Falls to the couple who would send the best suggestion for improving U S L radio programs, and the prize was won by this couple from Tiosa, Indiana. With the wonderful program of music by real artists, the attendants, flowers in abundance, the impressive single ring ceremony, and thousands of friends listening in, the occasion was one of singular beauty never to be forgotten. The trip will be ended with a short visit at the Brethren parsonage at Bryan, Ohio, following the week at Niagara Falls, after which the happy couple will live on the Riddle farm south of Tiosa.

May the blessing of God accompany them on their journey through life together.

E. M. RIDDLE.

WALLACE-CHEESEMAN—At the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Straka in Milledgeville, Illinois, on the afternoon of June 3, 1926, Mr. Miles Wallace and Mrs. Mary Jane Cheese-man, both of Milledgeville, Illinois, were united in marriage by the bride's pastor, Geo. E. Cone. The short ceremony was used. Our best wishes go with these estimable people as they enter upon the ventures of life together.

IN THE SHADOW

KELLER—Eliza Jane was born April 2nd, 1869. Died in Ashland, April 2, 1926, aged 57 years. Twenty-five years ago she was married to Wm. H. Keller. They had one adopted son who preceded Mrs. Keller to the spirit world several years and over whom she grieved much. She was a sister to the late lamented Charles Beckley, and of Mrs. H. M. Oberholtzer, of Columbus, Ohio. But three of the family survive, one sister, a Mrs. Benz of Pennsylvania. Many years ago she gave her life to the Master and united with the Brethren church at Fairview, and her service for him was of the quiet, unobtrusive kind that means much and gets small praise. She was one of the faithful members of the Mansfield church for several years, and was active and faithful in her duties as a member of the Woman's Missionary Society. Her departure leaves Brother Keller quite alone and sad. It is hard for him without any of his family left, but he braves the future with faith in God, knowing that an all-wise providence does all things well. She was looking forward with keen anticipation to serving the Lord in the new church, but he had better things for her in her advancement to be with him. Funeral services were held in the Church of the Brethren in charge of the pastor, assisted by Prof. DeLozier, a former pastor who bore a fine testimony to her Christian character. She suffered much and long, undergoing a severe mastoid operation which had healed, but something deeper held her in its grip until she succumbed. The prayers of God's people are due Brother Keller and the bereaved.

CHARLES A. BAME.

RICHARDSON—Mrs. Bell Brand Richardson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Brand, was born in the Dutchtown neighborhood near Milledgeville, Illinois, March 24, 1868 and passed away at her home in Milledgeville, Illinois, May 21, 1926, aged 57 years, 1 month and 27 days.

She was united in marriage to John Richardson December 25, 1885. To this union was born one daughter Pearl. Mr. Richardson preceded the wife in death five years ago last July. The daughter, Mrs. Pearl Richardson Diehl, was with the mother throughout her sickness and to the closing moments of life.

Mrs. Richardson confessed Jesus Christ as her Lord and was baptized in the Dunker church in 1880, and when the division came she became a charter member of the Brethren church. She was very active in all the work of the church of her choice and thought of and planned for its work even to the very last days of her life. Many, as children, have learned valuable lessons for life in her Sunday school classes. Her services in the various branches of the work of the church will be missed by all.

She leaves to mourn their loss, the devoted daughter, Mrs. Pearl Diehl, Milledgeville, Illinois; one sister, Mrs. Louise Schriner of Rockford, Illinois; one devoted niece, Mrs. B. F. Healy of Milledgeville, Illinois and other relatives and a host of friends.

Funeral services held at the Milledgeville Brethren church, Elder Z. T. Livengood officiating, being assisted by the writer,
GEO. E. CONE.

CHEESMAN—George Washington Cheesman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cheesman, was born near Lanark, Illinois, December 25, 1858 and passed away May 17, 1926, aged 67 years, 4 months and 22 days. Fourteen years ago Mr. Cheesman suffered a severe sunstroke from which he never recovered and from which developed hardening of the arteries of the brain. This condition grew worse until his life was taken by hemorrhage of the brain which caused the end to come suddenly.

Mr. Cheesman accepted Jesus Christ as his Lord and Master in 1889 during an evangelistic meeting conducted in the Baptist church of Milledgeville Illinois. During the winter of 1917 the Baptist church having disbanded, Mr. Cheesman united with the Brethren church and remained faithful to that belief through the remaining years of his life.

He leaves to mourn their loss the faithful wife, Mrs. Della Cheesman of Milledgeville, Illinois; two daughters, Mrs. O. F. Bittner and Mrs. C. H. Embrick both of Beloit, Wisconsin; one son, Mr. H. Cheesman of Milledgeville, Illinois—Four sisters, Mrs. S. L. Tracy of Morrison, Illinois; Mrs. W. D. Putland of Belvidere, Illinois; Mrs. M. D. Knapp and Mrs. J. T. Brand of Milledgeville, Illinois. These with a number of more distant relatives and a host of friends mourn the loss of a kind husband, a loving father and brother, and a good neighbor and friend.

Funeral was held from the J. T. Brand home by the undersigned, GEO. E. CONE.

ZOOK—Sarah Aldridge Zook was born in Cass County, near Twelve Mile, Indiana, November 20th, 1841, and departed this life May 13th, 1926, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Abshire. Her age was 84 years, 6 months and seven days.

On November 30th, 1867, she was united in marriage to Mr. John L. Zook who preceded her in death many years. He departed this life on March 2nd, 1899.

Mrs. Zook became a Christian in her youth, and was a member of the First Brethren Church of Roann from the time of its organization. She was called to serve as deaconess and served her Master and church faithfully for many years. Poor health in her later days prevented her from taking an active part in church work and she often expressed her regret at not being able to serve her Master like she had in the days past.

Sarah was one of ten children of whom only one is living, who is Mrs. Hannah Lowman with whom she had made her home the last three and a half years.

Those who are left to mourn her loss are one sister, Mrs. John Lowman, three stepchildren, Mrs. Amos Flora, and Mr. Frank Zook of Flora, Indiana, and Mr. Will Zook of Camden, Indiana, besides a number of nieces and nephews and a host of friends.
O. C. LEMERT.

MOORE—John S. Moore was called into his eternal home from his earthly dwelling place at Aleppo, Pennsylvania, on April 13, 1926. His death brought to a close six years of sickness, the greater part of which he was an invalid. He was in his sixty-seventh year, and had been a man of remarkable strength and health. He was a God-fearing, and therefore a law-abiding, respected and useful citizen. He with his companion who survives reared a family of four daughters, all of whom have been a living monument to their parents' devotion and Christian nurturing, by their great service in and through the church.

Brother Moore was the fourth child of a family of twelve children of Henry L. and Mary Strawn Moore. He married Miss Margaret E. Miller, who survives with three of the daughters, fifteen grandchildren, and three great grandchildren. Orville Donley Ulom, a graduate of Ashland College in the class of 1925, was a grandson.

Brother Moore enlisted in the service of the Lord thirty years ago, and was ever identified with the constructive and worthy activities of the community. Although his six years of illness limited his usefulness, he is greatly missed by the community. Funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer.
W. S. CRICK.

CHRONIGER—Mary J. Chroniger, daughter of Thomas and Roxanna Johnstone, was born July 10, 1851, and departed this life May 30th, 1926, aged 74 years, 10 months and 20 days. At the place of her birth, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in the year 1873 she was married to Chas. B. Chroniger, who served his country in the Civil War. Her husband preceded her in death after having reached the mature age of 81 years. To this union were born five children, two sons and three daughters, all of whom survive.

To serve her Master acceptably was the supreme desire of the deceased. She knew God's Word and could find comfort and help at all times in its blessed pages. She has always been an inspiration to all with whom she associated. She will be greatly missed not only by the members of her family but also by the members of the Washington church who held her in highest regard because of her beautiful Christian life.

Sweet spirited and patient, she waited the coming of the time when she would be relieved of bodily pain and suffering and her soul would wing its way to be with the Lord who gave it. And that time came as a beautiful climax to a life wholly surrendered to the Savior. Calm and serene in the presence of death her loved ones shall always remember the silent testimony to a life well spent.

The funeral service was conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. Jarret of the Christian church. Interment was in Arlington National Cemetery.

HOMER A. KENT, Washington, D. C.

ROUSH—Within a week the South Bend church sustained a second very sad loss in the death of Sister Elizabeth Evelyn Roush. Evelyn was only seventeen years of age, a Junior in High School, a lovely Christian girl, with many friends. For three weeks the battle went on against disease. Her devoted father and mother did everything that could be done humanly speaking, to save their only child. Evelyn, too, fought bravely and hopefully because she wanted to get well. And many prayers went up for her. We anointed her several times during her illness because she laid hold of this service with a most beautiful faith. It brought her great comfort and peace. But after all had been done Evelyn answered the summons on the evening of May 19th in the Mishawaka Hospital, and we had to conclude that it was not the will of our heavenly Father that she should remain longer here. At the age of 14 Evelyn came into the South Bend church. Her Christian father and mother have maintained a most commendable and inspiring resignation in the midst of their great, crushing sorrow. May God bless and sustain them. The funeral was in the church. She was carried to her last earthly resting place by young men of her High School class. The floral tributes were numerous and wonderful. And there was a deep, genuine sense of sympathy on every hand. Truly it was hard to see her go in the morning hours of her life. But "His ways are not our ways." And back of it all is the blessed hope that we shall meet Evelyn again. Services conducted by the pastor.
WM. H. BEACHLER.

SHELPMAN—Through the death of Sister Anna Shelpman on the morning of May 12th, the South Bend church lost a loyal, consistent member. Sister Shelpman came into the church here more than thirty years ago under the ministry of Sister Laura Grossnickle Hedrick, and all through her years she has been a gentle Christian woman, reflecting always by her life and conduct real credit upon her Lord and the church. She was a little past the 66th milestone in her life, and her death followed a long, testing illness, but amid it all she maintained a beautiful composure, and her Christian faith, like a sure anchor, kept her triumphant through it all. Her devoted husband, Brother Marshal B. Shelpman, is left alone. For 43 years these two journeyed happily together. Not blessed with children of her own Sister Shelpman was nevertheless a mother to her brothers and sisters who were left without father or mother when some of them were very young. This was a great labor of love and her brothers and sisters could have sorrowed no more over the death of their mother than they did over their noble sister. It was a great inspiration to know Sister Shelpman. A bright hope sustained her to the end. Funeral services in the South Bend church conducted by the pastor.
WM. H. BEACHLER.

WALTER—Charles L. Walter departed this life May 22, 1926, at his home at New Enterprise, Pennsylvania, after a brief illness of pernicious anaemia. He had been confined to his bed little more than a month, and his death was not expected so soon. Brother Walter had been engaged in business in the New Enterprise community for twenty-five years, and was widely and favorably known. He was in his fifty-first year.

Brother Walter was a member of the Brethren church for a number of years, and was always faithful in his attendance at the services of the Lord's House, and loyal to the Master; he was an upright and conscientious citizen. He is survived by his widow, one brother and one sister. Funeral services were conducted from his home church by the writer assisted by Rev. Jas. S. Cook of Martinsburg, and Rev. D. T. Detwiler, of the Church of the Brethren.
W. S. CRICK.

CLARK—Mrs. Isabella Clark, wife of Brother Andrew Clark, was born at Woodville, Rappahannock County, Virginia, September 27, 1860; died at her home in Rappahanock County, June 2, 1926, aged 65 years, 8 months and 5 days.

Sister Clark leaves a faithful husband and eight children—five boys and three girls, and 24 grandchildren to mourn her loss. She was a faithful member of the Copps Chapel congregation for a number of years. Her remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground near her home. Services by the writer
AMZI WEIMER, Bealeton, Virginia.

The Accumulative Power of the Spirit

Some years ago a great bronze bell was being conveyed up one of the Burmese rivers on a lighter. The lighter was upset and the bronze bell sank to the bottom of the river. The crew did their best to raise it, but failed. A Buddhist priest watched them until they were exhausted and said, "It is no good, we shall have to leave it." Then the priest came forward and said, "If I raise it may I have it for our temple?" They replied, "Yes, for we shall have to leave it, if you can get it you may have it." So the priest sent men down who dived to the bottom of the river, and each man as he went down took a piece of bamboo and fastened it to the bell until the bamboos became a thick mass, they lifted the bell to the surface. Each act of service you do, and each message you give in the name of the Lord and for his glory helps to lift the church and the kingdom of God in the world. Spread the Gospel through the printed page.

How Teach Our Distinctive Doctrines Today?

How, when and where can we teach the distinctive Brethren doctrines today? This is not an imaginary difficulty, or a hypothetical question; it is a problem our leadership is facing, a question that is being raised by men who are out on the firing line. Nor is it confined to the younger men of the ministry; older ones as well are confessing themselves puzzled over the situation, and are seeking light of one another. Such questions have found their way to preacher's discussion groups and conference programs. And in personal conversation we have heard the question raised. These facts coupled with the complaint heard from some of our older and thoroughly indoctrinated laymen in some quarters to the effect that sermons on distinctive Brethren practices are seldom preached, make us believe that the problem is more generally felt than we have been wont to think, and therefore worthy of serious and public consideration.

It is not our purpose here to attempt to explain the source of this problem, or to point out how it has come about, except to say that we do not believe it is due to any purposed disloyalty or conscious lack of faith on the part of our ministry, and to recall that we have heard statements made by several of our ministers recently that though they had the desire, they found it difficult to preach Brethren doctrine in the face of the numerous friends and members of other churches attending their services. Our aim here is not to solve the problem, but merely to raise the question, offer a few suggestions that have grown out of our experience and then throw the topic open to discussion, if any feel moved to write upon it.

As an introductory consideration, we may say, what we have already said on various occasions, that we are not among those who believe that denominationalism has seen its day and is soon to be discarded. We believe in our denomination and its cause, and we have a feeling that every other Christian, who looks upon his church as being charged with a great mission, has the right to be proud of and is under the obligation to be loyal to his denomination. We believe we have a right to present our slant of the Gospel, our view of loyalty to the teachings of Jesus and our interpretation of fidelity to the Word of God, while at the same time exercising the most sincere respect for the differing views of others, displaying a genuinely fraternal spirit in our relations with them, and giving the most hearty cooperation in the common tasks of the churches. With such an understanding, we would offer the following suggestions as to how to present our distinctive doctrines.

Let us present them with frank loyalty to the teachings of Christ and his apostles and to the practices of the primitive Christian church. All men respect the quality of loyalty in the human heart, and they are few and far between who will take any offense at a demonstration of such loyalty, sincerely and fittingly expressed, however much they may disbelieve in the cause. The importance of a consciousness of straightforward loyalty to the Word of God as we hold forth the position of our church cannot be too strongly emphasized. It will give us confidence and strength and will challenge the respect of others. If we approach the subject in an apologetic attitude we forfeit forthwith the respect of self and of others, set up in their minds a distrust of our position and throw an added burden of proof upon our own shoulders. Let it be frankly and unmincingly stated that our attitude toward the Bible is one of loyalty even to the details; that we desire to give humble and faithful obedience to all that Jesus taught and ordained for the practice of his church and our task will be easier and our position stronger.

Let us also present our denominational practices with strong conviction as to their worth as the bearers of truth essential to the life of our day. The world has not outgrown the need of just such teaching as our Lord couched in the forms which we observe as ordinances of the church. Wherein the world or the vast majority of the Christian church fails to appreciate such forms, their skepticism is due to the fact that they have not put them to the test; they have not sounded their depths; they have not tasted of their richness. These teachings have not lost any of their content or power; nor are they any the less adapted to the needs of humanity than in the days when Jesus walked in human flesh. The spiritual stimulus received from the practice of the ordinances of God's house is something that every soul needs, and without the sincere observance of which he cannot be all that he could be with it. They are needed to give the right spirit and attitude to our social relations, and we ought to insist on their being made very meaningful by the carrying into daily life the spirit and teachings they inculcate. These forms are needed to preserve unadulterated and unchanged and to convey accurately and impressively the spiritual truths with which Jesus charged them, and which he considered so important to the life and relations of his disciples. In this, as in other respects, our Lord showed himself the supreme teacher of all time, the wisdom of whose methods the greatest teachers of our day are just beginning to approach. Indeed from the psychological, social and pedagogical standpoints, the teachings and practices of the Brethren stand approved by the views of the most noteworthy teachers of our day. And it is important that we shall be strongly convinced of their importance and value, as vehicles of truth, of which the world stands sorely in need.

Then let our frank loyalty and strong conviction be seasoned with a spirit of charity and genuine consideration for the rights of others to their views, if they are not able to see with us. We dare not be dogmatic without being kind, nor positive without displaying the spirit of charity, or we shall become offensive and defeat our own purpose. It is not necessary that we be abusive to be frankly loyal, nor intolerant to be strongly convinced of our position. Paul was a giant in faith and loyalty, as strong and unyielding in his support of the truth as the rock-ribbed hills of Palestine, but the granite of his character was covered over with the mantle of charity. So essential did he consider a loving attitude to the presentation of truth, especially where diversity of opinion existed, that he said, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love I am become as sounding brass." And right here, may we suggest, is the big difference in "this new day" which we imagine will not endure sound doctrinal preaching—it simply will not countenance the spirit that prevailed in the old days. It is not the content of the teaching but the manner in which it is presented that must be changed. And here lies the weakness of both extremes in the religious controversy of today—they display a bitterness of feeling and a severity in attack that the rank and file of Christian people cannot reconcile with the spirit of Christ, in consequence of which there is danger, if it has not already set in, of a waning of interest in a properly spirited defense of the truth and a legitimate encouragement to science and progress. So far as our observation goes, Brethren preachers have been too conscious of the demands of Christian charity to display the bitter antagonism that was not uncommon a generation ago in the presentation of denominational claims, much to their great credit, but we are not of the opinion that "this new day" will be disinterested in, or unresponsive of the truth, even to the teaching and practice of the ordinances of God's house, if presented with loyalty and conviction. (The "When" and "Where" of the teaching of our distinctive doctrines will be dealt with in a succeeding editorial.)

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We have heard from several sources that the Maryland-Virginia Conference was a great success which recently convened at Roanoke, Virginia, in the church of which Brother H. H. Rowsey is pastor. One says, "Fine attendance, good harmony," another says, "Great, harmonious conference." That sounds good, and it is as it should be, Brethren should dwell together in unity. We shall be having a good report of the proceedings of this conference soon, no doubt.

Brother L. G. Wood writes of his work at Fort Scott, Kansas, where he is connected up with a really hard job. But notwithstanding the difficulties and hindrances, he is not discouraged, and has confidence in ultimate victory. And it is just such faith that overcomes the world, removes mountains and enables us to sing the songs of victory in Christ's name. Twelve were lost from attendance by removal and one added to the membership by re-enstatement.

Brother E. A. Duker, pastor of the Campbell church at Lake Odessa, Michigan, writes of a season of spiritual refreshment under the preaching of Dr. G. W. Rench of South Bend, Indiana and as a result three souls were added unto the Lord. And it is evident that the people enjoyed Brother Rench's messages, with eighty-five per cent of the attendants remaining with him night after night. Brother Harley Zumbaugh was the song leader.

We have had a number of favorable comments on the series of splendid articles recently completed by Rev. Herbert H. Tay of La Verne, California, on "Walks and Talks in Holy Places." That Brother Tay did a real service to the brotherhood in sharing so much of what he got in his travels and study in Palestine and Egypt is evidenced by the fine reception his articles enjoyed. And it is only fair to the generosity of the writer to share this appreciation with him in this public way.

It is satisfying to note the increasing number of Brethren pastors and Sunday school leaders taking an interest in the Daily Vacation Bible School. We have learned of three schools conducted in the Mid-West district—Beaver City, Nebraska, Portis and Fort Scott, Kansas. Perhaps there are others. At Ashland Prof. J. A. Garber is superintending a union Vacation School, one section of which is meeting in our new church. Doubtless in every district many churches are engaging in such work. We shall be glad for brief reports of schools.

Dr. Gribble who is taking a much needed rest in France, writes a most interesting letter, and it is evident that she is able to get inspiration from her environment. The consecrated servant of God, the one who rests contentedly in the divine will, is always able to do that. To learn to be satisfied with his will is the supreme need of the vast majority of our restless, discontented church, and to learn that is to be in a position to get the abundance of joy out of life. Dr. Gribble plans to return to the United States, arriving in New York, August 19th.

Brother Freeman Ankrum and his faithful co-workers at Oak Hill, West Virginia, are still pressing forward together in a splendid spirit and the church is growing in standing in the community. Brother Ankrum is remaining with these people for another year, which is as it should be. He is doing a fine piece of work here and should stay until it is finished. And this is a matter worthy of more serious consideration by the brotherhood, when a pastor is doing a worthy work at a place, he should desire to stay and should be allowed to stay until he has finished his task. And it is encouraging to note that our pastorates are being lengthened, and as a result the pastors are doing more effective building.

Brother J. L. Gingrich writes of his change of pastorates from Masontown to Johnstown, Pennsylvania. During his six years' leadership at the former charge some marked advances were made, as he records, and the church was left much stronger because of his service. He, of course, had a very enjoyable time at Masontown, everybody does who goes there. They know how to cooperate with their leader. And now that he is situated at the Third church of Johnstown, he finds himself again very pleasantly located. And to make things still more agreeable, these good people are building a new parsonage. This is a wise move. Every church that has no parsonage, ought to possess themselves of one, where there is any hope at all of having a resident pastor. Brother Gingrich's successor at Masontown is Brother Herman Koontz, a recent Ashland Seminary graduate.

Dr. W. S. Bell, the College Endowment Campaign Secretary, makes report of the splendid gift of the Pittsburgh church to the amount of $5,040, three thousand of which was cash. It is a most encouraging start that is given the canvass of the churches and we are glad to give space to the recognition of this loyal church and its loyal and capable pastor, and also to recognize the splendid local achievements reported in Brother Bell's article. This fine gift added to the $37,848.50 reported in last week's paper, puts the dial hand around to $42,888.50. In addition to this encouraging feature, which betokens the church's growing interest in the college, we observe from President Jacob's college news that the Summer School is in a very thriving condition, affording just another evidence that the school is entirely worthy of the church's interest and support.

The Ashland church dedicated their new pipe organ with a vesper musical program on Sunday, June 27th, at which time the best of the musical artists of Ashland participated, among which number was Rev. Quinter M. Lyon, our fellow editor, in charge of the Sunday school lesson publications. Brother Lyon has for sometime been choir director and is now to serve also as organist. Dr. Charles A. Bame, assisted by Dean J. Allen Miller, conducted the dedicatory service. The Ashland Brethren are greatly pleased, as was evidenced by frequent comments, with their excellent organ and the inspiring music which was enjoyed and is yet to be enjoyed from it. For this blessing they are indebted to the generosity of two prominent citizens of Ashland, not members of the Brethren church and who refused to permit their names to be made known.

The editor is in receipt of a complimentary copy of a recent book, entitled "Thinking Through", written by a fellow editor and also a former fellow-pastor, Dr. Alva Martin Kerr, editor of "The Herald of Gospel Liberty", published at Dayton, Ohio, and perhaps the most widely quoted church periodical that comes to our desk. Rev. Kerr in his book has dealt with what is possibly the most delicate problem of our day—the problem of religious controversy—and he does it in a frank, straight-forward, thorough-going manner, and yet with that fine spirit that is characteristic of the man. His position is that of neither of the extremes, both of which he criticizes for their injustice to each other's position, and he finds the solution to the difficulty in getting all who are disposed to reason to gather about a common table where they may think things through and talk things over and come to a better mutual understanding. It is a worthy voice of the non-combative conservatives which bulk large in all our churches and who are coming more and more to assert themselves. We congratulate our friend, Dr. Kerr, on the success he has achieved in his first book and the contribution he has made to current religious literature.

When we learn that the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors are opposed to Federal Control in the form of inspection and license, as provided by the bill introduced by Congressman Upshaw, we are all the more persuaded that that is the policy that ought to be inaugurated. We are reminded by "The Christian Statesman" of an old war maxim: "Find out what your enemy don't want you to do, and then do it as speedily and effectively as possible." That is wise counsel in dealing with so powerful an institution as the movie.

That it takes a long time for a man's work to be rightly evaluated and his place in history assigned him is evidenced by the fact that on May 12th there were unveiled in the Hall of Fame in the New York University the busts of nine famous Americans. They were Roger Williams, James Kent, Daniel Webster, Daniel Boone, Jonathan Edwards, George Peabody, Eli Whitney, Edwin Booth and Augustus Saint Gaudens. There was also dedicated with appropriate ceremonies a memorial tablet to John Paul Jones.

GENERAL ARTICLES

If the Church Should Quit

By S. C. Henderson

If the church should quit, if the church should die, what would be the consequence to the world? We have heard many criticisms about the church. Every now and then, we are told by some would-be prophet that the church is dying. A hundred years ago, men were saying that the church could not survive but a decade or two. Thirty-five years ago, Colonel Ingersol said that the days of the church were numbered, and at the beginning of the World War, many men were saying that the church had failed.

But in spite of all these prophecies, the church still abides with us. Men and women are still attending its services, supporting its benevolences and working for its advancement. Last year according to Dr. Carroll, the churches made a gain of 800,000 in the United States. There are over 43,000,000 church members. According to these statistics the church membership is growing faster than the ratio of our population. It is quite true that the membership is not the highest index of the church. Members are not always an asset. Sometimes they are a liability. Some one has recently spoken this truth—the need of the church is not more members but more Christians. Constantine almost dealt the church a death blow when he made it the CHURCH OF THE STATE. When it became popular it became corrupt. Whole kingdoms were baptized on the edict of their rulers. They brought many ideas and customs into the church that were foreign to the original teachings of Jesus. When the Roman Empire fell, a corrupt and greedy papacy stood ready to take over the estate left by the Caesars. Then came the Reformation under Luther, Zwingli, John Calvin, Roger Williams, Alexander Mack and the Wesleys. Since then the cry has been for the simple teachings of the Lord and Master and his early Apostles. And we feel all the more need of having the ideals and spirit of Jesus in both the individual and social life of this present day, and the church is the lone institution that holds the destiny of the present hour.

But the church has her critics, her foes and cynical abusers. We are told that atheists are having Sunday school, not to teach the Bible, but to impart Atheism and Agnosticism. They make the church a target of their thrusts. Mostly foreigners, they only know the state churches of Europe and the domineering priests that lord it over the poor peasants and have turned them to an undying enmity against all religions. They fail to see the true spirit of love and brotherhood in the Evangelical churches of America, their minds are so poisoned by prejudice against the church and its moral teachings. It is from among these and the indifferent homes that you will find the youthful criminals in our city life. Where there is no religious restraint there is always moral laxity. From these sources you will find people who will tell you that the church ought to quit. It has almost ceased to function in Russia. It was abolished amid the days of the French Revolution and the next day, the reign of terror raged in Paris.

Then there is a class who profess to admire Jesus as the carpenter, friend of man, and one to whom they may even dare to pray in times of danger. But they have nothing for the church. A London street preacher was cheered when he spoke the name of Jesus, but was hiss, when he referred to the church. This seems to be the mistaken attitude of many of the unchurched masses.

It may be true that there are many church members who are not living up to the great ideals of their Lord. Many are trusting some vague mystical feeling or merely intellectually assenting to some musty creed rather than professing the true spirit and example of the Master in their lives before the world.

Yet far too many Publicans have turned Pharisees. They are thanking themselves that they are just as good as these hypocritical church folks. But they have forgotten that their custom-morality is only the flickering of nineteen hundred years of Christian light and teaching proceeding from the church. Not many centuries ago, their forefathers were roving pagan barbarians in the forests of Britain and Germany. All the change is due to the missionaries of the church. And history will prove this assertion, if you care to read it.

Again, we hear that the church is not a friend to the poor and the uneducated; that it is made up of the rich and the aristocratic people who do not care for men's souls. We have had quite a lot of popular fiction along this line in recent years, as "The Calling of Dan Matthews" by Wright, "The Fool" by Pollock, "The Servant in the House" and other works of less notice. The movie folks have also added their bit to the popular opinion. It may be true that some churches are aristocratic. Some ministers are kept silent from speaking against sin on account of the paying indulgent wealth of the church. Some churches are weak on emphasizing the social content of the Gospel, because the hand that writes the pay-check rules the church. Yet it must be admitted that our teachings on brotherhood among men is a product of Gospel teachings. Many ministers and laymen are the most ardent supporters of labor reforms and social justice, and good will. Back of all charity, and work for the uplift of the underprivileged you will find the influence of a Christian conscience. After all has been said the church as a whole is not run by wealth or aristocracy but by the best and most respectable common people. Even in the largest and most aristocratic churches you will find that the burden of the church is upon the heart of those who love folks.

A newspaper in Milwaukee recently sent shabbily dressed reporters to five of the leading churches in that city as a test. Each of them reported that they were cordially received and courteously treated. Two of the reporters were asked home to lunch. They were all invited to return next Sabbath. Quite often the icy chill of unfriendliness is the fault of the individual and not with the congregation. Many folks are looking for some excuse like the two lads that went to the city to attend school. They did not go to church because the churches were too cold but instead they went to the Sunday night show. But I attended church in the same city one evening and found a fine group of people and as friendly as one could wish. I think of the Scotch benediction:

"If after kirk you bide a wee,
There's someone would like to speak to ye."

If after kirk, you rise and flee,
We'll all seem cold and stiff to ye.
That one that's in the seat with ye
Is stranger here than you may be,
All here hae got their fears and cares;
Add your soul unto our prayers,
Be you our angel unawares."

"He that would make friends must show himself friendly," quoted a wise man of old. That is as true in church as elsewhere.

Then there is a class of folks who are indifferent to the call, the mission and the worth of the church. They are too much wrapped up in their own ease and self content. Many church members as well as the unchurched belong to this class. It is the most deceptive peril of the church of today. Not long ago my attention was called to a paragraph in a Toledo, Ohio, paper by the Rev. Dr. Westwood. It was a modern version of the parable of the Great Supper from the minister's standpoint:

"And when Sunday morning came it came to pass that many who were invited with one consent began to make excuse. One said, 'I have had a hard and busy week, and I need an extra hour of sleep.' Another said, 'I have been cooped up in the office and must have some fresh air.' And another said, 'We have company over the week-end and therefore you cannot in the interests of hospitality expect me to attend the House of God.' Another said, 'Sunday morning is the only time that I have to catch up with my work and so I must go back to the office.' Some there were who blamed the weather, others there were who nursed a private grudge against the minister or the church, and there were some who really would not come. Therefore they all really did say, 'I pray thee have me excused.' So did the service suffer, and the preacher did gaze down upon many empty pews. None the less the service was held and those who participated were greatly blessed. Even so the minister's heart was heavy when he thought that the faithfulness of the faithful was hindered by the faithlessness of the faithless, and of the ease with which many neglected the worship of God."

Some one has observed that the Bible has no promise to the indifferent. It has help for those who are tempted, strength for the weak, hope for the discouraged, healing for the sick, pardon for the sinner, but not a single beatitude or promise for the indifferent—Not a single one—all the beatitudes and promises are to the overcomers. Search your Bibles and see if it is not correct.

The meaning of the word church is "the called out"—rather "the set apart" from the world. During the Lord's earthly ministry he chose twelve men, "that they might be with him and that he might send them forth to preach." That was the beginning of the church. The church was a growth. During the first days, they were known by various names, such as Galileans, the sect of the Nazarenes, the Way, Brethren and they were nicknamed Christians by the people of Antioch because they were the followers of Christ. This differentiated them from the Jews of the synagogue. During those early days the government was very simple. Just a band of believers bound together by the common ties of faith and brotherhood. They had no pope, no bishop, no elders, or trustees or deacons. The first germ of an organization was a relief committee to look after the poor widows that were neglected in their daily allowances. The eyewitnesses of Jesus served as their oral Gospel, for as yet there was no written Gospel. As time went by they developed an organization but the real purpose of the church was to proclaim the Kingdom of God, convert sinners, teach and strengthen the brethren. Fellowship and service were the aim of the early Apostles. No one can deny that they have left a mighty power in the world. The world has been changed by the preaching of the Gospel. It has shaped and altered customs. It has influenced home life. It has abolished human slavery. It has raised the position of women to an equal and a companion of her husband. It has taught the value of the child. It has furthered education, and alleviated suffering. It has taught the sacredness of human life. It has bestowed upon the laborer one day in every seven for rest and spiritual culture. You will find its impression on government and in our laws. It has been an inspiration in literature, art and music. It has moulded our social ethics.

The Teaching Profession

An address delivered by A. J. Spacht, President Northwestern Division, North Dakota Educational Association. Formerly pastor Eagle Creek, Ohio, and Royersford, Pennsylvania, congregations Church of the Brethren and the Falls City, Nebraska, Brethren Church. A teacher in the public schools for twenty-two years.

The Ministry, Teaching, Medicine and Law are the four great professions. Of these, two, medicine and law, are partly on a commercial basis, while the ministry and teaching are more to be classed among the philanthropies.

Is it worth while to devote a lifetime to teaching, and if so, what are the rewards of the profession? Without a doubt the influence of the teacher in the average community is larger than that of the minister in so far as education is concerned. It is a well established fact that good citizenship rests almost entirely upon correct standards of life and these are largely supplied by the teacher. The teacher, then, is charged with the responsibility of developing America's future citizenship. The real teacher seeks to serve all races, creeds and conditions under all the various circumstances of life.

The chief reward of the teacher is the inner realization that the work committed to his care has been conscientiously discharged to the welfare of society. The community in which a teacher works also rewards the teacher with its goodwill and gives to the teacher a high place in its social life. Many avenues for real spiritual service are thus opened.

There is also the financial reward. While it is not now what it should be, it is greater today than ever before, and it is greater in the United States than in any other country in the world. North Dakota conditions are peculiar in that wages are lower than in most of the surrounding midwestern states, while requirements for entering the profession are as high as anywhere. This gives to the North Dakota teacher an opportunity for unselfish service and should also cause North Dakota communities to reward teachers in other ways.

The great lack in the teaching profession of today from the viewpoint of the teacher is tenure of position. Other states are undertaking to solve this question, but we have not yet made a beginning. This question is of more present importance to the average teacher than that of salary and certainly no home life such as is known by the average American family can be developed by the teacher until this question is solved. Indefinite tenure tends to decrease turnover and tends to stabilize the profession. It protects the good teacher from political attack and from removal for personal or political reasons. A wise tenure law would provide for the easy dismissal of the incompetent or insubordinate teacher. The records of ten states show that wise tenure laws encourage professional growth and greatly lessen the percentage of illiteracy. This question should not be solved from the selfish standpoint of the teacher but after all phases of it have been fairly considered a just plan should be arrived at—at once fair to the teacher and of benefit to the community in which the teacher lives and works.

When teaching withdraws itself from other professions it becomes ineffective and weak. In a commercial age we are accused of being commercial but along with whatever commercialism there has been in the teaching profession there has gone the greatest philanthropic development in all lines of human endeavor the world has ever known. The society of today which is a direct product of the teacher's work is accused of being immoral but the morals of today are so much better than those of past centuries that there is no comparison. There are great social problems to be solved but in their solving the public school and the public school teacher will not be found wanting in any particular. Our age is accused of being capitalistic but the capitalism of today which has been developed under the democratic direction of the modern spirit bred by the public school is a sort of benificent paternalism which in order to live must send its benefits to the many and poverty has never been less than it is now. These things have been brought about and spread to the ends of the earth by the leavening influence of the teacher.

Around the public school clusters the advancement of the century that is past the accomplishments of which are greater than of all the centuries since the dawn of creation. We must conserve and amplify and enlarge these benefits, material and moral, and hand them down to the present and future generations, so that the spiritual and material influence of the human race may be increased and the highest interests of society furthered. And here we join willing hands with the other great human welfare movements—not working alone and to ourselves but aiding and abetting every movement that has for its aim the uplifting of child life and the improvement of the race.

The Ideal Sunday School Worker

By Dyoll Belote

(This address was delivered at the monthly meeting of the Worker's Council of the Bethany Presbyterian Sunday school, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, on February 15th. The address was delivered at the invitation of the pastor, Rev. V. D. Beery, and the subject is that suggested by the Rev. Beery.—The Author).

(Concluded from last week)

In a certain congregation of which I was pastor the children who had called at our home for some purpose spoke of some woman by her given name. Not knowing of whom they were speaking, and thinking it was some playmate we asked them of whom they were speaking. Imagine our feelings on finding that the person of whom they were speaking was a woman old enough to be great-grandmother to the children who were thus lightly speaking of her. AND WE DARED NOT CHIDE THE CHILDREN FOR THEIR PARENTS WERE IN THE HABIT OF THUS SPEAKING OF THE OLDER LADY IN THE CHILDREN'S PRESENCE.

So it appeals to me that an ideal Bible school worker will frown upon any use of terms on the part of the children which shows disrespect for parents and those who are older.

And I am wondering if we are not all too careless and disrespectful in our handling of God's Book. Does not the church itself encourage a spirit of indifference about the Book by the fact that many times we allow mutilated and unsightly copies of the Bible to be given out for use in the services? Should we not always touch the Book with respectful attitude, and could we not make a lasting impression upon the minds of the scholars by leaving the impression that we had as soon think of taking a letter from a dearly loved parent and tearing it to pieces or otherwise mutilating it and throwing it about.

I am somewhat of a ritualist, and if I had my way I should have some full-toned voice open every service with the admonition of the Word. "The Lord is in his holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before him." Too much we conduct ourselves in the church as though we were in the theater or social rooms. There is dire need that we shall teach to young and old that in a very peculiar manner God is present in his holy temple. Someone may argue that it is more the spirit than the place, but I beg you to remember that God put the seal of his presence upon the Jewish tabernacle in the wilderness, and while it may have been nothing more than a tent of larger dimensions than those used by the people, they were very careful to keep at such distance from it as God had designated, for to his command to show respect for his house he had attached a threat of punishment for breaking the command. And even the priests who served in that tabernacle—and later in the Temple—were set round with restrictions which had to be scrupulously observed. The church is more than a house, it is the place where the Spirit of God meets with the souls of men, and we should tread softly and speak reverently and respectfully in the House of God. LACK OF REVERENCE FOR THE OBJECTS WHICH STAND FOR SACRED THINGS WILL LEAD TO LACK OF REVERENCE FOR THE THINGS THEMSELVES.

6. Responsibility. No worker is going to be of largest service in the school who does not feel the FULL MEASURE OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR HIS OR HER ACTS AS THEY GO OUT AND IN BEFORE THE MEMBERS OF THE SCHOOL, BOTH ON SUNDAY AND DURING THE WEEK.

The warnings of the Scripture are numerous and varied with reference to the responsibility of those who are leaders in the Lord's work. In warning of the task which he had given him, God said to Ezekiel: "O son of man, I have set thee a watchman." And at another place God's servant is warned of failure in the discharge of duty thus: "If thou dost not speak in warning the blood of the lost one will be required at thy hand."

Major Cole tells of a Sunday school teacher who thought she could bind her scholars closer to her by teaching them to play cards. There were eight young men in that class. In after years a rough-looking man who stood up in the very pew of the church where he had been in other years a scholar in that teacher's class, and said that of those eight young men two were in drunkard's graves, one had been hanged, three were in the penitentiary, and the other was an outcast like himself, a fugitive from justice, and that all he had to say was that he wished to God his Sunday school teacher had never taught them the use of the cards!

Do you wonder that that teacher, who was present on the occasion, arose, threw up her hands and screamed, "My God, I am that Sunday school teacher!"

7. Loyal. I have come to the characteristic which I have purposely reserved for the last, for among all the rest, I feel that if we have to get along without some one or two of the others we can still "carry on" in our work and experience a measure of real success, but if we have to try to promote a Bible school of any size with a group of disloyal officers we have been handed a real man-killing job.

Happy indeed is that superintendent who can go to his task on Sunday morning without any concern about whether his teachers and officers are going to be in their places. Such an one is always safe to inquire what is wrong with the absent officer, because he knows there is something vitally wrong or that one would be in their accustomed place.

There is another phase of this loyalty characteristic which I would mention here. It is sometimes true with all of us that we are unavoidably detained from our place in the Lord's house, and such detention is always accepted by our brethren as sufficient excuse for our absence. And sometimes such detention comes at too late a moment for us to do more than call and say we cannot be present. But what I want to suggest is the loyalty which causes us to so feel the responsibility for the success of the work that as soon as we find we are not going to be able to be in our place we shall make such report to the proper official of the school as shall make it possible to have our place filled. To far too many Bible school workers it is a matter of small concern if they are absent without notice, or whether the school is handicapped in its efficiency by the lack of their services. But many a faithful superintendent knows all too well the many anxious hours given to trying to figure out some way by which the loyalty of his assistants can be increased. I have often thought it would be good practice if every officer were required to serve in the superintendent's office just long enough to get a real taste of the trials of that exalted position. But again I have hesitated to suggest such a thing because of the damage that might accrue to the school, for a person who is disloyal in a lesser position would likely have little concern about slighting the duties of the more prominent place. So perhaps it is intended that such trials shall come, that those who are carrying the burden may not become puffed up over the ease with which the work of the kingdom is progressing. But there is little danger of many superintendents getting puffed up over their jobs as things are presently constituted.

One other thing I would mention that should characterize and emphasize the loyalty of the ideal Bible school worker. They should be faithful in their attendance at the preaching services of the church. It is an anomaly to think or suggest that any Bible school worker is loyal who comes only for the sessions of the school and does not remain for the church services which follow. And I should say more, and that is that any worker who should attempt to thus slight the church should be remonstrated with in kindly spirit, and if they do not then see the error of such conduct, they should be replaced by one who will be loyal to the church, of which the Bible school is but an auxiliary.

8. Rewards. Let me close this address with a story from actual life which will convey the thought most vividly.

The story is entitled "When Pershing Met His Old Sunday School Teacher." It is taken from the Sunday School Times, and was written by Rev. Francis E. Smiley, D.D., pastor of the Presbyterian church, Aurora, Colorado. The story reads thus:

"The whole city of Denver was touched over the incident of the unexpected meeting of General John J. Pershing, Commander-in-Chief of the American Expeditionary Forces in France during the World War, and his former Sunday school teacher, Mrs. J. C. Manning. The meeting occurred during a reception tendered General Pershing at the Palace Brown in the Colorado capital. The incident seems to throw so much light on the hidden years of the American commander, years in which he was being prepared for his life's work in a way little suspected by the world at large, that I asked Mrs. Manning to tell me about her experience as General Pershing's Sunday school teacher, and she readily answered my questions as follows:

"I lived at Laeledge, Missouri, when I first knew John Pershing. He was a lad of ten and I was a newcomer there—a bride of twenty years of age.

"The class of which John Pershing and his brother James, were members, invited me to be their teacher, and for six years we studied the Bible together, becoming very much attached to one another. John was a manly boy, always respectful in the house of God; loyal and true to the Sabbath school as he has since been to God and his country. He came from a beautiful Christian home, and did not outgrow the Sabbath school, as so many young people do.

"When I met him on the evening of January 13, at the reception in Denver, not having seen him since he was a young man of eighteen, I looked upon him with what I am sure is pardonable pride. Proud as I was of him as Commander of our American Forces, I was even more proud of him as a soldier of the Cross.

"I feel that he would not have made the man he is, or filled the place he is now filling, were it not for his early and steadfast Christian life. His Sabbaths were not spent in worldly amusements; and God honors those who honor him.

"Could he have so earnestly exhorted the soldiers through the American Bible Society to 'put their trust in God', had he not had that early training in the Word in our little Sunday school class at Laeledge?

"No military leader ever made a more urgent call for chaplains to preach the Gospel to the army than General Pershing.

"How rejoiced I was not long ago when I read this newspaper clipping:

"El Paso, Texas, January 30.—Because General John J. Pershing has expressed the wish to attend church in El Paso after he arrives here Sunday, the military exhibition and carnival scheduled to be held at Fort Bliss will be staged tomorrow afternoon, military authorities announced."

The incidents of the reception when General Pershing met Mrs. Manning appear in the following verse which Miss Harriett Bradley, a blind poet, has written, inspired by the story:

THE LITTLE OLD WOMAN AND THE GENERAL

If in thy path a little child today
Is waiting for the lesson thou canst teach,
I pray thee, coach him well in wisdom's way,
For who can tell how far thy text may reach?
A leader great the child may one day be;
And God through him, a million lives may touch.
So follow him with prayer, o'er land and sea,
Remembering that this availeth much.

A hero, flushed with victory and fame,
Is just returning to his native land.
The boys hurrah at mention of his name,
And mighty statesmen bared before him stand.
The proudest man America can boast
Feels flattered by the Chieftain's friendly glance;
While round him flock a military host
To clasp the hand which guided them in France.

Escaping from the noisy, crowded street
He enters, like a prince, the flag-decked hall,
Beneath its brilliant lights he stands to meet
The throngs that welcome him, both one and all.
A tiny woman comes, with modest mein,
And calmly waits before him, frail and weak.
He bends to her, forgetful of the scene,
And fondly prints a kiss on either cheek.

She lifts her hand and strokes his beaming face,
As was her wont, when he was but a lad,
The smile, which lends his features youthful grace,
Proclaims to all that she has made him glad.—
Guests whisper, "She's related to the Chief, Else would he not thus break the social rule."—
The General offers explanation brief,—
"She taught me, long ago, in Sunday school."

Through flood and flame, through storms of shot and shell,
Her prayers have followed him a-down the years.
How much they helped him, God alone can tell;
And she may know, beyond this vale of tears.
If in thy path a little child today,
Is waiting for the lesson thou canst teach,
I pray thee coach him well in wisdom's way:
For who can tell how far thy text may reach?"

"In the morning sow thy seed and in the evening withhold not thine hand, for thou knowest not which shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they shall both be alike good."

There is a devilish temper with which some Christians fight devilish evils. A devilish temper and a devilish thing are both of the devil.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Slackers, Deserters and Traitors

By H. M. Oberholtzer

TEXT: "Will ye also go away?"—John 6:67.

This earnest inquiry and the incidents related to it mark a crisis in the life of Jesus. He had reached the climax of the popular favor he had experienced for some time and now, "many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him." Standing alone with the twelve, he said unto them, "Will ye also go away?" There seems to be a tone of sadness in these words, but there is also a tone of deep concern. Jesus does not want his disciples to forsake him. He wants them all to be true and constant. He tests them, not to drive them away, but to make them more faithful. That is why James says, "Count it all joy when ye fall into diverse testings." The testings of Christians are many. The pleasures of the world allure them and they are put to the test whether they are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit," often causing severe conflict. Their hearts are tried by the stubbornness of sinners and, like Lot, they are "vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked." They meet with many discouragements and disappointments. Doubts sometimes beset them.

"Will ye also go away?" What a sad scene was that when the many turned away from the loving Jesus and their only hope. How often it has been repeated since. However, the slights and refusals of men are no indication that Jesus is an impostor or that his cause is a failure. Humanity is prone to error and unaided by divine grace is bound to fail. To be a Christian is no small affair and many fail to stand the tests. Among these failures we find three very prominent classes,—slackers, deserters and traitors.

No one likes a slacker, whether he be a laborer, a soldier or a church member. Slackers are lazy. The Christian life is a life of burden bearing and activity. We must be "steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." The Christian life demands patient and constant labor and endurance, and deserves all the time, strength and money that one can put into it.

Slackers always dodge and shirk when hard duties are to be performed. They continually say, "I can't;" "I'm too busy;" "I have other engagements;" "Let some one else do it." They are expert in finding excuses. Their first and ever ready answer to every request for service is, "No." If they do accept a responsibility, they seldom perform their duties well. They are unreliable and cause much disappointment and failure. Unprepared substitutes must often take their places.

Slackers flinch when money is required. They complain that the church is always begging for money, money, money. If they make a pledge, they never pay it. Church dues are heavy, unbearable burdens to them. Their smallest change is all they can put into the offering plate, but they can freely pay dollars for suppers, banquets and worldly blowouts.

Slackers never go to prayer meeting. They may go to a party, a theatre, or to the lodge, but never to a prayer meeting. They don't even pray at home. Prayer is too tiresome and tedious for them. They can find no time for either family or private devotions. They can sit up late reading a thrilling novel, but they can't get interested in the Bible.

Their church attendance depends very much upon the weather and their convenience. If it rains or snows, they must stay at home. In the summer the weather is too hot and in the winter it is too cold. If they live a few blocks or miles away they cannot possibly get to church often or with any regularity. If company comes they must stay at home. They get up early every day through the week to go to work, but they can't get up on Sunday morning in time to go to Sunday school and church. They are not too tired after a week's work to frolic around Saturday afternoon and evening, but they are too tired and sleepy on Sunday morning to go to church.

Slackers are easily discouraged. If the singing drags or the sermon is dull, they don't care to attend the service. If the crowd is small they don't want to come back. If there is disagreement among the members, they think that the church has gone to pieces. If some one has been found

FRUIT-BEARING LIVES—John 15:1-8.

Thou art the Vine,
And I, O Jesus, am a branch of thine;
And day by day from thee
New life flows unto me.
Naught have I of my own,
But all my strength is drawn from thee alone.
—E. H. Divall.

TUESDAY

THE SORROWFUL SAVIOR—Mark 32-36.

Morning will come, nor shall I craven, shrink
Before the cup that thou, dear Lord, didst drink.
—Willard Watties.

WEDNESDAY

DISCOVERING JESUS—Luke 24:27-31:

He blessed the bread, but vanished at the word,
And left them both exclaiming, "'Twas the Lord!
Did not our hearts feel all he deigned to say,
Did they not burn within us by the way?"
—William Cowper.

THURSDAY

MEETING HUMAN HELPLESSNESS—Acts 3:1-11.

Crippled and dumb, behold me wait,
Dear Lord, at the Beautiful Gate!
I wait for thy hand of healing—
For vigor and hope in thee.
Open the door—let me feel the sun—
Let me touch thy robe—I shall rise and run
Through thy happy universe, safe and free,
Where in and out thy beloved go,
Nor want nor wandering know.
—Lucy Larcom.

FRIDAY

HEAVENLY DIRECTION—Acts 8:26-31.

'Twas silent all and dead
Beside the barren sea,
Where Philip's steps were led,
Led by a voice from thee—
He rose and went, nor asked thee why,
Nor stayed to heave one faithless sigh.
—John Keble.

SATURDAY

THE USEFUL LIFE—Acts 9:36-39.

Home, home she went, and plied the loom,
And Jesus' poor arrayed.
She died—they wept about the room,
And showed the coats she made.
—George Macdonald.

SUNDAY

LOVE SUPREME—1 Cor. 13:1-13.

Here, in part, and seen but dimly,
Lord, thy guiding hand we trace;
There, as we have known, we'll know thee,
There shall see thee face to face,
Where abide the Holy Three,
Chiefest there is Charity.
—John S. B. Monsell.

to be a deceiver and has committed some serious sin, they conclude the whole church is nothing but a bunch of hypocrites.

Slackers are cowards. They are afraid of the rain, the heat and the cold. They are afraid to attend the business meeting lest they be required to do something. They are afraid to sing, lest they make a mistake. They are afraid to testify lest someone will criticize them or make fun of them. They are afraid to pray. They are afraid to speak to sinners about their souls. They are afraid of persecution. They are afraid to say no to temptation. They are afraid to undertake some improvement, lest it cost too much. The Christian life requires daring and courage. "We walk by faith, not by sight."

Slackers never make any spiritual progress or attain any spiritual achievement. They undertake nothing, they endure nothing, they accomplish nothing. They win no honor or rewards. If they receive any benefits, they are such as result from the labors and sacrifices of others. They deserve only shame and disgrace. They are a hindrance to the progress of the forces of righteousness. Their carelessness and indifference discourages others and sometimes becomes contagious. Instead of being helpers they are hinderers and are the cause of much anxiety and the object of much earnest endeavor. Instead of being a force, they are a field, and one which is usually very unproductive. Instead of being an asset, they are a liability.

Another very contemptible class, which causes much annoyance to the cause of Christ, are the deserters. Since that day in Capernaum many have forsaken Christ. Also, humanity is very fickle. As we draw near to the end of this age we may expect much falling away, for the Scripture says plainly, "In the last days perilous times shall come," there will be "seoffers walking in their own lusts," and "some will depart from the faith giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils."

There are many causes for desertion, all resting primarily, of course, upon a lack of faith and devotion on the part of the individual. Some, like Demas, "have loved this present world." Some, being extremely sensitive, have had their feelings hurt. Some are not willing to "endure hardness as true soldiers of Jesus Christ." Some will not endure sound doctrine and shrink from the requirements and restraints of the gospel.

Then there are the traitors, who "go about in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves." With what disdain we look upon Judas. Yet many are betraying Jesus in many ways. Some, because of lack of courage to face the ridicule of seoffing associates. Some, because of besetting sin, which they are not willing to forsake. Some, for material gain or popular favor. The worst traitors of all are the preachers who pretend to be heralds of the gospel and defenders of the faith, but are men pleasers and perverters of the truth, men who have pledged themselves to preach the whole gospel, but who deny some of the most vital truths of the Word of God and dare to teach from the pulpit doctrines that are contrary to the faith they have been pledged to uphold.

It is very satisfying to note that while many may go away a few remain faithful to Jesus. How cheering was Peter's reply to Jesus, "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." If we turn away from Jesus, what hope have we? Some things may be hard to understand, hard to do, or hard to endure, but we better stay with Jesus. "Thou hast the words of eternal life." What a great statement. But Peter continues, "We believe and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." That kind of statement has the right ring. It sounds like it was founded on a deep conviction and a true love. Let those go away who will. Let them deny Christ, if they wish. Let the doubters wag their heads. Let the atheists and infidels howl. Let the devils curse. We who have been with Jesus and know him will stand on the solid rock of an unwavering faith and fear nothing.

Peter was speaking for the whole group. Of course they had shared with others the idea of a temporal kingdom and the common disappointment when Jesus refused to be made king, yet they trusted him. It is best to trust Jesus even if you do not fully comprehend him. Of course the better we know him the more we will appreciate him. Hence the importance of a careful study of sound doctrine. Don't neglect the Bible or lay it aside because you don't understand it all. Don't quit praying because your prayers are not answered as you expected. Don't quit the church because someone slighted or insulted you, or you are not appreciated, or the preacher don't suit you. Don't give up and neglect your duty because you have been imposed upon, or because another can do better than you.

The twelve had lived closer to Jesus than others. They had seen more of his matchless life. They had studied more thoroughly his sublime teaching. They had witnessed more demonstration of his divine power. Though they did not understand his teaching perfectly or recognize him fully they could not forsake him. It pays to live close to Jesus. Then doubts cannot overwhelm you nor temptations destroy you.

"Oh, for a faith that will not shrink.

Though pressed by ev'ry foe.

That will not tremble on the brink

Of any earthly woe;—

A faith that shines more bright and clear

When tempests rage without;

That when in danger knows no fear,

In darkness feels no doubt;—

A faith that keeps the narrow way

Till life's last hour has fled,

And with a pure and heavenly ray,

Illumes a dying bed."

Ten Commandments for Attendants at Any Church

I.

Thou shalt not come to service late,
Nor for the Amen refuse to wait.

II.

Thy noisy tongue thou shalt restrain
When speaks the organ its refrain.

III.

But when the hymns are sounded out,
Thou shalt lift up thy voice and shout.

V.

The offering-plate thou shalt not fear,
But give thine uttermost with cheer.

VI.

Thou shalt this calendar peruse,
And look here for the church's news.

VII.

Thou shalt the minister give heed,
Nor blame him when thou'rt disagreed.

VIII.

Unto thy neighbor thou shalt bend,
And if a stranger, make a friend.

IX.

Thou shalt in every way be kind,
Compassionate, of tender mind.

X.

And so, by all thy spirit's grace,
Thou shalt show God within this place.

Devotional Reading—Prov. 3:11-18.

Golden Text—Train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it.—Prov. 22:6.

LESSON LIGHTS

Birth and Hiding of Moses

A son was born to Amram and Jochebed of the tribe of Levi at a time when the Pharaoh had decreed that every son of the Hebrews should be cast into the Nile, where the crocodiles would devour them. When we learn that the mother hid her son, Moses away for three months, we are not surprised; it was a most natural thing for a mother to attempt to do. But there was a special reason—the mother saw that her child was strong and healthy, “a goodly child.” He was a lad divinely favored in many ways,—and why not? God is preparing for himself a leader.

R. C. Gillie has said, “Some people have to struggle all their lives against physical disabilities and deformities. Moses was an armory of appeals and a casket of charms from the beginning. It is useless to teach a child who is marked out from his fellows by unusual attractiveness and power, that he is no better than his fellows. There is only one way of coping with the situation. From the beginning, the privileged one must be taught his duty to the unprivileged. Privilege and responsibility are indissolubly united. This is the wholesome truth, which is as salt to the unusually enriched life.”

The Working of God's Plan

See what factors entered into this preservation of the world's greatest man. There was (1) a humble slave family; (2) a little basket of bulrushes; (3) a little girl; (4) a baby's tears; (5) Pharaoh's own daughter; (6) the child's own mother; (7) a royal court. All of these were brought together at just the right time, in just the right way.

In the great world there are no accidents;

Enthroned above the ages' ebb and flow,
Unseen, misunderstood,

God rules, who in all seasons and events,
Through fiery evil and overwhelming woe, Forever works the good.”

—Lyman Whitney Allen.

The Greatness of Moses

“We have in the historic Moses a great and powerful genius, an organizing and constructing mind. Moses belongs to the great class of nation-makers; to a class of men who have a place by themselves in the history of politics, and who are among the rarest and highest of the phenomena of our race.—Gladstone.

“You must have been struck, as you have read these opening verses of the biography of the greatest of Old Testament worthies, with their simplicity and truthlikeness. Here is no mention of prodigies such as those which were said to attend the birth of Cyrus, and such as mythology delighted to tell concerning Romulus and Remus. It is a plain, unvarnished story. There is no word of any miracle. The incidents are such as, allowing for the differences between ancient and modern life, might have happened among ourselves. And yet see how they fit into each other, altogether irrespective of and indeed independent of, human calculation.”—William M. Taylor.

The Blessings of a Religious Home

“There were some families who remained faithful among the prevalent corruption of the Israelites. Amongst these was that into which Moses was born. The sacred covenant between God and their race was reverently remembered, and held by a faith which dared to believe that, sooner or later, God must interpose. The treasured stories which are preserved to us in the Book of Genesis would be carefully taught to the children as soon as their hearts could appreciate and their memories preserve them. The first-born, Aaron, would be set apart, with some kind of consecration, to perform the functions of the priest of the household. And Miriam, the first Mary of Scripture, would be taught to use her sweet, clear voice in the praise and worship of the God of their fathers.”—F. B. Meyer.

Moses in the Court of Pharaoh

“The favor of the king's only daughter and presumptive heir made his life in these early years one long, unclouded summer morning, for all that wealth and power could command were at his service.” Yet life at Pharaoh's court “must have had some drawbacks. Egyptian youths and courtiers could not be altogether cordial to the Hebrew boy, who, as the grandson of Pharaoh, enjoyed so exalted a position, and received such eminent attention. “But this experience would teach him all the inner life of the court, its weakness and its strength. He would feel at home under all circumstances. He would be able to study the characteristics and the languages of the other nations with whom he would have to deal.

His educational advantages would be very great, and could have been obtained in no other way than as a member of Pharaoh's household. The education was eminently practical, intended strictly as a fitting for their official duties. There were two great

Daily Vacation Bible School at Beaver City, Nebraska

We were greatly pleased to receive in a personal note from Brother A. E. Whitted, pastor at Beaver City, Nebraska, word concerning the splendid Daily Vacation Bible School just closed. This was his fifth year as superintendent of such a school and he feels that better work was done than on any previous occasion. Four of the schools of the little city of Beaver cooperated in the Vacation School. Last year was the first attempt for this place and the first for the county. There were four other schools this year, and so it is evident that Brother Whitted and his coworkers of last year were an inspiration to others.

An interesting and suggestive method for spreading the contagion of the Daily Vacation School is offered in our correspondent's remark that they will have a booth at their county fair for exhibiting results of their recent school. We recommend this to others as a means of bringing the work to the attention of the public. Why should not the laborers of the kingdom make use of some of the wisdom of the world to the glory of God?

“Vacation Bible School Demonstration”

“The Daily Vacation Bible School brought its work for this year to a close with a Demonstration Service held at the Auditorium, Sunday night. The program was in two parts. A number of songs were sung by the school, in which the children showed the good training they have been receiving in the singing of sacred music. The memory verses for each of the weeks were given by older boys and girls, also the Ten Commandments and Missionary Jingles were given by the smaller children. The first part of the program closed with the salutes to the flags. In the second part the Beginners dramatized, “David and Goliath;” the Primary Department, “The Great Supper;” and the Junior Boys, “Daniel in the Lions' Den.” The Junior Girls gave a missionary playlet. All of these were well put on and showed that effective work had been done, for so short a term of school.

“A new feature in the Demonstration this year was an exhibit of the hand work done by the school, which the patrons seemed to enjoy inspecting and upon which there was much favorable comment.

“The school was a success in every way, having reached an enrollment of 140 and having enjoyed an average daily attendance of 101 for the three weeks. The Superintendents of the Sunday schools are to be commended for sponsoring this work and Rev. Whitted and his workers are to be congratulated for the success of the school.”

We shall be glad to have reports of the good work being done by other Brethren leaders in Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

Christian Endeavor and Three Missionaries

A letter to Dr. Clark from Rev. Ralph Collins, preparing himself at Lisbon, Portugal, for the mission field of Angola, Africa, a Portuguese possession, gives this interesting incident:

"Last October it was my privilege to attend a conference on African missions held in the city of Hartford, Connecticut, just prior to leaving to take up my work in Angola. At the conference I became friendly with a missionary, much my senior, from East Africa; and while standing talking with him one afternoon I noticed on his watch-fob a C. E. charm. Beginning to play with it, I asked, 'Where did you steal this?' upon which he replied by asking what I knew about those two letters. 'Only,' said I, 'that they are responsible for my presence here.' Quickly he said, 'And for mine also'; and a friend of mine just home from his first period of service in Angola, who had come up just in time to hear the conversation, chimed in, 'And for mine too.'

"Here are three missionaries, one a veteran of twenty-five years, another home on his first furlough, and the other on the eve of his life work; all three say with one voice, 'That I am a missionary of the cross is due to Christian Endeavor.' I think that of no other movement could this be considered such a representative incident. I have no doubt that other missionaries present could have given similar testimony. Christian Endeavor wins and inspires and trains.

"I might add that just before leaving Canada I had the great happiness of assisting in the organization of a Christian Endeavor society in my home church in the city of Ottawa. There had been a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor in this church for over twenty years; but owing to an interrupted pastorate and other causes due to the war it had been allowed to lapse, and various reasons had prevented its subsequent restoration. The minister seized upon my last visit home as a helpful circumstance, and a society was formed that can be reasonably expected worthily to carry on the splendid traditions of the past.

"The notable feature, however, was that all the members of the newly formed executive were young people who had been members of a Junior Christian Endeavor society, which a committee of three had conducted prior to the war and in the early years of the war.

"I wonder if the churches who are discarding Christian Endeavor have really asked themselves if they can replace it with an organization which will serve as effectively in winning young people for Christ and training them for his service in the church and in the world. My observation leads me to believe that they will find it very difficult to do so."—C. E. World.

mother being the only member of this Jewish family that was still living decided to go back to her country, Judah. When she started toward her country her two daughters-in-law, the women whom her sons had married, started with her. After they had gone a short distance, the mother-in-law stopped and said to these two young women, 'You had better go back to Moab, for that is where you were born, and you will be happier there.' The one, Orpah, went back, but Ruth stayed and Ruth said to her mother-in-law, 'Do not try to make me go away from you, I am going to stay with you till one of us dies; I shall love your people and I shall love your God.' I think that it was then that Ruth started carrying her torch for God. Those words seem so bright with good will and kindness that I can think of them as being the light that started Ruth's torch to burning.

If it was Ruth's declaration of love for Naomi, her mother-in-law, and for God that started her torch to burning, then surely it was her faithfulness to this promise that kept her torch burning all through her life. Ruth went all the way to Judah with Naomi. After they arrived there Ruth went out into the fields and made a living for herself and Naomi. Ruth gleaned in the field to get food. Do you know what is meant by gleaning? In that time, harvesting was not done by a big reaper machine, but it was done by men cutting the grain by hand. The men could not gather the grain very closely, so the gleaners, mostly women, followed after them and these women were allowed to keep all that they could glean. In this way Ruth got enough food to keep both of them alive. Later Ruth got married but Naomi lived with her, so that Ruth was really faithful in her love for Naomi on to the end.

Is your torch burning bright with love for others and faithfulness to them? You can make your torch burn brighter by loving your mother and father and sisters and brothers. You must not only say that you love them though, but you must be faithful to them as Ruth was to Naomi if you want your torch to gleam brightly. Every boy and girl has many chances to show that they love their folks. Often there is the chance to give up something that we want so that some other member of our family may have something that they want or need.

Little boy or girl, did you ever think that it is possible for you to show your love of your father and really help him a lot by trying to take care of your clothes and all your possessions so that he will not have to spend so much of his money on you? There may be some of you whose parents have so much money that you do not have to save money, but that is not the case with most children. Maybe your father does not say anything about wanting you to save his money, for our parents like to give us everything that we want. However, even though they do not say anything to us about it, they may be worry-

The Voice

I said, "I am tired of the way of life."

He said, "You are weary and you frown."

I said, "Why cannot strife cease awhile?"

He said, "Faith, deeper faith, wins the crown."

I said, "Lord, even the sky is black.

And envy is rife with jealous strife and there's sin."

With outstretched arms he bade me go back, saying, "Fight, fight; fight, the battle you must win."

I said, "The threatening clouds are low and thick

As they obscure the sun's beautiful ray."

Answering back, he said, "Souls are sick, And weary in sin; wilt thou go thy way?"

I said, "Lord, I cannot shoulder my cross and fight,

For I will miss my gay friends, I know."

A still, small voice whispered, "Choose to-night,

Will I be the one to miss you? Will you go?"

—C. H. Rhodes, in The Watchword.

Prayer is much more than merely asking God for something, although that is a very valuable part of the prayer, if only because it reminds us of our utter dependence upon

God. It is also communion with God—intercourse with God—talking with (not only to) God. We get to know people by talking with them. We get to know God in like manner. The highest result of prayer is not deliverance from evil, or the securing of some coveted thing, but knowledge of God.—Selected.

Ruth, Who Carried the Torch of Love. Ruth 1:15-18

Our torch-bearer for this month, not only carries a torch lighted by different qualities from the torches that we have studied, but also differs greatly in another respect. You already know what that is, I guess. This torch-bearer is a woman. Aren't we glad, Junior Girls, that we have one woman, who was good enough and great enough that she was allowed to carry this torch of God?

Ruth at one time did not know about our God. She was a Moabite and did not even live in the same country as the Jews. However, one time a family of Jews went to live in Ruth's country and one of the boys of this family married Ruth. Later he died and his

An Inspiring Letter from Dr. Gribble

Villa Jonquille, Boulevard Victor Hugo,
 Digne, Basses Alpes, France.

June 12, 1926.

Dear Evangelist family:

Some way it is borne in upon me this morning to write the letter so long overdue to the dear Evangelist family.

Two months from the day I write this, the Lord willing, I shall be leaving France for your midst. In days of isolation, comparative weakness or pain, what comfort one finds in the Psalms! "I will look up unto the hills, from whence cometh my help!" exclaims the Psalmist. But we know that in the material hill there is no help. It is only found in the Eternal Rock of Ages, "which rock is Christ." And yet the hills are an inspiration. For you cannot look out upon them, even these lowly peaks of the mighty Alps, snow-capped even in the month of June, without being impressed with the grandeur, the majesty and the eternity of him who created them! How many servants of God have found repose in their midst! It was to the Swiss Alps that Hudson Taylor, broken in health, repaired for strength with his beloved wife, fast dying of cancer. It was in a beautiful and sheltered nook at the foot of one of the majestic peaks, that he at last laid to rest the mortal remains. For after the relentless, and in her case inoperable disease had done its worst, it but released from its tabernacle of pain that indomitable spirit, which in a moment of time absented itself from the body to become present with the Lord.

It was to the Swiss Alps, too, that Schofield, accompanied by his wife, directed his steps in order to find the seclusion which he had sought in vain in America, and which was so necessary to the compiling of his now famous and widely used reference Bible. It was there he suffered repeated attacks of illness, which would greatly have delayed the publication of the great work had not Mrs. Schofield herself, with that faith which shall remove mountains pushed ahead with the mechanical part of the work, the pasting of the separate pages of Bibles (given them for that purpose by the Oxford University Press, Bibles which had passed thirteen times through the ordeal of proof reading). Upon the large sheets of blank paper upon whose wide resulting margins the references were compiled.

It was in the very edge of the Montime Alps at Menton, France, that Spurgeon, prematurely aged by the mighty task which had been his even from the days of his adolescence, went to pass his last winters of suffering. One can still see at Menton in the Beau Rivage Hotel the room in which he suffered, and where away from home, away too from his work, in loneliness and isolation he died. What strength of spirit, what true victory in conflict he showed as he added a martyr's death to a Christian gladiator's life in the great arena of our temporal struggles and conflicts!

And as one thinks of these mountains in France and Switzerland, one is reminded not only of the distinguished strangers who in their midst have suffered according to God's will, and have here in his will lived—or died, but one remembers the European Christians, the French Huguenots of days gone by and their equally valiant spiritual descendants of today. One thinks of Felix Neff, laying down his life in the early days of manhood, for the peasants of the secluded mountain passes and valleys; one thinks of Oberlin of Alsatia and of the noble band of Christians whom he gathered around him, including those godly women who became the pioneers of Christian education in Alsace and Lorraine.

And even here at Digne, where the Cath-

 In him no South nor North,
 But one great Fellowship of Love
 Throughout the whole wide earth.

In him shall true hearts everywhere
 Their high communion find,
 His service is the golden cord
 Close-binding all mankind.

Join hands then, brothers of the faith,
 Whate'er your race may be, —
 Who serves my Father as a son
 Is surely kin to me.

In Christ there is no East nor West,
 In him meet South and North,
 All Christly souls are one in him

olic population predominate, one has the most wonderful associations with that faithful Christian remnant, that true salt of the earth, which God knows how to sustain and preserve everywhere—as he gives to them the victory which overcometh the world even their faith.

M. Contesse is a descendant of those who, persecuted in France, for their religion, sought and found refuge in Switzerland. Married to a brilliant and distinguished French woman, this well-mated pair are the center of Christian activities in South-eastern Europe. Growing up around them are their young family, giving promise of being likewise useful servants of God. It is a privilege to be associated with them and to learn from them. And so with these and other Christians, who pass this way from time to time, "I lift up my eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help!"

I am looking forward now to seeing Marguerite at Conference time, should the Lord choose to bring us together there, or at a later time, should that be his plan. How sweet to know that our times are in his hands and that he doeth all things well. We have a little one in this home, a foundling—yet known to be of noble parentage as far as this world is concerned. The sweet and dainty ways of our little lady Dorine make us long that once more Satan may have overstepped, that once more has God's glory shown forth over and above his devices, and that as has been the case with so many other illegitimate children, Dorine may become a power for God, and should the Lord tarry, for the evangelization of the world.

May God bless you one and all as you too seek his face, and may we meet, not only if be his will, at Winona Lake, and in many of your homes, but also, and we know this to be his will, in his very presence in the Celestial City. I expect and hope by his good providence to arrive in New York City by the S. S. Aquitania, August 19th. Should any of you chance to be in New York on that day, it would be a pleasure to see again the faces of members of the Evangelist family. But there again perhaps I must be content to wait until we meet at Winona Lake. Until then, at that time and continually, let us lift up our eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh our help."

"And they drank of that spiritual rock which followed them, and that rock was Christ."

Yours in the fellowship of him whose we are and whom we serve.

FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

Sees Encouraging Prospect

When asked in regard to the results of missionary efforts among the Japanese, the Rev. W. E. Towson, Methodist missionary recently returned from that field, answered that the movement toward Christianity on the part of the people was never larger or more encouraging. In about four years he baptized 184 adults, besides building two churches and two parsonages. Illustrating the favorable attitude of the Japanese toward Christianity, Mr. Towson mentioned two incidents. At a tent meeting held in the yard of his home he saw 125 come forward at one service expressing a desire to follow Christ. Another significant incident was the gift to the different Christian denominations of eighty thousand yen ($40,000) from the home department of the Japanese government following the earthquake disaster. The ten thousand yen that was given to the Japan Methodist church was designated by the home department as for "evangelistic purposes," while that given to the Buddhists were directed as for "social purposes."

LIFE

Such deeds as thou with fear and grief

Wouldst on a sick bed laid, recall,

In youth and health eschew them all,

Remembering life is frail and brief.

One might as well expect to thrive physically while his portion of food is being eaten by others as to expect mental development and not do his own thinking.—N. C. Morse.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

THE PITTSBURGH CHURCH LEADS THE WAY IN THE ASHLAND COLLEGE ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

In beginning the Endowment Campaign among the churches, the Pennsylvania District was chosen. There were two reasons for doing this, the first is that this was one of the first districts visited in the former campaign, and so was farther removed from the other drive. The second reason was that this is one of the largest districts we have in the number of churches.

In leading off we picked the Pittsburgh church first, as we knew the caliber of her people and pastor and the interest they had in the College. We decided a town that could capture the National League and world championship in baseball, would be a good place "to start the ball rolling."

We made no mistake in choosing Pittsburgh, as the results will show. It was a real pleasure and inspiration to work with them. The pastor and people entered enthusiastically in the campaign with the motto, "Not how little and get by with it, BUT HOW BIG CAN WE MAKE IT."

Brother Lynn, the pastor, was a true yoke-fellow, an Ashland graduate and booster and was anxious for his people to do their best, which they willingly did.

It has been our experience in some places for churches to make excuses who have home obligations and debts, but not so in Pittsburgh, although they had just completed the making of a $4,000.00 expenditure in remodeling the front of the church and placing improvements on the parsonage, in addition to this, the women of the church had contracted for a carpet costing $800.00 for the church.

This church with a membership of 140 came across with $5,040.00 for the College Endowment, nearly $3,000.00 of this was in cash. Do not get the idea that this church is made up of rich people; while it has a few business men of moderate means, almost the entire membership are wage earners. They simply have learned the blessedness of giving to the work of the church.

It was a fine piece of work and shows what loyalty and love for the church can do when people are in earnest and devoted.

In the campaign here, there was no coaxing or pressure methods (we do not use that kind). The people entered into the work with willingness and enthusiastically and rejoiced together in the victory—THAT IS THE RIGHT SPIRIT AND WAY. I can point to no better example for our churches in this respect, than Pittsburgh.

This church several years ago went through trying days. Brother Daniel Bole who was such a great factor in the work and help financially was called by death and this numerically weak congregation struggled forward with a heavy financial debt. In those dark days Brother Henry Wise, who has also gone to his reward, went out among our churches to get aid in helping to meet the debt, but the bulk of the burden was borne by these faithful ones. God has rewarded their faithfulness and sacrifice and today, they are free of debt and own a fine church building and brick parsonage. The small amount given by the churches to this work has been many times paid back, DOES IT PAY TO STAND BACK OF OUR CHURCHES IN NEEDY DAYS? Read this report, it is the answer.

Brother Lynn, the pastor, has served faithfully and acceptably this people for the past five years and is ably assisted by an ideal pastor's wife. He is a young man of more than ordinary ability, devoted and zealous for the cause of Christ and is among the leading and coming ministers of our church.

My hat is off to the Pittsburgh church and its pastor. You did well and may God bless you, with all spiritual blessing and give you increase materially. PITTSBURGH PUSHES THE HAND ON THE DIAL FOR $5,000.00 AND GOOD MEASURE. WE SOLICITED THE CUTS FOR THIS ISSUE, WHICH SHOW THE CHANGE IN FRONT OF THE CHURCH BUILDING AND THE PORTRAIT OF THE PASTOR, BROTHER LYNN.

W. S. BELL.

MASONTOWN-JOHNSTOWN

On April the first we pulled stakes at Masontown, Pennsylvania, and set sail for another portion of God's vineyard. For nearly six years we endeavored to serve the Masontown congregation to the best of our ability. Our record, of course, was not a perfect one. We, no doubt, made many mistakes, yet we are not ashamed of our achievements nor do we apologize for the record. It was our privilege to be used of God in taking in more than two hundred and fifty members at Masontown. The church building itself was completely modernized and beautified. It is by far the most beautiful Protestant church in or near Masontown.

Were we not to express our appreciation of the most congenial relationship which existed, with the Masontown Brethren we could well be termed ingrates. This was the most congenial congregation I ever labored with. (It was the first charge). It is a pleasure to work with a people who constantly endeavor to make the work pleasant. Repeatedly pleasant surprises were made on pastor and family and very often these were not considered complete unless a purse or some other valuable gift was included. Prior to our departure we were the recipients of several much appreciated gifts from several of the Sunday school classes. The very least that we can say is, that the memory of our dear friends of Masontown will always be revered and cherished. May we be forever the same congenial friends. So again to you at Masontown, we bid you an affectionate farewell.

Johnstown Third Brethren—Greetings: These words were on our lips on Easter Sunday as we were introduced to our new field of labor. A large crowd was out to greet the new pastor and family. They declared their loyalty to their pastor and work. They are doing well in keeping their pledge. While entire strangers in Johnstown, we are beginning to feel pretty much at home. These people know how to care for their pastor and family and make them feel comfortable. This particular field boasts of a new church edifice which was erected under the able direction of L. G. Wood, my worthy predecessor. Our immediate need, however, was a parsonage. This we set at once to build and are now ready for the plasterers. The ladies of the church furnished the material for a fine, substantial garage on the rear of the property, the men did the work and now the "Studebaker" has very comfortable quarters.

The church is observing all special church calendar days and we expect to do our part in the College endowment. On Mother's Day decision day was also observed at which time there were twelve accessions. In the morning the S. M. M. rendered a very beautiful and appropriate program prior to the sermon. In the evening Communion service was observed. This proved to be the largest, by far, in the history of the church. Our immediate program is a union of three churches, viz., Presbyterian Church of the Brethren and our own, in a Daily Vacation Bible School. We expect to join in the union services for the summer months. Last week a reception was given in honor of the new pastor and family. There was an excellent program rendered and an opportunity given to get better acquainted. In closing we request an interest in your prayers that his will may be done.

J. L. GINGRICH.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

We are still moving along in all lines of church activity, but we are not doing all that some churches are doing, neither do we desire to follow in all of the activities of some churches.

We have lost four families from our attendance in the last three months, this is because of industrial conditions. These families just took twelve out of attendance and under the present conditions it is not an easy matter to secure new ones to take their place, especially in this "good old summer time" weather. We believe in the final success of the old time message of the BOOK, and that God will honor his Word. We received one by re-enstatement since our last report, one who had been a member of our church on Drywood—ten miles south of the city—many years ago, but had never affiliated with the church since it was moved to the city. We have several other prospectives on our prayer list, whom we believe the Lord will give us, for the glory of his name, and for service ere long. The five churches of the west side have planned union Sunday evening services for July and August, on the Junior High School grounds.

All of the ministers of Fort Scott are practically new men in this field, and such union meetings will be very beneficial, in furnishing a fine opportunity to get better acquainted with the people.

Our communion service was held on April 25th and we had 31 at the tables. We were also pleased to have with us at that service Elders Aaron Showalter, of Adrian, Missouri, W. B. Sell of Fredonia, Kansas, and F. E. Button of Buffalo, Kansas, and Brother Sell's daughter from Fredonia, Kansas. It was especially pleasing to the pastor to have three Elders, to assist in the service, and also the opportunity to renew old acquaintances. We closed our Daily Vacation Bible School June 19th, while the attendance was very small, a fine piece of work was accomplished with those who did attend. Our workers are scarce, pray that the Lord of the harvest will thrust forth laborers into this little station of his great field.

We have been thinking of two thoughts dropped by Samuel Rea: 1st. "The man who really DOES HIS BEST is a SUCCESS whether or not the world thinks so."

2nd. "Tackle the hard jobs first; the easy ones have a tendency to settle themselves."

There is no work too hard for our Lord, if we can discover his will as to the great purposes of life, and then if we give ourselves wholly to those purposes success is assured.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

"The Switzerland of America"

There have been so many things occurring here that we have had difficulty in finding time to report. The Men's Class and young men's or rather young people's class, have both had their annual picnics. With the men's class, the teacher, Brother McKinney, prepares a program and as soon as the meal is over, we discuss various phases of class work and church work at large. These meetings are very helpful and inspiring. The adult class is fortunate in having such a teacher. He with his wife and daughter have not been Brethren much over a year. He is a splendid teacher and his daughter is a musician. Rev. M. A. Stuckey visited this part of the field in May, speaking at Salem one night on Sunday school work and giving an evangelistic talk in Oak Hill the next night. The twenty-third of May it was our privilege to preach the Baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the Oak Hill High School. This was preached in the Methodist church before an estimated audience of one thousand people. There were possibly two hundred who could not get into the building. I am told that this was the first time that a Brethren pastor was ever asked to deliver this sermon. Judging by the complimentary remarks Oak Hill will not be quite so shy of Brethren preachers from now on. We appreciate this, not for personal glory but for the interest and standing of the church. Invitations are on hand now to deliver various addresses. Not one thing in the old Book has been sacrificed to win these invitations, and neither shall there be. The world has little respect for a sail trimming compromiser.

It was our privilege to give a lecture in the Glenford (Ohio) church on Wednesday night, May 26. This was a defense of God's method of creating man. Even though the rain fell in torrents a surprisingly large crowd for the weather conditions, assembled to hear as they said one of "the home boys."

One night one of the good brethren came to the parsonage with a rather suspicious look and in a little while a large number of visitors came and left a number of toothsome viands which were very much appreciated, not altogether because of their money value but the spirit in which they were given. New song books have been secured for the church. Dr. H. A. Duncan making the church a present of fifty, with the church purchasing the rest. Twenty-one people from Oak Hill were present at the Conference at Roanoke. We had the largest delegation of any church. This was a splendid conference and the people are already planning for the District Conference at Linwood, Maryland next June. So look out, Linwood, for twenty or thirty from Oak Hill when the time rolls around. We are always sure of a good time at Conference, for we take it with us. We feel honored that one of our number, Mrs. George Simpson, was elected District President of the Missionary Society. We are already planning for Winona. While it is just a little early to give out figures, we expect to have more there than we had at the Roanoke Conference.

At a recent business meeting we were given a unanimous call to serve the church the coming year, commencing with the first of September; this will be our fourth year with this people and the relationship has been so fine that it is difficult to realize the passing of time. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us in the work here.

The good people also granted us a three weeks' vacation that will be spent partly in the New England states and New York. While we do not as a church have the fine buildings that the others have we have something that they envy, a fine spirit. Through this spirit and cooperation has it been possible for us to make the progress that has been made. Brother B. F. Owen starts a meeting at Salem, finishing the eighteenth of July, after which we expect to leave on our vacation. Then back in time to prepare for General Conference and then to plunge into a meeting at Oak Hill the thirteenth of September with Brother A. L. Lynn on the firing line.

We are very much interested in the progress of the church throughout the brotherhood and hope that we may be able to do our part here in the saving of men and women for the Kingdom of God.

CAMPBELL BRETHREN CHURCH

Lake Odessa, Michigan

Campbell Brethren have just enjoyed a season of spiritual refreshment. A two weeks' meeting was the occasion, with Dr. George W. Rench, of South Bend, Indiana, as doctrinal teacher and evangelist, and with Brother Harley Zumbaugh as song leader. Although not a few years have passed since we first heard Brother Rench proclaim the truth as found in the Word, yet we can safely say we never saw him preach with any more vigor and zeal than we saw here. To say that his messages pleased his hearers is evidenced by the fact that at least eighty-five per cent of his hearers were those present every night. We know that the church life has been strengthened. Three were led to confess Christ as their Savior and two have been baptized and received into the fellowship of the Brethren.

The meetings were concluded with the Holy Communion service on Monday evening and was well attended. Yes, and well attended by our young people, those of grade and high school age. The future of this church is assured just as long as the young people continue to remember their Lord as he has asked them to do.

Brother Zumbaugh was well received again this year as he was last year. His leading of congregational singing as well as his solo work was well received.

Sunday, June 20th, was Homecoming and we were pleased to see the splendid number who came. We promised a special speaker for the day, and we were very fortunate in having with us Rev. S. B. Wenger, pastor of the Church of the Brethren, Grand Rapids. We were grateful indeed for his presence. The noon hour was all that might be anticipated when farmers and friends bring their baskets. In the afternoon, we were again indebted to our sister church for the speaker in the person of Brother Vane of the Church of the Brethren, Woodland, Michigan. His work was in "Chalk-Talks" and was very splendid for the occasion. The pastor gave the message of the evening, closing another big day in Campbell's church life.

As mentioned in NOTICE in columns of recent number of the Evangelist we are soon closing our work with these good people and our going is not without regret for our working relations have been without a hitch and the many acts of kindness for the pastor and family cause us to know that they are true Brethren.

Business affiliations have taken us to South Bend, Indiana, and should any church, within week-end driving distance, desire our service, we will consider the matter with them. Our South Bend address is 201 S. Main St.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The summer school has started off with a good enrollment, the total number being 238, about what it was last year. Professor Haun has returned from Chicago University in time to take up his work. The only regular teachers here this summer are Professors Miller, L. L. Garber, J. A. Garber, Haun, Anspach and Mason.

The Council of churches of Ohio put on a series of oratorical contests on the general subject of "The Prince of Peace" over the state this past winter, part of the prizes being free tuition in certain of the Ohio Colleges, of which Ashland was one. This past week we were asked to send a judge to Columbus to assist on the final contests. Professor J. A. Garber went and reports a very good time. This was held in conjunction with the State Christian Endeavor Convention.

I was in Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, over the week end and assisting Brother Bell in his canvass there. This will be reported later.

Word from Professor DeLozier indicates that he is enjoying his work in the pulpit of the First church of Johnstown, Pa.

We are expecting to close our Summer school with an hour's programme by a college quartette from Tuskegee Institute. This promises to be of unusual merit.

HUNGARY AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Church leaders in Hungary are cooperating with Mr. John Victor, Secretary of the Hungary Sunday School Union. The situation is clearly stated in a recent letter from Mr. Victor: "In the conference I had not so much to convince people of the necessity of the work as to show how it was to be done."

A most promising work is going on at Kecskemet, where there is a Training College for day school teachers. The girl students there are made acquainted with Sunday school work from the beginning and are taught to see in it the best part of their future life work. Those belonging to the upper grades take actual part in Sunday school teaching under the guidance of one of the college teachers, not only at Kecskemet but they frequently go out many miles to distant farms where there is neither school nor church and there they gather the children and the parents of the neighborhood to bring them the message of Christ.

universities at that time, one at Heliopolis, and the other at Hermopolis. His studies would include the two forms of difficult Egyptian writing, arithmetic, geometry, trigonometry to some extent, astronomy, music, both vocal and instrumental, painting and architecture, medicine and chemistry, history and law, poetry and other branches of literature, and especially theology, extending to its highest form, "the philosophy of symbolism," in which the Egyptian religion, gross as it was, came nearest to the Hebrew. As a member of the royal family, Moses was no doubt received into the priestly caste, and knew all their secret lore. Much of this "wisdom of the Egyptians" was shallow and absurd; but much of it was of the highest value to Moses in the great work which he accomplished.

The tradition that he became a soldier is in accordance with the probabilities, and explains his great military ability displayed in the Exodus and afterwards. "According to Josephus (on what authority we do not know), the Ethiopians made an incursion into Egypt, and routed the army which was sent to resist them. Panic spread over the country, and Pharaoh trembled at the approach of the swarthy savages. The oracles, well aware of his remarkable abilities, advised that the command be entrusted to Moses. He immediately took the field, and by a rapid though roundabout march surprised the enemy, defeating them with heavy slaughter, drove them back into their own territories, and followed them up so hard, capturing one city after another, that they found no asylum till they reached the swamp-girdled city of Meroe." Moses is said to have returned from this campaign the most popular man in the kingdom, having also learned thoroughly the weakness and the strength of the people and of Pharaoh.—Illustrated Quarterly.

The Great Decision

It was at forty years of age that Moses made the first great and costly decision of his life, when he decided to cast his lot in with his own people and to help them. He might have remained a prince in Egypt, but he refused the honor, "choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season" (Heb. 11:24-26). At this time he was hasty and fiery-tempered, and it was a sudden explosion of his temper that gave occasion for his decision. That must be overcome however before he is prepared to do a work of the magnitude that later faced him. After forty years among the herds under divine tutelage he became known as the meekest of men.

WORLD PROHIBITION ESSENTIAL TO AMERICAN PROHIBITION

"American prohibition of the beverage liquor traffic represents one of the greatest moral achievements of the century. The 18th Amendment to the Federal Constitution is unique in the history of popular government. The first eleven amendments to the Federal Constitution were ratified by the bare three-fourths majority required. Four states never ratified the Twelfth Amendment; five never ratified the Thirteenth Amendment; four failed to ratify the Fourteenth Amendment; six failed to ratify the Seventeenth Amendment, and ten failed to ratify the Nineteenth Amendment. The Eighteenth Amendment, however, was ratified by 46 of the 48 states.

"While the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution received the largest official majority sanction ever given to a constitutional provision, nevertheless no provision of the Constitution has ever had arrayed against it such a powerful, active and aggressive minority as that opposed to National Constitutional Prohibition. The conflict which the prohibition forces must wage during the years to come will be not merely against the strength of local, state and national liquor organizations, but against a gigantic, strongly organized, wealthy and politically influential international liquor traffic. Something of the extent and influence of that international traffic is indicated by the world's present drink bill, amounting to approximately twenty billion dollars.

"Just as the efforts for complete township and village prohibition required county and state cooperation, and just as complete state prohibition required the cooperation of other states and that of the Federal Government, just so today the unfinished task of National Prohibition in the United States required the cooperation of other countries.

"The American international boundary line, more than 17,000 miles in length, along which operate millions of high-powered automobiles, tens of thousands of swift run-running vessels and numerous aeroplanes, directed by radio, presents a challenge of international significance. Modern inventions revolutionizing communication and transportation have made of the world a vast neighborhood of nations. All these facts tend to make the enforcement of prohibition in the United States, and the whole prohibition question, a great international problem.

"The moral and religious forces of America must take the truth about prohibition to the rest of the world, in order to save and make permanent American prohibition at home, just as the church was compelled to enter the foreign mission field in order to save the church of America.

"Such a program is necessary, moreover, in order to keep the liquor interests of other countries defending themselves in those countries instead of concentrating on the effort to break down prohibition here in the United States.

"Such a course is essential in order to lessen one of the greatest menaces to foreign missionary work of American churches, thus creating conditions that will multiply the efficiency of America's eighteen thousand missionaries, and protect the American Church's vast annual investment of forty millions of dollars in foreign missionary enterprise.

"The foreign missionary program of American prohibition forces, moreover, must be undertaken:

"Because we must prevent the overrunning by the powerful liquor interests of those countries where more than 600,000,000 people for centuries have lived under the influence of total abstinence, religious;

"Because such a program will tend to bring the leaders of great prohibition religions of the East to meet on a common platform and unite in a common moral welfare program with Christian leaders of the West, thus paving the way for international and interracial understandings;

"Because of the inherent character of the temperance movement itself, which from its inception has been a movement to help 'the other fellow' whether he be an individual, a community, a county, a state, a nation or a continent."

THE TIE THAT BINDS

REYNOLDS-FULTON—At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Reynolds, Fort Scott, Kansas, at high noon Wednesday, June 23rd, 1926, occurred the marriage of Miss Hazel Marie Reynolds, to Mr. Chester O. Fulton, both prominent young people of Fort Scott.

The home was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The members of the two families with a few invited guests were present. The impressive ring ceremony was used. After congratulations and refreshments Mr. and Mrs. Fulton started on their wedding trip to Texas. They will be at home to their many friends in Fort Scott, early in July. The ceremony was performed by the writer.

L. G. WOOD.

KEIHL-DECKER—On June 12, 1926, at the First Brethren parsonage at Fremont, Mr. Ira B. Keihl of Toledo, Ohio and Miss Helen Decker of Bellevue were united in marriage by the undersigned. Mrs. Keihl is a daughter of Brother and Sister Decker of Bellevue, and is a member of the Fremont Brethren church. For the past two years she has been employed in the office of the Overland Automobile Company at Toledo. Mr. Keihl is in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and holds a responsible position. They will make their home in Toledo for the present and expect to locate later at Mansfield, Ohio.

S. C. HENDERSON.

SNIDER-GINGRICH—On May 1st, 1926, at the Johnstown Third Brethren parsonage was solemnized the marriage ceremony of Dr. Claude K. Snider and Miss Sara E. Gingrich, both of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania. Dr. Snider is a highly respected man in his community and Miss Gingrich is an efficient High School teacher and a sister of the pastor of the Third Brethren church of Johnstown. The beautiful ring ceremony was used. The witnesses were the mother and the youngest brother, Harold, of the bride. A wedding breakfast was served, after which the bride and groom motored to Hagerstown, Maryland, and other points of interest. We congratulate these young people and pray God may richly bless them and use them according to his purpose.

JOS. L. GINGRICH.

IN THE SHADOW

WAGNER—Benjamin F. Wagner was born in Saint Joseph County, Indiana, and lived his life of almost 78 years in and near South Bend. He died June the 10th at his home in South Bend. Brother Wagner had been identified with the church for almost a half century. He united first with a congregation of the Church of the Brethren. Later he went in as a charter member of what was known as the Fairview Brethren church. And still later he transferred his membership to the South Bend church.

Brother Wagner leaves a faithful and loyal wife to mourn his departure, also a brother and two sisters. He was of a kindly considerate nature, and was a consistent Christian and faithful to the church. The funeral was conducted by the undersigned at his residence, with many neighbors and friends present. May the Lord graciously sustain Sister Wagner.

WAL. H. BEACHLER.

LANDIS—Samuel Landis was born December 9th, 1850, in Montgomery County, Ohio, died June 20th, 1926, at North Manchester, Indiana, aged 75 years 6 months and 11 days. He was the son of Jacob and Polly Landis, of that good old Tunker stock that makes for strong character and sturdy citizenship.

He was married August 4th, 1877 to Henrietta Creager and to this union four children were born.

He was baptized and received into the Brethren church November 1st, 1885, in which he remained a faithful and consistent communicant and worker to the end, quiet, sacrificing and unostentatious.

Mr. Landis will be remembered as an industrious, hard working and successful man. Faithful to his friends and his family. There was nothing he would leave undone for their happiness and welfare. He was a generous host, a loyal citizen and good neighbor and a friend to all.

The history of the First Brethren church of North Manchester will never be correctly written without the mention of Samuel Landis. It was a big part of his life and in it he was a trustee continuously for many years. We have every reason to believe that his devotion and faithfulness to his church and his Lord are being rewarded in that better world to which he has gone. Let us cover with a mantle of charity any failure or mistake and emulate his sacrificing generosity and devotion to the best things in life and pray for those upon whom the stroke of his passing falls a heavy load.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Elders A. E. Thomas and I. B. Wright. CHARLES A. BANE.

GANS—Daisy L. Sampson, daughter of Edward and Sarah Sampson, was born in Newark, New Jersey, July 19, 1881. She was one of a family of eleven children, of which but two remain, the parents and eight of the children having preceded her to the spirit world.

Daisy L. Sampson was united in marriage with Ernest A. Gans at Turtle Creek, Pennsylvania, on April 5, 1902. To this union seven children were born. For three years Brother and Sister Gans made their home at Turtle Creek, Pa. From thence they moved to Brother Gans' childhood home near Uniontown, Pa., where they have since resided.

Sister Gans united with the First Brethren church of Uniontown, Pa., on March 11, 1910, during the ministry of the undersigned, and for nine and one-half years it was my privilege to serve as her pastor. A few weeks before her death she requested the anointing service at my hands, and it was her request that I officiate at the funeral obsequies.

Death came to the pain-racked body on Friday morning, June 18, 1926, at the age of 44 years, 10 months and 29 days, after more than a year of suffering from the ravages of the dreaded cancer. Through all the years since uniting with the church Sister Gans has been a faithful member, and in the last few years an interested worker in the Women's Missionary Society and a teacher in the Bible school, until illness prevented her further attendance.

She leaves the husband, two sons, five daughters, a brother, George A. Sampson, one sister, Mrs. J. M. Wightman, of Pittsburgh, and one grandchild beside a host of more distant relatives and friends who sorrow at the leave taking of a faithful wife, mother, sister, and friend.

Funeral services were held at the Tent Presbyterian church, not far from the family home, on Sunday afternoon, June 20, in charge of the undersigned. Remarks upon the occasion were based on Philippians 1:23. Burial was made in the adjoining cemetery, the body being committed to the earth with the use of John Ellerton's beautiful hymn:

"Now the laborer's task is o'er;
Now the battle day is past;
Now upon the farther shore
Lands the voyager at last.
Father! in thy gracious keeping
Leave we now thy servant sleeping.

"Earth to earth and dust to dust;
Calmly now the words we say;
Leaving her to sleep in trust,
Till the resurrection day.
Father! in thy gracious keeping
Leave we now thy servant sleeping."
Peace to the ashes, and God rest the soul.
DYOLL BELOTE.

MY LITTLE CHURCH

My little church, so humble, small and plain,
Where year by year I've worshiped there. What gain,
What lifts I've had upon a weary road,
How many lightnings of a heavy load;
In every pew I courage read, and grace,
Because of those who sat each in his place
Faithful and true, until the very end,
And every one of them to me a friend.
The pastors in the pulpit who have stood
For God and right, and everything that's good,
In solemn train they, too, come back and say:
"Forget not what we've said, watch on and pray."
My little church, so humble, plain and small,
I would not change you for the finest. All
You've been to me I can not well define,
Lifting my soul to Him of life divine.
And so to me it is a holy place,
In which I oft recall each vanished face
Of those I loved, who by the crystal sea
Are watching, waiting there to welcome me.
O little church, the peace and hope you've given
When many times my soul with grief was riven!
Love can not fully measure or express
Your holy mission to uplift and bless.—Selected

How Teach Our Distinctive Doctrines Today

(Concluded from last week)

Our suggestions last week regarding the spirit or manner in which Brethren distinctive doctrines should be presented were merely suggestive; much more might be said, but for the present we will leave it for others who may feel constrained to say it. Suffice it to say that the manner in which we teach our doctrines determines very much the size of the problem we face in presenting them. The way people react towards them depends largely on the spirit and method we employ. A proper approach seldom causes offense; in fact it usually produces an agreeable, if not a favorable and convinced, attitude.

However we wish here to consider the "Where" and "When" of the problem of presenting our denominational teachings. These phases of the subject give the appearance of presenting to some the greatest cause for perplexity, and yet having taken the attitude we have in the preceding consideration, they seem to us to involve scarcely any difficulty. It would seem to us that the pastor could present his denominational tenets almost anywhere that he may have his people assembled, aside from a union effort, if the right spirit and manner are adopted. It doubtless is true that certain seasons and occasions lend themselves more readily to effective instruction along this line than others. Nevertheless there are many different times and places that may be utilized for this purpose, and should not be lost sight of, if we have desire to bring about the most widespread return to a zealous and effective propagation of Brethren doctrines, which seem to us to be of paramount necessity to the accomplishment of our mission in the world. If we remain silent on these things which give us excuse for existence, we will gradually lose faith in our mission, others will lose confidence in us and before we are aware, we will be on the toboggan and our descent will be rapid. It is with the hope of stimulating interest in a revival of instruction in primitive Christian practices, for which the Brethren church stands, that we are giving expression to the following suggestions, familiar though they may be.

In regard to the place where Brethren doctrine may be taught today, let it first be said, in the pulpit. If such a statement should seem to some too simple and obvious a truth to give space to, we would reply that it is in the pulpit that the difficulty has been felt by some of our pastors. Because of the tendency in certain of our churches (and possibly the tendency is quite general) of members of other denominations to seek the benefits of more or less regular worship with our people, there is experienced a reluctance on the part of some of our pastors to use their pulpits for this purpose, and they seek the help of evangelists to supplement their work in this respect. But evangelists also share this same reluctance in their campaigns. A sermon on Baptism, or Feetwashing, for example, or any extended reference to it, retards the interest, some say. Not having been entirely void of experience in these fields, we can understand this viewpoint, yet we wonder if it has not been over-emphasized, or if indeed we ourselves may not have an exaggerated sense of the hindering effect of such preaching on non-Brethren attendants of our services. However that may be, we are inclined to the belief that the voice behind the sacred desk should not allow itself to be muffled, or to give an uncertain sound. We would not be dogmatic about the occasion, but we are of the opinion that somehow the Brethren pulpit should be allowed to speak out in behalf of its distinctive plea, and its position with regard to obedience to the Word of God should be without doubt.

The mid-week prayer meeting is often a good place to teach Brethren doctrine and we have observed that it is not infrequently used for that purpose. One objection has been registered against it, and that is, so few attend this meeting, and they are the faithful few who are already quite well indoctrinated. However, old members as well as new ones need frequently to have their allegiance to Brethren teachings renewed and their enthusiasm for their propagation quickened. And besides, with special effort many new members and friends of the church can often be induced to attend when a series of well-prepared doctrinal studies is given. It is a significant opportunity that the prayer meeting affords, for nowhere, generally speaking, is there to be found a better spiritual atmosphere or more receptive hearts.

The regular auxiliaries of the church afford splendid opportunities for teaching Brethren doctrine in ways that will be most effective. In the Sunday school, by means of special talks crisply given during the worship program, and dealing with some vital phase of denominational truth, or by means of supplementary lessons in the classes, the people of all ages, church members and friends and visitors of the church alike can in a tactful way be brought in touch with our denominational mission and message. The various divisions of Christian Endeavor lend themselves readily to such instruction, and instruction of a type and to an age that proves eminently worth while. Church doctrinal themes can be substituted for the regular lesson topics at intervals or in a series, or portions of the program or lesson period can be devoted to Bible studies or talks dealing with church doctrine. Christian Endeavor opportunities for such instruction are responsible for many staunch and intelligent leaders in the church, and the pastor who is deeply and wisely concerned about the future of his church will not let such opportunities pass lightly by.

The church may also teach her distinctive plea in classes specially arranged for that purpose. Here is where such instruction can be given more thoroughly and effectively than anywhere else, and here is where we have been decidedly negligent and short-sighted. Until we begin to lay stress on the importance of group or class instruction in Brethren doctrine and make proper provision for such work, we can in no wise be said to treat seriously the problem of the perpetuity of our church.

Our discussion of the place where denominational doctrine should be made has inevitably involved to some extent the element of time, and yet there are some special considerations with regard to "when" the instruction should be stressed that deserve consideration. First, a very popular time for such instruction is just preceding a communion service. Many pastors have found it an opportune time for the preaching of a series of doctrinal sermons, and surely there is scarcely a time when such sermons are needed more than then, and it would be difficult to find the people more receptive than at such a time. Rather than finding it embarrassing to let the pulpit speak out in behalf of our denominational stand, it would seem the most natural kind of preparation for a communion service, and a kind that should be graciously received by members and non-members alike. We have found it so in our experience.

A good time for instruction classes or groups in Brethren doctrine is just preceding or following an evangelistic campaign. If such a campaign results in the addition of new members to the church, those members ought to be instructed, and the easiest time in the world to enlist their interest in an instruction class is at the outset of their Christian experience. And to be thoroughly indoctrinated at that time will add untold richness, stability and usefulness to their Christian lives and church relationships. The use of the instruction class as a preparation for a revival may be a novel idea to some, but we wish it might be thought through and tried out carefully, especially by those who are doubtful. It is especially adaptable to children and young people. Let a group of children or young people be gathered together from any source, children of parents who are church members and of parents who are not, and let the pastor or other capable person instruct them in the things that pertain to Christian life and faith. ('The Way of Life,' published by the National Sunday School Association is well adapted to this purpose). with a view to leading them to the acceptance of Christ as their Savior, and when the course is finished, launch into a series of evangelistic meetings when they will be urged to make the decision. If they should have experienced conversion before the evangelistic meetings begin, they would make most excellent and informed personal workers for the campaign to aid in bringing others, yet uninstructed, to Christ. Such a combination of information and spiritual zeal may prove a most effective means of conserving the results of a revival, and of ensuring growth and strength to the new members. And there could scarcely be any embarrassment experienced in teaching Brethren doctrines, since all joining such a class would do so with full knowledge of its purpose.

The season of Lent has proven to be a time that lends itself with fine spirit to intensive religious instruction, either by class work or by sermon. It is a time that is widely used for instruction and preparation for church membership, and therefore should be found a most fitting time to stress the teachings of the Bible with regard to salvation and church membership according to the Brethren interpretation. If the regular services and occasions of the church seem to some inadvisable times on which to teach our denominational ideals and tenets, let us make use of the special seasons and occasions when the accustomed spirit and expectations of the people, as well as announced purpose seem to change the situation somewhat. Possibly the people will be found in a more receptive and gracious attitude at such times, and we shall be released in a measure for our undue timidity and super-sensitiveness regarding the teaching of Brethren doctrine. With all due regard for the proprieties, let us not forget that the perpetuity of our church demands the propagation of our faith.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Another installment of Dr. Florence N. Gribble's articles dealing with African customs is to be found in this issue, and it is intensely interesting, and as well, inspires one with the missionary spirit.

Prof. J. A. Garber, General Secretary of the National Sunday School Association, gives us an installment of news and requests superintendents throughout the brotherhood to make prompt report of statistics.

We are in receipt of a copy of the printed program of the Southern California Bible Conference to be held at Long Beach, July 9 to 18, and prominent among the important speakers are the names of Rev. Charles H. Ashman, Rev. Cortland Myers, Rev. Scott Withrow, Dr. I. R. Dean and Dr. Arthur H. Carter. It promises to be a conference of such character and quality as this aggressive district is accustomed to having.

We publish in this issue an extended report of the Maryland-Virginia Conference, prepared by the capable secretary, Brother Clark A. Copp. This conference, which was entertained by the Brethren church at Roanoke, Virginia, is said to have been a successful and fine spirited conference, as we have previously remarked. The next district conference will convene at Linwood, Maryland, beginning the second Sunday in June, 1927.

The Washington, D. C. church is soon to see the partial realization of their dream of years by the building of the first floor of their new church, which when completed will be a beautiful building fully worthy of representing our denomination in the Capitol City of the nation. A little pamphlet recently received from Brother Homer A. Kent, the pastor, carries a sketch of the proposed new building, the main floor of which is to be added later and when completed is to cost approximately $75,000.

The Long Beach, California, church has recently enjoyed a most successful evangelistic campaign in which Brother C. H. Ashman did the preaching, resulting in 125 confessions, most of whom are uniting with the church. Dr. L. S. Bauman, the pastor, speaks very highly of the ability and labors of the evangelist, who himself also writes appreciatively of the splendid cooperation and fellowship of the pastor and people. It was a great meeting, and these many additions will doubtless help to give this rapidly growing and already large church a greatly increased strength and responsibility.

Dr. Martin Shively's first Educational Day offering report makes its appearance in this issue, and while some churches make commendable offerings, the report in general shows that there has been a lack of serious consideration given to the demands of the college. We feel quite certain that this offering is not a barometer of the interest of the church in its educational institution. Doubtless many more and better offerings will yet be reported. And yet we have a fear that some leaders are allowing other things to interfere with their whole-hearted support of Ashland College, a thing which no one can afford to do, if he has the future of the church at heart.

We have a good letter from the LaVerne, California, church, of which Brother Herbert H. Tay who wrote the recently concluded, highly appreciated series of articles on the Holy Land and Egypt, is the efficient pastor. During recent months twenty-five members have been added to the church, the membership now numbering 244, and the Sunday school attendance ranging around 200. This church is the home of Brother and Sister Clarence Sickel who are home from the Argentine on furlough. It is also the home of Brother Chauncey Sheldon, missionary to Africa, who has recently been married to Miss Hattie Cope, missionary on the same field, and a splendid Kentucky mission product.

Dr. R. R. Teeter, business manager, reports a new church added to the Evangelist Honor Roll. It is Leon, Iowa, and the pastor to whom the credit for the accomplishment goes is Brother Claud Studebaker. It is a splendid achievement, and we congratulate him and his people for their co-operation. We hope they will find this fellowship so much worth while that they will never leave it. Either the business manager or the editor will be glad to give any encouragement possible to any one else who will attempt such a task. We appreciate the fine loyalty also shown by the goodly number of churches renewing their position on the Honor Roll, some of whom have been on since its beginning. Such support makes our heart rejoice.

A note received at the Evangelist office from Brother R. Paul Miller, of Philadelphia, informs us that a fire at the Bassai station in Africa "wiped out Brother Jobson's house and goods." Concern is felt for Mrs. Kennedy as she and Mr. Kennedy were occupying the house at the time. This will mean that the Jobsons will need practically a new outfit. They have some things with them, but most of their things were left in Africa. It will likely take $1,200 to replace all that they lost in the fire." The First church of Philadelphia has started a fund for the replacement of the things that were lost, Brother Miller reports. The news came by way of a telegram from the Fosters in France.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

Effort has been put forth for years to bring about compulsory Bible reading and non-sectarian religious instruction in the public schools, and now an intensive campaign is on to bring about the inauguration of the policy. After trying secular education for forty-six years, they discovered that it will not produce the type of character necessary to give strength and stability to a Christian democracy.

England's drink bill for 1925 is said to have been $1,527,750,000, which is $35 per capita. It is an enormous sum to waste at any time, but especially now in view of the debt-burdened condition of the country. There is one encouraging thing about it, however, and that is that the amount is a decrease of one shilling less per capita than the drink bill of the previous year.

Our Attitude Toward God

By A. B. Cover

Someone says, "In this restless age, life is truly a matter of attitudes." Attitude determines our relation to the world about us. A man is a pessimist, a cynic, an atheist or an optimist according to his attitude toward life. If this is true in the world about us, it is equally true in our relation to our Maker. It is very important that we examine ourselves in reference to this vital problem. What is MY attitude toward God? What about my personal belief in a Divine Personality? Then in consequence, it is essential that we are concerned as to its manifestation. How do I manifest my attitude toward God?

It is always profitable and inspiring to contemplate God's part of redemption. How wondrously, he loved us! How gloriously, he redeemed us! What a price was paid for our transgressions! It humbles us and yet exalts us when we think of God's love thus manifested. We come to realize the meaning anew of the Cross in its power of overthrowing sin, and making possible reconciliation with our Heavenly Father. But we must not stop with that realization, we must determine the contribution that humanity must make to appropriate the fruits of so great a salvation. Then, what is my attitude of mind in relation to the revelation of God? All depends upon the attitude we assume. We receive in proportion as we contribute. We get out just what we put in. This then is a sobering thought when we analyze it in Christian values. What does the Christian life mean to us? What does the church and her services mean to me? What does God in his fulness mean to me?

There are different attitudes of mind that we may assume towards God and his Redemptive plan; there is that attitude that rejects God; there is the attitude of doubt; then there is the attitude that receives, accepts the things of God; and there is that also that obeys the will of God. In these attitudes is manifested the attitude which brings to the believer eternal joy and blessedness, or eternal loss and ruin. We shall consider these briefly.

In these attitudes named, we shall think first of the negative one that rejects. That is unbelief. In Hebrews third chapter and nineteenth verse these words are found, "And we see that they were not able to enter in because of unbelief." The words refer to Numbers where is given the tragic account of Israel's unbelief. Notwithstanding, that God had miraculously delivered and sustained them, they on the very borders of that land that was their coveted goal, manifested that unbelief that forever closed to the unfaithful the door of opportunity. Within two years after leaving Egypt, they encamped near the border of the land promised to them for an inheritance. They sent out the spies, who were instructed to investigate the land and then to report concerning it. They went forth upon their quest and found the land as had been promised. A majority report was that it was a "land flowing with milk and honey." It was productive and a land that would insure their material needs. But there was the matter of possessing it; and this added a different phase to the problem. The minority said we are well able to possess it but the ten faithless ones saw what they considered unsurmountable obstacles. "Nevertheless the people be strong: and moreover we saw the children of Anak there." The people accepted this report, they missed the joy of possessing the land because of unbelief. As we view the camp, it brings a picture of sadness and dismay for the doors of opportunity had swung on them forever. Now we ask why did this all end so tragically? It was because in their reckoning, they left God out of it. They assumed the wrong attitude of mind toward God. They rejected God. Consequently, they manifested their unfitness of possessing the land God had promised to them. They who rejected God by this attitude of mind died in the wilderness and another generation were reared to assume what they missed. It is said in reference to the work of our Master, that "He did not many mighty works there because of unbelief." We note here that upon the attitude of mind depends God's working through us. God does not change his purposes because of man's unbelief, but he may have to change the plan. May we in this generation be faithful in attitude of receiving so that God may work through us his plan. The attitude of mind that rejects God is unfit to possess.

Then there is also that attitude of mind that doubts and wavers. This is likewise a negative attitude. This characterizes one as hesitating to venture, being afraid to launch out into the deep, and consequently leaves God out of life and its undertakings. David after being protected for a time began doubting and said, "I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul; there is nothing better for me than that I should speedily escape into the land of the Philistines." He followed the inclination that doubt stimulated and went into the land of the Philistines. He went only to find that he had made a mistake and was impelled to return. Doubting Castle is a very poor place to lodge even for a night. For Giant Despair will do his deadly work and soon we find the tempter's fangs upon our withering souls. A writer says, "No man fails because he is weak: he fails because he doubts." Our doubts are traitors and make us lose the good we might win by daring to attempt. Shun the attitude of doubt.

Then we cross the line into the positive attitudes of mind. This is the fruitful productive state that receives the things of God, and obeys his will. This is that faculty of faith that is always receiving, always accepting, always believing what God says, and then acting thereon. This attitude is the foundation of all life. This is true in the material life about us and most certainly so in the spiritual realm or in our relation to God. So we perceive that our first fruitful attitude to God and man simply takes. This does not exclude struggle; for the faith that receives, may struggle to lay hold upon the things of God. Then there is that stage where it becomes restful. The man of Capernaum whose son was sick unto death sought the help of Jesus. He made the necessary journey and appealed to Jesus. Jesus simply said, Go, thy son liveth." The Word tells us that he believed what Jesus had told him. He accepts it; he rests upon it; he returns home to find that his faith was rewarded and that the son was healed when Jesus spoke the Word. Thus we note the successive steps of a receiving faith; it takes, it weighs and considers, and then rests upon it. God give us the faith, the attitude of mind that receives the revelation of God and rests upon it.

Moreover, there is the positive attitude that obeys the will of God. Here we find the fruit of the proper attitude of mind toward God which expresses the result of faith. Thus faith is more than receiving the revelation of God, it obeys the will of God. Faith then may be considered as a great venture, a great committal. When the voice of the Master reached the ears of Peter across the water, the impulsive disciple ventured to reach the side of the Master. He left the boat and plunged into the sea. Peter ventured and it was the expression of a great spirit. Abraham ventured and obeyed God's will for many years; Moses ventured and accomplished the greatest task ever committed to human hands; the list of faithful in Hebrews ventured and were rewarded for their obedience. But there is another outstanding venture, and that was Jesus on Calvary. Peter tells us that, "He committed himself to him that judgeth right-teously." Jesus did not retaliate, "He who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth, Who when he was reviled, reviled not again: when he suffered, he threatened not." How did Jesus leave this world? He left the world as rejected, despised, an outcast, as a malefactor; the implications of the Cross were that he went out of this world as unworthy to live in it. "He endured the Cross, despising the shame." What did Jesus do?" Committed himself to him that doeth righteously." God vindicated the name of Jesus by the resurrection from the dead. Faith is a venture. Obedience brings reward.

From the teaching of the Word, we glean the truth that faith exercised brings fruitful relation with the Father. All that is wrong will eventually be righted. And may we have that attitude of mind that brings the inward peace though the waves roll high about us. The greatest thing connection with the Cross was the outstanding act of faith. Let us make the Cross the center of our Faith.

The battle the Christian must fight is with the world adversary. We are given the weapon whereby we can overcome; that weapon is "our faith." Our faith determines our attitude toward God. May it be that attitude which receives and then obeys the will of God to the extent of our ability. Beautiful it is to receive the things of God and equally beautiful "to keep" the commandments. Not only to "get them" but, "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments." Let us then avoid the attitude of mind that rejects God, and that doubting attitude that may resolve in rejecting him, may we cultivate that mind that receives and obeys the will of God.

If the Church Should Quit

By S. C. Henderson

(Concluded from last week)

If the church should quit, the active force of Christianity would also cease. It is said that when Benjamin Franklin read "The Age of Reason," he wrote to its author, Thomas Paine. "You had better burn it, for if the world is so bad with Christianity and the Bible, what would it be without it?" Franklin was philosopher enough to see the dire darkness of a people without God. We might say the very same thing to our age, when we hear of so much crime and sin, "If all these things happen in the face of the church of the living God and its forces of righteousness what would things be without it?" We need to reflect upon it. Some months ago Emma Golden, the mother of anarchy in America, was arrested and convicted and sentenced to prison, but was given her choice either to go to jail or to be sent to Russia. She chose the latter but after tasting conditions in Russia, she wanted to return to America. I have often wondered what many of the folks who hate the church and Christianity would think if they could be deported outside the portals of its light and influence. Dr. Hale wrote about "A Man Without a Country" and his longing to hear even the name of the United States that was denied him. I wonder what suffering might be brought home to those who feel an enmity against the church and Jesus Christ. That would be hell enough even without any hereafter. I am thinking. If all the good Christian folks should emigrate away from a community, if all the churches should cease, and be turned into factories and all the ministers, Sunday school teachers and the good old fathers and mothers in Israel should go to heaven—what would be the social consequence? It is worth while to pause and think about it.

Shall the church quit? Some of the big, brainy men have expressed the worth of the church in the national and business world. President Coolidge made a recent statement: "The government of a country never gets ahead of the religion of a country. There is no way by which we can substitute the authority of the law for the virtue of man. Peace, justice, humanity, charity cannot be legislated into being; they are the results of Divine Grace."

During a dark hour for this country and the world, a French Premier exclaimed: "What France needs is forty million Christians."

During the same dark hour Lloyd George cried: "Now it is either Christ, or chaos; either the Kingdom of God, or a world revolution."

Not very long ago in Cleveland at a banquet of 800 Ohio bankers and their guests, the president of the American Bankers' Association told his astonished hearers that the fundamental thing for them to do was to go to church, and listen to their ministers and practice as they can what they are told. He said further, "That the heart of the American business system is in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and it is the only thing that could do the world good."

Roger Babson tells us that Chicago's progress is due to two per cent of its vast population. Remove this two per cent and that mighty city would go back where it was one hundred years ago. In every community the same thing is true. There is a small minority that is the life of it. Remove it and all will fail. That is what Jesus meant when he spoke to his followers, saying:

"Ye are the salt of the earth," and "ye are the light of the world." Think of what a mighty saving influence a few Sunday school and church folks are in your own community!

Not long ago a certain judge in West Virginia sentenced fourteen boys ranging between nine and fourteen years of age, to attend Sunday school. But why send these young culprits to Sunday school? Was it a punishment that this judge was seeking to inflict on these incorrigible lads? Why did he not send them to the movie, the pool hall or the dance hall? That judge knew that the Sunday school had something that could lift and transform these lads to be good and honest men. The movie, the pool hall and the dance hall had an opposite effect. Another prominent jurist, Judge B. J. Humphries, recently said that in his twenty years' experience on the bench in Brooklyn, New York he could recall but one of the thousand criminals brought before him who had Sunday school training. If such reliable statements can be taken, it means that the best of all antidotes from crime is religion. It has been shown that only a very small per cent of the youthful criminals that are being arranged in the courts, know anything about religion, or the moral code of the ten commandments.

The fact is that the church has not failed. It has been doing a tremendous piece of good work against great odds. There are so many anti-social and lawless elements at work. Take the movie for instance. Quoting from one of the leading ministers of the country:

"The movie, our most popular recreation, is a weather vane to show which way the wind is blowing in the thinking of our people, and so far as lawlessness is concerned the direction is obvious. The representatives of the law are habitually at a disadvantage on the screen. The judge, the detective, the policeman come off badly in the plot, and the mere husband is often in ill repute with the audience ... but the attractive murderers, the high minded robbers, the noble crooks, and the gracious courtesans!—The church is often accused of being sentimental but after watching the screen we can risk the church ... Crime is the aftermath of the movie-debauched youth."

Again the church stands as a saving and rescue institution. It bears the only message that can make bad men good by a real transformation. We call it conversion in church terms. It is the Gospel that brings the mighty words—"YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN." Not long ago the city of Minneapolis gave a public welcome to John Calhahan, the chaplain of the Tombs Prison in New York. Thirty years ago, the same city of Minneapolis gave this

John Callahan orders to leave the city because he was an undesirable citizen. Should the church quit? Is there another institution that can take a man like this John Callahan and make of him what he is, save the Gospel through the administration of the church? The church is the active force of the Kingdom of God.

Shall the church quit? Many folks would lead us to think they believe it should. A lady wrote her pastor. Her letter was published in the Woman's Home Companion. There may be others who feel the same as she did about it. I will give you an excerpt of her letter and the pastor's reply.

"A minister feels that a business man ought to be able to give a part of one day in seven to the church, but whereas you can do as you please the other six days, Sunday is the only day Jack can wear his golf trousers, and fool about with little odd jobs for himself and me. If we get to church, Sunday morning is almost as hurried as any other day. If we stay at home, we have dinner at twelve, the children included, then we rest while they do, and the day is easy and quiet."

The minister in reply shows why a business man owes the church his presence (1) He in a large measure owes it the pleasantness of his life. (2) He owes it the security of his property and his business. (3) He owes it the ethical standards upon which his life rests.

This Sunday is essentially a Christian day. It is essentially a day of worship and incidentally a day of rest. Without the vigilance of the church it would not be long before the wage earner of America would lose the day entirely. Without the church emphasis upon the spiritual significance of the day there would be no Sunday.

Briefly in conclusion, let me say that many are unthinkingly or indifferently adding to the burden of the church. If this noble institution was to be destroyed or taken from us there is nothing that can take its place. It is made up of men and women. Many are seeking development. Yet it labors for a perfect ideal. Perhaps the critics fail because they view it from the outside. A tourist starting on a voyage to Europe was advised by a friend to visit one of the grand old cathedrals and see the beautiful windows. He went to see it, and as he viewed it from the outside, it was disappointing. It was dark, opaque, with its figures dimmed and blurred. He said, "How poor my friend's taste of art has been." But he entered the massive building. Then the glory was revealed. It was as if a thousand rainbows were thrown upon its nave, transept and altars. Its tall and hurling figures were there—angels, martyrs, and saints, and above it all the glory of Christ spreading his hands in holy benediction. Why the difference—he had viewed it from the inside. So with the defects within the church, they seem many from the outside because of an imperfect vision. We must enter in to see the beauty and glory.

Shall the church quit? It cannot quit, for Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify it. So we may lift our hearts and hymn the words of the poet:

"Oh where are kings and empires now,
Of old that went and came?
But Lord thy church is praying yet,
A thousand years the same.

"Unshaken as the eternal hills,
Immovable she stands,
A mountain that shall fill the earth,
A house not made with hands."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Perfect Lover

By Rev. William Pierson Merrill

(Selected and Publication Requested by Dr. J. L. Gillin)

The story of the Perfect Lover lies concealed in a little book that forms part of the best-known collection of literature from the ancient world. That it lies concealed is due in part to the fact that few read the book, and more to the fact that of those who read it few can find the story or indeed any coherent lines of thought at all, in its mass of vivid but confused material.

Not many read more than favored bits of the Bible. George Bernard Shaw recently remarked that in England nobody believes the Bible but everybody reads it; whereas in America everybody believes the Bible but nobody reads it,—a statement to be taken at considerable discount, but not wholly devoid of truth. Even the most fundamental of fundamentalists, strongly as he may insist that he believes the Bible to be the inspired Word of God "from cover to cover", leaves large parts between the covers almost or quite untouched. It is safe to assume that he has never read the book of Hosea, save in course of "reading the Bible through." The most intelligent and the most religious of us might be surprised to learn that when we talk of "sowing the wind, and reaping the whirlwind", or of "half-baked" people or proposals, or say, "Like priest, like people", we are using quotations from this poetic genius of twenty-five centuries ago. We scarcely realize how much of the richness of Christian teaching lies germinant in the words of this prophecy. . . .

About the middle of the eighth century before Christ, a young man was living in one of the towns of the land we call Palestine. Tiny as the country was, it had split into two kingdoms. He was a citizen of the Northern Kingdom, where thought and practice were freer, and religion at once less conventional and less pure, than in the Southern Kingdom. He was a youth of rare charm. Of medium height, he was perfectly formed, a joy to the eyes. His features were delicate and regular, his face mobile, full of ever-changing expression. A Greek sculptor, seeing him, would have eagerly besought him to pose for a statue of Apollo. The greatest of our American portrait painters has given us a wonderful portrait of this man, a product of fancy which we instinctively feel to be true to fact. Sargent's portrait shows us the man later, touched, saddened, yet uplifted, by bitter sorrow. It must have been a joy to see him in unclouded youth, gay, joyous, radiant. Many a maiden glanced at him; some did more than glance. But he had come to his early twenties heart-whole, so much in love with all beauty, in nature and in human nature, that his rich affections centered nowhere as yet. Moreover he is perhaps the first man of whom we have record, who clearly felt that love ought to lie at the basis of marriage.

One day, business or pleasure, something, took him northward to the vicinity of Jezreel, not so much a town as a summer garden of the king and the court, a place of beautiful palaces and villas, gardens and groves. He had often been there and he loved the place. But this time he heeded not the ivory palaces or lovely gardens. For, as he walked along a lonely lane, suddenly he saw a maiden at sight of whom his heart seemed to stand still and then to leap wildly. She was so beautiful, the loveliest woman he had ever seen. Dark, her color a rich olive touched with delicate red; her hair black but a vivid, not a dull black; her long lashes veiling lustrous eyes; her form and figure exquisite in rounded curves; she was such a woman as he had seen only in dreams. Unconscious of what he was doing he stared at the charming vision as gracefully she bent over her flowers.

Suddenly she turned, saw him staring, transfixed; and the color crept into her face as she stood startled. Instantly he was at her feet craving pardon for the rudeness of his stare, pleading as only a poet could his helplessness in the face of the vision that had broken upon him. His charm captivated her, as her beauty had caught him. Soon they were married. Their love was an exquisite idyll for a few years. Passion in her leaped to meet ardor in him. Sometimes the hot vehemence of her passionate love disturbed and disquieted him. But her beauty was his unfailing delight; and she loved to be loved.

Children came. Their first, a boy, they named Jezreel, partly in memory of the place near which they met, partly in recognition of the meaning of the name, "God's Sowing." He was dark, sturdy, serious. Then came a girl, golden-haired, laughing-eyed, merry. They named her Ruhamah, a name that means "Mercy" or "Kindness", as we might name a winsome babe "Grace", or as our fathers might have given her the quaint name "Mercy" or "Charity." Then came a third child, whom they called Ammi, meaning "my people", "my kin", perhaps we might render it "my own." The very names are a proof of the love and joy and contentment in the home during those first happy years.

After a time however a little cloud appeared, which grew bigger and darker. Gomer, Hosea's lovely wife, was "very religious." More and more she frequented the High Places, where worship was offered. It is well-nigh impossible for us of today to realize what then passed for religion. In with the worship of Jehovah was mingled much of the debased and debasing religion of the land. Sensuality and sacrifice strangely joined. Incredible as it seems today, prostitution was a recognized part of religion, with a certain sacredness of its own. While such influences flourished, immorality was rampant, and chastity was lightly esteemed. The buoyant, trustful nature of the poet was for long unsuspecting of the course his beautiful wife was pursuing. Yet at last even he began to notice what others had seen, the fatal fascination which all this appeal to sense exercised upon the hot, passionate nature of his wife. He began to be afraid, and deeply troubled.

At last close together came two events which changed the whole course of his life. One of them was a new vision of God, caught from a strange visitor, from the Southern Kingdom, who spoke rapt words of fiery judgment in the public square at Bethel. It was at a festival. The king, honored, beloved by his people, for his long, firm, prosperous reign, had come to the city with his court. The people thronged the streets and squares. One day, with startling unexpectedness, an uncouth figure appeared, and spoke as only a messenger from God could speak. "God is above all just and holy. Would you see him? Look at the stars. Would you serve him? Be just and pure. His 'chosen' nation is not Israel necessarily, but simply the nation that does his Righteous will, whether Egypt, or Philista, or Israel. The sacrifices he desires are acts of social justice and personal honesty. 'I hate your feasts; let justice roll down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream.'" Revolutionary words! . . . Of all who heard, none gave such instant and full heed as the sensitive poetic soul of Hosea. God and life were clear to him in a flash. Religion took on new meaning and glory. Yet his soul, deeper, more sensitive than that of the herdsman Amos, saw at once that the message of that man of God stopped short of the truth. "God is more than just", he said to himself; "God is loving." His whole soul seemed to go out and up in a passion of joy at the newfound truth.

But almost simultaneously came the other event, the ruin of his home, the breaking of his heart, through the desertion of home and heart, of husband and children, by his wife, under the irresistible power of the craving for sexual excitement. His love, so satisfying at first, had grown cloying to her, too sweet. She craved excitement, something fierce, even bitter, in her experience of love. So, hot-headed, and reckless she flung away. He was utterly powerless to hold her. He sat among the ashes of his home which had been so fair and bitterly felt that love and life were over for him. Even the names of his children took on a new and sinister meaning. Jezreel, once recalling happy memories of the radiant joy of their lovers' meeting, now brought visions of the curse that must rest on king and court, responsible for maintaining this masquerade of uncleanness in the guise of piety. Ruhamah became Lo-Ruhamah, "No pity", as if "Grace" were changed to "Graceless." Little Ammi—could he call him "my own", while the dreadful doubt haunted him, "Is he really my own? Can I be sure he is my child?"

It was a ruined, desolate home. It was taken for granted by all his friends and neighbors that he would divorce the woman who had played him false. Yet something kept him from the act. Once a neighbor, himself none too scrupulous in his conduct, hinted at this probable outcome, with some bitter words of contempt for the woman. Hosea's eyes flashed as he answered, "How can we punish the women for playing the harlot, when the men themselves go with harlots, and make nothing of it?" "Primitive" we call that day and its standards; "Enlightened" we call our own. How many men, in this enlightened age, have come to the single standard of sex morality, as this man had, twenty-five centuries ago, so that, in his mind, the unchaste man was adjudged no less guilty than the unchaste woman?

The weeks dragged their weary way. Often he would climb to the housetop and spend the whole night there in the silence; and a certain quiet, that was almost peace, came to him at times as he meditated on the wonderful new vision of a holy and loving God, which his personal sorrows sometimes drove from his mind, and at other times intensified. On one memorable night, as he looked up at the stars, and thought of God, a great truth seized and shook his soul so sharply and strongly that it was almost like a physical pain. He saw God as the flouted, deserted, forsaken lover of men. "What after all has my wife done to me," he asked himself, "that we have not done to God? We have made light of his love, gone after coarser, grosser satisfactions. We are always playing the harlot toward him. And yet he loves us. I know he does."

In the early morning hours of that crucial night, he crept down from the housetop with two eternal truths in his soul. Commonplaces they may seem to us; to him they were startlingly new. One of them was that God's love is a love that will not let us go, that nothing can break it or end it. The other was that we must be as God is; our love must be like his; it was the truth a later teacher set in the beautiful words, "If God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." It came to him in a form still more concrete: ought to love my wife, in all her sin and shame, as God loves us in our sin and shame." He thought of the song he had loved to sing, the song his wife had loved to hear, in the dear dead days:

"Set me as a seal upon thy heart,
For love is stronger than death;
Many waters cannot quench love."

"No," he murmured, under the power of the new realization, "not even foul waters, not even the death of honor, can quench true love."

But there was nothing he could do except to wait, with a faint hope. Yet the cloud was lifted slightly. The children felt it. He was quieter, gentler, cared more to be with them.

Weeks slipped into months, months into a year and more. Then news came to him of Gomer. She had run down the gamut of illicit love until she struck the lowest note. Now she was a slave, either a slave of the shrine to which she had given herself, or a slave of some individual owner, we know not which; but a slave, to be used or abused at the whim of the one who had bought her.

Then Hosea went to her. Rather he went to her owner. He did not disclose his relationship, but presented himself as a near relative who wished to redeem the woman from slavery. There was a strong social sentiment against holding Hebrews in bondage, and the matter was quickly arranged. Vividly the poet recalls the exact price, so petty, so sordid, so utterly different from that which he gave to win her at the first:—Fifteen pieces of silver, and a homer of barley, and a half homer of barley." She was willing enough to come with him, though she knew not what he wanted of her. He looked at her with pitiful eyes. Yet he could not make light of all that lay between them. Justice and holiness had their rights, and love must fit in with them, to be true and lasting.

He left her in a little house, where there was some one to care for her. Frequently he stopped there for a moment. Always she looked at him with a question in her gaze, at first sullenly, then fearfully, more quietly as the days went on.

One day as he turned to leave her, she suddenly said, "Oh, I long—" Then she stopped. He said, "I know; to see the children." She began to weep softly, and nodded her bowed head. He looked at her searchingly. Surely she had come far since he had found her sunk in slavery. Might it not be time for a further step? Sitting beside her, he unfolded a plan. She was to come home; not to be his wife except in name; but to be a mother to the children; he and she to pledge to each other only an outward faithfulness. She went along with him, scarcely knowing whether to be glad or sorry. As they drew near the house, she fell to trembling violently. He laid his hand upon her arm, and quietly told her how necessary it was that she should control herself, so that the children should know only that she had come home again. Then he opened the door of the room where the children were, and saying simply, "Your mother is here," went out again. "They will make their own plea for me," he said to himself. Ere many days, she was deep in the affections of the children. Little Ammi ran to her at once. Rahumah came almost as quickly. The boy held aloof for a while, but gradually yielded to her charm; for she was charming. They had always dearly loved her, and she had been a loving mother. The broken threads were soon knit up, and the blessed companionship of little children began its healing work. As the days went by, and Hosea saw her slowly regaining something of her old spirit, even something of her natural gaiety and charm, he was torn with conflicting emotions. She was so shallow, so light; could he trust her, as he longed to do? It was only with the children that she dropped back into the old ways, occasionally laughing and singing with them. In his presence, she was always constrained, uncertain, almost fearful. What was she herself but a poor, dear, foolish, lovely child? he asked himself.

Always since he had brought her back from slavery, she had called him, "My Master", "Baali", the name commonly used by servants in addressing their masters, and often by wives in speaking to their husbands. It was a hateful name to him; the very word suggested the Baal-worship which he loathed. Yet he found it hard at first to suggest another name in place of it. At last one day, he called her to him, and said, "You must not call me 'Baali.' I would not have the name of Baal on your lips." She looked straight at him and asked, "But what then shall I call you?" His heart was in his voice as he answered, "Call me 'Ishi.'" It was the home name for one's husband, "my man." The blood surged into her face, tears came to her eyes, she clasped her hands tightly, and breathed, "Oh, may I? You will let me?"

The day following he said to her, "I want you to leave the children for a day or two, and come with me." She asked no questions, though surprise and questioning and a certain fearfulness were in her eyes. They started northward, riding on asses, stopping at inns along the road, slowly making their way, she knew not whither, until on the third day she stopped and looked at him with a shock of surprise. All the color had left her face, she trembled as if to fall. For they were at her old home, near the spot where they had first met. He said nothing, but tied the asses, and then walked with her toward a wide-spreading tree. She moved as in a trance, until they came to the very spot under the tree where they had plighted their troth. He sat down, and beckoned to her to sit by him. But she broke into wild sobs, and flung herself at his feet, crying out for pardon, uttering words of self-condemnation and self-loathing, wildly declaring that she was utterly unworthy of him, and did not want to live. When the paroxysm had passed, and her sobbing was less intense, gently he drew her up beside him, and then, to use his own simple, beautiful phrase, "talked to her heart", pleading with her that, so far as it could be done, they should drop out from their life all the memory of those dreadful months of sin and suffering, and should once more love and trust each other. She could scarcely believe it; such love was unknown. But like a tired child, she rested in the love she could neither doubt nor understand.

So they went back. And so out of the ruins of their once fair and beautiful home, the man and woman built up a little simple shelter for their spirits, where love came to abide, and where they found much comfort, and even some joy, as the years went on.

He built something more out of the ruins of his life. He built a little shrine, wherein men might find a God they had hardly dreamed of before, a God of infinitely tender love, a love that would not let them go, that would abide faithful though they denied him, a God Who would give himself to

SONGS IN PRISON—Acts 16:22-28.

A believer free from care
May in chains or dungeon sing,
If the Lord be with him there,
And be happier than a king.
Paul and Silas thus confined,
Though their backs were torn by whips,
Yet possessing peace of mind,
Sung him praise with joyful lips.
—John Newton's "Olney Hymns."

TUESDAY

THE SUPREME WORTH OF CHRIST—Phil. 3:7-11.

Better a child in God's great house
Than the king of all the earth.
—George Macdonald.

WEDNESDAY

THE POWER OF A NAME—Acts 3:6-16.

Jesus, the name pronounced by faith
Is full of wonder-working power;
It conquers Satan, sin and death,
And cheers in trouble's darkest hour;
But they who are not born again
Know nothing of it but the sound;
They do not take his name in vain
When most their zeal and pains abound.
—John Newton's "Olney Hymns."

THURSDAY

THE FINAL TEST—Matt. 25:41-46.

Thou didst it not unto the least of these,
And in them hast not done it unto me.
Thou wast as a prince rich and at ease—
Now sit in dust and howl for poverty.
—Christina G. Rossetti.

FRIDAY

JESUS THE WAY—John 14:2-11.

"Thou art the Way, the Truth, the Life;
Grant us that Way to know,
That Truth to keep, that Life to win,
Whose joys eternal flow."

SATURDAY

SURRENDERED—Luke 22:41-46.

Our wills are ours, we know not how,
Our wills are ours to make them thine.

Let all thy converse be sincere,
Thy conscience as the noonday clear.
—George Eliot.

the uttermost to redeem them from slavery and lead them out of sin back to fellowship with him. Hosea saw in dim outline the God Jesus knew and made known to men. He saw God so clearly because he was pure in heart, and loved to do the uttermost.

But that, though it is his greatest claim to honor and reverence, is not our concern just now. What we would do is to watch this man's way with his wayward wife, see the love that would not give up, that would bear all things, endure all things, hope all things, and never fail; and ask: Where is there another in all history who deserves as this man does, to bear the title of the Perfect Lover?

Developing Your Talents

By A. H. Williams

OUR SCRIPTURE

For the Kingdom of Heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability: and straightway took his journey. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents. And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two. But he that received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money. After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them. And so he that hath received five talents, came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents; behold, I have gained beside them five talents more. His Lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. He also that had two talents, came, and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents; behold I have gained two other talents beside them. His lord said unto him, Well done thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, enter thou into the joy of thy lord. Then he which had received the one talent, came, and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not straved: And I was afraid, and went, and hid thy talent in the earth; lo, there thou hast that is thine. His lord answered, and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knowest that I reap where I sow not, and gather where I have not straved: Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming, I should have received mine own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance, but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath (Matthew 25:14-31). Redeeming the time because the days are evil. (Ephesians 5:16).

OUR MEDITATION

The Bible, as we all know, is a text-book on stewardship. A person cannot read his Bible intelligently without receiving the impetus towards right standards of living and serving. As God led his people toward higher ideals, he gradually led them out into generous giving of themselves. The early Christians put us to shame by their generous service.

The Parable of the talents is Jesus' greatest teaching on stewardship. Every time we read this parable we find something new. If we have the courage to practice this teaching in our life we will not fall far short of being a real Christian.

The key to this wonderful parable is this, "To each according to his personal ability." If we miss this, we are apt to think that there is an element of injustice in that the Master did not give each the same opportunity.

Each was given just as much as he was capable of handling and each was held accountable for that only.

Responsibility is always gauged by ability. What ever response Jesus expects us to make to his demands, comes from the ability he alone knows we possess; otherwise, he would not be dealing fairly with us. Before he asks us to do a task for him, he knows the extent of our ability and what we are capable of doing. He also tells and furthermore expects us to test ourselves and find out our capacity.

The word "straightway" introduces the quick action which got results for the first two servants. They didn't tarry and idle the hours away. We find that nothing is gained by putting a task off. If we delay the beginning, oftentimes we are never able to overcome the handicap, no matter how hard we work.

The same commendation was given the man who turned in four talents as the man who turned in the ten. It was not the size of the return as much as the proper use of the principal that pleased the master. Each man made double his talent by putting it to use. So we find that faithfulness in small things gives us courage to attempt larger things the next time.

Next place, let us consider for a moment the man who had but one talent and merely did nothing. He was a failure not because he did not have anything to work with but because he did not work. He was frightened for he knew he was responsible for the one talent given him. So we find the supreme tragedy in life is not to make use of the ability one has until it has become useless.

There is enough time given to us in which to do our work. If the servants had not enough time to get results, that would have been a just cause for complaint. He gave them the opportunity, the full responsibility, and enough time in which to do the task.

So it is with life, God has given each of us talents, and enough time to use them, whether we use them justly, or unjustly. Let us as Christians find out what our talent is, and by the grace of God use it for the advancement of this Kingdom and the fulfilling of his promise.

OUR PRAYER

Almighty God, we thank thee for the abilities that thou hast given to each one of us, and for the many opportunities involved in them. May we like the servant with the five talents use them for the spread of thy Kingdom on earth. Help us, Heavenly Father, that as we each one find our talents, we may develop them by thy help and that we may measure up to thy expectations, in every service we render unto thee. May we be faithful stewards. In thy name, we pray. Amen.

TRUE RELIGION IN EDUCATION

The most important thing to have in view in this whole matter of gaining an education is, that the whole being shall be educated in the proper way, and that a true and noble character shall be secured. This is the end of an education. We cannot dissect an individual and say that we will train the intellect and that we have no concern with any other department. We must train the whole individual. We must seek the welfare of the whole being.

To attain the best ends we are sure that, in the matter of an education, as in all else, we are to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. If this be put first and gained, all else that is desirable will also be gained. To a thoroughly Christian man or woman, who secures the intellectual and moral and spiritual training that is guaranteed in our religious colleges, all things are possible in after life. It is from lack of character that most people fail that make a failure of life. They who are genuinely Christian and upright succeed in every large and full and real meaning of the word.—The Expositor.

The Wilderness Training of Moses

It must have been a severe wrench to the court-bred Moses to be forced into such a life as that of a nomad shepherd in the unsettled peninsula of Arabia. Though a warrior he could not have had the experience of wandering alone through vast, uninhabited spaces, fearing danger, even when not seeing it. His character had not changed, for he responded immediately to the need for defence of the weak against the strong. But this time the incident was to his advantage; it gave him a home, an occupation which assured his support, and a family. His occupation, besides assuring him necessary support, gave him long hours for meditation. He must have had much lonely communion with God; he must have thought much of his own nature, and little by little mastered the natural fire which had been the cause of his exile, till he became renowned for his "meekness." His character became strengthened, fixed in good, and he became master of himself, trained in spiritual forces, and ready for his great work of leading and training a nation.

In addition to these spiritual and mental changes, there were other great advantages from this wilderness experience. He had time to think over every problem to be solved in the organization of a people, and to solve them. His wanderings would make him acquainted with every valley, plain, gorge, hill and mountain of the whole region; with its population; with every spring and well, and with all the resources of every kind offered by any spot; an education of supreme importance towards fitting him to guide his race, when rescued from Egypt. The life, too, which he led was happily adapted to work with him that hardihood of constitution and character of which he would afterward stand so much in need, and of which the sequel of his story affords so many striking instances.

Every tie with Egypt, every embarrassment of his official position, in the way of perfect sympathy with and aid to the Hebrews, was broken. However much his heart had been theirs while he was living amid the splendors of the palace at Tanis, yet "his flight must have first set him free from an embarrassing position, and left him wholly at their service."—Illustrated Quarterly.

Training the People

"During the years that Moses had spent in the wilderness the children of Israel had also been undergoing a divine discipline. They needed to be prepared for deliverance as much as Moses needed to be trained as a deliverer." More emphatically than ever they sighed and cried by reason of their bondage. And God heard their groaning and God remembered his covenant with Abraham.

The Call of God

"God had to do an unusual thing to get Moses' attention and help in his plan. He has always had a hard time to get men to listen to his voice so that he can unfold his plans. If something unusual comes to you it is probably God trying to attract your attention. He has a plan to tell you about. He wants your help."—S. D. Gordon.

Moses needed only to look back upon past history to know the God who was calling him. These great and honored men had obeyed God, —shall the son do less? God had guided them, helped them, made them successful. He had given them great and precious promises. He was their Creator, all powerful. Should not Moses trust such a God? The God of his fathers was now fulfilling those promises. He was carrying out the plans he began with them.

It is a wonderful help for any one to see and study God's dealings in the past. They show his feelings now, the principles according to which he is working today, the progress of the plans he has been working during the ages.

God's call never comes to two men in the same way.

"Not always as the whirlwind's rush

On Horeb's mount of fear,

Not always as the burning bush

To Midian's shepherd seer,—

"Not always thus, with outward sign
Of fire or voice from Heaven,
The message of a truth divine,
The call of God is given!"—Whittier.

We must look for God's call in the abilities he gives us, the circumstances in which he places us, the opportunities he opens before us, the advice of wise friends, and the quiet promptings of conscience.

Every life that faithfully responds to God's call is a great life in his eyes, whether it is called to lead a nation or to teach a Sunday school class, or to help take care of little children at home. The greatness is in the spirit, not the deed.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Moses' Hesitancy

Moses may have known that Rameses II had been succeeded by his son, Merneptah, a much weaker ruler; but he understood thoroughly the mighty power of Egypt, and, conscious of his own significance, it is small wonder that he began to bring forward objections to God's amazing proposal. He, a poor shepherd, aged and alone, unto Pharaoh, the mightiest monarch on earth! God often calls his children to such gigantic tasks. As Luther, who himself responded to such a summons, wrote: "If Moses had insisted on knowing the end, and how he was to escape the hosts of Pharaoh, Israel would probably have been in Egypt to this day."

The Source of Help

God assures Moses that he is not unfit for the great task that is before him since he is not to go in his own strength but in the power and wisdom of the Almighty. The Divine Presence will be his continually: "Certainly I will be with thee." "It is a matter of taking the right side of a great reform? If so, take it, and count on him. Is it a matter of daily trial and of persistence under difficulties? Millions have found him equal to the demand. It is a matter of facing great

Sunday School News

Field Secretary Stuckey has just returned from his tour through West Virginia, Virginia and Maryland. He reports here, as elsewhere in his work among the churches, a hearty reception and a deepening interest in church school work.

Book Service

The latter is evidenced by the increasing number of book orders. The workers appear eager for helps in the work. Books represent tools for the worker. For that reason we have made the addition of books to the library one point in the Standard of Excellence. A list of usable books will be found in the Hand Book.

Statistical Reports

Without due attention to this matter your statistical report may appear incomplete. A blank has been mailed to each school superintendent. McLouth, Kansas, was the first to make a return; Goshen, Indiana was second.

The prompt response will help to facilitate our task of tabulation. Other superintendents may help us by following the good example of these schools.

The Way of Life

In the recent Retreat of Ohio Ministers those assembled gave consideration to the teaching of distinctive Brethren doctrines. Among other suggestions the point was made that they would do well to use the available material. In this connection reference was made to our booklet entitled "The Way of Life." Since Brother R. D. Barnard has placed an order for his work at Mansfield. And Brother O. C. Starn has ordered two dozen copies for use in his Christian Endeavor meeting on Sunday evening. There may be a hint as to how to vitalize the young people's meeting during the summer.

Christian Endeavor Publicity

How much publicity do you give your C. E.? Were there any posters made this year? A poster in the Bible school in the morning will increase the attendance at Christian Endeavor that night. There are a number of clever ways of making posters for a meeting. Put a "write-up" in your local paper often. Good, clean, sane publicity is needed by Christian organizations. We do not need the flashy and sensational, but enough of the sane to interest folks in what we are doing. Give your work publicity this year.

If I Were a Pastor

By Russel Sewall

Observations and Notions of a Layman

If I were a pastor, I should work for the present and the past of the church, the middle-aged folks and the old folks; but I should put in my very best lies for the future of the church, that is, the boys and girls.

If I were a pastor, I should do just as little myself as I could possibly do, and get others to do just as much as they could possibly be persuaded to do, and I should know that in setting some one else to work I was doing twice as much as if I did the thing myself—even though I might do it twice as well. Do you get the arithmetic of that?

If I were a pastor, I should not let any one dictate to me the subjects of my sermons except the tempted and weary and sick and perplexed of my church; I should get my subjects from them—and they would be good and plenty.

If I were a pastor, I should not worry about the new theology, but I should pin my faith to the old gospel, and I should get all of my isms out of the old Book.

If I were a pastor, I should not let people praise my sermons, for I should get ahead of them with inquiries about their folks and their work.

If I were a pastor, I should not seek novelty so much as virility; I should much prefer strengthening an old and well-tried organization to uprooting it and putting in a new and untried one.

If I were a pastor, I should not make a fetish of pastoral calls, but I should heed instantly all the calls for pastoral helpfulness. And those calls should not need a megaphone.

If I were a pastor, I should not try to be a Beecher or a Spurgeon or a Talmage, or any one else, but just myself. That was the aim of Beecher and Spurgeon and Talmage.

If I were a pastor, I should let no one take my place in the Sunday school, but I should be ready to take any class as a substitute teacher, from the kindergarten to the adults.

If I were a pastor I should count myself a failure if any one—child or grown-up—was afraid to speak to me about his or her private problems, and I should find in these personal conversations the proof of my pastorate.

If I were a pastor, I should get so much exercise running around the parish that I should not need golf, and so much fun out of the endlessly varying tasks of my calling that I should not need the theatre.

If I were a pastor, I would learn about carpentry from the carpenters, about farming from the farmers, about bread-making from the cooks, about teaching from the school-teachers, and about railroading from the section hands. There is nothing that helps most

What We Learn from the Out-of-Doors. Psalm 19:1-6

Once upon a time there was a little girl named Pansy. This little girl had dark eyes and dark hair and when her mother dressed her in some bright color she seemed very much like a happy, smiling pansy. Pansy's mother's name was Violet and her name was very well fitted to her, too, for she was tall and slender and had deep blue eyes. Sometimes the mother would dress herself in a violet hued dress and hat and would dress Pansy in yellow, just the right shade for a little pansy and then they would have such good times playing that they were really little flowers and lived in a beautiful flower garden with many other flowers.

One year mother Violet's health was not very good and the doctor decreed that she must spend most of her time out-of-doors. Just as soon as that happened Pansy and mother Violet decided that they would imagine themselves to be flowers for a whole year and during that time they would make friends with all the other flowers and the flowers' friends, the trees and grass and all the animals. It was March when Violet and little Pansy began making friends with Mother Nature and all her children. One of the first days, Pansy said, "I would like to go and visit that little brooklet that we used to pass last summer when we drove through the country, so they hiked out to the little brooklet. When they got there, Pansy was quite surprised, for instead of the brook being quite tiny and just murmuring along as it did the summer before, it was now a wide stream and it went rumbling along and chattering quite loudly. Mother Violet said, "Let's spread out our big oil spread and put our nice warm blanket over it and sit down on the bank and see what this stream is saying. It seems to be talking so loud." Pansy and Violet sat very quiet for quite a little while, then Violet said, "Did you hear what the stream said just then? It seemed to me that it was saying, "Just look how big and powerful I am. Last summer I was so little that you thought that I did not amount to much but I have surprised you. But, just you wait and your chance will come, too. We can not do big things all the time but if we just wait and use all our chances to do things, the time will come when we can be quite mighty." So, Violet and Pansy listened to the brook for awhile, then they trudged home, feeling very happy because they had talked to the brook and it had taught them a lesson.

Soon it was April, and Violet and Pansy had to dress very carefully so that they would be ready whenever an April shower came along. They loved the April showers. One day, Pansy said, "Just think, Mother Violet, how much these nice showers help our sister violets and our sister pansies. If it were not for these little drops of water our sisters would perish of thirst." That speech made mother Violet feel very good for she thought that it showed her little daughter was beginning to talk to Mother Nature and get her messages.

In May, all the happiness of spring flooded the hearts of these two wandering flowers. Each day they received more and more messages. At the end of the month, Violet said, "Do you know little Pansy that there is one message that we have heard more than any other, this month. This is the message: "I like to do my share in making the world beautiful and happy; now won't you help me by doing your part, too?" My sister Violets have been singing that in a chorus to us, haven't they? And the little spring beauties have told it each day as we passed. Then, the bluebells have rung the same message as they brightened the hillside with their smile. Each blade of grass and each dear little leaf as it showed its face told the same message, and it showed its face told the same message, so surely everyone ought to listen to them and then what a happy world we would have to live in."

Throughout the rest of the months of the year Violet and Pansy visited and talked with Mother Nature and her children and the lessons that they learned were very wonderful and very helpful but I haven't room to tell you about them here, so you will just have to make friends with your out-of-door neighbors and see if you can hear the messages yourselves.

Tales of Tribal Customs. No. IV

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

"Home, Sweet Home"

A group of men sat in a palaver house. They were tall men with the prominent cheek bones of the Nile Negro. If one were to observe them closely one would notice their slightly protruding chin and long, thin, but poorly developed legs. Yet they were not unattractive in appearance for even the dullest looking of them had large, luminous black eyes. One would notice, too, that when smiling or laughing these luminous eyes became the central features of not unhandsome faces.

They were talking rapidly and with concentration in subdued tones. Nivin seemed to be the principal speaker. His broad head, prominent brows, well shaped nose and chin and the entire absence of flatness in his features showed him to be of Hametic or Arabic admixture, although he bore the Nilotic name of Nivin, meaning white ants.

"Yes," he was saying, "the missionary spoke of strange things. Of course we have a great Spirit but our Jok is hardly the God of whom he spoke. In fact, we know little about him except that he is, and can if he will, avert evil." "Yes," replied Nyamere, his brother, "but we must be offering him constant propitiations. How many are the roosters that we kill and eat not, how many are the scape-goats that we release into the wilderness in order that he may be pleased and propitiated." Nyamere was much like his brother in appearance. Although not twins they were nearly of an age and bore a striking resemblance to each other. Otidi (brass) now spoke. "But we cannot believe what the missionary says," he added. "Everyone knows we must worship our ancestors. Our fetish temples, where we put food and water for the spirits of our dead, we cannot do away with them. A younger man now spoke abruptly. His name was Okis (the bee), "But the dead do not eat that food," he said. "How many times it rots in the fetish temple! Look now if you will." And rising he went out from the palaver house in his abrupt manner. The other men watched him, as he strode rapidly across the courtyard, past the open blacksmith's shop and in a moment was kneeling before a small grass hut, not much larger than a chicken coop. The hut had a conical roof placed upon a circle of upright sticks. Long loops of string were tied to and hung down from the slightly projecting rafters. Here and there, too, pieces of grass seemed to be hanging from the thatch of the roof in a most unintentional manner. It really was however the regulation way of thatching a fetish temple. Okis stooped down and with an unusual daring drew out from the hut through the narrow aperture which formed its only door some sorghum heads and several sweet potatoes. Taking them in his hands, he turned and showed them to the waiting group in the palaver house. But receiving no encouraging word or gesture, he turned, again carefully replacing them. After returning to the palaver house he seated himself again and turning to Nivin, whom the others seemed to recognize as their leader, he said, "Why does not the spirit of my grandfather eat his food?" "I do not know," responded Nivin frankly, "but it may be that the spirit of your grandfather eats the spirit of the food." Okis made a gesture of impatience, but said no more. They had heard the gospel for the first time at the mission station. All of them were impressed, but none so much as Okis.

While the men were thus absorbed in conversation in the palaver house, the women were busy in their gardens. Ayei (canoe) and Atua (country) were the only matrons. Ayei was an old woman, formidable and repulsive in appearance. Her nose was very flat at the base, and the space between the eyebrows was covered with shaggy wool. The whole appearance of her face was flattened and ugly. And yet, although she was hideous, one could see little of beauty in her younger companions, for amongst most Nilotic tribes, the women are far uglier than the men. To add to her natural ugliness a pattern had been made upon her brow by a series of keloid tumors, the formation of which upon the negro skin follows a cut as naturally as does a scar with the lighter colored races. Atua was an Acholi woman. Her temples and cheeks were ornamented with cicatrices in a wavy fashion. Long scrolls of artistic design ornamented her body, especially the thighs. Her ears were pierced, and a polished quartz pencil was inserted in her upper lip. She was one of Nivin's younger wives. Ayei, who was Nivin's mother, showed less of the Arabic admixture than he. The hideous stone pencils passing through both lips made her appearance additionally repulsive. She and Atua had no difficulty in communicating one with another, for the Acholi and Aluru have languages closely related. They two were talking of the good news which had recently come to their village, and which Nivin had permitted his wife and mother to hear. For the African woman grasps but slowly the idea that she has a mind with which she may think, or a soul for whom Christ died. As missionaries, we may talk to them of the sheep, the goats, or the chickens and they perfectly understand, but when the gospel is broached, the woman responds quickly, "Call my husband or my brother that he may interpret for me. I do not understand such things." But Ayei and Atua had at last heard the gospel message and with Nivin's assistance had understood. Around Ayei and Atua clustered the young girls, of whom we will mention two, Akuc, (honey) was not well named. She was neither sweet nor attractive, not nearly so much so as Ufuny (heel) whose naturally sweet and joyous disposition made her a general favorite.

The women and girls, not so much from inclination as from necessity, were industrious agriculturists and their gardens contained a wide variety of vegetables. The red and white sweet potato, and the peanut, are widely cultivated, as well as several kinds of beans and a small variety of peas. Added to this, the care of the various grains, including two varieties of Kaffir corn, sesame and millet, and of their various species of Indian corn, pumpkins and edible gourds,—weigh heavily upon them. Then the tobacco fields must be cultivated and the tobacco dried and mixed with cow-dung to be smoked in their long-stemmed pipes. Africa is an unfruitful land without cultivation and through their scattered forests of Aluru land, one finds few wild fruits. An occasional sour grape can be gathered from the wild grape vine, but for the most part Aluru land depends for all her sustenance, like the rest of dark Africa on her women.

There was unusual interest in their conversation. Yet Ayei and Atua spoke vaguely and without their comprehending to the girls of the gospel whose meaning had been so recently explained to them.

The hunting season would soon be over and our friends of the palaver house were anxious to have one more feast of meat.

Hunting is an art to the savage African. An art as elaborate and scientific as ever the arena was to the Roman gladiator. So Nivin, Nyamere, Otidi and Okis, after offering those sacrifices to Jok and the spirits which they felt to be necessary in order to be successful joined a number of their friends and with dogs and nets commenced the dangerous hunt. Together they surrounded a large semi-circular area with a succession of their nets each about twenty yards long. Then Nivin and his brother with Otidi and Okis's father Oeonga (the knee) took their stations outside the net, each with a spear in his hand. Okis and a number of others were to play their part by setting fire to the grass, thus driving the hunted animals into the enclosure, where rushing against the hunting nets they were speared to death by the waiting men outside. The men were at a climax of excitement when after spearing several smaller animals a large buffalo rushed into the enclosure and against the net at the very point which was guarded by Oeonga the father of Okis. He thrust forth his spear quickly, but inflicted too slight a wound. The enraged animal, trampling down the net, gored the man with furious intensity. One horn pierced the back, entering the lung. Another inflicted a severe scalp wound. And yet again the infuriated animal gored his prey, this time near the heart. But the animal did not escape the spears of the other hunters. Once assured of its death they turned their attention to the wounded man. He still lived. Rudely but speedily, Oeonga, still conscious was carried to the mission station where he received the ministrations of the busy medical worker. Oeonga, too, had heard the gospel, but having several wives had hesitated to accept it. Now, during the several days that he lingered, he heard again and again the story of the Cross. But if he accepted the Lord Jesus as his Savior, he died without confession!† What a lesson for those who wait for some great miracle of salvation to come to them in the hour of death. Okis's sorrow was great. He had lost faith in Jok, in the spirits, in ancestral worship, but he had not yet found faith in his Savior. Oeonga was accordingly buried with heathen rites. A trench was dug outside the door. Oeonga was laid within it. Beside the fetich temple of his grandfather, Okis erected another for the spirit of his father, and put the customary food and water therein. But now his hungry heart was hungrier still. He went often to the mission station to hear the gospel. He was a young man and not yet married. His unhappiness increased as conviction of sin became more marked.

Little by little the light filtered into his benumbed heart until one day there came to him as there will come to every one truly seeking to be a child of God, a great and joyous realization that he was forever safe in a loving Father's arms.

He confessed Christ openly in baptism and refused the ancestral worship. The fetich temple of his father and grandfather were alike destroyed, and he began to experience that persecution which is the frequent if not inevitable lot of the young African who would replace superstition by faith. Isolated to a great degree from his former friends he found the Lord increasingly dear, and took daily joy in preparing for his career as an evangelist.

Frequently on his way to school he passed Ufuny in the gardens. She was not a Christian. With an African boy's directness, he decided to pray that she might become one. But he realized that her opportunities were few indeed and decided to seek the special help of the missionary for the salvation of one whom he was fast learning to love. African boys, even African Christian boys, must buy their sweethearts, although no Christian boy sells his sister. Okis went to the missionary. The marked abruptness of his heathen days had been transformed into the straightforward directness which caused him to be so highly esteemed as a Christian. "I wish to purchase Ufuny," he said and as soon as her father will let me have her, to bring her to you at the mission station to be trained and taught. There are many such girls affianced to Christian young men in mission schools and training homes in Africa. And so Ufuny came to live upon the mission station and prayer was made without ceasing by the missionaries for her conversion. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" is a command as definite as the promises of God are certain. God did not ignore the prayers of the waiting Okis, and one day he had the joy of seeing Ufuny give her heart to the Lord. It was a glad day, glad for Ufuny, glad for her missionary teacher, glad for her earthly lover, but gladder still for the Son of God, who loved us and gave himself for us. Her baptism was followed by continued training until the wedding day arrived, the day when Okis, the evangelist, claimed his Christian bride. A happy couple they were as they stood in the little chapel and were married by Christian ceremony. A happy, but simple little home,—a house of buck, thatched roof, buck-floor, paneless windows, such was the dwelling of Okis and his bride. Among the frequent visitors were the friends whom Okis had won to Christ, Nivin, Otidi and Nyamere, and those who through so much patient toil and waiting at last became Christian women, Ufuny's companions of toil in the days when she was a heathen laborer in the gardens—our old friends Ayei, Atua and Akue. For our native Christians are intensely earnest and joyously fruitful as one by one they bring their friends to Christ.

† An incident almost identical with Oeonga's death occurred recently at Yaloke. See recent copy of Brethren Missionary.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

THE EDUCATIONAL OFFERING

I am a bit slow in getting my first report to you, but then, I am not the only one who is slow, for the report below will show you that reports are coming in very tardily. I am sure that, after these years during which such an offering has been asked for and received, the habit has become fairly fixed, and that few congregations fail entirely to present the matter to their people, and I know too that when the matter is presented, results are encouraging. The college is occupying an increasingly conspicuous place in the hearts of all our Brethren, as is indicated by the support which they are giving to its work and its program. They only need to be given an opportunity, and what they do then, does not shame them. The report of offerings received to date,—June 28, is as follows:

Myersdale, Pa.,	$ 89.80

Total to date, $587.39

In behalf of the faculty and the trustees, all of whom are your servants, I thank all the givers for what they have done but I need hardly remind you that we are hoping that the total will reach at least ten times as much as is shown in this report. The cause is fundamentally worthy, and it needs both your prayers and your gifts.

LONG BEACH (CALIF.) REVIVAL

Our Brother, Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the Johnstown (Pa.) church has just closed a most blessed evangelistic campaign in the Long Beach church. All told, 125 souls stepped to the front for Christ and the church. Of this number, a very few were reconsecrations of former or present members, who had wandered away and felt their need of a public renewal of their vows to Christ. Two united with the church by relation, one of whom is my own sister, Anna. Anna was the second person we ever baptized, being among the little group of seven that formed our first baptismal service, back in the waters of old Pony Creek, north of Morrill, Kansas, August 12th, 1894. We were but 19 years of age then. Up to the time of this writing, 60 of those who came forward have united with the church, and we will take in many more. But the great handicap here is the fact that many of those who came forward were young people in our Sunday school, whose parents are themselves ungodly and go nowhere. They refuse to permit their children to unite with this church, and many of them oppose their children uniting with any church. Long Beach is famous for that sort of thing.

Prior to this meeting, we had been baptizing and receiving people into the church almost every Sunday night for some weeks. We hardly knew where Brother Ashman was going to do his gleanings, because we had cut around in even the corners before he arrived, and we told him so. But he went to work with a zeal, undismayed, preaching the old fundamental truths with a vim, and under the power of the Holy Spirit, and the effect was so telling, that in all but three or four of the services, there were definite results.

Brother Ashman is a great preacher, beyond all question. And we congratulate the church that calls him "Pastor." We believe that not only the people of Long Beach, but the members of all the other churches, will heartily agree with us in this last statement. We all feel that we never did a better thing than to bring him to the Pacific Coast for the three months he will be with us in evangelistic work, and the Bible Conference work next month.

We have had some "big" men preach in this church,—some of the best known preachers in the world have been here with us either in evangelistic or Bible Conference work. And yet, we never have had better crowds or attention or interest than under the ministry of Brother Ashman. Brethren out here who are in a position to know, feel that we Brethren fail to appreciate our men sometimes. Ashman would shine in any one of the large denominations, unless they would try and set him aside for his absolute loyalty to the great fundamentals in the message of God to men.

We are writing these words of appreciation as the expression of all our people here, and because we feel that a faithful servant of God deserves his flowers before his eyes cannot behold them, and his voice cannot even whisper a word of thanks. God bless you, Charlie! We love your talents,—we love you for your faithfulness,—we love you for your fearlessness,—we love you because you love and preach him who is our "All in All."

Numbers sometimes give us but a poor idea of a meeting. The membership of the church has been strengthened, and the spirit of unity has been made stronger, and there has been a spiritual quickening all along the line. These are not easy days for evangelism; but, we still believe that the message of God, preached in its old time purity and the power of the Spirit, wins! It did so in Long Beach.

LOUIS S. BAUMAN, Pastor.

VICTORY AT LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

The Long Beach church is a great church in many ways. Its members are Bible Students,—they love and know the Word of God. The Bible is exalted in every possible way among them. Their pastor is a mighty preacher of the Word! Their Bible school is so organized and operated as to give, not just first place, but all the place to the Bible. Moreover, they believe in and exercise the power of prayer. On every hand we witnessed evidence of this. Then too, this church is blessed with an abundance of consecrated, trained personal workers. Equipped with a practical knowledge of the Sword of the Spirit through genuine prayer; surrendered and consecrated to the supreme mission of the church; they go forth to win precious souls to Christ and come rejoicing, "bringing in the sheaves." They have a great field in which to labor for the Master. Not easy, but full of "open doors" although the adversaries are there also.

There was no question of the victory in our mind from the very beginning of the campaign. We enjoyed our co-laborers with Brother Bauman. He put himself at our disposal to be used to the fullest. His home was ours. His automobile was ours. He was willing to lead or to follow, just as we decided. No restrictions or instructions were placed upon us, we were given the utmost liberty to preach, teach, and work according to our methods. Our fellowship with Brother Bauman was full of blessedness. He is a great preacher and enjoys the full confidence of his people. He has wrought a great work in building up a spiritual congregation.

The church lined up with us from the first service. In every possible way, they gave themselves unto the Lord to win souls. In hospitality, attendance, personal devotions, and winning souls through personal solicitation, they were heart and soul and body in the campaign. The victory was assured, the only question was, "How great will it be?" With no sensationalism or undue emotionalism, in deep, mighty spiritual power, we moved from victory to victory! Praise his Name! We honor our Lord for the 125 public confessions, of whom over 90 were for the first time.

The Long Beach church has outgrown its present building. Unless they build at once, they will turn Sunday school scholars away. In some of the classes there is no incentive to work now for there is room for no more. They plan to build at once. Then, you can expect to hear of their school and church multiplying by leaps and bounds. We are sure they will not make the mistake of so many churches, that of delaying until opportunity has taken its flight or been snatched up by others.

We are just now closing the second week of our campaign with the Second Church at Los Angeles. We are in a great meeting here. Surely the Lord will bless our church in Johnstown for her good will in permitting this three months' leave of absence. She shall receive some of the reward for the many souls won.

Evangelist CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

Our delayed report does not denote inactivity. A series of evangelistic meetings were held in January. Dr. Bauman's forceful sermons were a great help to all who heard them. During the campaign three persons made the great confession. Since that time twenty-two have been added to the church through the efforts of our efficient pastor, Brother Tay. We now have 244 members; a net gain of ten over last year.

Our most largely attended communion service took place the night before Easter and was an impressive one because of that choice of time. A most blessed time together was experienced throughout the Easter season.

The attendance is holding up well in spite of vacation days—the Sunday school attendance being over 200 most of the time. The prayer meetings have been well attended and especially interesting and spiritual.

The social life of the church is well kept up by various socials, house warmings and class parties. The pastor continues to give us splendid messages—always honoring God's Word. Over half of our congregation is made up of young people and children and so he gives frequent graphic children's sermons which all of us profit by. As Moderator of the Southern California district, he is especially busy now with preparations for the conference to be held at Long Beach from July 9 to 18.

The big day to which we have so long looked forward has arrived at last. Clarence and Loree Sickel are among us! The church gave them a welcome at Los Angeles Harbor when they steamed in and later at a banquet and program in the church parlors. We are blessed in having them and their testimony with us. They will attend the Southern California Conference at Long Beach and then leave shortly afterwards for the north where Mrs. Sickel and the girls will visit her mother in Washington, while Clarence will start on deputation work among the churches.

We have just had a little wedding ceremony in recognition of the marriage of our other church missionary, Chauncey Sheldon, on the African field. Master Milford Good, nephew of the groom, bore the ring. The ladies of the Missionary Society have made beautiful hand-worked quilts for each of these young missionary couples.

In May about 75 of the church folks journeyed across country to Whittier to hear Dr. Ashman. We were expecting much and were not disappointed.

The children gave a very creditable program on Children's Day making use of God's Word throughout. In the evening the Intermediate Christian Endeavor conducted a splendid church service. We are missing the presence of Mrs. Anna Wolfe with us. The Lord called her home in January. May each of us also be faithful unto death.

Rt. 1, Pomona, California.

Good Humor

Good-humor is one of the preservatives of our peace and tranquility . . . Its effect is so well aided by politeness, that this also becomes an acquisition of first-rate value. Politeness is artificial good-humor. It renders a substitute nearly equivalent to the real virtue. It is the practice of sacrificing to those whom we meet in society all the little conveniences and preferences which will gratify them, and deprive us of nothing worth a moment's consideration; it is the giving a pleasing turn to our expressions, which will conciliate others, and make them pleased with us as well as themselves. How cheap a price for the good will of another!—Thomas Jefferson, in Memoirs, Correspondence and Miscellaneous of 1830.

people more than to have some one interested in their work.

If I were a pastor, I should always suspect myself if I found myself becoming engrossed in the mechanics of any task, and jerk myself away to the spiritual side of it. Not how, but what.

If I were a pastor, I should look out for the themes that especially interested me, and try to cultivate almost everything else. Those subjects will get in anyway, and if I do not watch out, they will get in too much.

If I were a pastor, I should know that however busy I may be I must not stint my prayer time. It is through that that the work gets done.

If I were a pastor, I should be positive that I was in the most glorious work under the sun. If not, I'd leave it for some other occupation.

If I were a pastor, I should not ask whether the church officers were with me, or whether the congregation was increasing or diminishing, or how the money was coming in; I should seek first the presence and cooperation of Jesus Christ, and all these other things would magnificently take care of themselves. —Christian Endeavor World.

personal sorrow and trouble, of descending into the valley of the shadow? Fear no evil, he is with thee, the old assurance holds now as ever." (T. Rhondda Williams). The mind runs ahead to the commissioning of another group of men for a yet vaster undertaking. When the disciples of Christ were sent forth to make known the good news of God to all nations, the validating assurance was, "Lo, I am with you always (Dr. C. R. Brown).

39TH ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF MARYLAND-VIRGINIA DISTRICT

The 39th Annual Conference of the Brethren Church of the Maryland-Virginia District convened at the First Brethren church of Roanoke, Virginia, on Tuesday, June 15th, 1926, at 2 o'clock.

The Conference was opened by singing "We're Marching Upward to Zion." Devotions were led by Rev. John Thompson. He read from the first chapter of Hebrews and followed with prayer. He asked that the Holy Spirit be with us and that we may all have the inspiration of St. Paul throughout our Conference.

Rev. H. H. Rowsey, pastor of the local church, gave the address of welcome. He extended a most hearty welcome to all and hoped that we might enjoy ourselves so much that we would all want to come back again. Responses were given by one delegate from each church represented. Twelve churches responded with delegates. Oak Hill had the largest delegation and Roanoke had the second largest. Committee on credentials was appointed by the Chair. Brothers Ed Miller, John Thompson and J. A. Duncan were made members of this committee.

The Credential Committee reported 14 ministerial delegates and 39 lay delegates. These credentials were accepted on motion by Dr. Tombaugh.

Next in order was election of officers. On first ballot there was no election. Dr. Carpenter and Rev. Ed. L. Miller received the highest number of votes. On second ballot Rev. Miller was elected Moderator. Moved that rules be dispensed with and person receiving next highest number of votes for Moderator be declared Vice-Moderator. Motion carried and Dr. G. C. Carpenter was made Vice-Moderator. In election of Secretary it was moved and carried that the person receiving highest number of votes should be elected Secretary and Statistician and the person receiving next highest vote should be assistant secretary. On first ballot Prof. Clark C. Copp was elected Secretary and Rev. Freeman Ankrum was chosen assistant secretary. Moved and carried that rules be suspended and the treasurer of last year be re-elected. Brother J. A. Duncan was elected. At this time Rev. E. L. Miller took the Chair as the new Moderator. He declared himself for Conference democracy and suggested as the watchword of our conference "Go on."

The address of the afternoon was delivered by Rev. C. A. Copp on the subject "The greatest enemies of the church." He felt that the lack of church unity was a serious weakness. He pointed out that the liquor traffic is our chief enemy and we need brave men and women to fight this giant demon. Another serious enemy is unbelief and he suggested as a remedy the Word of God.

The courtesy of the conference was extended to Sister Vanator and other visitors. After announcements the first session closed by singing, "What a Wonderful Savior." Benediction by Rev. John Leedy.

Tuesday Evening, 7:30 P. M.

A large and attentive audience was present at the first evening session. Rev. Rohart led in singing a group of very impressive selections.

Devotions were by Rev. Freeman Ankrum who read from the 10th Chapter of St. Luke and followed with prayer. The keynote of the devotions was that we may go back home and preach Christ as never before. At this time we were favored by a delightful solo from Rev. Rohart.

The following committees were appointed by the Chair:

Committee on Resolutions—Freeman Ankrum, John Locke, Mrs. Grove Showalter.

Committee on Time and Place—Dr. D. L. Shaver, J. W. Leedy, F. W. Burnett.

At this time Dr. G. C. Carpenter gave the retiring Moderator's address. His subject was, "The World's Greatest Corporation,—the Church of Jesus Christ." Dr. Carpenter said, in effect, that it was our business to let our light shine, to sow the seed of God's Word. The purpose of this great corporation is to evangelize the whole world. Missions are our great duty. The non-mission church is dead. We must have Christ-like church members filled with the spirit of missions. Tithing prevents covetousness. Let us launch forth to take the world for Christ.

Mrs. Wrench at this time favored the Conference with a vocal selection. Collection was lifted which amounted to $15.24.

The evening program came to a close with a very impressive stereopticon lecture given by Rev. Homer Kent. Many interesting scenes from Palestine were shown. The pictures were taken by Rev. Kent himself. He gave very interesting remarks about the customs and habits of the people of Jerusalem.

Delegates were assigned to the various homes. The closing hymn, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," was sung, after which Dr. Tombaugh dismissed us with benediction.

Wednesday Morning

Morning services were opened by singing several familiar hymns. Rev. Dunahoo conducted the devotions. He read from the 23rd Psalm, then followed with prayer.

Miss Mary Pence opened the Sunday school hour with a very timely lecture. In order to improve our Sunday schools she suggested a variety of program and that we should train young people to reverence God. They should be trained to be on time and to be quiet in church. It is our duty to teach them the whole Word from the Bible.

Brother John Locke gave a very interesting paper. He said in brief, that we are inclined toward spiritual illiteracy. We spent a very small amount of our money for the church and a tremendous amount for pleasures. He urged that we dedicate our all to his task.

Following this a discussion was led by Rev. Patterson. He declared that we must make our Sunday schools attractive, that we should use Brethren literature. We must teach God's Word and not our own opinions, and devote ourselves to God's great plan.

Various other delegates joined in the discussion.

Song, "Have Thine Own Way, Lord."

Rev. T. C. Lyon now gave a very interesting talk on the subject, "The type of preaching most needed." He pointed out several types of preaching which have been used very often but to no advantage. He concluded that the best kind of preaching was, "to teach the Word by exposition." This type is not often used, possibly because it is the most difficult.

Dr. Tombaugh led the discussion and he most heartily agreed with all that Brother Lyon had said. Various other responses followed.

Following this discussion Rev. H. H. Rowsey spoke to us on the subject, "The Pastor and his Ministry Among Young People." Youth is as easily influenced for good as for evil. Youth is not satisfied with form. The minister must keep his life in tune with God, he must see God then he can show him to the young people. Give young people work to do, especially in Christian Endeavor.

Discussion on the topic was led by Rev. J. S. Bowman and he emphasized the fact that it is our lives and not so much our words that count.

Dr. Carpenter gave a brief review of the work of the mission board. He told of concentrating their work at Winchester and showed pleasing results. Brother Samuel Hounshell gave his report as treasurer of the mission board. Many churches were delinquent in the payment of their mission assessments.

Out of the $800.00 assessed the churches of the District, only $498.50 was paid.

Following the report Rev. E. L. Miller gave a stirring and challenging address on missions. He said in part, that we must all work for God, that the gift of life was ahead of the gift of substance. Let us go ahead with the work of the Master. It is our duty to extend God's Kingdom.

After announcements Rev. Drushall gave the benediction.

Wednesday Afternoon, 2 o'clock

Opening song, "Stepping in the light." Devotions were conducted by Rev. G. C. Drushall. He read the 17th chapter of St. John and followed with prayer.

Minutes were read by the secretary and approved as read.

It was moved that the District Mission continue to concentrate on the work at Winchester, Virginia. Motion was carried.

Report of Committee on Time and Place: Dr. D. L. Shaver reported that the committee recommended that the next Conference be held at Linwood, Maryland, beginning the second Tuesday in June. (Subject to change by local church or executive committee). Moved to accept report. Much discussion followed. Motion was finally carried.

Board of Property—One member, T. Glenn Locke, was elected. The Board consists of the following members: S. E. Duncan, 1927; G. Harry Haun, 1928; T. Glenn Locke, 1929.

Ministerial Aid Board—Same board was elected and G. A. Copp was re-elected treasurer. The board consists of the following members: J. M. Tombaugh, E. B. Shaver, G. A. Copp.

National Executive Committee—This Committee was re-elected consisting of the following members: Freeman Ankrum, Ed. L. Miller.

College Trustees—Dr. D. L. Shaver and Rev. Homer Kent were nominated.

Ministerial Examining Board—Dr. G. C. Carpenter was re-elected. The board consists of the following members: Dr. Tombaugh, 1927; G. A. Copp, 1928; G. C. Carpenter, 1929.

Report of Ministerial Aid Board was given by Rev. G. A. Copp. Report accepted.

Dr. Tombaugh and Samuel Hounshell were re-elected to the District Mission Board. Appointment of committee to consider new name for the Virginia-Maryland District Conference was suggested.

After a song Dr. Bell gave us a very impressive and interesting lecture. He said in brief, We must train young men who have souls full of Christianity to take our places. He denounced the teachings of evolution and said that we must send our children to a Christian school like Ashland College. Ashland has more than doubled her enrollment in the past five years. In order to make Ashland a standard college the only thing needed which we do not already have is a half million endowment. At the present time we have an endowment of $200,000.00 and Ashland City and County have agreed to raise $200,000.00 and it is the duty of the church to raise $200,000.00. Many generous gifts have already been received.

After taking a group picture of the entire Conference it adjourned for the afternoon into various departmental conferences.

Wednesday Night, 7 O'clock

Evening services were opened with songs conducted by Rev. Rohart. Devotions were led by Sister Pence. She read from the 2nd

Chapter of Timothy and followed with prayer.

Brother Paul Yoder, of Linwood church, gave a very excellent address on the subject, "The Church As It Faces the Challenge of a Changing World."

He said he could see no conflict between the church and science and that the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis sufficed for both science and religion. Christ was both human and divine and essentially so. The purpose of the church is to bring men to Christ and bring them up in Christ. The great challenge is to be a brother to mankind. Sacrificial love is the real spirit of the true Christian.

The next address was given by Rev. Freeman Ankrum on the subject, "Evangelism, Its Importance." He said that we did not need so much a revival as we needed more personal evangelism. Evangelism means action. The church is tubercular because it is kept between walls, it needs fresh air. Our great task is the salvaging of men and women for Christ.

The Moderator appoints the following committee to consider a change of name for the Conference: Freeman Ankrum, Dr. Tombaugh, Rev. Patterson. At this time there were 63 delegates present.

Rev. Kent favored us with a vocal selection.

Dr. Bell at this time gave a stereopticon lecture which consisted of various scenes about Ashland College. Everyone was glad to see and hear more about our only church college. A collection amounting to $15.00 was lifted. All joined in singing, "Jesus Saves" as the closing hymn. Benediction by Dr. Carpenter.

Thursday Morning, 8 O'clock

Services opened with Brother Rohart leading the singing of "Blessed Assurance." Devotions were also led by Rev. Rohart. He read the 13th chapter of 1 Corinthians and followed with prayer.

Minutes were read and approved. Final credential report was accepted. Statistician gave incomplete report. Moved and carried to withhold this report from publication and Secretary was instructed to try to fill this report the best possible. Report of Resolution Committee was heard and accepted.

At this time Prof. Clark C. Copp gave an address on the subject "The Bible in Public Schools." He said that the Bible in our schools is essential to add religious tone to the lives of our young people. The best way to carry the Bible is to carry it in your soul and reflect it from your personality so that others can see Jesus in you.

The discussion on this subject was led by Rev. E. L. Miller who wholeheartedly favored the use of the Bible in our public schools. At this time the Conference adjourned into various departmental meetings.

Thursday afternoon the delegates and friends indulged in recreation and sightseeing trips around Roanoke City and Salem.

Thursday Night, June 17th., 7:30 P. M.

As Moderator and Vice Moderator had both left the conference to return to their homes, Herbert Rowsey, pastor of the local church opened the evening session. Emerson Rohart led the singing, opening with "The Old Rugged Cross" and "Love Lifted Me." John 3:16 was repeated together, after which devotions were conducted by Rev. George Drushall who spoke at length upon the Kentucky work, after which he read from the sixth chapter of Ephesians and followed with prayer. Special music was furnished by Miss Clara Duncan, granddaughter of Rev. A. B. Duncan of Oak Hill who sang "Come Ye Blessed." Rev. Homer Kent closed the Conference with a stereopticon lecture, showing scenes of the Holy Land. The pictures shown at this time were scenes depicting a trip around Galilee.

At the close of the lecture Brother Rohart sang "It's Real," after which dismissal was made by Rev. J. E. Patterson.

THE HONOR ROLL

It has been quite a while since the Evangelist Honor Roll has appeared in this corner. We take it for granted that most of our readers understand that the Honor Roll appears only when a new church has been added to the list. We wonder sometimes if it would not be just as well to publish the Honor Roll when a church has been lost from the list. That would be a frank way of showing our losses as well as our gains, would it not?

However, we have not yet decided to adopt this policy, as it would undoubtedly prove embarrassing to several very loyal supporters of The Evangelist.

Since our last report nine churches have renewed their lists of subscriptions and two new churches have been added to the Roll.

The churches that have renewed are Beaver City, Nebraska, seventh year; Howe, Indiana, fourth year; Lathrop, California, third year; Morrill, Kansas, eighth year; Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, second year; New Paris, Indiana, seventh year; Peru, Indiana, sixth year; Smithville, Ohio, sixth year; Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, third year, and Mexico, Indiana, seventh year.

The two churches that have been added to the Roll are New Enterprise, Indiana, with D. A. C. Teeter as pastor, we believe, and Leon, Iowa, with Claud Studebaker serving as pastor.

An Unprecedented Experience

We have had a number of remarkable experiences since the Honor Roll was started nine years ago, and many churches have been wonderfully blessed through their efforts to bring the best and most loyal Brethren reading matter into the homes of all their membership. The Honor Roll method has taken the Evangelist into thousands of homes that otherwise would know very little of the work of the general brotherhood, and many churches have doubled and quadrupled their subscription lists; but Brother Claud Studebaker has made the most remarkable record of all.

Since going into the field at Leon, Iowa, a little more than a year ago he has increased the subscription list of the Evangelist more than TWO THOUSAND per cent. Now this is not a typographical error that should read two hundred per cent. It is as above stated, TWO THOUSAND per cent. We do not know that there is another church in the brotherhood where this unparalleled achievement could be repeated; but we do think we could name fifty congregations where the subscriptions might be increased TWO HUNDRED per cent. Should this be done, think what it would mean to the circulation of the church paper, and think what it would mean to Brother Bell and the Ashland endowment campaign. The largest circulation the paper ever had was during Brother Beachler's campaign for the College. Why should it not pass all previous records during the campaign?

Who Will Do It?

What is everybody's business is nobody's business in church work as well as any other line of endeavor. Some one must feel the responsibility, some one must bear the burden. Who will it be? Usually it is the pastor who does the work or else inspires someone else to do it.

A short time ago we received an abbreviated list of subscriptions from a good lay brother who said: "I must be a poor sort of an agent. Our church used to be on the Honor Roll. But I will say this—for the past three years we have not heard enough from our pulpit regarding the Evangelist. When a pastor Never mentions the church paper from the pulpit, one can hardly expect the congregation to be much interested."

We are not going to comment on this statement. We do not believe it is necessary. Below you will find the Honor Roll as it now is.

If these reports were made weekly there would be fewer opportunities to make a mistake in the report; but if we have any one listed wrong we will be glad to make the correction, if it is called to our attention.

We think we will be able to find time to make more frequent reports for awhile, and we hope very soon to be able to give a report of the offering for Publication Day, but we feel this enough for one issue of the paper.

WHEN ALL IS LOST

BY RUFUS LEE DODD

*All is not lost when hope is lost;
Faith, battling with a black despair,
Find God somehow, somehow, somewhere—
Nay, all's not lost when hope is lost!*

*But all is lost when love is lost!
Faith cannot bridge a chasm so wide
And deep as a heart where love has died—
Yea, all is lost when love is lost!*

Should Protestants Continue to Protest

We have been waiting to see what might be the reaction of Protestant religious papers toward the pageant of Roman Catholicism recently staged in Chicago, and it seems that the impression was so stunning and over-awing that few have ventured to speak out, and especially to offer any criticism. It occurs to us that the situation calls for a little of Protestant antidote to overcome the drugging influence of the great show and the still greater newspaper propaganda. If the "Christian Century" represents fairly the impression made on Chicago Protestantism the great display was a big success from a Catholic standpoint. Says this magazine which is much enamored with Catholic genius and devotion, "In the sphere of religion, no single event in our national history can compare with this in popular magnitude, in impressive symbolism, in depth of feeling and in its solemnizing effect upon the spirit of a great city." Meeting as it did in a great Catholic stronghold, with all the resources and advantages of that great city put to its service by Chicago's Catholic officary and police, and backed by the uncounted wealth of the Catholic hierarchy, this "eucharistic congress" could scarcely have been anything but a towering success as a demonstration of pomp and power.

Evangelical Protestantism, however, can afford to pause and think over the road it has come before it allows itself to be captivated too completely by the glitter and the show and thus to play into the hands of the Catholic propagandists. We would not have Protestants to be characterized by a spirit of bitterness towards Catholic peoples, not even by unfriendliness, but we would remember that Catholic teaching and aims are in all their essential elements the same as those against which the great fathers of the Reformation made protest so many years ago. But leaving aside the theological differences, with which in some respects some of our outstanding Protestant preachers are claiming we are finding more and more cause for agreement and for reversion to Catholic ritual, there are yet two pronounced objections and protests rising in our mind as we think of the impressions made by this congress.

The first is the gaudiness of the display and the ostentation of the ritual. We would possibly be unjust to say that there was no sincerity, no genuineness of worship in all that splendor and impressiveness, just as it would be to make such an assertion regarding the worship of the Pharisees of the days of Jesus, but it is difficult for a Protestant to avoid calling up in this connection the denunciatory words of Jesus concerning the general emptiness and lack of meaning in the popular worship of his day. We were struck with the evident purpose in all this demonstration of worship "to be seen of men." The very countenances of the eleven cardinals attending the congress we said to have betokened in the majority of instances a lack of spiritual earnestness and consecration and betrayed characteristics far from paralleling those of our Lord. "The Christian Century" says, that "a little more than half of these high princes of the church had the appearance of fat complacent old men, typical priests with round jovial faces who probably love their wine as much as their meat and in whom age has accentuated those characteristics which develop in a life of ease." While three or four betrayed "the ideals of asceticism." Are we warranted in asking whether or not the system and the spirit that in the main pervades it, does not tend to develop just such character as the face of these high priests of the papacy indicate? This should not be understood as a blanket judgment of Catholics in general, for we are acquainted with some most noble spirited and genuinely Christian Catholics, notwithstanding the system. But a system that thrives on such grandeur and parade Protestants must continue to question. "The Western Christian Advocate", speaking to this point, says: "The average Protestant cannot conceive how the lowly Nazarene could look upon that display of color and richness and aristocracy and worldly splendor with the least sympathy." Such ostentation is not in keeping with the true spirit of Christianity and so long as it persists there is occasion for Protestantism to protest.

In the second place we cannot but protest against the old, presumptuous, never-yielded, persistently-held political claims of overlordship of this mighty system that made such a demonstration in Chicago. Even those who are fascinated by the forms of Catholicism and see in its ritualism sublime acts of mystic devotion, yet join in protesting the unwarranted claims of this self-contained, self-perpetuating hierarchy, which heads up on a foreign soil, out from which goes the word of final and not-to-be-questioned authority, and is as utterly opposed to democratic ideals as darkness is opposed to light. Perhaps we have no reason to fear the final outcome, that there is no chance of the iron hand of the papacy grasping the reigns of political authority in the United States as has been the case in Italy, France, Spain, Austria, Mexico and the South American States, but it is difficult for Protestant America to be patient even with the suggestion of planting such claims in our democratic soil, as occurred during the visit of these foreign cardinals. The daily papers told us that upon the visit to the City Hall in New York City of a group of these cardinals, two of their number stepped forward and the governor of the greatest state and the mayor of the chief city of our republic each in turn bowed the knee and kissed the signet ring on the hands of these two cardinals, acknowledging their allegiance to the sovereignty of the pope and the vatican state. If such scenes are not to be conceded prophetic of the ultimate fulfillment of the claims of this greatest politico-religious state in the world, it is because of the widespread apprehension of such a possibility and the readiness with which the soul of American democracy protests against any endangering of its liberties.

It may be that this great display of Roman Catholic pomp and power will serve to make American Protestants more wary of the political encroachments of the vatican. Perhaps these lieutenants of the successor to Saint Peter have shown their hands too boldly and have done their cause harm instead of good, and have, as the Western Christian Advocate suggests, "rather contributed to the deepening of the conviction that Protestantism still has ample reason for continuing its policy of protest against the encroachment of that imperialistic institution on a free and independent people, and the continued extension of the influence and power of that foreign potentate over a large section of American people."

Another Move of the Militarists

The war department has announced a plan to finance 100 college seniors each year to the extent of paying their tuition, on condition that they spend nine months after graduation in special army camps maintained for their special instruction. This is an effort to enlist the interest of young men of talent and leadership in the army organization and to give a goodly group each year such military training as would qualify them for service as army officers "in the event of national emergency." The plan is objectionable not merely because it would take each year 100 of our best college-trained young men and teach them the art of group murder, but also because it would result in keeping before the mind of vast numbers of high school youths and their parents the ideal of military training, and so tend to militarize public thinking. Already great numbers of our youth are being subjected to military training in our schools and colleges and are being continually impressed with the imagination that some aggressive foe is likely at any time to arise and attack our nation, which tends to give the war attitude to the public mind. This new move is just another evidence of the war department's policy to keep the nation in a state of constant readiness for war, which, as history will prove, is one of the surest guarantees that war will come. It would be better national security to build up the peace attitude and to cultivate confidence in the strength of national righteousness, and dependence on reason and the fraternal spirit in settling international disputes. If our national policy should be modified to the extent of devoting one-tenth of the time, energy and revenue now going into our preparation for war, to building up the desire for peace and popularizing methods of living in peace both at home and abroad, we could soon dispense with all by a mere police force allowance of our present heavy military expenditure.

Work Will Win

Hard work will win, and that is all that stands between some people and success. This is a warning that is especially timely and applicable to the young people of today. Too many are looking for quick and easy success, and that kind never comes in a line that is honest, safe and truly worth while. There is no place except at the bottom for the indolent, ambitionless fellow, but he who has vision and energy and is willing to work persistently will find his way out of the crowd to the roomy, free spaces at the top. And the time to form the habit of work is in youth. Announcement was made recently that an eighteen-year-old youth, Miles A. Smith of Cardington, Ohio, and a graduate of high school this June, won a $4,000 scholarship by writing a prize essay of 500 words on "Forest Conservation," the prize to be paid him in $1,000 annual installments while attending an Ohio college or university, and contributed by an Ohio Congressman, Hon. Martin L. Davey of Kent. He was the winner over nearly 5,000 other contestants representing every county in Ohio. The striking thing about this lad is not that he is brilliant, but that he is ambitious and full of the spirit of work. It was not brilliancy that brought him success, for it is said he was not especially high in grades, though good; it was persistent and painstaking toil. He worked for two months acquiring the necessary information, and then re-wrote his essay fifteen times. It is quite possible that among his 5,000 competitors there were others equally or more highly talented, but he possessed a great ability for work and he won.

This is not only a warning and suggestion to young people, but to many engaged in Christian work, even to those in the ministry. Not that our preachers are not workers; their success is witness to their energetic service for the Master. But if any man is wishing for greater success, for more rapid growth of the Kingdom in his community, the way to accomplishment (the proper spiritual contacts being granted) is through still more persistent effort on the part of himself and his people. And if there are churches that are sluggish and dying, lacking in influence and accomplishment, the way to revival and growth and a positive contribution to the cause of Christ is by the exercise of a faith that is full of good works. "Faith without works is dead," says the Epistle of James. They who imagine they have faith but will not work, are self-deceived. That explains the powerlessness and waning condition of not a few churches today. Given the proper spiritual relationship and consecration, the only thing that lies between any church or servant of God and success in their field is work.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother W. A. Gearhart, our Home Missionary Secretary, writes that Brother and Sister M. D. Early of Los Angeles, California, have taken charge of the posts recently occupied by Brother and Sister Young, resigned, at Riverside Institute, Lost Creek, Kentucky.

A Sunday school class of the Denver, Indiana, school, takes occasion to write a letter of appreciation to Dr. Gribble. It is to be found on page 10.

Dr. Teeter, the Business Manager, gives us a report of the Publication Day offering. Some of our friends have done splendidly and their support is greatly appreciated. Others, we believe, will do more, as they come to understand the need.

The little band of believers at Reliance, Virginia, recently enjoyed a week of services under the preaching of Brother S. P. Fogle and others. The meetings closed with three additions to the membership and a well-attended communion service.

As we were going to press we learned that Dr. and Mrs. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, returning from Michigan, met with an automobile accident in which both received rather severe injuries, though not serious, and their Essex coach was completely smashed. They will have the sympathies of their multitude of friends throughout the brotherhood.

Brother M. A. Stuckey writes an interesting letter concerning his visits among the churches. Of special interest was his visit to the large school at Dayton, Ohio, and the mission schools at Lost Creek and Krypton, Kentucky. He is giving some special attention to the problems of the rural and small school and we are glad to note that he considers our Sunday school literature adapted to their needs.

On the morning of July 11, Donna Marie arrived at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Quinter M. Lyon, in Ashland, Ohio. Mother and daughter are doing splendidly and our fellow editor is as happy as can be. In behalf of the Evangelist family, and we dare say also in behalf of his own constituency, the many readers of our Sunday school lesson helps, we bid Brother and Sister Lyon a most hearty congratulation.

We have one of the most encouraging letters from Brother Yoder that he has been able to write for some time. Four have been baptized at Laboulaye, and one of the converts presented the mission with a new Ford with which to evangelize the district. Attendance is growing in Buenos Aires and a new mission chapel built by one of the members in a new part of the city. In Rio Cuarto at the end of two weeks' instruction by Dr. Yoder nine accepted Christ.

Brother J. L. Kimmel, pastor of the mission church at Fort Wayne, Indiana, informs us of the approaching dedication of a new church building to take place on August 1st, on which occasion Dr. W. H. Beachler is to officiate. It speaks highly for the pastor, and for the mission boards backing him that this mission work is being pressed forward so expeditiously and that the field is responding so readily to the efforts. The surrounding churches are urged to attend the dedication, and surely it would be a fine thing to give this young church such encouragement.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, reports his visit among some of our small churches in Pennsylvania, where he finds a loyal spirit and commendable cooperation, if not the wealth to be found in some of our larger churches. The total amount has now reached $44,003.98. Three of these churches are being served by Dr. Marcus A. Witter, whose ability as a builder has been proven elsewhere, and is again being demonstrated here. All three points are responding to his inspiring leadership, but in West Kittanning especially there promises to be a self-supporting church in the near future, according to Dr. Bell. The Vandergrift church was also visited, but it is at present without a pastor, according to our best information.

Many of our readers will be interested in learning of a significant forward step taken by the Board of Directors of the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, according to a recent action. They have launched a campaign for the raising of large extension and endowment funds, upon the securing of which funds they propose to put the present equipment in adequate condition and make provision for the adding of new as the needs demand. It has also been decided that the name of the organization shall be changed pending the permission of the court, from "Winona Assembly and Bible Conference" to "Winona Lake Institution", which is claimed to be "more fitted to the manifold institutions of the place", though it is also less expressive and suggestive. The declared purpose of the Winona Organization continues to be religious, educational and recreational, and the high moral standards that have characterized the place will continue to prevail.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Foremost Problem of Our Nation

By Louis S. Bauman, D. D.

"Who made you?" Ask the next American schoolboy that question, and you are very apt to be asked in return, "Did you never study biology, mister?" This is true to an extent that would appall the Christian parentage of America if once it could only be awakened to the fact that faith in God is actually being destroyed in the school rooms of this nation.

It is almost impossible to pick up a text book on any branch of science in our schools, that does not teach in some insidious way the theory, that the human race is on this planet as the result of an evolution that through untold ages has carried men along from some primordial germ of lowly life to the place he stands today. Of course this utterly sets aside the special creation of man as taught within the Bible. For no sort of turning and twisting can ever read into the sacred story of the first three chapters of Genesis anything else than the special creation of man apart from all antecedent life save that of God himself.

Even in the earliest days of the child in the average class room today, we find subtle "nature studies" that are nothing less than lessons in an evolutionary teaching that later on will cause the child to look askance at the old family Bible. If the problem were a mere lack of Bible teaching in our public schools, the problem might not be so difficult. But the trouble is not that there is a lack of teaching, but a very definite teaching that discredits the Word of God.

You put into the mind of a boy the idea that death ends all, that the Bible is without divine authority, that there are no authoritative standards of human conduct, that all moral standards are the result of social custom and not matters of eternal verity, that there is no God that is going to hold him to moral accountability, and you have paved the way for swift social degeneration and anarchy in that heart.

Surely, every thoughtful person must see that apart from some divine revelation, youth has no positive foundation on which to build a sound philosophy of life, or to establish moral standards that can be universally accepted by men. If there is no such thing as fixed truth, as Modernistic philosophy avers, then a state of flux is inevitable, and youth is bound to throw to the winds all the intellectual, moral, and social traditions of their forbears. They will acknowledge no determining factor in conduct save their own opinions,—opinions terribly warped by personal desires and ambitions. They will turn from Christian faith and inevitably accept the old pagan Shintoism of old Japan, which says: "There is no necessity for any system of morals, as every one is right when he consults his own heart." And when that happens, then no one will need to go far to go to hell.

History gives us very emphatic testimony as to the truthfulness of the foregoing statements. In 1802, when Christianity was restored to France by an act of government, one of the counsellors of the state declared publicly: "For want of a religious education for the last ten years, our children are without any ideas of a divinity, without any notion of what is just and unjust; hence arise barbarous manners, hence a people become ferocious."

Dr. Morrison of the M. E. church (South) tells us that when news of the war reached a certain lunatic asylum in our country, the question of a food supply greatly agitated the minds of the inmates of the asylum. They were discussing the question as to where they could find a garden in order that they might grow vegetables. One day one of the inmates was discovered with a pickaxe, digging away at the foundations of the asylum. The keepers said to him, "What are you doing?" He said: "I am digging away these foundations to clear a place to plant a garden." They said: "Where are you going to live?" He replied: "O, I am going to live upstairs!" They confined him in a padded cell! Along with him, we ought to confine in padded cells those worldly wise men (?) who believe they will be able to live in a splendid Christian civilization "up-stairs" and permit the Christian Bible, which is the foundation thereof, to be swept from beneath; for no intelligent man will question but that Christian civilization rests upon the Christian's Bible and the Christ it reveals. Good morals and right living are inseparable from religion, or human experience has taught us nothing.

Education is no savior, in spite of all assertions to the contrary. It is the heart that governs the man, and not his head. The word "educate" literally means "to draw out," and to educate a man is simply to draw out that which is in him. If the heart of a man is evil, education can only draw forth from that which is evil. If the heart of a man is good, education will draw forth that which is good. Christ said: "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, etc." Mark you, it is "out of the heart" and not "out of the head" that springs forth the issues of life so tremendously important to the happiness and welfare of the human race. A man may make a very desirable citizen with but little in his head, if only his heart is right. But, if his heart is wrong, he is always a dangerous citizen, and the more you put in his head, the more dangerous he becomes. It is for this reason that one of the nation's greatest educators recently said: "The more you train your children's intellects, the more need there is for carefully training their characters and developing their souls."

Raise all the objections to the Bible you like: call it "sectarian" if you wish; tell us that it is "man-made, unscientific, and all wrong;" declare the God it reveals "a monster of cruelty;" proclaim the Christ it exalts "the illegitimate off-spring of an ignorant Jewish girl;" protest that much of it is "unfit to read;" but, after you have finished your harangue against it, be honest enough to admit that there is not a single man or woman in all the prisons of our land who is there as a result of knowing the Bible and attempting to conform life to it; and, that not within your knowledge nor that of any other man has any young man ever let the Bible order his footsteps along the uncertain pathways of this world and then expressed his regret for having done so with his last expiring breath! But, be candid enough to own that many and many a man has cast it aside in his life and lingered long enough just this side of eternity to bewail the fact with all the expressions of the anguish a lost soul can breathe. After all is said and done, any man who thinks and thinks deeply, and who retains an ounce of genuine fairmindedness in his head and a drop of honesty in his soul, will admit that the Bible is the one Book of all books of earth on which the whole structure of intellectual, moral, and religious education can be safely founded.

To this, probably the majority of our really great educators will assent. But how to teach the Bible in the schools of this Babylonian world without giving offense is a problem that seems to be puzzling the wisest of men. And, in the meantime, as they stagger about over their problems, millions of our youth are growing up in almost complete ignorance of the simplest facts of the Bible. An actual test made in one of the high schools of the State of California recently, showed that out of 359 pupils answering a questionnaire, only 17.3% knew why Mount Sinai is famous in history; only 12% know why Gethsemane was known to human story; only 42% could give as many as four or more of the ten commandments; only 36.7% could name as many as five books of the Bible, while 49% failed to name one! Appalling ignorance of the most needful knowledge that a young man can know!

What does this mean in the light of the inspired utterance of the Book itself: "Wherewithall shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word." Here we have a hint as to the real and underlying cause of the wayward youth of our day,—wayward, in spite of the Herculean efforts of some of our modern educators to prove that they are not so. If the Juvenile delinquencies of which we hear so much these days are true, we know they seriously reflect upon the teacher in the school room as well as the parent in the home, and therefore these Bible-less teachers in Bible-less schools would have us believe that,—to the contrary of all that judges, prison wardens, police officials, and superintendents of reformatories are saying,—youth today is sprouting wings beside the youth of yesterday!

But, what are we going to do about it? The hour is at hand when either the Bible must be given a place in the educational system of our commonwealth, and our children taught to respect it and fear the God it reveals; or, Christian parents will have to arouse themselves to the necessity of founding and supporting schools for the education of their children, where the heart can be touched as well as the head. And, mind you, the heart will only respond to the eternal verities of an authoritative standard of moral and religious teaching. Where will you find it apart from the Bible? Teach sectarianism in our public schools? Never! Teach those eternal principles of truth and right that recognize responsibility to God and to man? Forever!

We believe in the American public school. It has been one of the fortresses of our American liberty. We owe it a debt that can never be told. Long may it live! But if that same public school, so dear to the heart of every true American, is to be invaded by a group of worldly wise men, who would destroy the old time faith whereby this nation was made great,—if such are to be allowed to inculcate their un-American doctrines,—socialistic, anarchistic, atheistic,—then the really Christian people of this nation must either re-take that school house, or, build elsewhere the educational institutions that will preserve the faith of our fathers, and save the nation from sinking back into the dark night of paganism that covers all nations who know not Jesus Christ!

Does the Brethren Church Offer Sufficient Opportunity to Her Ministry?

By O. C. Starn

(Address at the Ohio Ministers' Retreat, held at Ashland, June 10, 11, 1926 and voted to be published in the Evangelist)

Through association with fellow ministers both in College and at large. I have heard a number of them say, "I could do better work in some other denomination," or, "The Brethren church is lacking in this or that." In this paper we will note four major objections which have been gathered from such conversations. They are not original with the writer and I by no means will subscribe to all of them. It shall be your privilege to refute them if untrue. If they be absolutely true then the objectors are at least partly justified in their attitudes.

In our considerations it is necessary to keep in mind the general unrest that exists in practically all denominations among the ministry. The smaller the ministry the more acute the condition may become. Because of unacquaintance with conditions in other religious bodies it is tempting when one from his own seemingly troubled waters looks across into the apparent calm of his neighbor's pond. But the neighbor may at the same time be complaining about the undercurrent that is dragging him under and wishing he was in your boat.

I sometimes wonder if there are not other subtle influences that may be drawing outside of denominational shortcomings. It may be a wife who was brought up in some other faith and who feels that she was compelled to join her husband's church because he was a preacher therein. After the first love has disappeared she begins to nag her husband about going with her into the church of her faith. At least such an influence has its effect. Or, it might be pride that is drawing one into a seemingly more classy and intelligent denomination where one's power of intellect and his social qualities may be more fully utilized and appreciated. Or, it might be some previous fellow minister who is anxious to apologize for his jumping by influencing as many others as he can to do likewise.

However this may be, we feel that this is a timely topic to discuss as we are well aware of the fact that we have been losing able men and more are on the verge of going into other churches. It is not sufficient nor does it manifest wisdom to sneeringly and unconcernedly say, "O well, let them go; we can get along without them." If the Brethren church is not offering ample opportunity to her ministry then it is high time she be doing so.

Before considering reasons why the Brethren church is not offering sufficient opportunity to her ministry let us keep in mind the following thought: that no one denomination is the Kingdom of God and that the primary task of a minister is not to serve his denomination but the Kingdom of Christ. A minister should always be what St. Paul claimed himself to be, "A bondservant of Jesus Christ", and not a slave of his denomination.

We shall now consider four major objections:

I. Denominational obscurity.

There is no need of denying the fact that we are among the least known denominations of the earth. Quite often when one meets a stranger and tells him that one is a member of the Brethren church he remarks, "I never heard of that denomination before." To some this seems to be embarrassing. Then you explain that it is a branch of the Dunkard church. "Oh yes," he answers, "they are the ones who do not believe in telephones, automobiles, musical instruments, missions and hold to certain peculiar forms of dress, etc." With a twinkle in his eye he looks you over and wonders how much grey matter you really have. Then you must further explain that we are the Progressive Brethren and have cast these old ideas aside and are like other denominations in our social customs. You try to show him in the conversation that you possess intelligence and are thinking about the same complex problems that he is. "Well," he says, "I am a Presbyterian, why don't you come and preach in our church, we need men like you and we pay our preachers the best of any denomination." All this makes its appeal, especially to the younger ministers. But there is a balm for such a wound. Just remember that Jesus was not known over such a large era and had only a small company, yet he nobly performed and completed the work which the Father had given him to do.

Again, our church is not large in numbers. During the four years that I have served as secretary of national Conference I have sent in four reports to the Bureau of Statistics at Washington. Each year the National Statistician has reported a gain of four or five thousand and yet we cannot shove our membership much above 25,000. What is 25,000 among 110,000,000? It may mean a great deal! Think what Jonathan and his armor bearer did! What Gideon and his 300 did! Of course there is no denying the fact of the psychology of the inspiration of numbers. One rather chooses to be with the larger crowd upon the first impulse. But let us offer the following tablet for this dyspepsia: that the Kingdom of God is not in numbers but in power. If the Brethren church has a message of power for the world, whether she be small or large, in number, her ministers are just as worthy in the sight of God as those of any other denomination.

Then, too, it is claimed that we do not have very many great men. It is true that we have never had very many in congress and none that we know of in the president's chair. It is a blessing if we have no one in congress if they would have no higher ideals of life than some of those who are there from other bodies. I dare say, if some of our best men were there they would be able to hold their honor with any of the others. Have we no great men in the Brethren church? Are we ashamed of our College faculty and class them among the numb-skulls of the minority? They are of as high a class in the real sense of the term as any other college faculty. We can be proud of them. They do not long to be worshipped as great men but desire to be servants, and he who would be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven shall be servant of all. Let us interpret greatness in its true sense and we can find release from this pain.

Further, it is said that there is no chance to rise to the height unto which ministers in other denominations attain. Suppose we have in our church six preachers who would be capable of such pastorates as Broadway Temple, Sixth Avenue Presbyterian of New York, Plymouth church of Brooklyn, and other of the great and famous churches of America. Where would we find such pastorates to give them? Does it mean that these men must forever remain below their level and hence render less service to the Kingdom because bound by denominational thongs? Will ability always find its own level in spite of circumstances? Can God mightily use such men in spite of denominational lines? If he cannot, then the logical thing to do is to trample under foot the boundaries of that denomination. Again, let us be careful of this contention and gauge value not by mighty crowds but by spiritual power. We are worth more to God and to society if through our efforts one single person becomes endowed with spiritual dynamite than if ten are filled with sentimentalism and sensationalism. This has been proven in the past and will always be true.

Still another fault found is that the Brethren church has no Yale, no Harvard, no Princeton. True enough, but we have a College of which we need to be proud. It is turning out a quality and type of men who are finding a place of usefulness in the world. Let those who are criticizing Ashland College lend equal energy in helping her up or forever keep quiet as to her shortcomings. Nothing ever thrives on knocks or faultfindings except the dump heap and we know that the educational facilities and qualities of the Brethren church are not ready for the dump pile but rather it is ready to exchange the Ford for a Lincoln.

Denominational obscurity? Possibly so. But we would all be surprised if we would know the exact degree of usefulness that the Brethren church has reached throughout the years and will reach in the future. It is quite certain that she will never become what we would like to have her become if we just stand idly by, complaining about this and that. She is just what you and I and the rest of her members make her.

II. The matter of salary.

Not long ago we read an announcement that the Presbyterian church was in need of something like 1200 ministers and that a large percentage of their pastorates would pay on an average of $2,000. Sounds good, doesn't it? We likely do not have very many $2,000 pastorates, at least we have very many less than that. But just think how many pastorates there are in other churches that are far below our average. Some one has said that Brethren preachers are paid just as much on the average as any others.

We know that none of our ministers are overpaid who deserve any pay at all. Most are not paid enough. Books are high in price, travel is expensive and since these are a stimulant to efficient service a small salary will hold one back. A minister who will use his income for self betterment cannot receive too high a salary. But many do not use wisely what they do receive and likely would not get any farther along if they received $10,000 per year. We can name a number of capable men who have gone and are going because of poor management and unwise use of money, peculiar as it may seem.

People must be made to see the great demand that is being placed upon the present day minister. He must have a thorough education in practically all fields of thought. He must keep up constantly with the latest thought in sociology, psychology and the sciences. But we believe that when a pastor once convinces his flock that he really means business and intends to work they will pay him all they can. If they see that he is only living to draw his pay, and some pastors do this, then they cannot be blamed for refusing to give him a larger salary. We are primarily ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and where there are small flocks to take care of we dare not quit because of insufficient remuneration financially. All denominations need to give their ministers all the opportunity possible to push to the front in the service of the King.

III. No chance for Directors of Religious Education. We will pass this by with just several statements. First, it is largely true that at the present time we do not have many pastorates large enough for such a person besides the pastor. But there are ways out of this dilemma: let each pastor be his own Director. This is one of the minister's great assets and will be one of the main demands from now on in religious circles. Then, some serve as Directors in the cities and at the same time retain their membership and work in their respective churches. This gives the experience and at the same time reflects his or her usefulness to the church. We should encourage this more.

Secondly, there is not enough interest shown in this great and permanent movement. Too many have a perverted notion concerning the purpose of the movement. Such are not playing fair. No one who understands the purpose of the Religious Education movement can condemn it. The term itself should be self-explanatory. We have been charmed by the splendid motives, devotional spirit, business like qualities and type of men of the organization. If the Brethren church will not recognize this movement then this objection can be sustained. But we feel she will and more time should be given before we criticize her too severely.

IV. Spirit of theological intolerance. I believe that here is the most serious objection of all. The church in general is passing through a great crisis or transition, or call it what you may. Old time theological tenets are being rigidly questioned and doubted in some instances. This has brought about much bitter antagonism and strife and is in many instances unchristian in its method of procedure. The result is the division into what is called conservative and liberal or fundamentalism and modernism. Many take the full liberty to classify the other fellow just as soon as he believes one single thing that the other one does or does not emphasize to the same extent. Sad to say, this is done as though the message of the Word came originally through the one who is criticizing. We cannot help but feel that there is a tremendous amount of misunderstanding between the two groups. We wonder sometimes whether it is not simply a change in emphasis, that is, a change from doctrinal preaching and method of interpretation to a practical type. Why should we not have both? Many men who are classed as radical modernists seem to have a message of practical value as is evidenced by the fact that thousands of people throng their church doors. One dare not say that these crowds are composed of the lowest type of morons. This is not to uphold some men who do deny fundamental doctrines, as it is to show the demand for a message with a vital appeal for everyday living.

As a result of this changed view the one group is determined that the other must subscribe to their belief or else get out. In other words it is an attempt to rob the other fellow of his own beliefs and hence is bound in most instances to fail. We have lost valuable men and will lose more because of the rough method of approach of those who are bound to make man subscribe to man's conception of the Scriptures. I have found it a pleasure and have made it a practice to talk with men who have been spotted out as infidels and modernists on the much debated doctrine of the virgin birth. Among the accused with whom I have talked I have not found a single one who denies the virgin birth. They simply do not emphasize it to the extent that others do. I wonder if we would do more conferring together in a Christian spirit instead of so much hasty concluding whether we could not wipe out most of the trouble among our ministers and do some real constructive instead of destructive work. I can never glory over the leaving of a fellow minister who was compelled to leave because he could not and would not subscribe to some idea which he could not see or understand. I am frank to say, that I have always believed in the Virgin birth of our Lord and love to preach concerning it. I cannot remove it from the Divine record. On the other hand I am frank to say that to me a more primary doctrine to prove and preach about is the pre-existence of our Lord. No one can rob me of that idea unless they can conclusively prove its falsity. I love to change an old idea for a new one because then I feel that I am really gaining a knowledge of God. No difference how old the belief might be one ought to be open minded enough to exchange it for a better one. Openmindedness will do away with a lot of trouble.

There is no gain nor value in trying to make all ministers believe exactly alike in all things. There are honest men on both sides who cannot see the other fellow's position. In such cases one may as well try to remove mountains with a tiny cord as to try to compel either to accept the others' idea. In some instances it does not appear that the motive in theological intolerance is to preserve the Gospel of Christ as much as it is to outdo the other fellow and prove to him that he is not the smartest of the two. There is no use denying the existence of jealousy among such. Let us love one another and thereby remove this objection in the minds of those who feel they are persecuted and unwelcome.

There is a great objection also to the fact that we have church bosses and unless one submits to the ideas of the boss or bosses there is no chance to become pastor of those churches within the party rule. If this charge is true it is a deplorable condition and speaks to the shame and disgrace of those involved. Such tyranny and narrowness is absolutely unchristian and Pharisaical. The church will never grow under such conditions.

A last statement is that too many Brethren Ministers are antagonistic toward science and have investigated the least in these fields. If this attitude exists it will not long remain, for science is gloriously marching on and by the time the next generation comes on the stage such ministers will have lost their influence except among small groups of people who themselves think that ignorance is bliss. The facts of science are here to stay while pseudo-science will of its own weight disappear in time.

God needs the Brethren church and the Brethren will continue to need God. God needs faithful ministers to carry the message of the Gospel to a world in need. We should all strive to remove differences from among us so that our time can be spent in fighting evil in place of one another. Let us believe that God will in his own good time and way remove all false theories concerning his message to mankind. Let us be unashamed that we are ministers in the Brethren church. If the Brethren church does not at the present time offer sufficient opportunity to her ministry then let us create that opportunity. Let us be ministers first, last and always of Jesus Christ. My prayer is that we may further discuss this subject in the spirit of love and that out of it may come a better understanding of one another and the result will be a more efficient and effective ministry.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Lukewarmness

By J. I. Hall

TEXT: So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.
Rev. 3:16.

The Laodicean church is an example of lukewarmness. It is not a commendable state. It should be a warning to know how the Lord regards such a church. The modern church may fall in such a state—a church may fall into a condition other than it has repute. It may be famous for past zeal but now sleeping spiritually. We may not be saved on our past reputation. It is what we are now and what we shall be in the future that will count the greatest. The address of our Lord begins "I know your works." The Lord knew them fully. Maybe they didn't know themselves. Men may think better of us than we deserve. They may have thought they were very good. Jesus did not for they were spiritually lukewarm. The public can read reports. Jesus sees all the intents of the heart. He knows what is done, how it is done, and why it is done. The condition described in this text is one of indifference and carelessness. They were not liars nor dishonest, nor quarrelsome, nor two-faced, nor infidels, nor the Word does not say they did any sneaking underhanded tricks against anyone. They were lukewarm—neither cold nor hot. We do not believe that they opposed the Gospel, neither did they defend it. The Word doesn't say they were mischief makers. They were spiritually inert. This condition of indifference is attended with self complacency. There may be a great desire for worldly pleasure. They may have been full of energy for worldly pleasures.

They were in good shape financially. They didn't feel the need of anything, but were ignorant of the fact that they were wretched and miserable, and poor and blind and naked spiritually. Revelation 3:17.

This church has fallen into a condition that had chased away the Lord. At least he was on the outside standing at the door knocking and promising. V. 20. Yet we do not read of any responses.

If the church is walking with him in all earnestness, he then is in the midst of the church dwelling and revealing himself to his people, and the church rejoicing in his presence.

We are in great danger of being rejected by Christ by being in such a condition. The Lord does not help such a church. He is on the outside asking to be admitted but is not. Without the presence of the Lord there is not spiritual life. It makes possible bickering, envy, jealousy, strife, a lack of Christian regard—so much of worldliness that the Lord is not heard.

There is great danger of lukewarmness in a worldly world like we live in. We should hold very loosely to worldly things, but tightly to spiritual things. The Lord gives several remedies for lukewarm churches. Jesus in Verses 17, 20 gives the true state of the lukewarm church. Jesus must rejoice when he sees a church that wants to know and practice the truth when dealing with each other. If an individual or a church is not right with God and the devil can make them believe that they are they may never get right—hence never willing to acknowledge wrong attitudes toward each other. The Lord gives very gracious counsel in Verse 18—I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich and that thou mayest be clothed in white raiment so the shame of thy nakedness do not appear and anoint thine eyes with eye salve, that thou mayest see. We therefore see Christ gives rich spiritual blessings to all those who really serve him.

The next remedy is sharp and cutting. Jesus says in Verse 19, "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten, be zealous therefore and repent." It is right and fitting for an individual and a church to be alert—wide-awake, and ready to live the golden rule every day. It would keep harmony and real Christian activity. Without it we will dwell in the church, lukewarm—spiritually thoughtless—not regarding each other as we should.

The greatest remedy is more communion with God. We read in Verse 20, If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with me. Invites him in. This verse was said to the church. When this takes place, real spiritual worship begins. He loves his church and lingers near. He longs to be invited in. He tarries at the door and knocks. He knows the church can never be restored to her first love until he comes in. He desires to bless her. But how awful for a church to keep him on the outside by their indifference. There must have been too much worldly noise on the inside for them to hear. Their spiritual ears were closed. At least he seemed forced to say, "I wish you were either cold or hot, you are lukewarm. I will spew you out of my mouth." I reject thee with abhorrence.

The church of today should be careful or she may fall into such condemnation. During the summer months just ahead of us will be full of temptation and if not careful there will be a growing indifference in regard to spiritual things. Our desire for ease and worldly pleasure may be greatly increased. May the Lord keep us from lukewarmness, and give us a great desire to serve him in spirit and in truth.

Awake

If the world is to be saved, there must come an unprecedented revival in the church of Jesus Christ—a revival as comprehensive in its scope and purpose as the broad life of the world. It must begin in the souls of individual men and women, and must be so thoroughgoing as to put to shame that type of professional evangelist who relies on the mere signing of cards and the raising of hands as the evidence of success. The hearts of saints and sinners alike must be scourged of all unrighteousness. The souls of Christians, both ministers and laymen, must feel the "Woe is me!" and the urge of a "dying man unto dying men." A new zeal for the Kingdom of God based upon the self-sacrifice of the Cross itself must take possession of the church. And the revival must go out of the church door into the pulsing life of business, society, the nation, and the world. The refining fire must lead from Sunday to Monday and Tuesday and every other day of the week.

Christians need to be so "revived" that they will not only sing and pray, but will have courage to denounce evil in the world of affairs and in governments, and be brave enough in the face of criticism and ridicule to insist that the Jesus way of life shall prevail among the nations. It is no hour for compromisers, for weaklings, for men so busy admiring and analyzing their own religious feelings that they piously allow the world to go to the devil. We are in a death struggle for control with a menacing monster who threatens civilization and the very life of the world. "Awake, thou that sleepest!"—Zion's Herald.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Peace

By Helen Garber

OUR SCRIPTURE

I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou Lord, only makest me dwell in safety (Ps. 4:8). The Lord will bless his people with peace (Ps. 29:11). Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace (Ps. 37:37). Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee (Isa. 26:3). These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace (John 16:33). Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ (Romans 5:1). For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us (Eph. 2:14). And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus (Phil. 4:7). PEACE I LEAVE WITH YOU, MY PEACE I GIVE UNTO YOU: NOT AS THE WORLD GIVETH, GIVE I UNTO YOU (John 14:27).

OUR MEDITATION

Through Christ on the cross, peace was made,
My debt by his death was all paid,
No other foundation is laid
For peace, the gift of God's love.

When Jesus as Lord I had crown'd,
My heart with this peace did abound;
In him a rich blessing I found,
Sweet peace, the gift of God's love.

In Jesus at peace I abide,
And while I keep close to his side,
There's nothing but peace can betide,
Sweet peace, the gift of God's love.

Peace, peace, sweet peace,
Wonderful gift from above;
Oh wonderful, wonderful peace,
Sweet peace, the gift of God's love.

How men are striving to find the way to lasting peace! Centuries ago, the world was richly blessed by the life of One whose every moment was filled with sweet and lasting peace. He was human as are we. When assailed by the Tempter, he replied victoriously from a peaceful soul. When cleansing the temple, he had a peace in the knowledge of right-doing. He was buffeted, scorned, stoned. He was misunderstood, denied, forsaken. But, oh! the tranquility, the peace, the calm in the walk of that life in spite of these adversities. He was forsaken and denied by his dearest friends in the hour of trial. He was smitten and mocked in the purple robe and crown of thorns. Still his soul was as peaceful and calm as the smiling summer sea. He hung on the cross with sinners. He was forsaken of God. Yet, at the end of all, a peaceful and victorious soul expressed itself, "It is finished." How insignificant are our trials compared with these, and yet, how little does our soul taste of the sweet peace that encompassed the whole of his being!

Later there followed in the steps of this Prince of Peace, the Apostle Paul. He, too, was misunderstood, beaten, imprisoned. He was "in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren." In spite of these perils, his soul was peaceful through faith in God's grace which was sufficient for him. With such peace, he could say, "I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake." What a wonderful thing in Paul's life that he did appropriate by faith this peace of God through our Lord Jesus Christ!

This matchless peace was not only for the Son of God, nor for the Apostle Paul alone. This same peace is for whosoever believeth in him and will appropriate it by faith. One of the richest and yet most neglected of the bequests of Christ to his followers is that of his peace. "My peace I give unto you." This peace is not a mere scrap of paper, nor a negotiation of diplomats. It is a "Legacy of Peace, such as filled his own breast with unruffled calm." Along with the many sweet and comforting thoughts recorded in John fourteen through sixteen, Christ gives to his disciples and believers his peace, that which "filled his own glorious nature, and kept it so calm and still amid the storms that swept around his pathway through the world. This peace he waits to give. Standing beside some reader of these lines—who, it may be, is careworn and anxious, the head aching with anxious thought, the heart sick, and the brow furrowed with deep lines of care—he speaks and says, "My peace I give unto you." Why not take him at his word and let that peace "which passeth all understanding keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

In John 20:19, 21, 26, we have a threefold benediction of peace from Christ to his disciples. In the first, we have expressed the PEACE OF FORGIVENESS, THE PEACE

OF EVENING. The disciples had assembled and closed the doors for fear of the intruding of Jews. They had made provision to shut out disturbance, but oh! the thoughts of unfaithfulness, of cowardice, of desertion! How they did hover over their disquieted spirits! Such could not be shut out. How often are we in the same condition! The morning is bright and inspiring, but as the shades of evening fall, there comes to us a remembrance of the quick word that slipped away from our thoughts, that selfish act, that hurtful criticism, that outburst of irritability. How we did mar that beautiful day! But standing by to comfort our hearts is the Peace-giver saying, "My peace I give unto you." He shows us his scarred hands and pierced side that we may believe that we have full forgiveness. "At such times, let us gratefully accept what he brings; and wrap ourselves about in the mantle of his tender, forgiving grace, as the dark brown earth of winter wraps itself in the mantle of soft, white snow."

The next benediction is the PEACE OF SERVICE, THE PEACE OF MORNING. What a joy it gives to our soul when we know we are in God's will. This joy brings peace indescribable. "My peace I give unto you." "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." Is it not sweet to begin each day with a prayer that our walk that day may be according to God's will. With his peace we may live a tranquil life, for he who sends us forth knows the plan and he alone can give the strength to accomplish it. Let us draw apart each morning until we hear him say to us, "My peace I give unto you."

The last benediction is the PEACE IN SORROW, THE PEACE OF DARK HOURS. There is a blessed peace when one is victor over doubt. Thomas was still doubting. He could not believe that his Lord had risen. His risen Lord stood by his side saying, "My peace I give unto you." This is the peace that rivals doubt. There is indeed a heavy sadness upon the heart when "a whole storehouse of blessings has awaited our turning the key of faith in the golden lock, but we seem to have utterly lost it, and can only lie helpless at the feet of Christ." Then, is he saying, "My peace I give unto you." This peace will banish all sorrow, and drive away all fears. "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you."

OUR PRAYER

Our gracious Father, who alone can soothe the human breast, we come humbly to thee with thanksgiving to seek that peace which Jesus gives. We thank thee for thy Son, his life and his redeeming blood. We thank thee that he did not leave us comfortless, but sent the Holy Spirit to bring peace to our hearts. We pray that thou wilt give us the grace to live a true Christian life. May we have faith enough to trust in thee at all times. Fill us with thy holy Spirit. Help us to abstain from those things which are of this world and which lead us astray. May we have a peace in the knowledge of thy will. We pray in the name of Christ who gave his all for us. Amen.

PUTTING THE LORD LAST

They were making a drive to raise funds for an addition to the African Baptist church. Two colored sisters called on old Uncle Berry, an aged negro, who lived on the outskirts of the village, and explained the purpose of their visit and asked the aged darkey to give something toward the cause.

"Lawzy, sisters, I sho would like to help you-all along," he said, "but I just ain't got it. Why, I has the hardest time to keep paying a little something on what I already owe round here."

"But," said one of the collectors, "you know you owe the Lord something, too."

"Yes, dat's right sister," said the old man, "but he ain't pushing me like my other creditors is."—United Presbyterian.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

Discouragement

The first result of the attempt to free the people was a worse slavery. As a result there came discouragement. There is always a dangerous moment when we first realize the long process of the work, and the disappointments which may come all along the way. This first abortive attempt trained the leader, and unified the nation much more than an immediate success could have done. And it showed the power of Jehovah more than any other way.

The Object of the Plagues was twofold: (1) to make Pharaoh and the Egyptians feel and realize the greatness and justice and power of Jehovah, so that they would let the people go; and (2) to exalt God in the hearts of the Israelites, so that they would trust him through the long and difficult way to their new home.

Hardening the Heart

Every one of the three words "to make hard," "to make strong," and "to make heavy," is employed to express Pharaoh's own treatment of himself, before it is applied to any work of God, as actually taking place already. In the narrative of what actually took place it is not till after the sixth plague, and the seventh use of the word, that it is said that the Lord hardened his heart. God made the natural laws under which Pharaoh acted, and by misusing which his heart was hardened. Every act of resistance and disobedience always hardens the heart.

The Preparations for the Passover and for a sudden departure from the land, were made after the threat of the death of the first-born, while the danger hung over Pharaoh and the land, but the blow had not fallen. That is why it was possible for the nation to make the rapid move for freedom which was to bring them to the Red Sea before Pharaoh changed his mind about releasing them. Each of the directions given marks this preparation for a long journey: the long flowing robes were girded about the loins; shoes or sandals, not worn in the house or at meals, were fastened to the feet; and the traveler's staff was taken in hand. They were also to eat it standing, in immediate readiness to go. These applied only to the first Passover.

Strike It

This was their part of the work, as the saving them was God's part. God did not need to see this, in order to know where his people lived, but it was a test of their obedience and faith. It showed that they believed in God's Word and his promises, and accepted God's provision for their safety. So our act of faith is believing Christ's Word, and receiving him as our Savior, and obeying him as our Master. By faith we are saved.

Repentance

is still the condition of entering the kingdom of God; putting away the evil leaven of sin, every wrong motive, every unworthy thought, every sinful deed. We need with every act of consecration to eat the bitter herbs of consciousness of sin, of sorrow, repentance or remorse.

The Value of Anniversary Days

1. They keep before the mind the great truths which the events commemorate. "Through the constant observance of this ordinance, their literature, their religion, their character as a people, were largely moulded; and, in an age when books were almost unknown, the constant representation of this first great scene in their history served all the purposes which today are answered by our children's histories and our public schools." —William M. Taylor, D.D.

2. It ever reminded them of the privilege and duty of beginning anew their lives, of making a new era, a new epoch. It was a special time for good resolutions.

It is good for us to commemorate special days which mark eras in our lives, as birth-days, wedding days, New Year's days, graduation days; and those which mark epochs in our national life, Fourth of July, Washington's Birthday, Thanksgiving Day,—patriotism of every country is cherished by the celebration of its birthdays or its great eras of development,—and those which commemorate the great events of our Christian religion, as Christmas and Easter.

The Lord's Supper was instituted in connection with the Passover, and is to the disciples of Jesus what the Passover was to the Jews. It causes us to remember (1) that our salvation is the gift of God; (2) that he has redeemed us from a worse than Egyptian bondage; (3) that the redemption was by the sacrifice of the Lamb of God; (4) that we must apply this sacrifice by faith and obedience, or it will not avail to us; (5) that Jesus is the food of the soul; (6) that all life may be sanctified; (7) that we are bought with a price, and therefore belong to God; (8) that we are not alone in our salvation, but are united, first in the family and then in the church, by a bond of union; (9) it is a prophecy of Christ's coming again.

Christ, the Lamb of God

(1) He was perfect, without spot or blemish, or fault of any kind. (2) He was innocent. His death was from no fault of his. (3) He died in the prime of his life. (4) He was appointed of God. (5) He was slain, a sacrifice for others, a substitute. (6) He was offered at the season and the hour of the Paschal sacrifice, the beginning of a new year and a new era. (7) Not a bone was broken. This was true of his body and of his spiritual work. We are saved by "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29); "who knew no sin," yet was "made sin for us" (2 Cor. 5:21; 1 Pet. 1:19).

Thanks to Dr. Gribble

The Star Class of the Denver, Indiana, Brethren Sunday school wishes to thank Dr. Florence Gribble, our beloved missionary, through this paper for her kind answers to twenty-one of our scholars who wrote her notes and sent small gifts to her. We so much appreciate her inspiring message she sent on the post cards from France—the message started on the first card and ended on the twenty-first card. We hope to do more in the near future and will promise our prayers for the further success of her noble, useful life and if we never meet her on earth, we trust we may all be able to meet her in her well deserved home in heaven.

Yours in Christ,

MRS. T. D. FABRETUS, Teacher.

At Work Among Our Brethren Sunday Schools

By M. A. Stuckey

Carefully hidden and neatly tucked away in the rolling hill lands of West Virginia is the little city of Terra Alta. Sitting here on the veranda of the home of an aged and faithful herald of the Gospel, Brother Glenn, I am reminded of an obligation of making another report to our church organ.

Perhaps this pleasantry and privilege should be engaged in more often than it really is by our workers. Certainly our editor will not resent the presentment of church happenings and successes; and also varied experiences and interesting sidelights, if they are not unduly magnified or politely disrobed of their actual truth. In fact, it is a growing conclusion in the mind of the writer that it requires a Christianity of the superlative degree to pen the results of one's own work and not be guilty of at least partial hypocrisy.

With what degree of success this report will succeed in accomplishing what is suggested above is a matter of speculation only right now. What is to follow will determine the failure or success of this effort. Barring many trivial and uninteresting-to-the-public experiences, a delineation of major impres-

Local Fluctuations, Steady Progress

By Rev. Stanley Addison, President of the Massachusetts Christian Endeavor Union

Now and again we hear some one talking about Christian Endeavor as if it were an organization once strong numerically but now a waning movement. The idea gets abroad because many forget that the local organization is not a stable thing. Christian Endeavor is a young people's organization. It fluctuates along with the rise and fall in the numbers of young people in a church or community. It has its years of fruition and then, due to these varying conditions, its years which appear barren.

Through all these merely local changes, the great movement forges ahead. It has had a phenomenal growth in its forty-four years of life. That its founder, Dr. Francis E. Clark, is still alive and yet its members reach over the four-million mark, speaks for itself. The International Convention at Portland would convert the most sceptical. The leaders of Christian Endeavor are men not only of deep consecration to "Christ and the Church," but are men of splendid intellectual standing whose achievements in business and the professions have been noteworthy. Only a feeling of privilege could possess one who associated with the men who are guiding under God, the destiny of this organization of young people, whose object in life is Christian service in the spirit of the great Master.—C. E. World.

Emphasize the Quiet Hour

By Rev. Thomas J. Cate, President of the New Hampshire Christian Endeavor Union

There is one thing especially that I think Christian Endeavorers ought to lay even greater stress upon than ever. When so many things, business, school, pleasure, what-not clamor for our attention and fill full our time, it is tremendously important that we do not allow our touch with God to become remote, our love to grow cold.

What I would urge is the re-emphasizing of personal devotion, the cultivating of personal piety. We vitally need the Quiet Hour, the engaging daily in a period of detachment from the world.

Upon this, it seems to me, depend all our spiritual affairs; and only by means of its practice shall we be enabled to live out the life Christ wants. This is my conception of the supreme concern of a Christian Endeavorer.—C. E. World.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for July 25)

Radio Messages from Africa Acts 8:34-38

Hello, Boy and Girl Christians of America:

I am a little negro girl. My name is Monongo and I live in the French part of this great continent of Africa. Eight or nine years ago when I was a very little baby, my father fought with your people in the big World War. Wasn't that war terrible? Mother was so worried about father all the time that he was gone, just as your folks were worried about their relatives! When he came back he did not know me. You see, I was a very tiny baby when he left but when he came back I was over two years old. I try to get him to tell me stories now about the time when he traveled away up into Europe and saw all that new land but he says that stories like he knows about the war are too terrible to tell to grown ups and that it would be terrible to tell such stories to a little girl. Does your father feel that way about war, too? I wish that we could keep them from ever fighting again, don't you?

When father was away at the war, he found out what wonderful doctors, you Americans have. As he was on his trip back home he happened to pass through a small village where a group of people were gathered together. He wondered what was going on; so he went near and looked in their midst. Then he was truly surprised for he saw a kind American doctor setting the broken arm of a small boy who had just fallen out of a tree. At once, father began to ask questions and soon he found out that the doctor was a missionary and that he lived in a near-by town. The people all liked the doctor and what do you think they called him? Their name for him was "Nenguelisam" which means "Maker of the people to be glad." I think that is a nice name for a kind doctor.

Some time after father came home and we had all been together for a while, when mother got sick. We worried about her. I was only three years old at the time but I can remember how lost and unhappy I felt that summer without my mother carrying me around and looking after me. Some of the men near here are awfully mean to their wives and if they get sick they let them die, but father knew that men in other countries would not do that, so he tried to help mother. Finally, when he saw that she was not getting any better, he decided that we should all go to see the Missionary doctor. Soon we set forth. We had a long trip, and father had to have a man go along to help him carry mother, but at last we arrived at the hut where we were going.

I surely want to thank all of you who helped to send this wonderful doctor to us. He made mother well and besides that, he did many other things for us. Your doctor that you sent us is a doctor of hearts as well as of bodies. He is a friend of babies, children and men and women. He has taught us to love Jesus and to be happy. I am in school in the missionary school for children. My mother and father are both working for the Mission here and are doing great things for our Savior, Jesus.

I hope and pray each day with the Mission teachers that you may send many more teachers, preachers and doctors way down here in dark Africa. We need them to send out into the great, great districts where none have ever heard of Jesus. Will you do your part in sending us help?

Bedtime Prayer for a Little Child

(A new version of an old favorite, by Oliver Huckel)

Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray, Thee, Lord, Thy child to keep;
I know that Thou art always near,
And Thy dear arms are round me here.

(Note—Many mothers may be glad to teach this version to their children, for it is free from the thought of "My soul to keep," which means nothing to a little child, and it also omits the unwholesome apprehension, "if I should die before I wake," which sometimes is a distress to a sensitive child. This version emphasizes only the positive, comforting, and quieting thought of the Heavenly Father and his loving care, and is, therefore, in harmony with modern pedagogy and psychology, as well as with divine revelation.—The Congregationalist.

Under the Southern Cross

By C. F. Yoder

The most difficult task that missionaries have in South America is not to get the people to accept the Gospel who have never heard it, but to convince the people who think they know all about it that they really know little or nothing of the true Gospel. Christianity, which they confuse with Romanism, has been discredited, and it is hard for them to believe that the missionaries are different from the priests.

However, we note with joy that there is constant progress, not only in preparing the way of the Gospel, but also in getting converts to openly accept it.

Laboulaye has been one of our hardest fields, because the Gospel had been put to shame by both the priests and some evangelical workers and nominal believers. But Brother Istueta has been a man of prayer, and his life has won the confidence of many people, and at last the seed sown is bearing fruit. Since writing last I have baptized four people there,—two men and their wives. There are other candidates who could not be baptized at this time. One man is the Mr. Perez, a "healer" of whom I wrote in a former letter. He has presented the work with a new Ford car costing $800.00 U. S., equipped for evangelizing the district and will pay its upkeep. There are 18 good towns within reach of Laboulaye, without trespassing on the districts of our other missions. In a recent letter from Brother Istueta he says: This week I visited Villa Rosi and had fine meetings Tuesday and Wednesday. Brother Perez and wife and little girl accompanied me. Sunday we had forty in our Sunday school here and thirty-seven in the home of Perez." This brother and his wife mean to devote themselves from now on to helping all they can in evangelizing the district and in this can be very useful, as they have hundreds of friends."

Good news also comes from Buenos Aires. Brother Jose Anton writes as follows: "On May 25 (Independence Day) we had a fine program and there were more than 100 children in attendance. We have meetings here only three nights in the week, but they are well attended unless the weather is bad.

"But we now have meetings in a new place, farther out. A family of believers named Robles, who formerly attended our meetings in Loria Street, moved to Flores and bought a lot in a beautiful district and built a lovely hall which they have dedicated for the preaching of the Gospel and have given me the use of it for the evangelization of this district. I accepted their offer, unconditionally, and will hold meetings there on the nights when we have none here. The priest in Flores is conducting a campaign against us and a number have fallen into his trap."

To this I should add that the brethren in Cabrera and Deheza are making heroic efforts to raise enough money to get an auto for their work, and will probably soon succeed, and then will be able to reach a number of new towns. There are some indications that the Lord will also provide one for Alejandro. As the coming of the Lord draws near he seems to be providing the means to hasten the evangelization of all the people. Our big coach is ready to go out again and we are expecting Brother Yett this week to go with it, and probably Brother Siccardi, who was with it before. It will go to towns not reached in any other way.

In Rio Cuarto I preached a week on popular sins and another on Christian duties, and last night gave the invitation and nine accepted. They have all been learning the Gospel for quite a while. We are to have a consecration meeting, a business meeting, baptisms and a love feast this week and then I hope to help a bit in all our other missions.

Home Mission News

Kentucky Missions

Rev. and Mrs. M. D. Early arrived safely at Riverside Institute, Lost Creek, Kentucky, from their home in Los Angeles, California. They have come to fill the vacancies made when Brother and Sister Young left for their new positions at the Otterbein Home. The Mission Board was well pleased with the accomplishments of the Youngs during their stay of several years at Riverside. We wish them well in their new work. We are assured by a number of our good Brethren that we can expect faithful and efficient service from the Earlys, as they have had considerable experience and have proven themselves to be dependable. We know they will need our prayers and will be truly grateful for any help we can give them.

A Useful Gift

Returns on a Missionary's Investment

By Elizabeth McCauley, Lutheran Mission, Guntur, India

"It seems to me you missionaries have the most hopeless work in the world," said an English lady to me not long ago. "Yet you never seem depressed. What is it that makes you so happy?"

The answer was short and simple: "The work is not ours but God's."

In addition to the chief joy of working with a divine Partner in giving the Good News to people and showing them the very best way to live, there are countless human joys every day that help to make up the great "hundred-fold" promised by our Master. Imagine yourself experiencing some of these.

Letters from two of last year's training students express loving appreciation for the blessings of the school and hostel. In far away villages they are seeking to tell the Good Tidings and to live out what they learned while in training.

A small brown figure comes to your door before daylight one morning with a little home-made birthday card on which little Yosepu has laboriously printed in red and black ink: "Happy Birthday." Money wouldn't buy that card!

A police constable, who has just lost his wife, comes to talk with you of the virtues of the dear departed one. He knows that you too, loved her and wants to hear you say over and over what a good woman she was.

A bright letter from a bright young girl now attending the Woman's Christian College, Madras, tells you all about her studies, friends and teachers in the College. She is confident of your interest and sympathy.

Two Bible women come from a distant village to tell of God's dealings in the lives of the women in the homes where they teach and of twenty-one high caste people baptized recently as a result of the Gospel message in their village.

When you go to Madras on business, one of the former orphan boys, now a member of the Madras Police Force, meets you at the station and insists on doing everything he can for you throughout the day. In the evening before your train leaves he brings his little wife, of whom he is very proud, and you three sit at one of the station cafe tables while he treats you to tinned biscuits and "sorda."

A young Christian teacher tells you that he has received his first salary of $10 a month and has set aside one tenth of it for the Lord's work. He asks to help support one of the orphan boys and goes away with face beaming as he contemplates the pleasure of caring for one of Jesus' little ones.

One morning you find on your desk a little wooden easel on which is a fearful picture of the Resurrection. One of the carpenter boys tells you: "I did it myself, Amma. See how nicely I colored the picture with colored crayons." The pleasure of his face and voice is worth traveling far to see and hear.

On Sabbath night, after church, one of the teachers comes as usual for prayer for the boys. You kneel together before the Throne and you hear him pour out his heart for one of the boys who is wayward, for another who is lying at death's door with fever; for Laza who has gone to school in another village. He praises God for rain for the garden, for little Gideon's recovery from illness, for the helpfulness of Arthur and Ratnam, for the

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

All Are Pulling for Ashland Endowment

REPORTS FROM SOME OF THE SMALL CHURCHES

Our membership is too small for us to canvas the larger churches and pass by the small ones. It is the plan to carry the campaign to every church, small or large, and to every family in the denomination as far as we are able.

This report will include four small churches which are really mission churches, as they are not large enough to be self-supporting. Three of these, Kittanning, Blanco and Brush Valley are being cared for by Brother M. A. Witter. Brother Witter came here a few years ago by request of the Pennsylvania State Mission Board and has done a fine piece of work. The Brush Valley church is located in the country, about 12 miles from Kittanning, and has now a membership of nearly 100. They rebuilt here a few years ago and are serving the community and have a thriving Sunday school. The people here are farmers and day laborers. I was received well and all did their "bit." THE TOTAL GIFT FROM BRUSH VALLEY WAS $353.44. While this is not large, but back of it is the spirit of loyalty and desire for a greater Ashland College.

The Blanco church, which is about 7 miles from Kittanning, had been abandoned until a year ago, when Brother Witter opened the building for services. It is a good frame structure and the work gives encouragement for growth. A good country Sunday school is maintained and four or five families are identified with the church. The gift here was $17.90.

The church at Kittanning is very promising and has made a good growth in the last few years. It is located in a needy section of the city and at the present rate of growth, it will not be long before it is self-supporting. Brother Witter lives here. He and his family are held in high esteem and if he remains a few years longer his desires will be fulfilled in seeing a good strong Brethren church in Kittanning. The total gift of the Kittanning church was $579.09.

The Vandergrift church is about 20 miles from Kittanning and is located in a thriving business city, in which is located a large steel mill. This is only two miles from Brother I. B. Wampler's old home, Apollo.

The church here has had a struggle, with many discouragements, but yet has some of God's faithful ones, who love their Lord and the Brethren church and are willing to sacrifice and support its work. We should have a good church in this growing city. Vandergrift gave $165.00 toward the Endowment.

The total gift of this group of small churches is $1115.48. While this does not show up as big as some of the other groups on account of numerical and financial strength, yet before God and in loyalty to the church, they stand in the front ranks. The spirit of the campaign is, Everyone having a part, and doing their best. So the Kittanning group, pushes the hand on the dial $1,000.00 strong, and then some.

DEDICATION OF THE FORT WAYNE BRETHREN CHURCH

On February 9th, 1926, the two mission boards met for the first time in the Y. M. C. A. of Fort Wayne, to consider the propriety of building a Mission church in this city.

There was then not a dollar in sight to buy a lot, nor to build a church. Now, through the kind providence of God, we intend to dedicate the First Brethren church of Fort Wayne, August 1st, 1926.

We hereby extend a cordial invitation to all the adjacent churches, to come and enjoy the day with us. There will be three services—Morning, afternoon, and evening. Dr. W. H. Beachler of South Bend, will have charge of the services; and I am sure that means a great day for those that come.

A special invitation is given to the members of the Mission Boards, and the pastors of the various churches.

Why not dismiss your services that morning, and give Fort Wayne a boost, Brethren?

There is an old adage, that says, "Well begun is half done"—The dedication of a mission church, in the second largest city in the state, should be considered an event of more than ordinary importance, it seems to me.

The church is located on East Leith Street, in the 400 block—Leith street is one block south of the Pontiac street car line,—and the church is two and one-half blocks east of Calhoun street.

A basket dinner will be served at the church, and you need not go away hungry if you come.

J. L. KIMMEL, Pastor,

918 E. Rudisill Boulevard.

RELIANCE, VIRGINIA

Brother S. P. Fogle was up and preached for us on this Lord's Day. He gave us a good sermon from a text in Revelation, 21st chapter, verse five, a part of the verse, "Behold I make all things new." Brother Fogle is with us every fourth Sunday of each month, and we rejoice in his coming. His sermon was a great comfort and blessing to us. We were assured that these old, worn bodies of ours will be renewed and made to dwell in a new city which ever abides. And there we shall be with the dear Lord and his children, all the true followers of the meek and lowly Lamb of God. It is a comfort to me in my old days, living alone and wearing out to know we all shall be reunited some sweet day in God's kingdom—husband, father, mother, brothers, sisters, all who have gone on before and are with our blessed Lord. Thank God he told Peter we could come afterward and ever be with the Lord and with one another.

Brother Fogle came the third Sunday in May and held a week's meeting. We were rained out one night, but it was a glorious meeting, closing the fourth Sunday in May with a blessed Lovefeast. There were 32 at the Lord's tables, one of which was our Sister Fry, 88 years old and a faithful servant of the Lord. The meeting was held at 3:30 P. M., so that the older ones could attend, also that those from a distance could reach home before night. There were some from Washington, D. C.—Brother Fogle and son, Brother Lemon and Brother Frank Baty and wife. And Brother Stokes and family and Sister Crabel and Sister Coon were with us from Martinsburg. There were three more new members added to the church,—and they said that Reliance was dead! The dear Lord has not forgotten us, if some of our preachers have. The new members were, Sister Little and Brother and Sister Creston Crabel of Front Royal, Virginia.

Brother Lemon from Washington, D. C., came on Saturday and preached for us on Saturday night and on Sunday morning, and assisted in the communion service, all of which was appreciated by us.

Dear brothers and sisters of the Evangelist family, pray for our little band at Reliance, Warren County, Virginia.

sions of field activity for at least the past two months will herewith be confined to paper.

While completing work in Northern Indiana, a brief side trip was taken to Dayton, Ohio, for the purpose of participating in their yearly workers' banquet and conference. Surely our whole denomination may feel proud of a school like that which Brother Orion E. Bowman superintends. It is our largest and for that reason, and others, our very best in many ways. Well may some of our other schools send to this place visitation committees for personal inspection, profit and gain. The privilege also of remaining over for Sunday worship and work was afforded your secretary. It was highly appreciated.

Being in closer proximity to our Kentucky field at Dayton than at any other point, a brief visit was the result. Our National Association has always maintained a high interest in the mountain work of this state and promises to continue its support. We can be elated again and again over the good work of this field. Education in religion and secular subjects as it is administered at the Riverside institution—and that too at the hands of some of the most brilliant college graduates our brotherhood has produced in times past—is a matter of attention meriting our worthy support. When a visitor is informed that over ninety-eight per cent of matriculating non-Christian students become Christian before high school work is completed, he feels the thrill of success that is attending the efforts of those who labor for the betterment of Kentucky life. Complying with sentiments already expressed, we may easily call this our best missionary project.

Krypton was also visited. In spite of difficulties and discouragements, this Sunday school had a representation of over eighty members when the writer was there. Future work has more promise now than it has had for a season. A turn of events was needed to push our cause forward and seemingly that turn has been accomplished by the faithful and assiduous labor of Brother and Sister Kinzie. Their Napfor work among the white and colored population evidenced their desire to be of utmost helpfulness to those who have lacked the gracious ministrations of the preached Word.

Shortly afterward work was resumed in Indiana and nearly completed. From this district a jump was made, by instruction of our board, to enter Pennsylvania and the Maryland-Virginia Districts. Only a few schools were visited in western Pennsylvania and since that time your unworthy servant has been traveling among our Maryland-Virginia Sunday schools. The Indiana and Shenandoah Valley church schools have this much in common: They possess small schools. Of a verity larger bodies exist, but their problems are those of small rural schools. Only recently has there been an extended effort on the part of publishers of Sunday school literature to meet the definite needs of such institutions. And now that such recognition has been given, some one non-denominational house is sending out supplies to our schools, free of charge for one quarter—to meet their specific needs. Accordingly more of our secretaries than ever are ordering non-Brethren literature for adults and young people's study. Pastors and superintendents! your own denominational company publishes a worthy and superior grade of lesson studies and helps. Use them to be consistent and wise. Inform your workers aright on this problem.

Our small rural schools are doing a great service in furnishing our college and seminary at Ashland with recruits. Let us lay hold of our opportunities to enlist our best life through God's training school—the Sunday school. Let us keep our young people informed and indoctrinated there. If the pulpit fails to do this—and many do—then we may still have a group of intelligent people thoroughly furnished and thoroughly Brethren for future generations.

Tonight the Accident (Maryland) people will be visited; tomorrow, the Grafton Brethren; and then there will come a vacation of rest, recreation, and study, after which more schools in the state of Pennsylvania may expect a little secretarial attention. Until then and ever afterwards may our Sunday school teachers and officers patiently and persistently sanctify themselves that those who are taught may feel increasingly the seriousness of Bible study and Godly living.

Addenda: New Jersey, Delaware, and Ohio churches cannot be visited during this conference year.

Louisville, Ohio.

BROADENING SCOPE OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN BRAZIL

One of the most significant actions of the last Convention of the Brazil Sunday School Union was the change it authorized in the Constitution of the Brazil Sunday School Union, allowing it to go outside the field of Sunday school work for the purpose of promoting the ends of Religious Education wherever possible, but especially in Daily Vacation Bible School work, and in connection with the ever increasing number of schools of grammar, high school and junior college grade under the direction of the denominations and of individual churches. The policies of these schools are largely controlled by the "University Federation" meeting annually to take counsel concerning their interests.

The Sunday School Convention constituted the Board of Directors of the Sunday School Union a Council of Religious Education empowering it to add to its number whoever it might choose and elect its own officers. Then the University Federation, meeting in December, named a committee of its own to co-operate with the Council in efforts to improve the religious instruction in church day schools and colleges. Probably little will be done this present year owing to the Union's General Secretary being away a large part of the year on furlough but on his return it is hoped to press vigorously the possibilities of this new relationship and such matters as would fall to the newly constituted Council of Religious Education.

Rev. Herbert S. Harris, General Secretary of the Brazil Sunday School Union, arrived at New York on May 31 via S. S. "Voltaire."

Is it not significant that the "Voltaire" is carrying Messengers of the Word?

GIVING THE BIBLE ITS CHANCE

Some years since a family moved to the West. They secured a piece of land, and began to make themselves at home. As years passed, that home assumed shape and acquired beauty, and the wild land became a rich farm. Beyond their expectations, even, they prospered in all they undertook.

Among the few books taken with them from their former home was the old family Bible. They had never used it much before; they used it even less now. It was kept on the stand at first; but in the small house it proved to be in the way, and was moved from place to place, till at last it was thrust on to an old shelf over the door of the cabin. When they entered their "new house" the Bible was put away with many other things, "too good to leave behind, but not of much use."

Many years passed, and one of their children was sick. For many days they watched at the bedside. At last the doctor said, "Tonight will be the crisis. As she passes it, so will she live or pass away." It was a fearful night. Most people know of some such a night—a night never to be forgotten. Hour after hour those parents waited. Midnight had passed, and the clock had struck one, and still no change. At length mother said:

"I cannot bear it any longer, I feel that we must pray and ask God to help us."

"But I have not prayed for years—not since I was a boy at home. And our Bible; I do not know that we have any."

"I think I can find it."

She went and sought the Book, which for years had been an incumbrance. She brought it out, and they both sat down and read it. O, how different it seemed now! Passages they had learned when children now glowed with brightness. How rich! how comforting! how wonderful it was! It seemed as if God was right there with them, and talking to them. For a long while they read on, and at last knelt down and prayed as they never prayed before. They did not pray for the life of their child, but for themselves that God would heal them. And God heard them, and that night of sorrow was turned into a morning of joy. To their bliss, their child awoke in the morning refreshed, and from that time began to recover.—The Evangelical Messenger.

CITIZENS OF ETERNITY

He hath set eternity in their heart.—Ecc. 3:11.

"Why is man the most miserable creature in God's universe?" The question was asked by Lamennais, the founder of the most religious school of thinkers in modern France. What think you was the answer? It is, "Because he has one foot in the finite and the thereby torn asunder, not by four horses, as in the horrible old times, but between two worlds."

The sentence of the Frenchman comes to mind as we read the Book of Ecclesiastes. Here is this ancient pessimist going out in search of the highest good. As he trudges from place to place only to meet with fresh disappointment at every turn, he certainly is a pitiable figure. First he goes to the school where wisdom utters her voice but the highest good has no place in the curriculum. Then he turns to the garden where pleasure spreads her lures but good is not found on the gay white way. Having failed both in school and in garden, he turns to the market where business is the order of the day, but good is not for sale at any shop. Now by the time he has gotten over the shock of his third disappointment, by the time he has gotten down to the eleventh verse of the third chapter of the book, the preacher seems to discover why failure has met him everywhere. School and garden and market are all inadequate because man is too big for them. They are not built on the dimensions of the eternal, but he is. They are made out of mud and stone, but man is routed through to the stars. God has set eternity in his heart. God has made him a citizen of two worlds. Heaven lies about him, not only in his infancy but every day. Man soon learns that one world at a time is not enough for him and like a spoiled child he cries for two. Don't blame him! He can't help it. God wrote: "Tomorrow" down in big letters on his heart to keep him from being satisfied with today.—Herbert Booth Smith.

simple faith of the "Little Lights," for the turning from sin of some of the big boys. You thank God that the boys are in the care of a big brother who thinks of their every need and loves them.

"Why are we missionaries happy?" There are a thousand reasons. In the face of such countless opportunities for helpfulness, with such boundless scope for helpfulness and pleasure-giving, the Christian who would not be happy must be an incurable pessimist! The sunshine of God's presence fills our lives and we see his smile in the happy eyes of his children who come to our door.—Missionary Review of the World.

"Got to go for the grocery for my mamma," said the boy. "Won't take me long."

"Richard!" said the warning voice from the next room, and Dick sat heavily down to hunt up the place in the exercise book once more.

When the clock struck three, a very smiling little boy appeared at the door to say, "Now my time's gone." You promised to read to me, mamma, from 'Robinson Crusoe' for half an hour after I finished my playing."

"All right," said mamma, taking up the book. "Where was I? Oh, yes, where Crusoe finds his man Friday! I believe I want a drink," and she put down the book to go to the dining room. Dick sat patiently waiting for her; and when she came, it took a long time to find the place once more.

After she had read a few lines, she saw a lady passing and said, "I must speak to Mrs. Page a minute. Don't lose the place." But when she got up the book flew shut, and it took Dick a long time to find the picture of Friday, as he did not know the page.

"Let me see," said mamma, when she had read almost a page, "isn't this the afternoon for the boy to call for the laundry?"

"No; he comes Tuesday, and this is Monday," said Dick. "Please do read very fast, mamma, for I'm so anxious to hear about Crusoe."

"I'll begin just as soon as I look after that shoe that hurt your foot," said mamma. "Which one?"

"It doesn't hurt a bit now, mamma—honest it doesn't. Please read."

"Time is up," said mamma, as the clock struck the half-hour. "I was only to read twice as long as you practiced."

"You haven't read two pages," said the disappointed little boy. "You lost ever so many minutes of the half hour. I wonder—Are you doing this, mamma, to show me that I lost time, too?"

"What do you think about it?" asked his mother, with a smile.

"I'm going back to play fifteen minutes and see what happens," said Dick. "I think I know what it will be."

When the honest fifteen minutes were gone, mamma was waiting with a slice of bread and jam for Dick and the open book in her hand. Dick thinks the time goes ever so much faster since he doesn't whine and ask questions and waste the moments, and I really believe he is right about the matter.—Exchange.

The Picnic Fred Liked Best

By J. L. Glover

"Hello, Fred! Aren't you going to the picnic?" called the boys and girls at Fred's front gate. "We thought you'd be all ready to join us. What makes you so late?"

"I can't go today, boys. I hope you have a grand time," answered Fred from the porch.

A chorus of dismay rose from the crowd. "But why can't you go? Got to work?"

"No; but there's something else I have to do."

"What on earth! But this holiday time! Come along!"

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

Their Telephone

Two spiders stretched a telephone
From a pear to an apple tree,
Then sat them down at either end
To see what they could see.

"Hello!" said spider Number One To spider Number Two.

"A fly is coming down your way;
Now see what you can do."

"Speak louder," answered Number One.

"I can't hear what you say."

"Too late," replied his crafty friend;
"The fly has gone away."

"Hello! Hello! Dear me," he said,
"I wonder what's the matter!"

Then turned his eyes around to see
What made the dreadful clatter.

A bird in flying through the air
Without the least intention
Had brushed its wing against the wire
And broken the connection.

Dick's Practice Time

Mamma, is it fifteen minutes yet?" called Dick from the piano stool.

"No, dear. Don't talk, but practice," answered mamma from the other room.

"But mamma, my shoe hurts my foot, and I can't think what I'm doing," said Dick, appearing at the door with a forlorn look on his face. "I guess I'll have to take the shoe off."

"Richard, you have lost five minutes now. Go right back to the piano and play your exercises. You will have plenty of time to look after the shoe after a while." Mamma's tone was firm, so Dick gave a sigh and went back to his task.

One, two, three! Bang, bang, bang! Dick was getting down to work at last. Just outside the window a boy shouted, and he had to run and see who it was.

"Hello, Charley!" he called cheerily. "I'm pretty near done with my playing. Wait a few minutes and I'll be out."

"Can't," said Fred good-humoredly. "Don't wait for me, boys."

The crowd went on their way and in two minutes more had forgotten him, Fred thought, listening to their shouts and laughter growing fainter in the distance. But he did not waste time regretting his lost day in the woods. He had another plan for the day. As soon as the crowd was out of sight he went in and began his preparations. First he packed a lunch basket after his own ideas of the subject.

"Plenty of cake, sandwiches, bananas, apples, and oranges; that's the kind of things," he said happily as his mother handed him the various articles. On the very top was laid a box of splendid home-made caramels. That was Lucia's idea, for he had taken her into his confidence about this mysterious picnic of his. Mother knew, of course, but nobody else except Lucia.

When the basket could hold no more, Fred chose from his own special bookshelf his favorite books, "Treasure Island" and "Kidnaped," and wrapped them in a parcel which he stuffed under the string which held the cover on, and thus provided, he set forth on his mysterious expedition all by himself.

Two blocks from home he paused before the door of a small house and rang the bell. A sweet-faced woman opened the door and greeted him in surprised tones. "Why, Fred, is that you? I thought you had gone to the picnic."

"Not to that one; but I came to have a picnic with Hugh if he'd like it, Mrs. May," answered Fred, laughing and setting down his basket, which was no light weight to carry.

A pale boy with one bandaged foot resting on a chair gave a weak shout of delight as Mrs. May ushered Fred into the room. "A picnic with me? Really, Fred? But you didn't give up going to the big picnic to stay with me? O, Fred, you oughtn't!"

"I'd like to know why not," returned Fred. "I thought it would be fun myself; but if you'd rather I went away?"—He stopped and laughed as Hugh put out a weak hand to keep him. "Just see what a lunch I've brought! You've got to help me eat it. And Lucia put some fine games in the basket, too. We'll have a fine picnic if your mother will let me pull your chair out on the porch. It's so bright it won't hurt you, will it, Mrs. May?"

"Why, no, I don't think so." Smiling, Hugh's mother helped to make him comfortable on the sunny porch, and the happy day began.

"I'm so glad you came, but I'm sorry you missed the big picnic," Hugh said once.

"Don't worry; I like this kind best," returned Fred.

as much as we did last week. We have delayed making a report of the offerings received for Publication Day for a long time. The reports have come in very irregularly this year. A few churches that have stated they would send in their offering for this fund have not yet done so, though some of these are to be among the largest gifts received. But we will make a partial report now without waiting longer for those churches that have delayed sending in their offerings.

A Prayer for the Family

By Robert Louis Stevenson

Lord, behold our family here assembled. We thank Thee for the place in which we dwell, for the love that unites us, for the peace accorded us this day, for the hope with which we expect tomorrow; for the health, the work, the food and the bright skies that make our lives delightful; for our friends in all parts of earth. Purge out of every heart the lurking grudge. Give us grace and strength to forbear and persevere. Offenders—give us the grace to accept and forgive offenders. Forgetful ourselves, help us to bear cheerfully the forgetfulness of others. Give us the courage and faith and the quiet mind. Spare us to our friends, soften us to our enemies. Bless us, if it may be, in all our innocent endeavors. If it may not, give us strength to encounter that which is to come, that we be brave in peril, constant in tribulation, temperate in wrath, and in all changes of fortune, down to the gates of death, loyal and loving one to another. As the clay to the potter, as the windmill to wind, as children of their sire, we beseech of Thee this help and mercy for Christ's sake.

The Flaming Heart

It is the flaming heart that sends the burning influence out into the world. It is the life on fire with the Gospel that challenges and changes men's minds, that commands their allegiance, that moves them to action, and that calls forth their sacrifice. It is a passionate zeal for righteousness that expels civic and social wrongs, that remakes a community's life and that sanctifies its interests and activities. Everywhere it is to be found that an overmastering enthusiasm is the outstanding feature of a going concern or a successful movement. It is not the only thing necessary to succeed but it is the thing that first gains a public hearing and first commands general confidence. It is one of the most pronounced differences between defeat and victory and between weakness and power.

The church is suffering tremendously from lack of this very quality. It is not characterized by the great convictions and the dead earnestness that would make for the greatest success. Indeed, this seems to be one of its most noticeable and wide-spread weaknesses. Many a congregation, one is tempted to say, the average congregation, is feeble and ineffective because it is drugged with indifference; it is paralyzed with lukewarmness and unconcern. It only half enjoys its religion; it only half believes the Gospel; it is only half in earnest about the salvation of the lost and the building of the Kingdom of God. And the world knows it, and only half believes the church's message and discounts its efforts in about the same proportion.

There is great need of more flaming hearts both in the pulpit and in the pew. The ministry and the laity alike need to be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire. Our Christian duties rest too lightly upon us; they are too easily pushed aside or too indifferently done. There is too little sensing of the great mission and spirit of the Christ. So heavily did responsibility rest upon him, so burdened was his heart, so urgent seemed his message and so insistent was he on the requirements of righteousness that it was said of him, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up;" his zeal fairly consumed him. That passion has not gripped us as it ought. Very little have we entered into the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ, as did the Apostle Paul. Very little do we feel the urgency and incomparable worth of the cause we have espoused. Whether it be as preacher of the Word, or as janitor of the church, whether as deacons of the congregation or as teachers of the Cradle Roll, there is sore need of more holy enthusiasm and heart yearning. Whatever be our task—and every one has a task and a responsibility before God and the church, whether we have official position or not—we ought to feel and to keep in mind that eternal consequences cluster around the doing of that task. That should make us feel that our duty is bounden and our responsibility inescapable. That was the feeling that made Paul say, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." Every one of us ought to say with equal fervor, "Woe is me if I do not the thing that is given me to do for the extension of the Kingdom of God in the hearts and lives of men." To help turn men's hearts to God and to accomplish the divine will in all human relations ought to be the first duty and the keenly felt responsibility of every disciple of Christ, whether one's endowment is to preach or to sing, to teach or to pray, or to influence lives by personal word and contact.

Paul had the welfare of the souls of his fellowmen so deeply at heart that he said, "I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh" (the Jews). And Moses, too, many centuries before him, had shared so largely the divine vicarious love and compassion for lost and erring humanity that when the children of Israel sinned grossly against God, so much so that he feared even the mercy of God might have found its limit, he prayed, "O this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin—; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. That is the passion that brings into operation the power of God, and that moves the hearts of men. "If thou forgive them not—" If the church suffered so deeply for the sins of men and would intercede as fervently and sacrificially, it could move heaven and earth for their repentance and forgiveness. "I could wish myself accursed!" If we yearned so deeply for the salvation of men, to what lengths would we not go that we might win them! If we loved sinful men with a measure of the love divine that impelled the Son of God to give his life that he might become the Savior of the world, then would we be made ashamed of our feeble efforts and would be driven to deeds of service and sacrifice heretofore unknown.

Isaiah declared, "The Lord's fire is in Zion, and his furnace is in Jerusalem." Does that characterize your church? Does it characterize you? If it does, yours is a church and yours is a life that is purged of meannesses, weaknesses, lusts, passions and sins. It knows from experience the cleansing, saving, sanctifying power of the Gospel in the inner life. It is full of the spirit of service and sacrifice. It has no wish but to do what he wills and no ambition but to accomplish his high purposes. In that revealed will such a church has perfect confidence and to the doing of such a task it is wholly devoted. And the flaming earnestness of such a preacher burns brightly on the altar of faith in God's Word and devotion to the divine will. Of him it may be said, as was said of Basil of old, "He is all on fire, a light for God."

What is the source of such zeal? How are we to keep our hearts flaming for righteousness and truth? Our emotions, overwrought from being played upon by human devices, so soon subside. How can our lives continue to glow with such beauty and to burn with such purifying and illumining power and not be consumed? Some one has said of Arnold of Rugby that "the central fact of his experience was his close, conscious and ever-realized union and friendship with the Lord Jesus Christ, and that in the overflowing fulness of his heart every expression of affection which might pass between earthly friends passed between him and the Divine Man, whom as a Friend, he had in heaven, to whom with an exhaustless enjoyment he clung." And that was the inspiration of his life and the source of his remarkable courage and zeal. And it is such intimate fellowship with him who is our Savior and Friend, ay, and indeed, such identification of our lives with his own as was the burden of his great high priestly prayer that is the source of the flaming heart and the secret of the maintenance of such burning zeal. God give us the courage to desire the flaming heart.

Still the Best Seller

The American Bible Society reports the unprecedented number of 9,069,129 volumes of Scriptures in more than 150 languages and dialects as the total issues for its one hundred and tenth year of service. This represents an increase of nearly two and one-half million volumes over 1924 and exceeds by 1,307,743 the largest number issued in any previous year. The increase over the past year in the home field amounted to 738,855 volumes, while the foreign field reports issues of 1,677,966 volumes more than in 1924. These figures are a source of special satisfaction as they show that the Bible still enjoys a healthy growth of interest in all fields, with the largest gains among the peoples of the Far East.

It is interesting to contemplate the significance of such facts. The Bible came to the people of the West from the Near East. Through numerous translations it has been opened to all races in the Occident and has molded and shaped all that is best in our civilization and remains the priceless heritage of Western Christendom. The Book of Books is now open, through scores of translations, to the people of the Far East. These people are now receiving it in unprecedented numbers. Will it remold and remake oriental as it has occidental civilization? We believe that it will and that these millions of volumes of Scriptures which are annually going into the hands of the oriental peoples will prove to be the seed from which will spring forth a new life and hope in the Far East.

"The Bible Belt"

An interesting reaction to The Literary Digest's symposium on "Prohibition in the Colleges" has come to our notice in The Christian Index. The ably edited paper of the Georgia Baptists. It was the Digest's allusion to the South as "The Bible Belt" that called forth editorial comment from our southern exchange and which we quote in part as follows:

The futile effort of certain popular writers to discount religion and all people who profess religious convictions would be ridiculous were it not so pathetic. Here, for example, is an issue of The Literary Digest, last week's issue, with a symposium on "Prohibition in the Colleges." Evidently, the editors of this journal, which has always fought prohibition, are somewhat aggravated with the unanimity in which the college and university presidents declare that there has been less drinking in the colleges since the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment; and, as they reach that part of the symposium which deals with the answers of the college presidents of the South, they refer to this section as "The Bible Belt."

If such scoffers would but stop to inquire the attitude of the people of the South, which they do not understand in matters of religion any better than they do in other realms, if one is to judge by their misrepresentations, they would discover that we do not regard it as any reflection to be referred to as "The Bible Belt." Our only regret is that we do not more fully merit such a tribute. And we confidently believe that there are many, many people in every section of our nation—even Boston and New York—who would be grateful to have these so-called clever cynics referring to their section as "The Bible Belt."

The Index is right when it suggests that there are many people in every section of our nation who would be proud to have their section referred to as "The Bible Belt," and yet we are not so enamored with the term, because of its exclusiveness. Speaking of the Bible Belt is like speaking of the Cotton Belt, or the Corn Belt; it is to exclude large portions of the country; it is to suggest that the other sections are not characterized by faith in the Book and devotion to its teaching. While the South is not to be responsible for the creation of the term, and cannot be blamed for taking pride in it, yet we are not among those who wish to be left out of "The Bible Belt," though we live in the North. And we are persuaded that there are very few who would wish to be excluded. Nor are we willing to admit that any one large section of the country is deserving of credit more than another for its allegiance to the Word of God.

Moreover, why should there be any "Bible Belt"? Why should the rest of the nation be stigmatized as having little or nothing to do with Bible loyalty? It is against the highest and spiritual interests of our land to build up such a sectional consciousness. We ought to cooperate in trying to build up a Bible loyalty consciousness throughout the length and breadth of our land and seek to make it truly Christian in faith and conduct as well as in name.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, pastor of the church at Hagerstown, Maryland, writes an interesting letter, giving some sidelights on the district conference recently held at Roanoke, Virginia, makes mention of some features of the wonderful "Natural Bridge" and remarks concerning the district mission project at Winchester, Virginia, where Brother Emerson Rohart, a recent graduate of Ashland College has become pastor for the summer. The work at Hagerstown is in splendid condition and with their vision and plans and under the capable leadership of Brother Carpenter, we may expect still great progress during the coming year.

President E. E. Jacobs reports forty graduates in all at the close of the first term of the Summer School, also that the splendid showing of the Endowment Campaign under Dr. Bell is giving impetus to the spirit and plans for the local college campaign to be launched this fall.

In a personal communication from Brother C. C. Grisso, pastor of the Warsaw, Indiana, church, we learn that the work is going forward splendidly, that a Daily Vacation Bible School has just been closed with great success, and that the pastor has been retained for another year of service with a substantial raise in salary. That sounds good, and we congratulate both pastor and people on the success that is attending their efforts together. We understand that the pastor has been putting in some hard field work and it is showing results.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, reports his canvass of the Masontown, Pennsylvania, church where he received a gift of $2,420.31, which shows a commendable interest in the college. Dr. Shively the bursar of Ashland College and who was pastor of the church during the former campaign, was with Dr. Bell and assisted him in this campaign, as no pastor was on the field at the time. Brother Herman Koontz is the new pastor and with this loyal group to back him, we predict for him a successful pastorate.

A post card received at the Evangelist office from Dr. Florence N. Gribble and dated July 2, says: "My plans have changed. I now expect to arrive in New York City, August 5th by the S. S. Berengaria. Shall be glad to have the prayers of the Evangelist family for a safe voyage." Without doubt many prayers will go up in behalf of Sister Gribble, according to her request. And we shall all be glad to see her inspiring presence in our conferences again, and perhaps in a very limited measure in our homes, for we understand that the Foreign Board wishes Dr. Gribble to get a real rest during this emergency furlough and not to spend her energy visiting the churches of the brotherhood, as on previous furloughs.

The General Conference program is to be found in this issue and it holds much in store for every one who attends the conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 23 to 29. The time is not far distant and every church ought to plan to be well represented, and where possible, it would be a fine thing to have large delegations in attendance. A church that puts forth effort in this line is well paid in inspiration to increased activity in the local work and added impetus to loyalty to the denominational interests. No one needs to be persuaded that Winona is a beautiful place to go, and has a most wholesome and spiritual atmosphere in which to spend a vacation. And we are assured that, in view of the extensive improvements that have been made since last National Conference, health conditions are excellent.

If, when church members discover that ministers are human enough to have faults, they would pray for them instead of criticising them, they would not only add to the strength of the minister, but they themselves would cease to be a hindrance to the Kingdom and become a blessing instead.

Dr. John Timothy Stone, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church of Chicago, recently made a statement that is full of challenge for that denomination, while addressing the Illinois state gathering of Presbyterians. He said, "Don't you know that seventy-five per cent of our preachers are over sixty years of age? We must get young men in the ministry." It would seem not a very encouraging situation for that church.

The care and education of the blind is a new form of service in Bible lands. Notwithstanding the fact that blindness has, until recently, continued to be as common as in the times described in the Gospel stories, very little has been done to make the lives of these unfortunate victims other than a dreary, helpless existence. Within the past few years, however, Near East Relief workers have not only devoted their services to the healing of trachoma, the disease which has been the cause of so much blindness, but they have established schools for the blind in Armenia, Syria and Greece. Recently six of the older girls from one of the orphanages in Greece entered upon a course of training with the object of becoming teachers of the blind. This and all the other noble and benevolent work accomplished by the Near East Relief organization has been made possible mainly by the generosity of the church people of America.

GENERAL ARTICLES

What Will Save America?

By Clarence C. Grisso

(An Address Given at Warsaw, Indiana, July 4, 1926)

These are days when our minds are filled with the thought of the birth of a great nation. For one hundred and fifty years we have been preserved as a great and mighty nation. But how long will we continue? Others have risen and fallen. Their glory and honor and power are only cold facts in history. If we read their records we shall discover that they have risen and fallen according to their relation to Almighty God. If this is true, that all depends upon the religion of the people, then our subject is worthy of our serious thought and attention.

There are many questions confronting our nation—economic, social, and political questions. These are not of supreme importance. But rather, how can we preserve our Christianity? We only need to take one glance across the sea to discover that that has been the downfall of other nations. Will the same conditions which have been the downfall of other nations bring about ours? Does the word of God apply to some nations and not to ours? Has God made an exception of our own when he said, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and the nations that forget God"? No, a thousand times no! for, "Righteousness exalteth a nation," and "Blessed is the nation whose God is Jehovah," and God pity us if our Christianity is not preserved in all its purity and power.

This brings me to say that if our Christianity is to remain the church must remain. The church is the channel through which religion comes into the lives of the individual and into the life of the nation. God has so ordained it, and you cannot have genuine Christianity without the organized church. Our civilization rests upon spiritual things, and a man who does not stand by the church is a traitor to his country though he don the uniform and go to battle a thousand times. God has never relinquished his sceptre and never will.

What then is our hope? I answer, "Christ through our childhood." Everything else has failed and I am rejoicing to note that the great thinkers of the present age are more and more agreeing that the best way of living is the "Christ way." The expert in science and sociology, and economics, and in all human relations are gradually recognizing that the teachings of Christ are the only adequate principles of survival and well being and the test has proven thousands of times that the genuine old-fashioned religion of Jesus Christ is the only dynamic to achieve any results at all worth while. That gospel can meet all human needs; and the social, political, racial and international problems would disappear as dew before the morning sun if the gospel of Christ were made effective in human hearts. God help the churches of our nation today to come back to "The Faith of our Fathers" and proclaim anew the redeeming religion of Jesus Christ: the religion that was born in Bethlehem's manger; the religion that grew in power until it burst forth as the "Life of men" and the "light of the world" the religion that lighted the path of the Pilgrims to this new world, our own America; the religion that through the centuries past has conquered barbarism, violence and superstition; that has changed the savage into a saint, has made the lame to walk, the blind to see, the heart to hope, and caused the whole world to rise from its watery grave into newness of life; the religion that is still the foundation upon which empires and democracies may safely build for the welfare of man and the glory of our God.

This is the conviction of many world leaders in our day. After the war Lloyd George said, "Now it is either Christ or chaos; either the Kingdom of God or world revolution." Henry Watterson says, "The paramount question underlying democracy is the religion of Jesus Christ. Eliminate Christ and you leave the world to eternal war." Earl Haig says, "The church of Christ is the world's only social hope and the sole promise of world peace." George W. Perkins, director of the International Harvester Company said, "Christianity in the hearts of men is the need of the hour. I believe that the application of true Christianity is what the world is striving for." Richard H. Edmons, editor, says, "Above all else this country needs a nation-wide revival of old-fashioned prayer meeting religion." Roger Babson, the world famed statistician, says, "The need of the hour is more religion everywhere, from the halls of congress to the factories, forests and mines, and remember the church is the only organization in existence that supplies the motive equal to the situation." Now once more, Bernard Shaw, said, "Why not give Christianity a trial? After contemplating the world of human nature for nearly sixty years I see no other way out of the world's misery, but the way of doing Christ's will."

Now this is all very true, and very fine, but where shall we begin? This introduces my second ray of hope for our civilization, and that is childhood. If we want to have any part in the making of tomorrow, we must plant today. The childhood of today, your sons and daughters, and mine, will build the homes, churches, schools, industries and institutions of tomorrow. What will they be? That depends upon the ideals that we give them now. Christ set a little child in the midst of his followers as the key to the kingdom of God, and by this sign the church will still conquer.

Dr. Starbuck some years ago discovered that all the great choices of life are made by the great majority of people in the early adolescent period. Among these choices are religion, vocation and marriage. Yes, we can help to make a better world, and childhood is our opportunity to win.

My attention has been called to a book written by Benjamin Kidd, on "The Science of Power." He points out how two nations completely changed their civilization in a single generation by winning the childhood of these nations. One of these was Germany. She said, "What we want in our nation, we will put in our schools." And the ideals of Germany, "that might is right," were so completely ground into the warp and woof of German youth, that in forty short years she brought on the great world war. The other nation was Japan. A wonderful school system was created. Thousands of high schools, universities, and kindergartens were established. Morals and religion were emphasized, and the result was that in a single generation Japan was transformed from a very insignificant nation to one of the five greatest powers of the earth.

Here, Brethren, is the challenge to the church, it is the challenge to America. Give us the young and by the implanting of the teachings of Jesus Christ, by the process of a new birth, we will create a new mind and a new nation. Bishop Kurtz recently said, "The great tragedy of Protestantism is that we thought this was an 'old man's world.'" In the United States there are 58,000,000 people who profess no religion—either Jewish, Catholic or Protestant. Most of these came from Protestant homes. The Jews and Catholics have held their children; we didn't. We spent our time in quibbling over things of far lesser value and did not give the youth the time and thought that we should. For in the final analysis the only real values in this world are human values. Nothing counts but just mere folks, and nothing is of value in folks but character, and the only character that enriches for time and eternity is the Christian character, and this can come only by learning to know Christ. This is a hopeful sign that is manifest in the nation today. God hasten the day when the Bible shall be placed in every public school in the land, and every boy and girl shall be instructed in the things of God.

Moreover, if our nation is to be preserved and endure and fill her place as a light to the nations, and shall one day bring her glory and honor and lay them at his feet, something else yet is necessary. Listen: "Without me ye can do nothing." Yes, we shall need a new outpouring of the Holy Spirit of God upon us, that his Spirit may in the light of revealed truth turn us unto him to do only his will. What we need then most of all is a powerful conviction of our need of God. Our great business concerns need it, our colleges—churches—schools—the entire structure of society needs the purifying, uplifting, regenerating, redeeming in-coming of God who laid the foundations of the earth and whose presence in human history is an eternal fact and whose power to help has been witnessed so many times in the lives of individuals and nations.

Our country calls for men. Our times are calling for men, Christ-converted, Spirit-filled, conviction-moved, men who will step into the arena of modern conflict and help to preserve our nation to the glory of God, and to bring in more perfectly that new day of social purity, industrial honesty, national democracy and world-wide peace.

"Great God, give us men!

A time like this demands

Great hearts, strong minds, true faith.

Men who have honor, men who will not lie

Strong men, Christ-crowned;

In public duties, and in serving God,

Give us men! O, God, give us men."

Patrick Henry: Some Personal Traits

By H. H. Smith

Patrick Henry's eloquence has so overshadowed everything else about his personality that his character is not so well known as it should be. That his character does not suffer in comparison with his far-famed eloquence should be a matter of pride to all Americans. Indeed, his eloquence was due, in a large measure, to his lofty character, and this fact has been mentioned by many of his contemporaries. George Morgan, in his "The True Patrick Henry," quotes David S. G. Cabell's tribute, as follows: "History does not record any example of a greater natural orator. He was not an orator as a result of a long and elaborate course of preparation. The loftiness of his nature, his strong emotions, his possession in himself of everything noble and true more than supplied the rhetorician's art."

George Mason, writing of Henry in 1774, spoke to the same effect: "He is by far the most powerful speaker I ever heard. Every word he says not only engages but commands the attention; and your passions are no longer your own when he addresses them. But his eloquence is the smallest part of his merit. He is in my opinion the first man on this continent, as well in abilities as public virtues," etc.

John Adams paid him this tribute: "From personal acquaintance, perhaps I might say a friendship with Mr. Henry of more than thirty years, and from all that I have heard or read of him, I have always considered him a gentleman of deep reflection, keen sagacity, clear foresight, daring enterprise, inflexible intrepidity, and untainted integrity, with an ardent zeal for the liberties, the honor, and the felicity of his country and his species."

His kind and benevolent disposition is shown in a letter to his daughter: "Unite liberality with a just frugality; always reserve something for the hand of charity; and never let your door be closed to the voice of suffering humanity. Your servants especially will have the strongest claim upon your charity; let them be well fed, well clothed, nursed in sickness, and let them never be unjustly treated." It is a tradition among the Henry negroes," says his biographer, "that their grandparents were treated just as Patrick Henry here admonishes his daughter to treat them."

Morgan says: "Henry himself sometimes played schoolmaster. This we learn from William Wirt Henry, who had from his Aunt Sarah an interesting detail respecting Patrick Henry's family customs. It was his habit, said she, to seat himself in his dining-room every morning, directly after rising, and read his Bible, and as his children would pass him for the first time he would raise his eyes from his book and greet them with a 'good morrow.' And this he would never neglect. Henry's fondness for the Bible grew with his years. 'This book,' said he to a neighbor, 'is worth all the books that ever were printed, and it has been my misfortune that I never found time to read it with the proper attention and feeling till lately. I trust in the mercy of Heaven that it is not yet too late.'"

Colonel Samuel Meredith, in his sketch of Patrick Henry, says: "One thing is remarkable in Mr. Henry, and this information comes from his sister, Mrs. Meredith, a very pious woman, that he was never known in his life to utter the name of God except on a necessary or proper occasion. He was through life a warm friend of the Christian religion. He was an Episcopalian, but very friendly to all other sects, particularly the Presbyterian. His father was an Episcopalian, his mother a Presbyterian. He was so well pleased with Soame Jenyns' Internal View of Religion that, meeting with a copy of it when he was Governor, or shortly after, he had several hundred copies printed and distributed at his own expense. Doddridge's Rise and Progress of Religion was his favorite author on the subject of religion."

The lofty moral tone of Henry's life is shown in a letter dated January, 1799, when referring to trouble with France, he wrote:

"Her conduct has made it the interest of the great family of mankind to wish the downfall of her present government, because its existence is incompatible with that of all others within its reach. And whilst I see the dangers that threaten ours from her intrigues and her arms, I am not so much alarmed as at the apprehension of her destroying the great pillars of all government and of social life; I mean, virtue, morality, and religion. This is the armor, my friend, and this alone, that renders us invincible. These are the tactics we should study. If we lose these, we are conquered, fallen indeed. In vain may France show and vaunt her diplomatic skill and brave troops; so long as our manners and principles remain sound, there is no danger. . . . I am too old and infirm ever again to undertake public concerns. I live much retired, amidst a multiplicity of blessings from that Gracious Ruler of all things to whom I owe unceasing acknowledgments for his unmerited goodness to me: and if I was permitted to add to this catalogue one other blessing, it would be that my countrymen should learn wisdom and virtue, and in this their day know the things that pertain to their peace."

Morgan says: "Henry died well—in the full faith. 'Oh, how wretched should I be at this moment,' he said, 'if I had not made my peace with God!'"

"All other remedies having failed, Dr. Cabell proceeded to administer a dose of liquid mercury. Taking the vial in his hand, and looking at it a moment, the dying man said:

"I suppose, doctor, this is your last resort?"

"The doctor replied: 'I am sorry to say, Governor, that it is.'

"Then he said: 'Excuse me, doctor, for a few minutes;' and drawing over his eyes a silken cap which he usually wore, and still holding the vial in his hand, he prayed, in clear words, a simple, childlike prayer for his family, for his country, and for his own soul, then in the presence of death. Afterwards, in perfect calmness, he swallowed the medicine.

"Meanwhile, Dr. Cabell, who greatly loved him, went out upon the lawn, and in his grief threw himself down upon the earth under one of the trees, weeping bitterly. Soon, when he had sufficiently mastered himself, the doctor came back to his patient, whom he found calmly watching the congealing of the blood under his finger-nails, and speaking words of love and peace to his family, who were weeping around his chair. Among other things, he told them he was thankful for that goodness of God which, having blessed him all his life, was then permitting him to die without any pain. Finally, lifting his eyes with much tenderness on his dear friend, Dr. Cabell, with whom he had formerly held many arguments respecting the Christian religion, he asked the doctor to observe how great a reality and benefit that religion was to a man about to die. And after Patrick Henry had spoken to his beloved physician those few words in praise of something which having never failed him in all his life before, did not then fail him in his very last need of it, he continued to breathe very softly for some moments; after which they who were looking upon him saw that his life had departed." Blackstone, Virginia.

Temperance and Prohibition

By J. S. C. Spickerman

Many use these two words interchangeably, as if they meant the same thing; but in fact they are quite different. Temperance means self-control; prohibition means forbidding by authority. When Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's dainties, that was temperance (Daniel 1:8). When Nehemiah compelled the traders to stop breaking the Sabbath in and around Jerusalem, that was prohibition (Nehemiah 13:15-21). When Joseph spurned the wicked proposal of Potiphar's wife, saying, "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" that was temperance (Genesis 39:9). When Moses and Phinehas took drastic means to suppress licentiousness in the camp of Israel, that was prohibition (Numbers 25:1-9). Both are necessary, but temperance is the better of the two. It is far better for a man to control himself, as Paul did (1 Corinthians 9:27) than to be restrained by others; but if a man will not keep himself from sinful acts, he must be restrained by law. You and I will drive carefully and respect the rights of others on the highway; but the "speed fiend" and the "roadhog" must be curbed by law. You and I will not hold a man up and rob him; but some will do so, if not kept from it by fear of the law. You and I will not drink booze or use other forms of dope, nor tempt others with it; but there are some who put their depraved appetites before every other consideration. There are others who would, if they could, make drunkards or dope fiends of all the young people in the country for the money they could make off of them.

After many years of hard work, expense, and sacrifice, a national prohibition law has been enacted, to save our people from the manifest evils of the liquor traffic. This law has been defied to such an extent that many well-meaning persons, not at all in sympathy with the liquor business consider it a failure. There are so many men who will neither control themselves nor submit to law, that the government seems unable to enforce this or other needed laws. And this in a country where one person in three is a church member, and one in five a Protestant church member. What is the difference between a church member and a bootlegger? If the church member is a real Christian, the difference is a radical and vital one; but if he is putting earthly gain and pleasure before the kingdom of God and the welfare of mankind, the difference is one of degree and not of kind.

We need more men who are led by the Spirit of God even more than we need the strengthening of the Volstead act. I would not consent to any relaxing of the efforts to enforce the laws; but the work to which we as Christians have been expressly appointed goes far deeper than restraint of men's outward conduct. Prevent a man by law from using or selling liquor, and he is still a lost sinner, dead in trespasses and sins; lead him to Christ, and you not only stop his lawless acts, but you save his soul, and make him a blessing instead of a menace to society. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control (Galatians 5:22, 23). When the Spirit bears these fruits in a man's life, he makes no work for courts and constables. We pay big taxes to maintain courts, police, prisons, etc., to enforce law; but some of us are woefully stingy with the greater work that is ours as Christians. We are full of enthusiasm over some political reform, but indifferent to the interests of the kingdom of our Lord. Do we really believe that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation? The kingdom must be brought about by God's methods; political reforms, however good, are secondary and supplementary.

Songs for Children

I have something of the feeling about hymns for children that I have about children's Bibles, children's books, and children's music. I should not say that children should not be given a few books expressly written for them, or that they should never read any Bible stories told in simple language, or play any simple music written especially for them; but I think we are greatly overdoing this whole business. It was only the other day that I happened to pick up a volume which had a wide reading thirty years ago, namely a collection of ten or twelve chapters by different authors on "Books that have helped me." The writers, beginning with Edward Everett Hale, were all very eminent and successful men. In practically every instance the only books these men had as children were the great classics of literature. If one turns to any list of autobiographies on his shelf he will find the same thing true—Chalmers, Livingstone, Clodd, Newman, Mrs. Ward, Robert Collyer, Carnegie, Sir Henry Jones, Timothy Dwight, Lyman Abbott—I am simply running my eyes along the shelf—he will invariably find that these men grew up on great books. They knew nothing of children's books. There were none. The result was they learned to love the great books, getting out of them what they could. And it is remarkable how much they got out of them. I think that we are making a great mistake today in not putting these great books before our boys and girls even in very early ages. I should give a boy "Ivanhoe" about as soon as he asked for something to read. The same thing is true of the Bible. I should give him the King James version and let him get out of it what he can. Personally I think he would get a lot more out of it than he would from Professor Van Loon's jazzed edition. My impression is that the boy brought up on Van Loon's edition will never get much further.

I feel the same way about music. There is a feeling abroad that children should be started on pieces especially written for them and some would even have them begin on rag-time and jazz which appeals only to childlike understanding. Very few real lovers of music ever began that way. They began on Mendelssohn, Schubert, and Beethoven and got what they could out of it. As the years went on they got more and more out of it, but their taste for it was formed in childhood.

Is not the same thing true to some degree about hymns for children? It is good to teach the children some hymns which deal especially with the experiences of childhood, but of more importance still is it to teach them the forty or fifty great hymns of the church. And this brings me to remark what an enriching experience it would be for all of life if each one of us went singing in his heart the great hymns of the faith. I dread to think how impoverished my own life would seem without the hymns I learned as a boy. I wonder that we do not pay more attention to teaching the great hymns to the children during the Sunday school hour. Instead of choosing any hymns that come to hand, why not begin with "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty" and sing that until we knew it by heart, and then go on week by week until we had learned them all. Not only would it be a priceless individual heritage but it would greatly improve the singing in the church. Several churches have had large children's choruses who have sat in the front of the church to add their sweet, fresh voices to the hymns. In these cases they have rehearsed the hymns for the Sunday services with some leader. It is a great experience for both the little singers and the church, as I happen to know.—Frederick Lynch, in Christian Work.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Our Omnipotent Christ

By Homer A. Kent

TEXT: "But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God."—1 Corinthians 1.24.

J. Hudson Taylor some seventy years ago in a little hall in Ning-po, China was preaching the Gospel to a little gathering of Chinese. He was preaching from the third chapter of John's gospel and speaking much of the redeeming love of God in sending his only-begotten Son into the world. Into the hall that evening came an honored Chinese business man who was devoutly religious but knew nothing of the true way of life. As the truths of the Gospel were explained on that occasion he became intensely interested for he was a seeker after truth. He had been one of the leaders of a reformed sect of Buddhists but as he sat there listening to the message of the cross new hope dawned in his heart, old things forever passed away and he was conscious of the sunrise in his soul that makes all things new.

At the close of the meeting this Chinese business man arose in his place and said with intense emotion in his voice, "I have long sought the truth, as did my father before me, but without finding it. I have traveled far and near, but have never searched it out. In Confucianism, Buddhism, Taoism, I have found no rest; but I do find rest in what I have heard tonight. Henceforth I am a believer in Jesus."

What may we conclude is the difference between such religions as those of Confucius, of Buddha, of Tao, and that of Jesus Christ? Many of the teachings of these false religions are beautiful and good. Some of them compare favorably with some of the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount. But there is something lacking somewhere in their systems. They lack the power to transform the lives of their followers. Confucius cannot change a man's heart, Buddha cannot, but Christ, the one upon whom our religion is founded and our hope is based, not only is the world's matchless teacher but he has the power to regenerate men's hearts so that they can say, "If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature, old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." In Christ only do we find such Divine power and he makes our religion divine. Thus Paul speaks in our text of the Christ whom he preached as "the power of God." Well may we think of him as such also. To realize the omnipotent power of Jesus Christ is to make our faith virile, our home undimmed.

How is Jesus Christ the power of God, as Paul has said in our text? We can answer that question first of all by saying, He is the power of God in his person. Our Lord came into the world with a mission quite distinct from that of any other. He came to reveal God and to win lost men back to him. In order that he might do this it was necessary that he come as a personality like unto other men yet utterly unlike them. He was composed of a dual personality. He was at one and the same time perfect man and perfect God. His two natures so blended together as to constitute the one great person who was not only the supreme manifestation of God but rather the God-man.

Looking carefully for a moment to the human side of our Lord's personality we see that he truly was a son of man. There have been times when the human side of Jesus' character has been overlooked even as in many instances his Deity has been and is overlooked. Christ's humanity appears everywhere. He had a human mother and a human birth; he had a human growth in wisdom and stature. He had needs as other men do. He was hungry and thirsty and often became weary. He longed for human companionship and sympathy. He had joys, sorrows, and griefs. He was not above the shedding of the tear in the time of heartache. He was recognized by all with whom he came in contact as a real man. But in all of his humanity we see perfection shining through his matchless character.

Now on the other hand as we look at Christ we must be brought face to face with Deity. He was God. He did not merely manifest God, He was God. We see him accomplishing works which only God can accomplish and the people flocked about him in wonderment. Who could he be? From whence comes this marvelous power? Never had anything like it been seen. What manner of man is this? We see him living a life that was beyond reproach. He stood before his carping critics and defied them to point out a single flaw in that matchless character, "Which of you convinceth me of sin" and no one dared speak a word. Throughout all the centuries till the present day his purity has remained unchallenged. We see him speaking only as one having authority and in response men were compelled to say, "Never man spake like this man."

As we look into the face of our Lord we see his two distinct natures and yet how beautifully they blend into the One who is the power of God. See him as he lay asleep in that storm tossed boat on the Sea of Galilee. He had become weary because of his constant ministry to the needs of the multitudes which gathered about him and had taken this opportunity to rest. The Son of God asleep! That was a manifestation of his human nature. See him again as he stood on the deck of that little boat which was almost ready to capsize, see him as he rebuked the winds and the waves and there was perfect calm . . . that was the revelation of his Deity. We need not wonder that the disciples marvelled and said, "What manner of man is this that even the winds and the waves obey him?" See our Lord as he stood by the grave of his departed friend, Lazarus. See him as he groans within himself; see him as he shed the tear of sorrow! This all brings so clearly to our view the human side of our Lord's character. But see him again as he says, I am the resurrection and the life; see him as he says to the one that slept, Lazarus come forth, and he came. "Yes, we see thee, thou Son of God immortal!

It is the presence in the one person of the two natures that constitutes Christ Jesus the power of God. His humanity gave him the power to be a brother to man, able to sympathize with and to succor the tempted, able to be a faithful and merciful high priest, able to be a representative man himself, thus able to show us how to live and how to prepare for the life to come. His Deity enables him to lead us to God, to lift us from our sin and misery to the mansions eternal. It was said of Mozart that by his sweet music he could bring angels down, and of Beethoven that he lifted mortals up. Jesus Christ because he is divine does both and more. He is the true Jacob's ladder by which sinners may find their way to God and Heaven and eternal happiness. Christ is the power of God in his person.

But he is the power of God also in his work. Jesus Christ most assuredly manifested the power of God all through his earthly ministry. Nicodemus said of him, "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." But the work which we would consider especially as manifesting the power of God is the work which Christ accomplished when he went to the cross. Thus alone was the crowning work of his life, the work which he primarily came to do. Thus the great Apostle's theme for all of his preaching was not the life of the Son of God but Christ crucified. "I determined," he said, "not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Again he said, "The Jews require a sign and the Greeks seek after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block and unto the Greeks foolishness."

How different then was Paul's estimate of the value of the cross from that of the great majority of the Jews of his time and also of the Greeks! To the Jews the preaching of the cross was a stumbling block. The very idea of their Messiah to come as a great temporal king in pomp and splendor and to sit upon the throne of his father David. They had dreams of a king that would surpass in power any Caesar that ever sat in Rome, any Pharaoh that ever ruled by the Nile, any Nebuchadnezzar that ever wore the sceptre by the waters of Babylon. They looked for a king that would make their nation the dominant nation of the world. This to the Jews would be the manifestation of the power of God, not one crucified as a malefactor. Their Messiah crucified!—that was the greatest possible insult. Therefore Jesus was a stone of stumbling to his own people, a rock of offence. To the Greeks the doctrine of atonement through a crucified Christ was foolishness. Nothing was more absurd to them than that the blood of the cross can remove sin and secure eternal salvation.

But consider again Paul's estimate of "Christ crucified." This stalwart exponent of the faith calls him the power of God. The word which is translated "power" is the Greek word from which we get our English word "dynamite." Christ crucified is the dynamite of God. Christ crucified is the one by whom sin is rooted out of the human heart, the one by whom man is lifted into the very presence of God, Heaven itself. The cross of Christ is the great magnet of God which is drawing men and women of every clime and country, of every race and color unto himself until at last all of the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. Long ago the great Emperor Constantine on the eve of battle which was to decide the fate of the Roman Empire, had a dream. In that dream he saw a cross in the sky and about that cross this legend, "In this sign conquer." That cross is still above us, that sign is still about it, but it is not a dream; it is the supremely true thing in earth or sky. There is power in that cross to lead those who believe safely across the great divide into the Paradise of God. The way of the cross leads home and there is none other way but this. What Jesus wrought upon that cross shall endure throughout all the unending ages, and when we have been over there ten million years we shall none the less joyously sing the praises of him who washed us from our sins in his own blood. See him today, the Christ who wore the crown of thorns for the redemption of a lost world!

See from his head, his hands, his feet,
Sorrow and love flow mingled down;
Did' ere such love and sorrow meet,
Or thorns compose so rich a crown?

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small,

MONDAY

THE SON OF GOD—John 6:66-69.

In Christ I touch the hand of God,
From his pure height reached down,
By blessed ways before untrod.
To lift us to our crown.

—Lucy Larcom.

TUESDAY

MADE ALIVE THROUGH CHRIST—1 Cor. 15:20-28.

I feel my immortality o'ersweep
All pains, all tears, all time, all fears and peal
Like the eternal thunder of the deep Into my ears this truth, "Thou livest forever!"

—Byron.

WEDNESDAY

GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT—1 Cor. 12:1-13.

God's Spirit brings what most man's spirit asks—
The eternal motive of the finite day,
The highest purpose to the smallest tasks,
The stars themselves as lamps to light our way.

—The Independent.

THURSDAY

THE MINISTRY OF GRACE—Eph. 2:4-10.

Grace led my wandering feet
To tread the heavenly road,
And new supplies each hour I meet
While pressing on to God.

—Philip Doddridge.

FRIDAY

TEACHING TRUST—Psalm 32:7-11.

The men that know thy name will trust
In thy abundant grace;
For thou wilt ne'er forsake the just,
Who humbly seek thy face.—Isaac Watts.

SATURDAY

REPENTANCE UNTO SALVATION—2 Cor. 7:9-11.

Let the old life be covered by the new,
The old, old past, so full of sad mistakes;
Let it be wholly hidden from our view
By deeds as white and silent as snowflakes.
Ere the earth life melt in the eternal spring,
Let the white mantle of repentance fling
Soft drapery about it, fold on fold,
Even as the new snow covers up the old.

—Louise Chandler Moulton.

SUNDAY

THE SPIRIT'S INTERCESSION—Rom. 8:26, 27.

The prayers I make will then be sweet indeed
I thou the spirit give by which I pray.

—William Wordsworth.
(Prepared by G. S. B.)

Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all.

Christ is the power of God in his cross. It is the cross that lifts us. Therefore may the estimate that Paul held for the cross find appreciation in our hearts.

As a final consideration let us think of Christ as the power of God in his present ministry. What a powerful Being is the Christ whom we worship today! Following his glorious resurrection he said in words which stagger the human mind: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." No exception is made here. All the power and authority of all the universe is claimed by the living Christ. We look into the recesses of space and wonder at the power that holds the stars and the planets in their places. Jesus Christ holds them there. We go to the seashore and watch the tides ebb and flow. What power is it that lifts the oceans at regular intervals and brings them back again? The mighty Christ is that power. We stand at the brink of a mighty cascade and see unlimited power manifest in the rolling, tumbling waters. We stand in awe of such power. It all belongs to Christ. He alone is responsible for it. Then in the realm of the spiritual as in the realm of the material, Christ is the power that directs.

Following Christ's claim to be the possessor of all power he says in words which are of infinite consolation to every faithful disciple of his, "Lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world." Surely such a Christ is able to keep that which we commit unto him. For the believer he lives today. He lives to intercede at the Father's right hand, he lives to guide us with his Spirit, he lives to empower us for the conflict which is ours to wage with unseen forces of evil on every hand until at last we shall be able to sing the victor's song. It is ours to realize today that "greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world." Brethren, let us know with the Apostle Paul that Christ is in truth "the power of God."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Shield of Faith

By Pearl Jackson

OUR SCRIPTURE

Without faith it is impossible to be well pleasing unto him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him (Heb. 11:6). Be ye steadfast, unmovable always, abounding in the work of the Lord (1 Cor. 15:58). But my righteous one may live by faith (Hab. 2:4). If he shrink back from faith my soul hath no pleasure in him (Hebrews 10:38). I thank him that enabled me, even Christ Jesus our Lord, for that he counted me faithful, appointing me to his service (1 Tim. 1:12). Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil (Eph. 6:11).

OUR MEDITATION

Paul exhorts that the Christians or converted Gentiles at Ephesus, to whom this epistle is generally thought to have been written should not neglect one piece of the armor of God. Later in this chapter he mentions the pieces of armor, namely the girdle, breastplate, footwear, shield, helmet and sword. While each piece is essential and should not be neglected, we are now most interested in thinking of the shield of faith. We do not believe we should neglect any stress that might be placed on the whole armor, but let us think for a while on the shield of faith.

The ancients regarded the region of the heart as the seat of life, intellect, passion and the habitation of the soul. All of which made it necessarily a portion of the body to be protected with care. Hence we have the need of the shield in the ancients' armor for warfare. Paul, that scholar of old, realized this fact and built upon it by comparing the spiritual armor to that which was tangible and with which these people were acquainted. Paul not only makes this comparison but makes it even stronger by asserting that the spiritual shield is that of faith. Since the physical shield was of such importance to the preservation of life, surely the spiritual shield of faith must be of equal importance in the preservation of the spiritual being. We need our spiritual armor "that ye (we) may be able to stand in an evil day" (Eph. 6:13). Hence it is of great importance that we have with us the shield of faith. Faith is the ability to reach out and take hold of the promises of God, and make them a part of ourselves. We sometimes say that faith is so abstract that we cannot comprehend it easily. But let us illustrate it with some tangible events of our every day life. By this method we can clear our thoughts many times and understand the unknown by comparing it with the known. We most assuredly have a trust, and may we call it faith in the engineer who drives the engine that pulls the coach in which we ride. We even give our lives to his judgment and ability to operate his machine. Then we have faith in the trust company where we deposit our money and again we have faith in ourselves when we undertake an extended and difficult task. There is however a difference between a dormant faith and an acting faith. We may have faith in the above mentioned ways but yet we do not realize any benefits from our faith unless we exercise it and it becomes an acting faith. Our faith in God is of no benefit to us unless it is an acting faith, one bringing us returns.

Possibly some one will wonder how we can have the protection of the shield of faith. It can be had by the taking, by laying hold on the promises of God. Living by faith is a reliance on God. The mustard seed relies on God and he takes care of it. How much more ought we to rely on him. We who are his highest creation surely ought to find it possible to live by an expectant faith.

It is altogether possible to lose faith after one has had it. Of course we wonder how we are going to keep it, and there is no better way than by exercising its possession. "If he shrink back from faith my soul hath no pleasure in him" (Heb. 10:38). To exercise faith is to live by faith and to grow spiritually. "The righteous shall live by faith" (Rom. 1:17). Again we can refer to our physical development and compare it to our spiritual development. Take for instance the muscle of the arm. When it is exercised regularly it grows and becomes stronger, but when it is kept from use it shrinks and withers away until it is so weak that it cannot be used. Just so with our faith, if we expect to keep it and develop it, we must use it, for it is against the natural law for anything to stand still. Reaching out and getting the objective and making it our own is the exercise of faith.

Now for the results of faith. The most important is its keeping and establishing power. It is a shield against evil, even driving away evil thoughts. Through faith all things are possible even to the removing of mountains. Through faith we can lay hold of the plan of salvation reaching out and taking it for our own. We have the offer, the price has been paid and through faith we can take hold of eternal life. Not a standing faith but an acting faith. Now is the time, not in the future, and if we feel the need of a protection from the evil one, the Shield of faith is ours by acting. It is said of George Mueller while operating the orphanage established by him in Africa, that he never lacked food nor was it a financial failure because of his faith in God. He took hold of the "Shield of Faith" and protected the work of the Lord which he was trying to do.

OUR PRAYER

Father, give us a faith like our fathers possessed when they did the great works for thee. Give us a working faith such as will move us to activities for thy Kingdom and which will complete our armor, that we may be able to more worthily engage in the battle for truth and righteousness. Through Christ we ask it. Amen.

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

The Pillar of Cloud and of Fire

From this time the march of the Hebrews was divinely guided by a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, rising above the host, a conspicuous object that could be seen not only by the marshaled host, but by the scattered companies of women and children, as they fed their flocks and followed afar off the marvelous signal of divine presence. The fire that produced the smoke could not be seen in the daytime, but it was reflected on the smoke and made brilliantly visible in the darkness, just as we have seen the pillar of smoke rising from Vesuvius change into a pillar of fire by night. A great host marching through a country without roads or other marks of civilization must be provided with some conspicuous object to serve as a signal to the main body, and to all straggling parties connected with it.

Fleeing Slaves and a Pursuing Army

"It was a desperate situation, a band of slaves pursued by a well-equipped, well-organized Egyptian army. How many there were who followed Moses out of the land of Goshen we do not know. How large Pharaoh's army was, we cannot tell, but the odds were all against Israel and in favor of Pharaoh. Swiftly the army of Pharaoh was catching up with the struggling, straggling Israelites. The Red Sea before them and Pharaoh's army behind them, how should they be delivered? On the edge of the sea they camped for the night, but few of them slept, for their doom seemed near. But during that night a strong east wind divided the waters so that early in the morning the children of Israel were able to march over the bed of the sea to the opposite shore. Swiftly the Egyptians pursued, but as they entered the depths where the sea had been, their chariots began to sink in the sands, and at the command of the Lord, as Moses stretched his hand out over the sea, the waters returned and covered the chariots and the horsemen, even all the hosts of Pharaoh that went in after them into the sea, so there remained not so much as one of them. Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hands of the Egyptians."

Pharaoh Himself Not Drowned

It is nowhere said that Pharaoh himself was drowned in the sea. He was overthrown in his army. According to the monuments, Merneptah was not much of a warrior, but preferred to send his generals to war rather than go himself. It is a matter of the utmost interest that the body of Merneptah has been found in the "Valley of the Kings," in closest proximity to the burial place of his father Rameses.

No notice of the Exodus is found upon the monuments of Egypt. Nor should we expect any. Just as in the list of Napoleon's great battles surrounding his tomb there is no mention of Waterloo, although it was his best-known battle, so we would not expect this defeat to be recorded on the tombs of the Pharaoh.

The Challenge of a Great Deliverance

(1) Each great deliverance is an argument for future deliverances. If God has found for us a way out of what seemed to us to be surrounded with impassable barriers, we can trust him the next time we see the walls closing round us. (2) God does not often expect us to wait and see the way before we start. We are to take a lesson from our past deliverances and go forward, expecting that the way will open, as it did before. Sitting still does not, as a usual thing, show up the open path. (3) After God has protected us in danger and delivered us from peril, we should praise him and thank him as the Hebrews did at the Red Sea. We should be eager to tell every one what he has done for us, and we should go singing through life in such a whole-hearted way that in heaven we shall not be ashamed to join in "the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb."

A Type of Conversion

The crossing of the Red Sea illustrates the great act of conversion. (1) We seek to escape from the bondage of sin. (2) We find at last that we are unable to save ourselves. (3) We pray to God, and he bids us trust him and go forward in the duties close at hand, believing that he will open a way. (4) God performs the divine act, the miracle of regeneration, entirely beyond our power, while (5) we do our part by obeying his word and yielding ourselves completely to his guidance. (6) This is a beginning, but only a beginning, of the Christian life. The long discipline and growth are before us.

"Israel's way of escape lay forward. So with the awakened sinner. Backward means only renewed slavery and death. Forward is the watchword of all seekers and of all saints. 'Yes, but the Red Sea is there.' Moses crossed the Red Sea. If God has planted the Red Sea there, and brought you to it, and allowed Pharaoh to come in behind you, he can carry you through, or over, or under the sea, as it pleases him. There are many ways in which God can save you, and only one in which he cannot. He cannot save you if you go back."

"This remarkable story of the deliverance of Israel could be paralleled a thousand times in history, with this exception, that the average historian ascribes the deliverance not to the Lord, but to some freak of nature or strange, sudden turn of fortune. The Hebrew historian, however, sees the hand of God directly and dominantly in this mighty deliverance from the swift-following foe.

"It is the same way in the world today. Sudden deliverance comes, and one person says, 'That is just my luck,' while another says, 'That is the Lord.'"

Are You Selling Your Sunday School?

By John F. Cowan

The idea of selling a Sunday school to the community was incubated at the Rotary Club luncheon. The minister of the Grand Street church was seated beside a visitor who genially introduced himself:

"I'm Ross, insurance philanthropist, Bigopolis. What might be your doorplate and daily stunt?"

The minister chuckled amusedly. After all, then he was not so obviously ultra-clerical in appearance. He'd just keep up the "ineog." "Well, suppose I say I'm promoting one of the world's oldest going concerns; represent the local branch here."

"Just in the promotion stage—eh? Well, what's your lookout for turnover and sales?"

"Our goods were on the market long ago; but we'll soon double our capacity. You'd know our brand if I mentioned it."

This kidding the insurance man was fun; would open the way to telling, by and by, of his grand church improvements. It was going to read well, too, in the report to his state association, thus:

"The Grand Street Church has opened its splendid $150,000 parish house, with up-to-date accommodations for the Sunday school, for social, recreational, and other work. Both the church and its energetic, live-wire minister are to be congratulated."

"Yes," the self-complacent minister was saying to his lunch partner, "we certainly are going to have a magnificent equipment for greatly increased production."

"So-o?" softly intoned the other. "Congratulations! But how is the actual sale of products shaping up? Booked many advance orders? What's your publicity and line-up of prospects?"

"Publicity? Prospects?" The minister was getting beyond his depth. "Do you mean we should have newspaper advertising? Why, my dear sir, our new building is advertising in itself—a $150,000 pile of brick and concrete! Everybody in town knows of it—the latest word in equipment."

"Indeed? Must be a church, then. That's the only concern that expects to pose silently in the splendor of its brick walls and reputation and have the whole community tumbling at its feet. By the way, I'm a member of the Seventh Street church, Bigopolis, and I was tipped off by our parson to take a look at a modern parish house here. So, let me tell you about my scouting to find it. I asked the hotel clerk: 'Where is the Xyzational Church?'

"Search me," was his staring reply; 'been here only five years.'

"Then he called a bell-hop. 'Say, boy; where's the Xyzerian Church—brick or stone, sir?' he added, seeing the boy's vacant stare.

"'Brick,' I guessed; 'with a fine new $150,000 addition looming up.'

"Oh, that must be the Zeth-Israel synagogue,' chipped in the boy.

"'G'wan!' the clerk shooed the boy off. 'This gent isn't looking for a Yiddish joint.'

"'Hey, Bill!' he called to a taxi driver lounging in the lobby, 'you know this town like your a b c's. Where's the Abecedarian Church?'

"'Sure, I know. Taxi, sir? Jump in; I'll frisk you there.'

"'Thank you kindly, brother,' I declined, offering a big cigar to ease off his disappointment. 'I'm needing a constitutional—not an eighteenth amendment constitutional—so, if you'll tip me off as to direction, I'll make it on shank's horses.'

"'Oh-hum!—Le'me see—why, yes; it must be somewhere up above Third, or Fourth! Anyone up that wal'll wise you.'

"Say, Mr. Man, did you ever start out to Sherlock-Holmes a mysterious unknown, on the strength of what every one in town is assumed to know of the location? Listen; while you're chasing it down, I'll find the north pole. Well, I sauntered several blocks beyond Third, periscoping for a tall tower and a monumental stack of brick. Just as I was thinking I must have headed the wrong way, I overtook a newsboy.

"'Hey, son!' I quizzed him, 'Where hereabouts does the Grand Street Church hold forth?'

"'No such customer on my route,' he fired back at me in snappytones.

"'Say, brother; did it ever occur to you that it would be a mighty elever hit to tip the taxi-drivers to steer strangers to our churches, and to have at least one newspaper delivered there; and to stand in pretty well with the street car conductors and policemen who are likely to be called on pretty often to direct strangers in the city?'—Sunday School Worker.

I heard two ministers of God
Proclaim the Word,
One flamed with fire, invective and hot scorn
For those who did not see the light he saw.
"This is God's word I speak—
I read it from his holy Book,"
He cried;
"Take it and believe it or be damned!"
And as I left the sacred house of God
These words come surging through my starving soul,
He does not make me think of Jesus Christ!

The other, not less full of zeal,
But calm and sure,
Revealed to us a God of wondrous love
Whose yearning heart bleeds ever
For the sheep that stray away,
He, too, read from God's Word,
But, as he spake,
Methought I saw the Candle of the Lord.
Touch many flickering lamps of dying souls
And lighten them upon a gloomy way.
"He makes me think of One who died for me!" I said.

William E. Shaw,—The Christian Century.

Isn't it nice to know just what we want to do and then to go ahead and work hard at our task? That is just what the young man of our story did.

I told you that the task of this hero was a very hard one. Guess what it was? He wanted to teach people to know God as their Father and friend, he wanted to set an example of the kind of life to live, and he wanted to save them from their sin. Just think what a hard job it would be to do all of that. He had to be both a teacher and a preacher. Besides these he was a helper in every place where he found a chance to help anyone.

For three years he worked very hard. He had a small group of very faithful friends who became dear to him and helped him as much as they could. Then, of course, the Heavenly Father helped him because our Father loved him. Sometimes everyone was nice to this young man and made his task some lighter. Sometimes things seemed to go wrong and people were very cruel to him. Finally, near the close of the third year after things had seemed rather bright for a while, troubles came along.

What do you think happened to this man? A lot of people took hold of him with rough hands. His friends went back on him. The people who took him were very mean to him. Just think how terrible that must have been when he had been trying all during his life to teach people to love each other and be kind to each other. Finally, these people killed him. Do you suppose that he felt that he was a very great loser. Do you suppose that he said, "I have worked all my life for these people, and now they are killing me, they have forgotten everything I have taught them, they are ungrateful, mean wretches, I hate them?" Or do you suppose that he said of his friends who went back on him, "You seemed to be my friends but now you have forgotten me, I will never speak to any of you again, when I see you?" No, he did not do any of these things. Instead he prayed for them. In the time when all had forsaken and he seemed to be a loser in all that he had planned to do, he prayed for those who were trying to defeat him.

You know, I am quite sure, who this story is about. It is about Jesus, our Savior, who lived on earth just like other people and suffered here. This story is a little bit hard for you small boys and girls to like, but I wanted you to know how Jesus acted when he seemed to be losing everything that he had worked for and wanted.

Can you follow the example of Jesus when you lose things you want? When you lose the game you tried so hard to win, can you smile and be always kind to the person who won? When you have worked for hours trying to learn a hard lesson or to make something that is new and difficult, can you lose with a smile and say, "Well, I'll try again as soon as I can; maybe I can win next time?"

Do you know what we are told in Romans about losing? The verse that is given in your Bible references says that in honor we should prefer one another. That means that we should desire that the other fellow get the honor rather than ourselves. That is a pretty hard rule sometimes, but it is a good one to keep in mind. If we learn to love others so well that we will be happy to see them win even when they are defeating us, then we will not really be losers at all. Let's strive to live as much as we can like Jesus lived and always be as good losers as he was.

How to be a Good Loser

Romans 12:10

Once upon a time, in a far away country, there lived a wonderful young man. This young man was older than you, Junior boys and girls. However, he was not so very old. He had finished his education and had started to work. Now, this young man had a very big job. He had thought things all through and he had decided just what he wanted to do.

The Challenge of South America

By Mrs. S. G. Inman

The study of Latin America will prove especially interesting and profitable if we keep in mind the romance of the past, the rapidly changing present, and the promising future of our southern neighbors.

The little island of Santo Domingo is the cradle of American history. Here Columbus built the new world's first city, with its beautiful cathedral which is still standing and in which his bones rest today. Here the first American university was established and from here Cortez went to Cuba and organized the expedition that resulted in the conquest of Mexico. From here Pizarro, with a few followers and no equipment worthy of the name, started out to find the fabled riches of Peru.

Pizarro succeeded in finding gold but in doing so he destroyed one of the world's oldest civilizations. The center of this civilization was Cuzco, where lived the Inca or Emperor who had extended his realm until it included nearly all the west coast of South America and the Andes highlands. The people were marvelous builders. One looks on the ruins of their great temples and fortresses with amazement and admiration. Where did they get these immense stones? How did they cut them to fit so closely that one cannot insert a knife blade between the crevices? The government of the Incas was paternalistic. Everything centered on the Inca—so that when he was captured by the Spaniards the whole structure fell. The Indians were enslaved and their beautiful forts and temples were destroyed.

The Spaniards also imposed their religion upon the Indians—in form if not in reality. In ancient times these Indians saluted each other with, "Thou shalt work and thou shalt not steal"; now their greeting is "Holy Mary without sin conceived." The priests from Europe built their churches on top of the destroyed Indian temples, so that the Indians would come there naturally to worship. The Indian gods were rechristened with Bible names. And today the Indians dance the old pagan dances in front of the country churches. In the highlands of Peru I saw Indians, dressed in leopard skins and masks, engage in these ancient dances.

Today Peru is governed by a despot. For example: a prominent young woman, who conducted an industrial school for girls, operated a little printing press on which she printed, for some of the university students, a protest against some government abuses. As a result she was thrown into prison where she endured great hardships for ninety days. Since further work in Peru was impossible, one of the ladies of our party gave her funds to go to Argentina to open another school. A young manager of a ranch, a friend of a former official whom the President did not like, was falsely accused and imprisoned. The upholstery in his home was ripped up and the plaster torn from the walls, in hope of finding revolutionary literature and, although none was found, he was ordered deported. He had no means of communicating with his family, but an official of the steamship line sent them word and the beautiful young wife had but thirty minutes to pack their clothes and join her husband on the vessel on which we were traveling. She left behind five little children and started out, she knew not whither, for they had no passports.

The only center of liberal thought in Peru is in the university of San Marcos, the oldest university in the new world. Twenty-eight of her professors have been deported. The chair of philosophy is occupied by one of South America's most influential Protestant missionaries. Dr. John Mackay of the Scotch Presbyterian Mission has become the friend of the students and is also director of a large boys' school in Lima. The Methodists have near here a fine girls' school and the only Protestant missionary hospital in South America.

Chile is often called the Britain of South America. The President is a man of the people, and is fighting for them against the power of the land owners and the Roman Catholic church. The people of Chile are alert and the women seem to have more freedom and more chance for self-expression than in other Latin American countries. The woman's movement is expressed in four powerful women's clubs, representing respectively the aristocracy, the professional woman, the middle-class woman and the working woman. The first is the only one working for votes for women. As it is under the control of the archbishop, the other clubs are afraid of the franchise for women on account of the danger of more active priestly control. The women's clubs in Chile, Argentina and Uruguay are more interested in social betterment, community service, the education of the poor, and child conservation than they are in politics.

The Chilean poetess, Gabriela Mistral, a lovable and spiritually-minded woman, is a Catholic, fighting the sins of the church from within.

The Young Women's Christian Association at Santiago is a university for university women. With the guidance of the secretary the girls conduct the affairs of the Association and raise a large part of the funds. Though mostly Catholic, they have their Bible study classes and last year they selected Fosdick's "Meaning of Prayer" as their study book. When the Association faced financial difficulties, one Roman Catholic girl said: "There seems nothing we can do about it. We must pray for guidance. And let us all kneel as we pray. It seems so disrespectful to stand."

Another great movement in these countries is the temperance campaign. Like all the forward-looking movements in South America, it has developed within the last ten years. In Chile it has been fostered by the laboring men and in 1923 the Pan-American Conference in Santiago passed a resolution favoring "progressive diminution of the consumption of alcohol." Chile, a great wine-producing country, drawing a rich revenue from the traffic, championed the resolution and, with Argentina, Uruguay, Colombia and other countries, has presented to its congress a project for partial prohibition. A program of compulsory temperance instruction has been adopted in the public schools of practically all the countries represented.

Most interesting of all the great movements of South America is the students' movement. Thousands of students in the universities of Argentina, Chile and Peru and other republics have joined in an "idealistic fraternity" which has been fired by what one of their leaders calls a noble dream of transformation. The movement has decried "parchment scholarship" demanding reorganization of the whole system of higher education—called militaristic, materialistic, aristocratic and ultra-nationalistic. It declares itself in revolt against "the nationalistic sophism that the interests of the nation, right or wrong, are superior to all morality." Awake to the danger of a purely utilitarian education that may "extinguish the sacred fire of souls," it calls for the cultivation of the spirit. Its further watch-words are peace, brotherhood, humanity, international solidarity and service. The university men of Chile have issued a manifesto declaring they would never take up arms against their Peruvian fellow-students. In Argentina, Bolivia, Peru and Chile the movement has associated itself altruistically with the depressed and laboring classes, bands of students voluntarily conducting night schools for workmen, children, Indians and other neglected illiterates.

There is a great eagerness for education which the Evangelical mission schools are doing much to meet. There is a fine Methodist girls' school in Santiago, also a Union Bible seminary supported by Presbyterians and Methodists. There is a Presbyterian boys' school whose graduates occupy positions of honor and leadership throughout the republic. In Buenos Aires the Methodists and Disciples unite in the "Colegio Americano," whose graduates are received without examination in the National University. Buenos Aires is such a tremendous city that to work there effectively there is need of the same resources and equipment as in New York City.

The Young Women's Christian Associations, bridging as they do the gap between the past and present social conditions, fill a great need and are crowded to the bursting point. The Associations in Rio and Buenos Aires each have over a thousand members and the four-year-old organization in Montevideo has four hundred members. There has also been steady but slower growth in the churches; the gain of the last ten years being greater than during the fifty years preceding. One reason for the slow growth of Evangelical Churches was given by a great Argentine educationalist who said at the Montevideo Congress:

"Our people have seen so much immorality connected with the established church, in the life of the clergy, and so much insincerity in prayer, in the church's attitude toward education, in charity, in the lives of so-called religious people, that I cannot but feel that missionaries are marching under a much discredited banner. You come from a land where religious faith may be taken as the mark of Christian character. With us the very opposite is often true. To save itself, morality has had to sever its religious connection and to look for the support of science."

A lawyer said to one missionary: "You are a Protestant? I respect Protestantism but hate Christianity. The former stands for all progressive, educational and social ideas, but Christianity (as we know it) is the base, fountain and source of all our ills."

This is what makes missionary work in Latin America harder than in many other mission fields. The people already know the name of Jesus but he means to them a sorrowful, broken, powerless man, hanging on a cross. We must show them that Christ is alive and has power to transform their lives and that he is the answer to the spiritual longing in the hearts of the people today.

In Brazil, Protestantism has made greater advances than in other South American countries. In Rio alone there are one hundred Evangelical preaching places and a pastors' association has sixty members. The first Presbyterian church has nearly two thousand members and supports eighteen branch Sunday schools and a number of missionaries. Rio is perhaps the foremost Evangelical center in the Latin world.

The possible future of these Latin American countries staggers the imagination. We receive great quantities of tin from Bolivia, chocolate from Ecuador, rubber and coffee from Brazil, quinine from Peru, nitrate, inter fruits and the world's richest copper from Chile, and the Argentine is already one of the world's greatest producers of wheat and beef. South America has untouched mineral resources and great uncultivated plains with room for the surplus populations of the old world. Immigrants are coming over at the rate of a million a year—a tide that must profoundly affect the future.

Within the fringe of culture and progress that marks the coast of South America lies another continent. We could draw a line from north to south four thousand miles long and not touch a single Evangelical mission station. This continent within a continent covers 6,000,000 square miles, or four-fifths of the entire area. It constitutes for Evangelical Christianity the largest expanse of unoccupied territory in the world. It contains ten million Indians ranging from the more civilized highland Indians to the head hunters of Ecuador and the wild savages of the Amazon.

Within this great neglected area there are a few bright centers. In Asuncion the Disciples of Christ have a large school to meet one of the greatest opportunities in all South America. In the Chaco, among the savage Indians, the Church of England, led by Brooke Grubb, has one of the most remarkable mission stations in the world—described in Mr. Grubb's thrilling book, "An Unknown People in an Unknown Land." This effectively answers the question, "Are missions worth while?" Neither Catholic nor Protestant has more than touched this almost unknown "continent within a continent." Today we face this great Indian problem without funds and seemingly without hope of starting any large work among them for years to come. What a challenge! —Missionary Review of the World.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The first term of the Summer School closed last Friday. Thirty-nine finished the short, two year course and one the four year course, Bachelor of Science in Education. Superintendent Martin of Richland County gave the address.

Thursday of last week, the Summer School had the opportunity of hearing a quartette of colored singers from Tuskegee Institute, Alabama. They rendered a most excellent program of 45 minutes' length. Doubtless many of my readers have heard these men sing over the radio. They sang many plantation melodies and Negro spirituals. It is the first time so far as I know that such a group of singers ever appeared on College Hill.

Dean Miller spent the last week at Shipshewana, Indiana, where the Brethren of Northern Indiana hold a yearly Bible conference.

Work has started on the college dormitory fitting it for girls only.

Mrs. Leslie, Dean of Women, will return this week from Bowling Green State Normal where she has been doing work.

I am expecting to meet the local trustees and a man from New York this week with the end in view of laying out plans for the local campaign which we expect to inaugurate this coming fall. The response which Dr. Bell is meeting will be a source of great encouragement here.

The second summer term begins today, Monday, and will continue for five weeks, closing the week before our National Conference.
EDWIN E. JACOBS.

HAGERSTOWN — ROANOKE — WINCHESTER

The District Conference held in Roanoke in June was in many respects the best yet. The attendance was good. The program was excellent. The spirit was fine. The "Virginia Hospitality" was true to reputation. Well-received, well-fed, well-cared-for, well-entertained, was the feeling of the delegates from all directions.

The mission chart showed that some churches were behind on the payment of their missionary apportionments and some of the delegates from such churches were sorry and ashamed of the record. Some of the churches promised to pay up. Now is the time to do that. Next year every church in the district ought to be marked up in red which means paid in full.

This district has centered its mission work in Winchester during the past year and is pleased with the results thus far. The new church building is worth $6,000. The new pastor, Brother Emerson Rohart, will be there during the summer and is rendering splendid service. His own spiritual life and sound Gospel preaching are an inspiration to the people. He is well liked by the community. The Sunday school has an enrollment of 90 with the attendance between 60 and 70 and that in hot July. The writer has promised to shout when their attendance reaches 100. It behooves every church to be faithful in the support of district missions. Pray and pay.

Brother Melvin Stuckey has been making the rounds in our district in the interest of the Sunday schools. His help was much appreciated both in Hagerstown and in Winchester.

Not far from Roanoke is "Natural Bridge," a marvelous arch of rock. Many of our readers have never seen it. "It ranks among the great wonders of the world, approaches Niagara in grandeur and exceeds it in height and awe-inspiring mystery." It is of one single block of limestone, wide enough to span Broadway in New York. The rock bridge connects the summits of two mountains. The Lee Highway over which we traveled goes over this bridge.

George Washington, when a surveyor for Lord Fairfax, visited this spot. The place is pointed out where it is said that he cut his initials in the rock high up beneath the bridge. The 1,500 acres in the tract is owned by a corporation for profit. Many people agree that it ought to be owned by the U. S. government and not be used for material profit. At the head of the ravine a mile and a half from the bridge is "Lace Waterfalls," and then the water flows or rather tumbles swiftly over the rocky bed until it finally rushes underneath the wonderful bridge, which is 215 feet above the water and 100 feet wide. Travelers who have the opportunity should not miss seeing "Natural Bridge."

Vacation is again at hand and will be much appreciated after a very busy year. The Hagerstown church is going forward. Vision is manifest on the part of the membership. A steady pull is what counts. A teacher training class will be organized after vacation. No Sunday school can get along very well without trained teachers. And no teacher can do his or her best without that training. God expects our best.

Evangelist Frank G. Coleman with Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Long, singers, are coming for our fall evangelistic campaign beginning October 25. The church is praying for victory. Consecrated work coupled with persistent prayer always wins.

The Conference at Winona is earlier this year, being all in August. That ought to mean the largest attendance yet. May the attendance record be broken and the inspirational profit be multiplied.

G. C. CARPENTER.

ready to talk about the subject that engrossed so much of his time.

"How many policies," I asked, "would your company sell if it withdrew its agents from the field and depended solely upon newspaper advertising for its business?"

"Scarcely any," he replied. "Everyone knows that life insurance is a good thing, and yet, unless personally interviewed, people are likely to postpone consideration of the matter, and so it is in many cases altogether neglected. The only way to get life insurance is to go after it."

Similarly, the most successful method of bringing men and women to Christ is to seek them out, one by one, and press upon them the claims of the Savior—The Westminster Teacher.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

MASONTOWN BACKS ASHLAND ENDOWMENT

The Masontown church is one of our oldest congregations and has always stood loyal to the interests of our church. We had some handicap in our work here as their pastor, Brother Gingrich had recently moved to Johnstown to take up the work with the Second Church of that city.

So we had to make the canvass of the church without the assistance of the pastor, which always makes the work a little more difficult on account of not knowing the people and where to find them. Fortunately in the latter part of the canvass, Brother Martin Shively, the Bursar of the College and formerly pastor of this congregation was with us for two days and helped us. I should also mention Brethren Provance and Kelly that gave me some time out of their busy life and was of great aid.

We found the members of the church anxious to see the proposed endowment for Ashland go over and willingly gave their support. This church is located in the famous coke district of Pennsylvania and like all the coal districts at this time, are in the midst of a business slump.

They recently called one of Ashland's graduates to be their pastor, Brother Herman Koontz, and while passing through the other day I noticed that the parsonage was being renovated, so that they must have a "hunch" that the new pastor will have an assistant.

The Masontown church has a good sized membership and strong Sunday school, with prospects for growth.

The total result of the Masontown canvass was $2,420.31 and we are still expecting to hear from a few more later. Included in this gift is the bequest of Charity Sterling Hogue of $1,000. Masontown, like every church so far visited in this campaign, is standing back of Ashland College and determined to see it made a Standardized College. MASONTOWN MOVES THE DIAL FORWARD A LITTLE LESS THAN $2,500.00

The Atheistic Uprising

Throughout the country there are disturbing evidences of a growing tendency toward atheism and a materialistic evaluation of life. In practically every community there are demonstrations of this spirit and attitude, but we have been inclined to look upon these instances as so isolated that they scarcely deserved attention. But it may be that we have not been sufficiently observing, that we have been too blind or indifferent to the situation. Doubtless it has not assumed towering proportions, but it is sufficiently aggressive, as well as deceptive in its manifestations to be alarming, and to arouse us to active and determined opposition. And that opposition should not take the form of repressive measures, but of enlightenment and warning. Turning the searchlight of truth upon error is the surest way of putting it to confusion and flight. And that is what religious leaders are beginning to do in increasing numbers.

In a recent issue of the Reformed Church Messenger, the editor said:

This July evening seemed to be an open season for the proponents of anarchy. On three successive corners on Broadway men were shouting their opposition to the dictations of Church and State, and declaiming against the folly of faith in a Supreme Being. One raucous-voiced individual, buttressed by a huge American flag, gave voice to sentiments which appeared to destroy every principle and ideal for which Old Glory is supposed to stand, according to the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. Never would he surrender, he said, a single one of the "inalienable rights" he possessed to the dictation of a majority, for the State like the Church is "in essence autocratic and destructive of individual initiative, choking and paralyzing every human personality that is handicapped by its baleful influence." He would admit, he said, that Christianity had been of some benefit to the illiterate and mentally defective folk, though at the same time it had crippled and stupefied them and made them satisfied with the inhuman and intolerable condition of the status quo. Religion was, therefore, a curse rather than a blessing. The emancipated (mentally free and independent folks) like himself, had forever shaken off these degrading shackles which destroyed or emasculated manhood. Like the Russian "reds," he therefore proclaimed religion to be "the opiate of the people," and urged his hearers to join in a war against it.

We could not help wondering about the effects of such violent and vituperative language on the streets and sidewalks of New York.

While religious organizations are wasting much of their energy in fighting one another or in suspecting each other's purposes and motives, the enemies of all religion are sowing the seeds of atheism and anarchy. There is much in our contemporary literature and drama which corresponds all too freely with the implications of these tirades from the store-box orators of the streets. The recent revelations concerning the "Young Pioneers," the juvenile schools in Communism and Atheism established in America, give some conception of how far-reaching this activity of the "Reds" in our own land now is.

But if this atheistic and materialistic propaganda were confined to the lower strata, it would not be so alarming. The great mass of people do not listen with much credulity to the store-box orator, or to the wild-eyed, fierce-voiced "red". Dr. Leinbach rightly observes, "But even more, we need to fear the mechanistic teaching in colleges and universities which, though more refined, leads to the same ends." It is by our college-trained leaders and schoolmen that the effective influence is wielded, and if these be inoculated with the germs of materialism and unbelief and go about spreading the contagion, it is not hard to believe that we are destined ultimately to reap a most fearsome harvest. Dr. J. Fort Newton is quoted as declaring materialism to be the "worst enemy of America, the darkest and most terrible philosophy known among men." He calls it—

"The philosophy of mud, which makes men of less value than money and things, which uses men to make money instead of using money to make men. It treats men as an animal, in contrast to his spirituality—the hieroglyph of eternal value inscribed on his soul. The awful mischief of the philosophy of materialism is that if man thinks of himself thus, if he thinks of himself cheaply, he will deal with his fellows as cheap stuff. The evils of the world—war, injustice, cruelty—never can be abolished until men think of themselves and their fellows as sons of God and potential citizens of the kingdom of Heaven. Europe seems to be sinking slowly into bankruptcy, bitterness and despair. Democracy is dead or dying, and a string of dictators stretched across its tomb. If America fails in its faith—fails to train men to rule themselves and to serve their fellows—our civilization is lost. The darkest menace of the world is a new, uprising atheistic democracy—its shadow lies like a pall over Russia. It is the mother of wild radicalisms and insane fanaticisms. Only a great faith in God, in church and synagogue, and in the hearts of our people can protect us from such a fate. It is time for Christian men to unite—time to cease fighting one another, and to stand together for the truths that make us men, for the spirituality that redeemed humanity from brutality, and makes the world stable and the holy things of humanity secure.

Dr. Newton is not famed for his conservatism, but he certainly sounds a fundamental note here. Our civilization is builded upon Christianity and a belief in God as revealed in Jesus Christ is the only safeguard of our national, social and individual lives. If we let this be weakened or undermined we are foolish beyond comparison. We must maintain a spiritual view of life and a firm faith in a God who is both present and spiritual, loving and powerful, fatherly and just, one who is active and can be importuned. It makes a difference not only that we have faith in God, but in the God of the Bible, the God whom devout hearts have found precious and approachable. Faith in a denatured God is of little worth. Dr. Alva Martin Kerr, Editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, strikes hard at this tendency to devitalize God. He says:

If one does not believe in a God worth while, what is the use of believing in any God at all. That is a question that has come to us again and again as we have read after some of those extremists who make God out such a vague and incomprehensible "Force" or "First Cause" that one could not possibly have any conscious fellowship with him or get any sort of good out of him. What is the use of having such an intangible and depersonalized God any way? Religion becomes a wholly unintelligible thing with that kind of a God, and worship nonsensical. And the queer thing about it is that those who preach such a devitalized God pride themselves upon being the only Simon-pure rationalists. But why is it rational, either in human thinking or human experience, to spend time and money and life in worshipping and serving a God that has no personality and knows nothing about us and can not possibly be of any help to us. Unless one can have a God that knows us and cares about us and is some account to us, what is the use of having any at all?

It only needs that the true character of atheistic and materialistic teachings shall be shown up and the vast body of sensible folk will turn from them and to a more loyal allegiance to their Christ and God, as instinctively as a child turns from a serpent to the protecting care of its father.

No congregation can fulfil its mission toward the people of its community when its membership is non-spiritual and prayerless.

Who is to Drink It?

It is quite generally conceded that the "wet" campaign to build up sentiment against the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act has succeeded in doing just the opposite. As the Christian Advocate suggests, "Masses of good men and women have been awakened and sharpened by the fury of the wets, who by slander and noise thought they could turn the tide against the temperance forces of this country." Bishop Thomas Nicholson, president of the Anti-Saloon League of America, declares that the propaganda of the wets in Congress has "turned to our profit . . . The wets are helping us." General Superintendent McBride says that in spite of the furious campaign in Illinois, a pivotal state, the temperance forces have won every congressman the wets have fought. And it is forecasted that the next Congress will have a stronger majority for the Constitution and its enforcement than ever.

Notwithstanding all these omens of good fortune for the dry cause, there are still some good people, even among church folks, who have allowed themselves to be swept off their feet by the bitter onslaught of the wet forces and deceived into thinking that prohibition is not being enforced, nor can be. The following report appearing in the Reformed Church Messenger of an actual dialogue which took place between two American citizens the other day, is a good illustration of how to show up the silliness of the claims that sentiment is drifting back to the days of the open saloon. One was a business man and the other a clergyman, to whom the business man spoke frankly, as one does to a good friend:

"Well," said the layman, with an air of finality: "Prohibition is a failure, and we must get used to the idea of making America 'wet' once again."

"But who is to drink the liquor?" queried his friend. "Will you?"

"Why, no," he replied; "You know that I am a teetotaler."

"Will your son drink it?"

"No, that shall not be!"

"Would you want it to come back for the sake of your clerks?"

"No, it is my practice to discharge any clerks who drink liquor."

"Do you want your customers to drink it?"

"No, I would much rather not; I am sure that those who use strong drink will not buy so much from me nor pay their bills so promptly."

"Will you want the engineer on your train to use it?"

"No, I admit I don't want to ride on a drunkard's train."

"Ah, then, you want this liquor for the men whom you meet driving cars on the public highway?"

"No, of course not; that is a danger to everybody."

"Well, then, who is to drink this liquor in America, pray tell me?"

"I am not so sure than anybody should drink it. I guess we're much better off without it."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The General Conference secretary states that credentials have been mailed to pastors, and that should any one be missed or have need of more, they can be had by writing him.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble favors Evangelist readers with another story of tribal customs in Africa. These are informing as well as inspiring and should prepare our hearts for larger loyalty to foreign missions.

The Riverside Institute of Lost Creek, Kentucky, is in need of another high school teacher. Anyone prepared and willing to do such missionary service should write Brother G. E. Drushal. Doubtless some one will answer the call.

Brother R. F. Porte informs us that a Daily Vacation Bible School of two weeks' duration was recently held in his church at Louisville, Ohio. It was a distinctly Brethren school of which the pastor was superintendent. We are promised a further report concerning it in the near future.

A letter from Camden, Ohio, is said to be not at a standstill, but going forward, one evidence of which is the paying off of the mortgage on the church, concerning which mention was made in the columns on a previous occasion. Also two additions to the church were made during a revival held by the pastor, Brother Beery, early in the year.

We have repeatedly invited Christian Endeavorers to send in reports of interesting Christian Endeavor programs or other activities in connection with their work. We are pleased to call attention to the unique program and combination service arrangement of Louisville, Ohio, and recorded on the Young People's page.

President Jacobs in his college news informs us that the local endowment campaign will be launched in the early fall, and that a company of trained solicitors have already been placed in charge of the campaign. As the brotherhood has been following Dr. Bell in his canvass among the churches with their prayers, they will also gladly respond to President Jacobs' appeals for prayer in support of the Ashland city and county campaign.

Is your church planning to send a delegation to General Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 23-29? Make it a large one and send with each one a note book and pencil with instructions to make copious notes of the many good things that will there be said and of the things done. Make it more than a vacation trip; make it a time of spiritual enrichment and inspiration, which will result in larger loyalty and service in the home church.

The Second Church of Los Angeles, Calif., of which Dr. E. M. Cobb is pastor, has enjoyed a very successful evangelistic campaign with Brother Charles Ashman as preacher of the Word. Seventy souls are reported as a result of this meeting. This church has experienced a remarkable growth under Brother Cobb's pastorate, having trebled the membership of both Sunday school and church. Brother Ashman reports 216 confessions received during his campaigns in Southern California.

Brother W. R. Deeter writes an interesting newsletter and it is evident that he could not have had many idle moments during the months past, judging by the many activities in which he has engaged in the capacity of leader, besides his regular preaching and pastoral work. The Sunday school is showing a splendid interest with an average of nearly one hundred and twenty-five, while the Christian Endeavor Society is going strong and is planning to entertain the district convention this fall. Brother Deeter also refers to his revival campaign at Udell in May.

Dean J. Allen Miller, calls attention to the changed policy of the Seminary, whereby students by completing a six-year course, three in the college and three in the seminary, may receive the degree of Bachelor of Theology. This makes possible a more thorough preparation for the ministry than has heretofore been urged upon the candidates. Read his announcement on page 16, where it is to be found; also an advertisement of the College setting forth the various courses offered. Ashland College is the place where Brethren young people from every part of the brotherhood should secure their higher education.

A quiet little wedding of general interest to the brotherhood occurred at Ashland, Ohio, on June 9, 1926. Miss Eleanor Yoder, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Yoder, missionaries to Argentina, was united in marriage to Mr. Egydia Romanenghi, who came from Argentina nearly two years ago and entered Ashland College to prepare for the Christian ministry. Mr. and Mrs. Romanenghi have let it be known that when they have completed their education, they expect to return to South America to do missionary work. The ceremony was performed by Prof. Alva J. McClain, assisted by Dean J. Allen Miller, in the home of Brother and Sister McClain, in the presence of a few invited guests, among them being Miss Grace Yoder, sister of the bride. In behalf of the Evangelist family, we extend these talented and consecrated young people most hearty congratulations and wish them many years of happiness and service together.

"How big is your Bible?" Some one asked that question the other day and the answer that came varied according to their understanding of its significance. One said, It is a family Bible. Another said it is a vest-pocket edition. Another giving it a little different slant, said, My Bible has 66 books from Genesis to Revelation. But President Barbour of Rochester Theological Seminary places the emphasis on the possession pronoun, How big is YOUR Bible? And he insists that YOUR Bible is only "that part of the Bible into which you have personally entered." Only that which you have made your own really belongs to you. There is so much truth in that claim that it makes me a little hesitant about stating how big my Bible is. How about you?

The Holy Spirit As Seen in the Acts of the Apostles

By Willis E. Ronk

The place the Holy Spirit holds in the Acts of the Apostles will hardly be understood without due reference to and comparison with the Gospels. The Holy Spirit revealing and exalting the Son is the central fact or factor in the Acts. It is well for us to remember that in the Gospels Jesus is the central fact. The Son reveals, exalts and does the will of the Father. In Jesus' own recorded sayings the mention of the Spirit does not often occur, and "It is significant that in no case does Christ speak of the Spirit as acting upon his followers while he is present with them. He would keep the thought of the disciples fixed upon himself as the revelation of the Father." (I. H. Wood). The last discourses, as recorded by John, glow with references to the coming of the Spirit, without whom even the person and work of Christ in their hearts would not be complete. (John 16:7-13.) The Holy Spirit will unfold to their hearts and minds the whole meaning and power of Jesus himself. (John 15:26 and 16:14ff.) In view of this, when we turn to the Acts, we are not surprised to discover that the Holy Spirit is the continuator of the redemptive process begun by Jesus in the world; and that he makes effective in the human life the truth which the earthly mission of Christ revealed. Nor are we surprised to discover that central to the teaching is the Holy Spirit revealing and exalting the Son.

In accord with the promise that the Holy Spirit would come and unfold to the hearts and minds of the disciples the whole meaning and power of himself—Jesus, inspired by the Holy Spirit (1:2), had "commanded that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father—" for "ye shall be baptized of the Holy Ghost—" (1:4, 5). The disciples in obedience to the Master's command not only tarried in Jerusalem, but being of one accord spent much time in prayer. We can only conjecture as to what hopes and expectations filled their breasts during those days of waiting. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place" (2:1). "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance" (2:4). It is important to notice in this connection, that, with the first impartation of the Spirit in the new age, ALL who were in the room were filled with the Spirit. It might however be well to add that these were believers who had faith and were expecting the manifestation of the Spirit. This experience is peculiar to the day of Pentecost and does not occur again in the same manner among the Jews. After Pentecost, so long as the Gospel was preached to the Jews only, the Spirit was imparted by the laying on of hands, (8:17; 9:17) upon condition of faith (2:41), repentance and baptism; "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (2:38). The laying on of hands was always performed by the apostles until the conversion of Saul, when hands were laid on by Ananias (9:17). The Samaritans were not conceived as having received the Holy Spirit when they received the gospel and had been baptized, and it was only when Peter and John had gone down and prayed for them and laid their hands on them that they received the Holy Spirit (8:14-17). A similar experience occurs when Paul is at Ephesus and finds certain disciples of John the Baptist. After being instructed they are baptized into the name of Jesus after Paul had laid his hands upon them "the Holy Ghost came upon them and they spake with tongues and prophesied" (19:1-7). In connection with the condition of the coming of the Spirit there is just one more reference to be noticed which is Acts 10:44-48 and the reference to the same experience as recorded in 11:15-18. This manifestation of the Spirit we might call the second Pentecost, or the gentile Pentecost. Here the only condition for the reception of the Spirit is faith. Without baptism or the laying on of hands the Spirit descends on believers with the same manifestations of power as revealed at Pentecost. Is this taken to be a new departure and are the gentiles to receive the Spirit in this manner? Peter and the Jews who were with him clearly understood that this proof is that the Gospel is also for the gentiles and it is so argued by them when the contention arises in Judea. To my own mind it is clear that the unusual experiences of Pentecost were necessary to usher in the new age, and new work among the Jews, and the experience at Caesarea was needed as opening up the work among the gentiles. And it may well be that these experiences are given to us, that we should not attempt to fetter the Spirit by saying that he should come in any one way, or at any one time.

Let us look at the manner of the Spirit's coming as here revealed. The two symbols used are the wind and fire. "And suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of a mighty rushing wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting." (2:2.) Whatever else this may mean, we can be assured that it is a mighty demonstration of power, as is also revealed in the next verse (2:3). "And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them"; but here is the added suggestion of the cleansing and purifying effects of fire. They are not only receiving all necessary power for their preaching, but are cleansed and purified for service. More may be understood as to the manner of his coming as we continue our study under different heads.

Having noticed the central place which the Spirit occupies in the Acts, and the conditions and manner of his comings, we shall now consider his work. When we begin to study his work that which first fastens itself on the mind is the miraculous and the marvelous. It is the sound as of a mighty rushing wind, the appearance of the manifestation similar to tongues of fire, the speaking with tongues, which on Pentecost is regarded as a signal of the Spirit's presence and power. (2:1-4). Like phenomena occur repeatedly, an instance of which is during Peter's preaching to the gentiles (10:44-48). It was the signs which Philip did which excited the desire of Simon Magnus to possess, for his own use, the Holy Ghost (8:18). After Philip has baptized the eunuch, the Spirit of the Lord catches away Philip and transports him to Azotus. (8:39, 40.) The working of miracles was one of the sources of the apostles influence and power. The people brought the sick into the streets that the shadow of Peter might fall on them, with the expectation of healing. And the sick were brought from other cities that they might be healed (5:15, 16). An enumeration of the miracles is hardly necessary here. Suffice it to say that the people understood that they were wrought by the power of the Holy Spirit. In some instances it is definitely stated that they were wrought by the Holy Spirit. For instance, Paul received his sight by the laying on of the hands of Ananias, who was led by the Spirit (9:17). And then Paul "filled with the Holy Ghost—" caused blindness to come upon Elymas the sorcerer, when he sought to "turn away the deputy from the faith" (13:10, 11, 12.) These unusual powers and phenomena were necessary for the spread of the Gospel during these early days in the church; but seem to have been limited to the Apostolic Age.

Then there are other ways in which the Spirit worked, while less spectacular than those already mentioned, still of very far reaching consequences both as to work and as to extent of time. The words of commandment to the disciples were very specific and emphatic. They were "to wait" that they might receive "power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you—and ye shall be witnesses" (1:8). It was "Peter filled with the Holy Ghost—" who stood boldly before the rulers (4:8). And they "spake the word with boldness" because they were filled with the Holy Ghost. (4:31). Stephen, "being full of the Holy Ghost looked up steadfastly into heaven" and he died praying for those who were killing him (7:54-59). When we look back at the lives of the disciples previous to Pentecost, especially remembering the experiences during the trial and crucifixion and then to those same men at work for Jesus after the descent of the Spirit, we begin to realize something of the way he empowered them. It is indeed a miracle when unlearned and unlettered men have such power as is manifest in these men. The witnessing spoken of in 1:8 is to be under the direction of the Spirit, and their speaking and preaching begins when the Spirit comes (2:4). The measure of their success was dependent on the filling of their lives by the Spirit. In choosing deacons for the church they picked out spirit filled men (6:3) and in reading of some of the difficulties of the missionaries with Paul we read that "they were filled with joy and the Holy Ghost."

The growth of the church was very rapid. Just before Pentecost the number of disciples was a hundred and twenty (1:15). Three thousand were received then (2:41) and only a little later we read that the number had increased to five thousand (4:4). This is not only to be attributed to the unusual power which was given to the disciples, but also to the direction and leadership of the Spirit. It is Barnabas led by the Spirit who went to Tarsus to seek Paul to help in the teaching of the church at Antioch (11:24). A little later the Holy Spirit says "separate me Saul and Barnabas to the work whereunto I have called them." "So they being sent forth by the Holy Ghost departed—" (13:2-4). In the decision of the Jerusalem council, the disciples recognized the leadership of the Spirit in coming to their decision (15:28). On one occasion Paul and his co-workers had purposed to preach the Gospel in Asia, but were forbidden to preach there (16:6). They listened to the direction of the Spirit. The Spirit led in placing certain men as overseers of the churches and they were conscious of this authority (20:28). The intimation is all through the book that the Spirit is directing all the activities of the church. We need not wonder at this marvelous growth. The Holy Spirit is present to convict of sin (2:37), to infill those who obey him (5:32), to bear witness himself to the truth (5:32; 20:32), to empower for service (4:8), to call men and to direct them in service (13:2-4; 21:4), to edify the church (9:31), to comfort believers (5:31). This power is still available, if the individuals composing the church are willing to fulfill the conditions. And if called into use the church of our day, or any day, will also make great progress in saving souls and building up the work of the kingdom.

The Attitude of the Quakers to Modern Social Problems

By J. L. Gillin, Professor of Sociology, University of Wisconsin

No religious denomination came out of the war with greater prestige than the Friends, or Quakers. They maintained their historic attitude toward war and were treated as noncombatants but would not rest content with that negative attitude. They put themselves to the front, spent their money and offered their services in any way which they thought would soften the inevitable horrors of war and contribute to the humanitarian relief and aid of those engaged in that gigantic struggle.

It is a well known historical fact that the Friends have always been interested in certain reforms in our social program. It was the Quakers who took the lead in the mitigation of the harsh treatment of the insane. For example, Dr. Tuke, an English Quaker and his friends led in the establishment of the institution at York, England in the early part of the last century which set the example of the humane treatment of the insane. It was the American Quakers, who in 1709, started the movement for the special care of the insane by especially constructed hospitals which movement resulted in the founding of the Pennsylvania Hospital in 1751, a part of which was set aside for the insane and to which the first patients were admitted in 1752. Again it was the Quakers both in Europe and in the United States who took a prominent part in prison reform. The American system of penitentiaries was a Quaker device and it was out of the attempts of the Quakers of Philadelphia to reform the old High Street jail of that city which led to the establishment of the first penitentiary in the United States. Today they are behind the Pennsylvania Prison Society which is the successor of their early Society for the Alleviation of the Miseries of Public Prisons.

Recently there has come into my hands the program of their last general conference held at Ocean City, New Jersey, July 6-13, 1926. As you look it over compare the subjects discussed with those to be found in the conference program of almost any other religious denomination in the United States. They are not wasting their time and energies on the discussion of problems remote from present day life. They have their feet on the ground. They are endeavoring to bring the religion which they profess to the solution of the problems which perplex us at the present time. Notice, too, how they are calling in experts and authorities from outside their denomination to help them solve some of these problems. Evidently they believe what has not yet dawned on the consciousness of a good many religious bodies that religion has something to say about present day problems. The following is the program:

QUAKER SOLUTIONS OF PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS

Junior Conference

A conference for children under fifteen years of age will be held daily from 9:00 A. M. to 12:00 M., under the care of Grace L. Bond. Story-telling hour, games, songs, walks by the shore, picture study, hand-work, Bible stories, nature club, wood work. Assemble at the Presbyterian Church, Seventh and Wesley Avenue.

(Explanation.—A section concerning "Recreation" is omitted for lack of space, but the above adequately illustrates the point Dr. Gillin makes, namely, the practical nature of the denominational activities and conference discussion of the Friends—Editor.)

The Type of Preaching Most Needed

By Thoburn C. Lyon

(Address as delivered before the Maryland—Virginia District Conference)

At first thought it might seem rather presumptuous for one as young as myself to attempt to discuss such a subject as this; however, the responsibility for that rests with your program committee, and not with myself. When this subject was first assigned to me, I began to ask folks what type of preaching they considered most needed today—and received quite a variety of answers; these answers I have carefully considered, and have compared them with my own conclusions. Even though I have been but a few years in the active ministry, I claim some right to HAVE conclusions, if for no other reason than that I come from a family of preachers and have been accustomed to think in terms of preaching all my life: my father was a preacher and for many years a pastor in this district; my grandfather was a preacher, my brother, an uncle, and several cousins. But after all, I realize that it makes very little difference this morning, from any standpoint, what opinions I may have; this talk of mine is to be followed by a discussion, and I realize that all I am supposed to do is to set up some targets for you marksmen to shoot at.

We are tempted to answer this question by repeating the story of the predicament of a young minister in a university town. He wrote home to his father: "If I choose to preach on some subject having to do with history, there sits the professor of history in my audience; if I choose a subject dealing with philosophy, the professor of philosophy is likewise in my audience. No matter what subject I choose, there is always present one of the faculty who knows much more of that subject than I do: what can one do under such circumstances?" And his father wrote back, "Just preach the Gospel: most of them probably know very little about that!" So this morning I am tempted to say simply that the type of preaching most needed is the preaching of the Gospel; that the world at large still knows too little of the "old, old story."

But perhaps we can come to some more definite answer by considering for a few minutes the various types of preaching that we have enjoyed in the past, together with the results they have achieved. As I think back over many of the sermons I have heard, or heard of, in the Brethren Church, I find that they naturally divide themselves into distinct types.

We will first mention the type of preaching which appealed mostly, if not entirely, to the emotions of the hearers. As a classic example of this type there is a sermon that was quite popular some years ago, and of which many have spoken to me: "Heaven, Home, and Mother." It consisted mainly of the story of the preacher's visit to the old farm home of his boyhood. First he went down to the old meadow where he and his younger brother had so often played together, and found that things there looked very much as they had when they played together there. Next he went out into the orchard, where the great old trees lifted their spreading arms into the blue of heaven, and things looked very much the same there! the barnyard, and even the little yard around the house hadn't changed very much. But as he walked around the house, and came to the little window where mother used to sit and sew—Oh friends, how different everything was, for mother wasn't there! And great sobs shook him, while the tears rolled down his cheeks—and also down the cheeks of his audience. And even though they learned nothing new about God and the Gospel of his Son, they all went home greatly refreshed by the overflow from their own emotions.

Next is the type of sermon that concerns itself mainly with some current happening of local or general interest, or with some sensational catch-phrase, or some hair-splitting quibble of the preacher's. Usually it brought forth a wordy discussion in an effort to decide some hair-splitting quibble that had been thoroughly understood since the memory of man, or that made little difference either way it might be decided.

Then came those sermons that were called "doctrinal sermons". Under this heading we used to prove that the washing of feet and trine immersion were both essential and correct, by the very simple method of proving that all the other denominations were wrong in their position, and therefore we must, of necessity, be right in ours.

Perhaps we should add a fourth type—the evangelistic sermon. Recent methods of evangelism have tended to produce a distinct type of preaching; but I am not so sure but that for the past, at least, this type could be grouped under one or another of the three preceding heads.

And now a few words as to the results these types of preaching have produced. I believe that all will agree that the emotional type has failed when judged by the standard of permanent results. We have all seen whole communities such as I am thinking of just now: a community that can be stirred into a wonderful show of life by any emotional appeal, no matter what its source; but when the emotion begins to cool down, the show of life also cools down until the next emotional preacher comes around. Of itself, this type has absolutely failed to produce results at all permanent.

The sensational catch-phrases and quibbles are still with us; they may entertain, or interest at the start; but a sensational subject, with an ordinary thought that leads no where in particular, has failed to hold the people for very long. They have generally failed when judged by the standard of souls truly won for Christ, or the building of strong Christian character.

As a result of the "doctrinal sermons" referred to, we find many people in our churches today with the notion that if they but observe these forms, they can do anything—or nothing—else that they please, and still rest assured of their salvation. It is my belief that too often this type of preaching has centered around the mere observance of these forms, with but little thought of their real meaning, or the thing symbolized.

What type of preaching, then, IS most needed today?

In Paul's second letter to Timothy, he urges him to "Preach the word"; and in the same letter he explains how it was to be done: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." Notice that the verse begins with DOCTRINE (or teaching, R. V.), and ends with the thought of INSTRUCTION. As Brethren, we have made much of the Great Commission: let us remember that the greatest command it contains is the command to TEACH all nations. Our Lord, the greatest preacher of all time, even repeats this, adding that we are to teach them all things whatsoever he commanded. It was this type of preaching that he, himself, employed throughout his earthly ministry. There are few, if any, occasions when he gave forth anything resembling a burst of oratory; when he was accused it was of "teaching throughout all Jewry"; when he replied to their charges, it was to say: "I sat daily with you TEACHING in the temple." It is my belief that the type of preaching most needed is preaching that teaches; teaches not only what, but WHY.

Even at the risk of being misunderstood, I would like to add that our teaching should also be more intolerant. I realize that too often in the past we have been shamefully intolerant when we should have exercised the quality of Christian charity; but there are certain respects in which, as Christians, we cannot be other than intolerant. Christianity has ever been intolerant, and must be so to be Christianity. Rome conquered many peoples, of many different religious beliefs; she extended religious freedom to all of them except Christianity. Why? Simply because Christianity itself was intolerant; it could not be satisfied merely to be let alone, but went everywhere proclaiming: "Your religion is vain: there is no name under heaven whereby we must be saved other than the name of Jesus, the Christ." In these days when so many things are being taught that are so different from those things which he commanded us to teach, we cannot help but be intolerant in our teaching.

Preaching of this type is not the cold and emotionless thing that some suppose it to be. Instead of appealing merely to the natural emotions of the natural man it strives to introduce him to higher emotions, and to tie them up with God. For example, love is the highest of all the emotions, the first and greatest of the gifts of the Spirit; such preaching would teach that God so loved the world that he

The Progress of Godliness

By E. Forest Byers

"He that hath my Commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." John 14:21.

"I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Phil. 3:14.

Those who know me best know that I am sort of nimblerod. I long each year for the fall season; the time of the year when the forests look so beautiful; when the leaves, kissed by the frosts, moistened by the rains and warmed by God's beautiful sunshine, take upon themselves all the colors of the rainbow. It is the season when the mountains look as if the Great Artist with his master mind and skilled hand tries to see just how beautiful he can make the foliage look while passing through its period of decay. It is the time of year when the squirrels and the game birds feasting upon the nuts and berries as they do, are fat and plump, and thrilled as they are by the frosty nights and the cool winds of the day are jumping from tree to tree gathering in their winter supply of food, or flying from bush to bush gathering the buds and berries in such a way as to grip the attention of the hunter.

During this time each year it has been my privilege to spend a week or two in the mountains of Huntingdon County for turkey, squirrel, etc. We usually hunted over the Blue Ridge and the Black Log mountains. These mountains are full of turkey and squirrel, some deer and occasionally a "bruin" or so, wanders through looking for a good place to hide for the winter.

When making these trips we usually aim to get into the mountains about the break of day. Then we would travel up and down the mountain, over rocks, through the briars, among the tall timber and through the stunted underbrush until noon, then we would sit down at the root of a big tree or on a dry log, if such could be found, and eat our dinner, which was very plain; but we enjoyed it notwithstanding the fact that the cold chills were playing hide and seek up and down our spinal column; nor during all this tramping did we ever get tired or discouraged, even though we may not have seen any game. Now why did we not get tired or discouraged? The secret of it all is this: WE LOVED THE THING WE WERE DOING.

Now I am just wondering how this might apply in the work of the church. How many people unite with the church and attend its services because they love God and love to do service for him? How many today can say that they are Christians because they want to serve God, and that they do not get tired or discouraged, let come what may, because they "love the thing they are doing?" Oh yes, we say we do; but do we? Let us put it to the test. In John 14:15 we read, "If ye love me, you will keep my commandments." Now, what are some of his commandments? This, to begin with: "Love the Lord thy God with all your heart, with all your mind, and with all your soul—and thy neighbor as thyself." Again, "This is my commandment, that you love one another." Another, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." Also the Great Commission, "All authority is given to me in heaven and earth, go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations." Are you doing this? Are you witnessing for him? Are we keeping these commandments? If not, then how say we that we love him? "If you love me," said Jesus, "you will keep my commandments."

Is it not also true that many who unite with the church today do so from a sense of fear of the wrath and punishment of hell? It is true also that many of these in later years become good servants of God, but is it not also true that a large number of them only get into the kingdom far enough to save themselves, and when the time of temptation comes they lose their grip and are lost to God and the church? The Apostle Paul, after his conversion, was continually pressing on toward that goal, toward the crown of righteousness, toward the reward of faithful service which the Lord the righteous judge was going to give him; and in the same way, I think we should teach that to become a Christian because of love to God and a desire to do service for him, would be an exceedingly greater and by far happier life than to remain in a world of sin or to become a Christian because of fear.

A great many people today have a wrong conception of the church. To many it is a means of entertainment rather than a place to worship God. We are reminded at this time of an illustration that appeared some time ago in the "Expositor." Dr. Benninger tells the story that during his vacation one summer in one of our large cities, he attended services in one of the down town churches where the pastor was a noted preacher. On his return, as he seated himself in a trolley car, he met a young man a stranger and began to talk with him. Finally he said to the stranger, "Were you at the service this morning?" "Yes," was the reply, "for the first time in several years." Then straightening himself up in his seat, and shoving out his chest and with a very dignified look upon his face, he remarked, "I tell you, it takes a mighty big preacher to hold me." That young man had a wrong conception of the church and her ministry. Yet how many there are today who have just that same conception. The church is not a play-house, it is not a carnival, and neither is it a place to go merely to listen to some great, brilliant and flowery orator. It is God's sanctuary; the place in which he has promised to meet with his children; an earthly house in which to teach and hear God's eternal truths and worship him. The business of the ministry is not to try to entertain or please a few folks who, perhaps, pay the greater amount of his salary; his business is to preach the Word. We should not be surprised that this condition is present with us, the Apostle tells us in 2nd Timothy, fourth chapter, that the time will come when people will not endure the sound doctrine; but having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts; and will turn away their ears from the truth. But he also says, "Preach the Truth (Word); be urgent in season and out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and teaching." God grant that our ministry may continue to do so.

Now, why should we unite with the church? Because we believe on Jesus Christ, accept him on faith as our Savior and Redeemer and wish to show our love and appreciation by our worship. How should we worship? John, the beloved disciple says, (John 4:24) "God is a spirit, they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." What is worship? It is a conviction and the confession that all we need in our own lives we find in the life of God; and the abandonment and the surrender of our whole being to him for the fulfillment of his purpose. It is the attitude of saying "yes" to everything God says to do, and "no" to everything he says not to do.

When do we worship? When we are what God wants us to be! We can sing every song that has ever been written; we may quote every passage of scripture written or pray every prayer, and yet not worship; because the songs, the scripture and the prayers are nothing, unless we are in our own individual lives just what God wants us to be.

MONDAY

GOD'S OVERSHADOWING PRESENCE.—Ex. 14:19, 20.

Be thou a pillared flame to show
The midnight snare, the silent foe;
And when the battle thunders loud,
Still guide us in its moving cloud.

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

TUESDAY

THE HONOR OF HUMILITY.—Luke 11:7-14; 18: 13, 14.

"The bird that soars on highest wing,
Builds on the ground her lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing,
Sings in the shade when all things rest;
In lark and nightingale we see What honor hath HUMILITY."

WEDNESDAY

ACCEPTING GOD'S PLAN.—Exod. 4:18-23.

But if by the still small voice he calls
To paths that I do not know,
I'll answer, "Dear Lord, with my hand in thine I'll go where you want me to go."

—Mary Brown.

THURSDAY

SYMBOL OF GOD'S PRESENCE.—Exod. 3:1-6.

Earth's crammed with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
But only he who sees, takes off his shoes,
The rest sit round it and pluck blackberries.

—Mrs. Browning.

FRIDAY

THE GREAT DECISION.—Heb. 11:24-27.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good of evil side.

* * *

Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside, Doubting, in his abject spirit, till his Lord is crucified.

—Lowell.

SATURDAY

THE PROFIT OF GIVING.—Luke 6:38.

For the heart grows rich in giving:
All its wealth is living grain.
Seeds which mildew in the garner,
Scattered, fill with gold the plain.

—Mrs. Charles.

SUNDAY

PURITY'S REWARDING VISION.—Matt. 5:8; 2 Cor. 3:18.

In whom all motion, thought and life are cast,
Know that the pure that travel heavenward ways
Know that the pure that travel heavenward ways
See God at last."

(Prepared by G. S. B.)

Worship in God's house is wholly meaningless and valueless, unless it is preceded by and prepared for by the worship of the life.

How am I to be what God wants me to be? "Discover his laws and walk in his ways." How do I know that I have discovered his laws and am walking in his ways? We are told in his word—"Find the old paths and walk therein and ye shall find rest unto your souls." If you have wholly surrendered your life to God and are not doing what he wants you to do, you will have no rest, and you'll know it. The thing to do is to find our proper place in the world. I do not worship God by going to China or Africa as a missionary, if God intended that I should stay home and farm. We do not worship God by aspiring to do some great, mighty heroic thing for him, if the capacity he has given us is for the quiet simple thing in life. Each one of us worships God best by being what he wants us to be; by doing what he wants us to do; by going where he wants us to go; by using aright the talents he has given us, whether it be two, five or only one.

As Christians, let the God who created you in his own image lead out all the facts of your life to the fulfillment of his purpose, and you will go forward, onward and upward for your progress is assured.

Just a little poem in conclusion.

"Move upward men, move upward:
Be not satisfied to stay
Forever down among the rubbish,
Move upward, that's God's appointed way.

Things down below are crowded,
The air is chill and damp:
Climb up, climb up to sunshine
And on the high hills camp.

Take up your talent, use it;
Say, "I'll try to make it go."
'Tis true its very little
But if you use it, it will grow.

Move forward, men move forward;
Suppose the road is rough;
Suppose no one speaks a word of cheer
If right, that's cheer enough.

Make honest effort for the prize,
Try men, and you will win;
The evil one may say you'll fail;
To heed him, it is sin.

The road sometime will be less rough,
The upgrade change to level.
MOVE FORWARD AND YOU'LL REAH THE GOAL, IN SPIKE OF MAN OR DEVIL."

Uniontown, Pa.

divine presence, amid the bustle of intercourse with men. If I allow my work to get between my heart and the Master, it will be of little worth. We can only effectually serve Christ as we are enjoying him. It is while the heart dwells upon his powerful attractions that the hands will perform the most acceptable service to his name. Nor can any one minister Christ with freshness and power to others if he is not feeding upon Christ in the secret of his own soul. True, he may preach a sermon, deliver a lecture, utter prayers, write a book, and go through the entire routine of outward service, and yet not minister Christ. The man who will present Christ to others must be occupied with Christ for himself."

The Higher Reason.—The truths of the Spirit are not arrived at by process of syllogism and inference. The highest reason, concerned with the supreme realities, is not inferential, but experiential. The intellect is of utmost value within its sphere, and we rightly resent any slur thereon. But the sphere of the intellect is not the higher life of the soul. No man by searching ever found out God, from Job's day to modern university days; but humble, trusting souls have learned to know him in spiritual satisfaction. There are some realities of such a personal nature that it is difficult to see how we can possibly know them unless we experience them. In the teaching of the Spirit, be sure, there will be nothing unreasonable. It is not reason laid aside, but "reason in her most exalted mood," exercised in conjunction with a higher perceptive power which is personal and spiritual.

How Can a Person Be a Way?—Let me tell you how I once found out. I was to lecture in a Y. M. C. A. hall in a city where I had never been before. It was dark and snowing when the train pulled in. I looked about on the unfamiliar platform, when up stepped a young man with the welcome word, "I have come to meet you." I needed then no map of their city. There was nothing for me to puzzle or worry about. This courteous young man had become my "way". But had I refused to walk with him; had I—as Peter did once—"followed afar off"; had I entered into questionable places along the route where my companion would have refused to go with me, I should soon have been in as much trouble as at first. But when one is willing to keep at his side, it is much simpler to have a Person for a "way" than it is to have chart or detailed directions.

The Secret.—The Rev. J. Gofrath says: "I have the strongest of convictions that it would pay many, many fold for the church to cease for a season its busy round of activities and seek for the Holy Spirit's power as for hidden treasure. Then, as a missionary in Korea said after the power of the Spirit came upon the workers at Pyeng Yang, 'He did more in half a day than all he would have done in half a year'; or, as our preachers and others in chan-te-fu exclaimed after the Holy Spirit had swept through the assembly there for ten days with the fires of judgment: 'God has done in ten days more than we could have done in ten years.' If we would evangelize the world in our day we must get back to the Pentecostal Factor."—Condensed from The Decisive Hour in Christian Missions, by Dr. John R. Mott.

OUR PRAYER

Thou, O Christ, are full of light and glory. In our uncertainties and perplexities we turn to thee for grace and guidance. Grant unto us the continuance of thy presence, and aid us to realize that thou art our constant Companion, ready to help in every time of need. May this day be brightened by thy love reflected in our lives, that we may bring forth work meet for thine approval.

Holy Spirit of God, touch with thy quickening power these feeble spirits of ours, purify our desires and animate our wills. Bring us into experience not only of thy blessed indwelling, but of thine even more blessed infilling. Let us face this day conscious not only of our own weakness and frailty, but conscious also of thy great strength, of the warmth of thy love, and of thy willingness to help. In Jesus' name. Amen.—Adapted.

A Parting Message

By Edward Kerlin

OUR SCRIPTURE

Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me (John 14:6). Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works shall he do; because I go unto my Father (John 14:12). Yet a little while and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: because I live, ye shall live also. At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you (John 14:19, 20). But the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you (John 14:26).

LESSON LIGHTS

Early Experiences

The note of time in the first verse of this chapter will point us to two lessons: first, we see how very soon the Israelites went from the glorious heights of their song of triumph to the depths of murmuring and unbelief. Secondly, it teaches us to be kindly in our judgments of people, since they had only one month before emerged from their long and degrading bondage. They had begun the true life, but there had not yet been time for the needed discipline.

The first month's journey lay near the Red Sea, and was not severe. Two incidents only are recorded (Ex. 15:22-27). For three days they marched slowly through an almost waterless desert. Then they approached the waters of Marah, with exultant joy, only to find them too bitter to drink, and their disappointment was more bitter than the water. They murmured against Moses; in unbelief. Moses cried unto the Lord; in faith. In answer to his prayer the Lord showed him a tree, which he cast into the waters, and the waters became sweet.

Next they came to Elim, a beautiful oasis, with springs and fruitful palm trees. Here they pitched their tents and rested.

The Quails

The common quail migrates from Syria and Arabia in order to winter in Central Africa. After the long flight over the Red sea they are often exhausted, and drop to the ground to rest. It is then easy to take the birds with the hand, or to kill them with sticks. This is the natural basis for this miracle, the Divine Providence being shown in its coming at the exact time when it was most needed.

The Manna

In the morning after the coming of the quails, before the dew had dried around the camp, there was seen to be something besides the dew on the ground. When the dew had dried it left this, which caused a great amazement among the people. It was a small round thing, compared in Num. 11:7 to a coriander seed. It was as small as the particles of hoar frost, but it was hard and could be ground in mills and beaten in mortars. It somewhat resembled the "air honey", a glutinous substance which at certain times of the year in this region falls from the air upon leaves and stones and can be scraped off, but it was too hard for that. Again, it resembles the "manna" of modern commerce, but that is a gum exuding from different shrubs and trees, especially the tamarisk; but the Biblican manna came from the air. Moreover, neither of these natural substances falls in anything like sufficient quantities, nor could either of these be used as substitute for bread as a sustaining food.

A Training in Obedience

The manna, and all the arrangements in connection with it, were intended to, and had a tendency to test the Israelites and train them to obedience.

(1) Their going out to gather what they had never seen before.

(2) They were to gather for each one an omer (three quarts and a pint), just enough for one day's supply and no more. A large family required more than a small one (v. 17). Thus every one had an equal chance. This is the true principle of brotherhood. Paul in 2 Cor. 8:15 applies this to Christians.

(3) There was a test of their keeping the Sabbath sacred from work. They had to prepare for the Sabbath the day before. They needed rest as well as toil. They needed the Sabbath in order to gain the highest blessing from the six days of labor.

(4) They needed spiritual food daily, praying for spirit as well as body, "Give us day by day our daily bread."

(5) It was necessary that each one should gather the manna for himself. We have our part to do in gaining our spiritual as well as our bodily food. There is a natural law in the spiritual world. The fruits of the spirit will not grow and ripen and become the best without planting and cultivating as carefully as we do the fruits in our gardens. Rooming at college does not make a scholar, nor a pew in a church make a Christian.

(6) There were special providences for special needs. The narrative does not represent that quails and manna were their sole dependence, or even their principal subsistence, during all the forty years.

Bread of Heaven

"It is impossible, now, to read this narrative without connecting it with the Savior's discourse to the Jews (John 6:27-58), and from which it appears that, over and above the supply of a present and pressing necessity, this manna was designed, like the blazing serpent and the water from the rock in Rephidim, to prefigure and prophesy the coming of him in whom the wants of the soul would be as fully met as those of the body were by these well-known miracles. (1) As the manna was heavenly in its origin, so Jesus Christ is he 'which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world; (2) as the manna was abundant in its supply, so Jesus Christ is bread for every man; (3) as the manna was easily obtained, so Jesus may be received by any believer; (4) as the manna had to be gathered and eaten by each for himself, so Jesus has to be appropriated by each soul to himself, and (5) as the manna was given day by day, so we must continually resort to Jesus for those supplies of grace which we require for the constantly emerging exigencies of life.'"—Taylor.

World's Sunday School Association Pilgrims

An organization has been formed by those who have attended one or more of the nine Conventions of the World's Sunday School Association. A meeting is held at each Quadrennial Convention of both the World's Sunday School Association and the International Council of Religious Education. Such a gathering took place during the International Council Convention in Birmingham, Alabama, on the evening of April 16. One hundred and fifty-seven were present. Frank E. Parkhurst of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was the presiding officer in the absence of the president of the Pilgrims' Association, George W. Penniman, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

During the banquet meeting, a letter was received from Mr. Penniman and by vote, a telegram of greeting was sent to him. Mr. Penniman urged that similar fellowship meetings of World's Pilgrims be held during state and provincial conventions. Special attention was called to the Tenth Convention of the World's Sunday School Association which will be held in Los Angeles, California, July 12-18, 1928. An informational leaflet entitled "Begin Now" can be had by addressing the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

The roll was called by conventions and all stood to be counted who had attended any of these world gatherings. There was no response to London-1889. The other conventions were St. Louis, 1893-1; London, 1898-10; Jerusalem, 1904-8; Rome, 1907-5; Washington, 1910-43; Zurich, 1913-20; Tokyo, 1920-23; Glasgow, 1924-45. All raised their hands when it was asked how many would like to attend the Tenth Convention which will take place in Los Angeles, July, 1928.

Informal addresses were made by Rev. W. D. Kurtz, D.D., McPherson, Kansas; Mr. Arthur T. Arnold, Columbus, Ohio; and Rev. W. C. Poole, Ph.D., D.D., London, England.

TWO AMBITIONS

There is a statue called "The Two Ambitions" by one of the world's greatest sculptors. Two figures are depicted. One sits on a throne with a jeweled crown on his head, and about him are ranged a group of servants proffering all the things that his selfish nature craves. The other figure is that of a young man of athletic build holding to a rock and reaching down into a raging sea to pull up a brother who is in mortal danger. These figures represent two ambitions—selfishness and service.

The Lord's Day

Welcome, sweet day of days, the best,
The time of Holy mirth and rest,
When to God's house the saints repair
To hear his word and see his face,
To learn his will and sing his grace,
And vent their hearts in praise and prayer.

This is employment all divine;
My soul, the blest assembly join,
And from the world this day retire:
Go, bow before thy Maker's throne,
Thy risen Savior's glories own,
And feed thy love, and fan the fire.

Forget the trifles here below.
The shining heap, the gaudy show,
All sensual mirth, and worldly cares;
On wings of strong devotion rise,
Pass every cloud, pass all the skies,
And leave beneath thy feet the stars.

To God direct thy steady flight,
Great fund of bliss, and source of light;
There fix, and there delight thine eyes:
View every shining wonder o'er,
And with transported heart adore,
And feast on fruits of paradise.

This day was by our Lord ordained,
That thus his servants might be trained
For heavenly work, and heavenly joy:
My soul, be this the day of rest,
And thus prepare thee to be blest,
Thus all thy holy hours employ!

Unique Summer Evening Programs

A Suggestion from Louisville, Ohio

The Christian Endeavor society of Louisville, Ohio, recently enjoyed a unique program, which afforded a very successful and profitable meeting. A large home-made poster announcing their service was recently received at the Evangelist office. At the top of the poster was pasted a picture of an excursion train, clipped from an advertisement, labeled "Sunset Limited to Mountain Heights", via the "Sunset Route.", then appeared the following notice:

Free Trip to Mountain Heights

Sunday Evening, July 18

Train leave station (First Brethren Church) promptly at 6:30

Come and enjoy the trip.

A guide will point out and explain places of interest.

* * *

The following schedule will be enforced:

6:30 Praise Station—Singing.

6:40 Bible View—Scripture Lesson.

6:45 Power House—Prayer.

6:50 Refreshment Depot—Special Music.

7:00 Observation Point—Leader's Talk.

7:05 Testimony Tavern—General participation.

7:20 Inspiration Point—Sentence prayers.

7:25 Lookout Mountain—Announcements and offering.

7:30 Mountain Heights—Short tour through "Scripture Caverns" in charge of Engineer Porte.

Engineer—R. F. Porte (pastor).

Conductor—Glenwood Oyster (president).

Guide—Mrs. A. E. Schwab (leader).

Such resourcefulness and energy are bound to be rewarded with successful meetings. If your society interest seems to be lagging, suppose you try something different, and put enough work into the operation to expect success. Interesting prayer-meetings do not happen; they come about in perfectly natural ways—by providing the materials, consecrated effort and prayer. The Louisville society is to be commended for its resourcefulness and consecration and publicity work which point to the secret of its success. Another interest feature of the Louisville Sunday evening program is the combination of the Christian Endeavor program and the preaching service, which plan is said to increase the attendance considerably. This may prove a worthwhile suggestion to others.

We shall be pleased to hear from other societies. Share your successful programs or undertakings with others by making a report of them.

John the Baptist, Whose Torch Showed the Way for the Great Torch-Bearer. Matt. 3:1-6

Abraham, Joseph, Moses and our other torch-bearers have carried their torches of faith, forgiveness, love and many very great qualities. Our torch-bearer for this time lived at the same time that the Great Light of the World lived. John the Baptist was a very important torch-bearer. He used his torch to prepare the world for the coming of a light that was much greater than his own torch. John the Baptist had several very wonderful qualities that we would like to add to our own torches. Watch for these qualities as I tell you his story.

Once there was a priest named Zacharias. He had grown rather old and had no children. His wife's name was Elizabeth. When they received a little boy baby into the family, they were very proud of him and they named him John. This little boy as he grew older received a great deal of Bible training because his father was a priest and so would naturally have his child taught all about the Bible which the Jews of that day studied.

When this boy, John, was a young man, his parents died and he went into the wilderness to live. It was not easy to live in the wilderness. He could not wear fancy clothes and spend his time at the sports of the day. He could not spend long hours playing games. Instead, his life was a rather hard one. He had to wear heavy, tough clothes. These were made out of goat skins and possibly other heavy animal skins. Moreover, John had to live on the food that he could find out in the wilderness, such things as wild honey and locusts which are a type of big grasshopper.

This is the story of John's life up to the time when he began his big work. You know what his big job was, don't you? He was to get the world ready to receive the message of Jesus. Do you know how he did this? He preached and baptized. His message was a very great one. He told the people that they must change their way of living and be better people. Don't you think that it must have taken a lot of courage for one young man all by himself to begin telling everyone about that they were wrong, that they were not living the right kind of lives and that they must repent and change their lives entirely? It did take a lot of courage but John did his job so well that he attracted great crowds to him and many realized that he was telling them the truth and they changed.

Later in life after John had fulfilled his mission of preaching to these people to change their way of living, he showed his courage at another time. This time he knew that one of the rulers of the land was being very wicked and was committing a very great sin. Just think how hard it would be to walk up to someone who was very important, like, for example, a governor, or a president, and to say to that person, "You are wicked." Yet that is just what John the Baptist did. He walked up to the ruler of a certain part of the country and said, "You are sinning." Do you know what happened to John because of this? He was imprisoned, wasn't he? Later, a very wicked woman had him killed. Imagine the very large amount of courage it would take to stand up and try to make people see that they are sinning when those people have the authority to turn about and have you killed. The torch of John the Baptist burned very bright with his great courage as he lighted the way for the great Light of the World who was about to come.

Wedding Bells and Kikuyu Belles

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

(In two parts. Part I)

She was a young girl of the Agikuyu tribe in the mountains of British East Africa. Her hair was black to be sure, curly in the extreme, in short, (and it was short) nothing but wool. A closely woven strand of beads passed over her high forehead and formed as it were suspension cords for her huge and heavy ear-rings, also of beads, and so large and pendulous, that the frail and distended lobes of her ears could not support them without assistance. Enormous strands of beads entwined with another, adorned her shapely neck, and her costume of skins, though scanty, was modestly and becomingly worn.

He was a young warrior, clothed also in a costume of skins, his head fantastically adorned with wool and feathers. He may have looked fierce to your eyes. But to her, he was charming, attractive, and today even eloquent, when he had spoken to her upon that most important of earthly subjects to frail woman-kind, that of marriage. For the Agikuyu, rough and warlike though they are, have a custom superior to that of most African tribes with whom we have to do, in that a girl's consent is asked in marriage. And she had hung her head, and scarcely looked at him as she said, "Go and ask my parents."

And so he presented himself to the old parents. "Kihika," he said respectfully to the old father, "I want you to sell me your daughter Nduturu, to be my wife." Kihika looked up quickly, for an African is always interested in a bargain, and a man's wealth is reckoned according to the number of his wives plus the number of his marriageable daughters. "Wanjiko," he called to a somewhat bent and elderly woman who was stirring the evening porridge with a stick, in the little door-yard of her hut near the palaver house. Wanjiko gave the porridge stick to one of the children for a moment, and immediately responded to Kihika's call.

"Kibora wants to buy our Nduturu," he said, briefly. "For how many sheep?" responded Wanjiko. "That is what he has come to talk to me about," replied the husband and father. "Our Nduturu is strong and supple," said Wanjiko, as she returned to her porridge pot. "Ask him not only the usual sheep, but a cow as well." There was silence. The African bargainer is keen, but equally unhurried, and apparently indifferent. Kihika smoked on. Kibora now and then threw a stick of wood on the fire in the center of the palaver house. At last, "Naigu kwenda?" (Does she love you) demanded the father. "Oh, nianeda, (yes, she loves me) he responded briefly. When at last he arose to go, no bargain had been concluded, but the father's silence had given a tacit consent, and the mother's words were accepted by both. The price was to be above, not below par.

"Tigwanahoru" (dwell in peace) said Kibora, as he passed into the night. "Thianahoru" (go in peace) responded Kihika, as he joined the hungry group around the porridge pot.

Several days had passed; the sun had dropped below the summit of the majestic mountain on whose wooded slopes lived Kihika with his numerous family. Twilight is unknown on and near the equator and darkness settled rapidly upon the nestling village. Up the slope of the mountain a man was slowly climbing, leading a small flock of fifteen sheep. It was Kibora bringing the first installment of the price which he was to pay for his bride. In the hut which the sheep had occupied a huge fire had been built, and its glowing coals covered with ashes. It must not die for four days. Kihika saw the little procession, and immediately recognized his future son-in-law. "Nduturu," he called to his daughter, just back from her heavy day's work in the gardens. Nduturu ran to do his bidding. "Build a fire in your hut," he said briefly. "Huge enough to last for four days when banked." Nduturu ran joyfully to her hut. Was it not her engagement fire she was to build? Had not her sharp eyes seen her lover with his little procession even through the rapidly gathering African night? For in some ways love is not blind, but amazingly clear-sighted. All Agikuyu know how to build fires. They love fire, for on their lofty mountain summits, and even sometimes upon their slopes ice and frost are not unknown. "Don't tell the people again there is fire in hell," once said a native Christian to the missionary, "or they will all want to go there. Surely it must be a cold place," he said undoubtedly. "Simply tell them how cold it is." But if fire was ordinarily welcome in Nduturu's hut, her engagement fire was doubly so. To the smouldering embers which disclosed themselves as she raked away the ashes Nduturu skillfully added fuel—fuel for the fire that for four consecutive days must not be suffered to die out, lest her engagement should be broken.

Across the Kidong valley the tropical sun was swiftly rising, lighting Skipping Hill, and the Escarpment and the seemingly extinct volcano of Songano with its ruddy glow. Its sudden rays fall as if by surprise upon Kibora, once more climbing the mountain slope to Kihika's village, bringing another payment for his bride. Ten more sheep for Kihika's flock and Kihika and his wives and daughters rejoice. Now he has arrived at the entrance of the village, but he cannot proceed further for a time. Is not his coming expected? The fifteen sheep that he brought last night, did not all the village know them to be too few for the strong and supple Nduturu, the daughter of Kihika? And so the women of the village, like women the world over, deeply interested in the announcement of a young girl's engagement have not yet gone to their gardens. Meeting Kibora at the village entrance they trill and sing the Gitiro song, (song of the engagement) and dance in excited but harmonious figures until the sun has for an hour continued its ascent. Kibora is now permitted to enter the village enclosure, leading the ten sheep to the very door of the hut in which he had placed the fifteen sheep the night before. But the door is shut. The sheep have gone forth to pasture, and the women refuse to open the door. Kibora had expected all this. Was it not the custom? A whistle such as a young mu Kiyuku knows only too well how to give, and Kibora's small brother Kihana appears driving before him a young female kid, and leading by the hand a female lamb. These Kibora presents to the women for the engagement feast. They at once open the door of the hut and the ten sheep are placed therein. Now one of the women runs to her own hut and brings him some uenu (millet gruel) which he immediately accepts drinking it from the gourd in which it is brought. The engagement being duly announced he returns to his home.

It is the following day; Kibora is in his garden cutting sugar-cane. He works busily. The women's engagement feast is over, but is not the men's feast to follow? Is it not always the third day thereafter? And so the second day must be full of beer making for the men's carousal. While in Kibora's village the men are working busily, in Kihika's village the women are equally busy preparing the flour to be consumed with the beer which Kibora shall bring on the following day. But Kibora must furnish the goat as well, this time appropriately a male. 'Tis a great feast with goat and porridge and beer consumed amid much palaver by the men of both villages equally.

But the bride price has never yet been settled. Kibora has not been too lavish with his sheep, although he has tried to appear generous. Now he approaches his future father-in-law. The moment is a psychological one to be sure but the custom of settling the bride-price at a beer drink was never made to favor the bridegroom. "How many more sheep Kihika?" he says, for he must take the initiative now. "Sheep, my son?" replies Kihika, excited by the feast and intoxicated by the beer. "For my Nduturu one must pay not only the full price in sheep or goats, but a cow as well."

They were Wangiko's very words on the night of the first proposal. Thankful that Kihika was not yet sufficiently intoxicated to add thereto, he accepted the verdict, noting the use of the word goats. He had not yet offered goats, but he would make up the balance yet remaining of forty with them. And the cow, he would bring as well tomorrow.

Two months rolled slowly by. When the second moon was full, Kibora presented himself once more at Kihika's palaver house. Again they sat seemingly musing in the palaver house, when Kibora remarked in a matter of fact tone. "I bought your daughter, but still she works, not in my garden but in yours." "Gwitia murima" (ask for the gardener) says Kihika briefly. Kibora understands. Again he whistles for his small brother Kihuna who is in the background and presents Kibora with yet another sheep, saying, "Shall not Nduturu work now for me?"

"Certainly," says Kihika, as though surprised that the question should even be asked. The wedding feast now approaches. Again Kibora provides the beer and brings this time not only a goat, but an ox as well and the feast is celebrated for Nduturu's relatives. He pays as it were in the furnishing of this feast, an additional stipend that none of her family may bewitch her and thus prevent her child-bearing.

A few days later Kihika is seen offering a sacrifice to those spirits invisible but real to the heathen Mukikuyu. The sacrifice is nothing less than a sheep, and is accompanied by thanksgiving and by prayer, thanksgiving that Nduturu's life was spared until she was sold and her bride price actually received, prayer that she may not be barren, for should she be Kibora will but, if he wishes, bring her back again, and receive not only the forty sheep and goats, but the cow as well and all their progeny!

(To be continued.)

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

CAMDEN, OHIO

I have been asked to send in a report of our existence here at Camden.

For some time we had been burdened with a mortgage on our church. So on May 9, 1926 we decided to ask God to help us raise sufficient money to pay off this mortgage. With so much faith and so many prayers we could not help but "go over the top."

The work of the church has not been at a standstill, and the members are always up and doing. The attendance has been very good this spring.

Our revival campaign was put on during the first part of the year. Our pastor, Rev. Berry led this series of meetings. There were two lives given to Christ during the meetings. In general everyone was benefited by the meetings and it was a great success, not because of the numbers that confessed Christ, but because everyone was made to realize that they would reap according as they sowed.

The Woman's Missionary Society is very active and accomplishing a great deal in their field of work.

The Sunday school attendance is very good. We hope and pray that the Lord will see fit to increase it from Sunday to Sunday for from this source do we get our greatest numbers of additions to the church, as everyone knows.

HAZEL FLORA, Cor. Sec'y.

PORTIS, KANSAS

For some time we have known we owed a letter to the Evangelist columns, but we have entreated others to send in notes in our stead. However we have tried to be busy for the Lord in all things. We have observed all special days, and the general church activities have been taken care of in a good way. "Busy" was our middle name all spring, with different community activities to look after. Some of the work we were supposed to do in these enterprises may seem to have been meager and the places occupied may be more or less those of a "figure-head." But here's a list: president of the Community Parent-Teachers' Association for the coming year; chairman of the County Civic League for Law Enforcement, and recently we took over the responsibility of the county president of The Council of Religious Education, in which we are now promoting a county-wide Sunday school Picnic and a county institute this fall. We also superintend the Vacation Bible School in May and June, which was the sixth successful year of work in the community; gave a commencement address in another town twenty miles west of us; held a two weeks' revival meeting at Udell, Iowa in May. We meet with the Boy Scouts once a week and teach the Junior boys in our Sunday school. We preached an average of three sermons a Sunday for the entire year up to June 1. Well, you say, what about new members? We have baptized 8 and taken into the church 12 members in 1926.

The average attendance for the first quarter in the Sunday school was —, for the second quarter was 124 and one-half. The superintendent has some special feature most every session. The Christian Endeavor work is still going good and the newly installed officers are already making preparations to entertain the District Christian Endeavor Convention early this fall, in our church. By the way, last Sunday the Sunday school attendance was more than equal to our little city's population (three schools)—which is a record we often make. Portis is known as a religious center.

Now a word about the Iowa meeting in May. Udell was our first regular pastorate (before our college days) in 1914-16, a period of 30 months. We began the "May-Time Revival" on the fourth and continued till the 16th. Mrs. Deeter assumed the role of choir leader. We have been "hitched up" for 19 years, but in this meeting in a special way. The attendance the second week was double of what it was the first week. It was a very busy season of the year for the farmers, but there were some who were busy and were there every night too. This church is struggling along and doing the best it can without a pastor, keeping the Sunday school up in a nice way. Mrs. Mary Longley is the efficient superintendent. She has great faith, and is a valuable asset to the work. Quite a number of the Church of the Brethren came every night and assisted in the choir and in special numbers. On the last Friday evening of the series we held a communion service—the first they had had for two years—and all seemed to enjoy the occasion greatly. Six good people reconsecrated their lives to the Master, and on the closing night 25 others took a stand for more faithfulness and better service for the church. Four others who were under conviction and near the kingdom, hesitated to make the good choice. A well-known evangelist has said, "Not to choose is choosing," hence in not accepting the Lord as Master, they chose otherwise. We hope and pray that these people will be able to obtain a pastor soon, for they deserve it. The free-will offering was above our expectations. Thanks to you all. God bless you. Udell has some true blue Christians. We made the journey to and from Iowa in a new Fordor; one day we drove 335 miles. A happy season together. Professor Wimmer filled the pulpit at home during our absence.

In April we made a journey into Norton County with E. E. Lichty, one of the District Mission Board, to assist him in finding a buyer for the unused church property known as the old Maple Grove Colony Church. We disposed of some of the chairs and the building was left in charge of a nearby man to make further disposal. Short crops, however, causes slow demand for building material.

At the spring business meeting the church gave us a call to remain on the field another year beginning next October—our fifth year. The church is in better shape financially than a year ago, though the wheat crop this year is almost a complete failure. The spring season was very dry. Since July rains have come which sets the corn in a good way for a crop as far as we know now. We have great reasons to rejoice. The W. M. S. and S. M. M. have all bills paid and a little balance on hands.

August 29th will be our Home Coming Day, and Every Member Canvass Campaign. We hope to make this a BIG and profitable day.

We rejoice with others in the good work being accomplished in the homeland as well as across the sea. It is a joy to note the building campaigns at different points among the Brethren for more adequate equipment to do efficient work. God bless you all.

We have placed catchy signs along the curb near the church and on a telephone pole, such as, "Welcome to Worship," "Garments of Righteousness Never Get Out of Style," "Eternity Is a Long Time; Where Will You Spend It?" "Sin Is Death—Go To Church Sunday—God Is Life." "Worship Amid Pleasant Surroundings," "Tourists Welcome." In this western country where green lawns are few and far between, we have one of the most beautifully kept green lawns, with flowers, plants and water fountain in the city. Summer worshipers will find a sweet comfort in outside surroundings, with electric fans and comfortable pews inside.

More anon.

W. R. DEETER.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

I recently received some curios from Miss Myers in Africa. The College has a curio case and they have been put there. It is a great pleasure to know that the College is remembered by our far-off African friends.

The Local Canvass

Recently the local trustees met and employed a fund raising company with headquarters in New York for the local endowment canvass. The canvass is to go forward in October and offices will be opened here September 6, just after Conference. The Summer School closes the week before Conference and I must meet the State Council of Education in Harrisburg, Pa., the third of September and College opens the 14th. So events will move rather rapidly here for the next several months. The interest of the entire church ought to be centered here for the local drive. While it will be successful beyond a doubt, it will nevertheless, be a hard one. We will need your sympathy and prayers, for the old school needs now all the support possible. My visit to Harrisburg is made necessary because it will take some pressure to get from that State Board all I want.

The fund raising company referred to above, is the Ward, Wells, of New York, who have had a very successful history in this kind of work. Colleges and hospitals are their special field. We expect to reach the local alumni also.

Professor Anspach filled the pulpit at Smithville last Sunday in the absence of Brother Sands who has gone east on his vacation.

Mrs. Jacobs, with Junior and Jack, have been visiting with Mrs. Jacobs' sister in New York City.

Professor and Mrs. J. A. Garber are in Virginia where they are visiting his people.

Occasional word from Professor De Lozier indicates that he is filling the pulpit of the First Church at Johnstown very ably.

Professor Mason has been spending some days in Columbus where he has finished his work for the M. A.

I preached a week ago Sunday in St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Bucyrus.

Word recently received from Edith Garber, who has been traveling for the Sisterhood, indicates an interest among those organizations in the College, which is a very good sign as the College is particularly anxious to interest our own young people.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

THE SECOND CHURCH OF LOS ANGELES

The First Brethren Church of Johnstown, Pa., is to be congratulated upon their real genuine sacrificial spirit; and I mean what I say. It means something for a large, thriving congregation to spare their active pastor for a period of four months. In some cases it would nearly mean disaster; but a good general always trains men to take his place when he is gone.

There was a very peculiar condition on the Pacific Coast to begin with. There are but a few churches to begin with; and the ministers of those churches have "Been Once Around" in meetings at these churches, and therefore new material from the east had to be imported. It is also true that a man coming to the Coast for a campaign like we wanted must possess certain credentials. No one but a staunch Fundamentalist need apply. Then we wanted an evangelist with a burning message. In order to secure such a man the First Church at Whittier, the First Church of Long Beach and the Second Church of Los Angeles, pooled their interests and with the District of Southern California, secured Brother Ashman of Johnstown for this great undertaking. It is needless to say that these churches stood by him as the reports will inform the readers of the Evangelist.

At the Second church the visible results were that seventy souls came forward at the call and there were but three by reconsecration and three by letter. The invisible results God alone knows. But Ashman made and kept a very warm place in all our hearts with his fearless and masterful way of presenting a pure, unadulterated gospel according to the Brethren interpretation, entirely free from Modernism, evolution, social gospel, and the other signs of theological decay so apparent today. God bless Ashman. May his message be heard from sea to sea and from the lakes to the gulf. That's the kind of a man who should be a month in every Brethren church in the brotherhood. And that Melvin Stuckey is another apostle of the Sunday school who gave his only begotten Son; that we love him because he first loved us, and that if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

Preaching of this type might even take some great event or phrase of current interest as a starting point; but instead of being satisfied with useless wrangling over words and phrases, it would go on from that point to teach the higher, spiritual truths suggested by them.

It might even have taught the reasons why we believe in some of our distinctively Brethren ordinances. In recent years some have come to feel that we should never preach on such a subject as the washing of feet, or the Lord's Supper, for fear that we might offend some who might be present from other churches. Even Brethren people often feel that it is out of place to preach Brethren beliefs in Brethren churches. If the ideals and beliefs of the Brethren church are at all worthy of our continuance in them, if we have any faith in them at all, need it be counted such a strange thing if her pastors should presume to teach them occasionally in her churches? But instead of adopting some of the controversial methods of the past, let us rather teach the meaning of these ordinances, the inner, spiritual truth which the forms but symbolize.

This type of preaching points out not only the great duties involved in the 13th chapter of John, but also the privileges. Nor does it stop there: it goes on to teach all the duties and privileges of the life of faith; it teaches the great messages of the Word, together with its great doctrine. Under this head comes what is commonly called EXPOSITORY PREACHING. I believe it is not too much to say that this was our Lord's favorite method of teaching, especially when dealing with those who were at all familiar with the word. Just as one illustration of his use of this type is the incident of the walk to Emmaus, that first Sunday after the resurrection: it is said that, "Beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself," and we know with what happy results.

Some might differ with me at first thought, when I say that Paul's preaching was likewise mostly of this type. He loved to take a verse, or a passage of scripture, and bring out its full beauties, the deep things of God that lay hidden beneath the surface. In at least one instance, he even bases his exposition on a single letter from one word (Gal. 3:16). If I may give a word of personal testimony and experience let me say that no other type of preaching has brought such spiritual blessing to my own life as this; also, that there is no other type of preaching that I so love to give to others. The Word of God is quick and powerful (Heb. 4:12), and if I can so expound the word that my people shall understand its message, I have brought them a far more powerful message than any sermon of mine. It not only stirs the mind and emotions, but it strengthens and builds up our lives on our most holy faith: in short, IT EDIFIES!

These are days when much emphasis is being laid upon a reasonable belief; the appeal is constantly being made to reason—and rightly so. When we can establish men's faith on the reasonable basis contained in the word of God, it stands firm. And I submit that the way to establish it is, not by preaching our own sermon ideas at them, nor by leaving them with some mere or less vague impression that things ought some way to be different; but by opening up the scriptures to their understanding, and by TEACHING them; that the type of preaching most needed is the preaching that teaches.

Lydia, Maryland.

should by all means be in every school in the brotherhood. He is prepared. He knows what he is talking about. He does not waste his time on "Religious Education" and other digressions, but he teaches the real straight, genuine, first class, doctrines of the scriptures in a pedagogical way with definite and permanent results.

VICTORY AT LOS ANGELES

The Second Church of Los Angeles, under the able leadership of Brother Cobb, has made most commendable progress within the last three years. They have erected an excellent church edifice. It is arranged for Sunday school purposes in as efficient a manner as any Brethren church we have seen. The Sunday school has tripled itself within this period as has also the church membership. The growth, progress and prosperity of this congregation is of an unusual type for so short a period.

We enjoyed the three weeks among the Brethren very much. Brother Cobb proved himself to be a worthy co-laborer. The church rallied to the campaign in prayer, attendance and personal soul winning. Everything was done to make our sojourn among them pleasant and our labors of evangelism successful. This church has a great field. We believe there is a great future ahead for them and expect to learn of continual and rapid and permanent growth for them. There were several serious handicaps in the meeting. During the second week three high schools were holding their commencements and families of the church were unavoidably drawn into them. The meeting closed on July 4, battling with the holiday temptations and opportunities for vacations. But Christ gave us victory over all these, although the numbers would unquestionably have been larger if they had not prevailed. Seventy public confessions were taken. We praise him for them.

Thus closes our three evangelistic campaigns in Southern California. During these nine weeks 216 public confessions were received. Since January 1 of this year, 340 have publicly confessed Christ during the meetings it has been our privilege to conduct. We rejoice in our Lord that he has been willing to use so unworthy an instrument to hasten the day when the Bride will be completed.

We are now in the midst of the wonderful Bible Conference of Southern California after which we will go to Sunnyside, Washington, to conduct a five days' Bible Conference. Then, homeward bound to preach to our own dear people on Sunday, August 8.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

DODDS-LUTZ—Miss Edna C. Dodds and Mr. Fred Lutz, both of Falls City, were united in the bonds of wedlock at the home of the writer, May 4, 1926. The bride was one of our loyal church workers and her removal from our midst is keenly felt, but her services elsewhere will be appreciated. She is a daughter of our Brother and Sister J. W. Dodds. The groom belongs to a well-known Falls City family and is of a congenial disposition that makes happy companionship. He is a member of the Presbyterian church. The happy couple left immediately after the ceremony for their home in Wyoming where the good wishes of their many friends of Falls City follow them for a prosperous and happy wedded life.

A. L. COVER

MURRAY-VERTZ—Mr. Stanley Murray of Mahton, Washington, and Miss Theone Vertz of Sunnyside, Washington, were united in marriage at the Brethren parsonage, Sunnyside, Washington, on March 27, 1926. The groom is a rancher and the happy couple will make their home on his ranch near Mahton, Washington. They have the best wishes of their friends for a happy life.

BELCHER-MUIR—Mr. Willis G. Belcher and Miss Verna Muir, both of Sunnyside, Washington, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents on the evening of June 5, 1926. Only the immediate friends of the contracting parties witnessed the ceremony. Both these young people are active members of the Sunnyside Brethren church and are closely identified with all the departments of church life and the best wishes of the entire church is theirs for a life of continued happiness and usefulness. Ceremony by the writer.

IN THE SHADOW

BENSHOFF—Paul Benschoff, son of Solomon and Susannah Benschoff, was born September 14, 1866 and departed this life July 3, 1926, aged 59 years, 9 months and 19 days. Death was due to pneumonia. The deceased was a member of the Brethren church since early youth. He is survived by one brother, George; one half brother, John J., both of Johnstown; the following sisters: Mrs. Sadies Lippincott, Pittsburgh; Mrs. G. W. Moore, Johnstown; Mrs. L. G. Stutzman, Kramer; Mrs. Mides Hammer, Belle, Ellen and Elizabeth, Johnstown; three children—William, Ebenezer and Olive Vogie and four grandchildren, besides a goodly number of friends.

Services by the writer assisted by Brethren W. S. Baker and Bauman.

J. L. GINGRICH.

COBAUGH—Susan, daughter of Joseph and Hannah Hildebrand, was born March 15, 1852 and died July 1, 1926, aged 74 years, three months and 16 days. Death was due to pneumonia. Sister Cobough was a member of the Brethren church for 34 years and lived her entire life in Cambria County. Deceased was preceded to the spirit world by her husband seven years in February. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. Levina Riblett, Conemaugh; one brother, S. B. Hildebrand, Jackson township; one daughter, Mrs. Lulu I. Grove and four grandchildren. Services by the writer, assisted by W. S. Baker.

J. L. GINGRICH.

SPRAGGINS—Judge John D. Spraggins answered the summons that sooner or later awaits us all, March 31, 1926. He lived a long and useful life in the community and the esteem in which he was held was evidenced by a large concourse of friends that paid tribute by attending the funeral service held at our church. He attended to the duties of his office until failing health no longer permitted him. He was married to Lydia Friend June 29, 1868, who with one son survives. Judge Spraggins was one of those characters that to know him was to esteem him. He was never too busy to lay aside the many duties of business life to converse with a friend. It was the writer's privilege to share with him in many conversations and especially so during his last illness. He would converse upon religious subjects invariably. When health permitted, he attended the Brethren church and supported the work during the years. The funeral theme was: "Gone but not forgotten." And by the kindly deeds that were administered to many a needy one he shall live on. We pray God's blessing upon Sister Spraggins, who has been faithful to a loving husband during the years and may now find comfort in her faith to a loving Savior, whom she has served during the years. Services by the writer.

A. B. COVER.

CAMBLIN—The infant son, Elmer Jr., of Elmer and Irma Camblin, died May 17, 1926. The little one that came as a beautiful blossom into the lives of these young parents lived but a few days. While the joys that the developing life of a child brings to parents was not to be the lot of these parents, yet the instinct of parenthood was realized and their lives will be sweetened to know that in the hands of the Great Shepherd is a jewel they gave. May they be comforted in the thought that their loved little one is beyond the hard cruel world and at home with those that inherit the kingdom. Services by the writer.

A. B. COVER.

BOOTH—John Franklin Booth departed this life July 2, 1926, being almost 66 years old. He was a native of Hartford, Conn., but in childhood emigrated to Ohio, residing for last several years in Columbus. He is survived by his only son and four grand children, who reside in Columbus, his wife having preceded him in death many years ago.

Brother Booth became a Christian early in life and took an active interest in the work and worship of the church. It was January 1, 1919 that he united with the Brethren Church in Columbus, of which he was a very faithful member until his death. His final illness, from which he suffered much and of which he complained but little, prevented him from participating as actively in the work of the church as he wished. When he realized that the end of his pilgrimage was near he was resigned to the will of the Lord and ready to go. The funeral services were held in the Columbus Brethren church, conducted by the writer.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

MYERS—Mrs. Susan Ebersole Myers was born in Hancock County, Ohio, September 4, 1858 and departed this life

July 10, 1926, in Fostoria, Ohio. She was married to J. M. Myers March 9, 1881, who preceded her in death about two months ago. To them were born two sons, Charles and John, who, with four grand daughters, one brother and one sister, still survive. Sister Myers united with the Brethren Church in West Independence, Ohio, about twenty-six years ago and when the Brethren Church was organized in Fostoria placed her membership there. She delighted in the praise and worship of God. She had been afflicted for many years and suffered much. Although she was hindered from attending public worship she was devoted to Christ and took especial delight in prayer. Funeral services by the writer.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

HARGETT—Mrs. Adeline Garty Hargett was born in Stark County, Ohio, near Middlebranch, January 16, 1860; died July 4, 1926; aged 66 years, 5 months, 18 days.

She leaves an invalid husband, three sons, four daughters and thirteen grand children to mourn her departure.

She was a member of the Middlebranch Brethren Church for many years.

When she came to Canton she had her membership transferred to the Canton Brethren Church.

She was also a member of several patriotic organizations.

She was a kind, loving, affectionate mother. Her life was lived with Christ in God. She was devoted to the holy art of Godly worship. She loved her Bible, her church and her country, and lived in the fine personality of the Christ and will be missed in the home, the church and the community. Funeral service by the writer in the absence of the pastor, assisted by Rev. D. F. Eikenberry in the Canton Brethren Church. Burial in North Lawn Cemetery.

ALVIN BYERS.

RUTT—Laura Dell Troxel was born October 9, 1877. She passed away May 22, 1926, aged 48 years, 7 months and 13 days. She was united in marriage to Charles Rutt on November 15, 1899. Three children were born to this union, the eldest having passed away almost 24 years ago. The mother, husband, daughter and son of the deceased remain to mourn their loss.

Mrs. Rutt was a splendid Christian, a member of the Fairlawn (Ohio) congregation, and she was held in highest esteem by a host of friends.

The funeral services were conducted at the home by Brother B. F. Owen, a former beloved pastor and by the writer, the present pastor.

A. D. CASIMAN.

ERWIN—George Sterling Erwin was born in Illinois, May 15, 1856. He came to Kansas when 16 years of age and had lived in Drywood vicinity practically all of his life. He died Wednesday afternoon at 1:20 o'clock, June 30, 1926 at the Fort Scott hospital, where he had been confined with a lingering illness for about twenty weeks.

At an early age he was married to Miss Isabelle Snow of Cato, Kansas. To this union eight children were born, seven of whom are living. They are, William and Charles of Kellogg, Idaho; Roy, of Wichita, Kans.; Harvey, of Garland, Kans.; Omie and Mrs. Lillian Stroud, Arcadia, Kans., and Ora of California.

He also leaves a mother 95 years of age at Reeds, Mo., a sister, Mrs. Anna Woody, of Sulphur Springs, Ark., and another sister, Mrs. Rachel Phelps, of Grove, Okla., a brother, Monroe Erwin of Coody's Bluff, Okla., and a large number of nieces and nephews. The funeral service was held at 2 o'clock the afternoon of July 2, at the large school house, by the writer. Interment was made in the Pleasant View Cemetery, twelve miles south of Fort Scott, Kans.

L. G. WOOD.

WILLIAMS—Ansel Stroud Williams was born in Humphreys, Kentucky, March 16, 1856. Came to Bourbon County, Kansas, when 14 years of age and continued his residence here until death, which occurred Thursday morning of July 1, 1926. He died of cancer after suffering patiently for about two years.

Mr. Williams received the best of care that loving hands of his wife and children could render.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Lonana Williams; a brother, S. L. Williams, in Kentucky, and the following children: Mrs. R. B. Brown, of Pittsburg, Kans.; Jay Leonard and Mildard, at home; Zona, Verna and Anna, of Fort Scott, Kans., and one grand daughter, Leona Brown, of Pittsburg, Kans. He was highly respected by all who knew him. The funeral was conducted from the Koutintz Mortuary, of Fort Scott, at 2:30 P. M. of July 3d, by the writer.

The body was laid to rest in the Clarksburg Cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

EDENFIELD—Carl Larkin Edenfield, son of Edward and Minnie (Show) Edenfield, died at the Uniontown Hospital on June 25th, after an illness of but two days.

Carl was born in Uniontown on March 31, 1917 and was but 9 years, 2 months and 24 days old when he departed this life.

He was a member of the Junior boys' class of the First Brethren Sunday School, known as the "Stay for Church Boys," and taught by the pastor, and needless to say was very regular. He is survived by his parents and four brothers and one sister.

Funeral services were conducted in the Show home in this city on Sunday afternoon June 27, at 2:30, the undersigned officiating. Burial was in the Oak Grove Cemetery.

May the Holy Spirit be with and comfort those who mourn the loss of child, brother and friend.

E. F. BYRIS.

JOHNSON—Estel Dallas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Johnson, was born at Minden, W. Va., October 19, 1908 and passed to that bourne from which none return, June 6, 1926. She was aged seventeen years, seven months and seven days. Tuberculosis was the cause of her untimely death. She is survived by her father, mother, one brother and two sisters. Funeral services were held at the Oak Hill Brethren church in charge of the writer.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

ARRITT—Helen Rowan, foster daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Arritt, was born September 14, 1919 and met an accidental death in front of her home in Oak Hill June 9, 1926. The driver of the car made every effort possible to save her life and in so doing the car turned over upon her crushing her so terribly that death resulted in a few minutes.

Services were held in the Oak Hill Methodist Church in charge of Rev. A. R. Young and the writer.
FREDMAN ANKRUM.

WEED.—Mrs. E. C. Weed passed out of this life in Sunnyside, Washington, July 2, 1926. Mrs. Weed, whose maiden name was Adeline Yeager, was born in Millersburg, Doffer County, Pa., November 26, 1841. She spent most of her childhood in the state of Iowa. She was, however, afforded the privilege of much travel owing to the fact that her father was a millwright and he took his family with him from place to place as his work demanded. She was married to Edmund Calvin Weed, December 22, 1886, at Lanark, Ill. They moved from this place to Lamar, Mo. After living at this place for a number of years they returned to Lanark. In 1905 Mr. and Mrs. Weed moved to Sunnyside, Washington, at which place they have made their home to the present. Mrs. Weed was of a large family of children all of whom, with the exception of one sister, Mrs. Susan Taylor, of Clinton, Nebr., have preceded her to the spirit world.

In early life Mrs. Weed united with the Protestant M. E. Church. Later she united with the Bethel or "Church of God." It was a real pleasure to open her home to the workers and pastors of the church.

She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, four nephews and one niece besides numerous friends. Two of the nephews and one niece reside in Illinois. Two of her nephews and their families, Robert Weed and John Weed, reside in Washington. These nephews and nieces were loved by Mrs. Weed as her own since she was not blessed with children in her own home. Those who know her life give assurance that throughout her life she never lost faith in her Savior.

Funeral services from the Sunnyside, Washington, undertaking parlors by the pastor of the First Brethren Church.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

GENERAL CONFERENCE CREDENTIALS

By the last of July all National Conference credentials will have been sent out. There are a number of pastorless churches of which I do not have the names of secretaries, so cannot send credentials. If such are in need of same, please write me and I will send them promptly. Any others that have been missed, either by oversight on my part or if pastor's address has been changed, I shall be glad to supply you also.

Yours for a great conference.

O. C. STARN, Secretary.

AN APPEAL

For the first time in the history of our work we are compelled to turn pupils away for lack of room before the opening of school. BUT WE ARE STILL SHORT ONE HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER. This teacher is needed AT ONCE. Requirements are high school graduate, and college graduate if possible, or at least two years of college work, or its equivalent. Through a disappointment this vacancy still exists, and WILL YOU PLEASE HELP THROUGH PRAYER AND ANY OTHER WAY, IN GETTING THIS TEACHER FOR THE WORK?

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY

With the hope that these lines may catch the eye of some young man interested in the ministry of the Brethren Church, I have chosen the title. Out of nearly eight hundred students enrolled in Ashland College last year about forty-five were enrolled in the Seminary. Such enrollment expressed the definite purpose of engaging in distinctive Christian work, either in the ministry or some form of missionary service. Of this number sixteen graduated, eleven men and five women. Of the men who completed their course six are in the active pastorate, one will pursue a medical course with a view to Africa and one is in Y. M. C. A. work. For my present purpose I need only point out that the church will receive a fine contribution of life from the others not yet so definitely engaged including the young women graduates.

But this exodus of students will greatly reduce our numbers in the Seminary for the next year, and we must do out utmost to enlist others to take these places. Elsewhere in this Evangelist Dr. Jacobs has an announcement of the work of the college at Ashland. I shall here add a few words relative to the work of the Seminary.

After much discussion and most serious thought the trustees have adopted a new plan at the suggestion of the president and the professors whose work is distinctively in the Seminary. In brief the procedure in the future will be as follows: Men who enter the college for the first time and who have the ministry in view, will have the choice of two courses. The first is a definitely planned theological course of three years work following upon three years of preparatory college work. At the end of the student's Junior year in college he will be admitted to the Seminary. At the end of his first year in the Seminary he will graduate from the Arts College with the A. B. degree. Then after two full years further work he will graduate with the degree of Th. B.

We believe this plan will offer very great advantages over the old plan to the serious student. First, it will give him a necessary foundation upon which to build the theological studies or disciplines; second, it will help him find himself and make his purpose to be a minister positively fixed; he will have no regrets for having begun a work which he wishes he had not chosen; third, it will help men to choose the ministry at what is in a young man's life the really critical point; fourth, it will make the character of all the work offered by the professors in charge of this training of a much higher order; fifth, it will really make the building up of a seminary a realizable goal.

This new plan does not set aside the former Arts-Divinity course requiring four years' work. It does make two full years' work in the college necessary before entering upon the distinctively seminary group of studies required for graduation. The student may still earn the A. B. in Theology.

For any students who may not have the regular high school training necessary to enter the Freshman class of the college the seminary professors will offer work in the English Bible and related subjects. This English-Diploma course is an excellent training for those who for any reason cannot take the longer and more difficult courses.

Hereafter students who enter will pay the regular college tuition for the first half of their work, done in the college. Thereafter when admitted to the Seminary all fees and tuitions are remitted except an annual incidental fee of five dollars. Students already matriculated are not affected by the change.

Will you write for the Seminary announcement which has been prepared and which we will be glad to mail you? Address,

J. ALLEN MILLER, Dean.

ASHLAND COLLEGE

Ashland, Ohio

ASHLAND COLLEGE will open its Forty-ninth Year, Tuesday, September 14, 1926. The following departments offer the customary courses:

ARTS AND SCIENCES, leading to the usual bachelor's degrees.

SEMINARY, recently extended on a six-year basis,—three in the Arts College and three in the Seminary. The Bachelor of Arts degree at the end of four and the Bachelor of Theology at the end of six years.

EDUCATION—Two years' course leading to elementary certification under Ohio laws. Also in other states with equivalent requirements.

Four years' course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Education. Certificates granted for state-wide teaching in High School. So in other states with exchange arrangements with Ohio.

MUSIC—Piano, full graduation courses with two teachers.

Voice, as above with three teachers.

Violin, with one teacher and an assistant.

In every relation and in all courses of instruction, the whole institution is frankly and avowedly Christian. In courses permitting religious discussion, Christian ideals are stressed.

Student life and activity are largely under the close and sympathetic supervision of two Deans, one for men and one for women.

Parents and young people are both alike asked to consider this College when contemplating further study.

For catalogue and further information, write to the president,

A Diluted Form of Religion

One thing that has greatly impeded the progress of the Kingdom and wrought weakness and disgrace in the church is a diluted form of religion. It has not been peculiar to our age, it has been present in every age, but that fact gives us little consolation in view of the serious handicap that the church of today is experiencing because of it. Nor is it confined to any particular sect or creed; it is a disease troubling our church and every church. Everywhere men are found who have contracted religion in such a light form that it has seemed to produce little or no effect in their lives. And while it has wrought little change, it has made them practically immune to any more genuine or typical form of religion. It has taken the edge off their hunger and thirst after righteousness so that they do not seek more for themselves, and having a form of godliness their lack of the power thereof is not always recognized by their more genuinely Christian associates, with the result that their spiritual depravity is overlooked more than is that of the out-and-out sinner. And for this reason we ought to give the more earnest heed to the stirring of the hearts of such to their need of genuine spiritual renewal and quickening, and also because of the retarding effect of such light-hearted, luke-warm souls upon the work of the church. One of the most urgent needs of the church is a revitalizing of the lives of the membership. We exercise boldness in prayer and effort on behalf of those who have made no confession of Christ, but we are timid and neglectful of the sad spiritual state of those who have scarcely religion enough to be saved and are totally lacking in that genuine sort that moves men to rejoicing and service.

This diluted form of religion shows itself strikingly in lack of spiritual vision and sympathy. Few things retard the spiritual development of the individual more, or delay the progress of the church more, than just this smallness of soul outlook. If a man does not see the greater heights to which he may attain, and has no sympathy or desire for the greater spiritual experiences enjoyed by others, the future holds little in store for him. And if a man has no vision of larger things for a church to accomplish, there is nothing to move him to greater efforts in its behalf. Men will strive for no more than they can see; they will go no farther than their sympathies run. Before we can get people to do big things for the Kingdom, we must first get them to see big things, and to have a desire for them. The reason why some churches do not grow and make a place for themselves in the community is because they are composed of little, narrow-visioned, self-centered men and women. They live down in the gorges of selfishness and self-interest; they can see no farther than the preferences and prejudices of their own little group. Their religion is of a very inferior sort; they have scarcely touched the base of the exalted spiritual standard of Christ, and from which he views the world and its need.

This diluted form of religion shows itself in lack of loyalty to Christ and the church. And there are few things more disappointing and vexing in Christian work than just that spirit of non-dependability in its many and varied forms. Some nominal Christians seem utterly lacking in any serious thought as to the claims of Christ and the implications of discipleship. They hold the teachings of the church as lightly and engage in its most sacred ordinances as indifferently, or as indifferently pass them by, as if they were but the whims of a child. They remember but vaguely their sacred vows, the responsibilities of church membership they all but disregard, the shifting of attachments is a matter of little concern, in the discharge of their most evident and bounden duties they expend but feeble effort. And the church is weakened and subjected to criticism, the consummation of the kingdom retarded and the power of the Gospel made void, all because of this prevalent care-free, indifferent, non-responsible attitude, because so many church members have not enough religion to generate in their hearts a spirit of loyalty for Christ and the church.

There are others in whom a diluted form of Christianity shows itself in gloomy pessimism that casts a shadow over every undertaking of the church. "This thing can't be done," says some one, "it is impossible," and then he settles down in his discouragement smugly satisfied with himself, feeling that he has answered every argument, spoken the last word, and fully justified his inactivity. And if by his discouraging counsel and example he succeeds in putting a stop to the whole proceeding, he is gratified that by his wet-blanket wisdom he has saved the expenditure of useless energy and the chagrin of certain failure. But we are assured of the fallacy of such an attitude when we hear another declaring, in the face of the same challenge, "By the grace of God, it can be done," and see him in the strength of that confidence setting about to accomplish it, enlisting at the same time the enthusiastic support of others. Who is he who dares say any task of the church is impossible? What seems an impossibility to one, is to another of stronger faith and courage a thing certain of accomplishment. And the pessimist by the very fact of his doubts and gloom bears witness to his own feeble grip upon God. Why is it that one man throws up the sponge without a fight and trembles like a quaking-asp before a mountainous difficulty, while another is merely challenged to a greater dependence upon God and is made stronger and more determined by the strength of the opposition? Why indeed! if not that one man's religion is a faint, unreal, powerless imitation, while the other's is genuine, vital and powerful?

Again, religion is often shown to be greatly diluted by indulgence in worldliness and carnality, that is inconsistent with the professed saving and transforming power of the grace of God. The restless hearts of sinful men are seeking just such a power as we profess to have found in the religion of Jesus Christ, but they will have only scorn and contempt for our profession if they fail to see improvement in our lives. He who does not give evidence of a change, who does not show up different in conduct, need not be surprised to find men seriously questioning the genuineness of his religion. And what is more important, he who weakens his religion by a mixture of worldliness cannot expect the blessing of God upon his life, nor can he lay claim to that sonship to the Father which is wrought by adoption and the inworking of the Spirit. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God these are the sons of God" (Rom. 8:14). That excludes the worldly-minded, half-hearted, nominal church member. And that is just what the Spirit of God does—it excludes the sinful and unworthy from the Kingdom. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 7:21). It is not enough to confess Christ with our lips, we must honor him with our lives. "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked" (1 Jon 2:6). "For we know that whosoever is begotten of God sinneth not; but he that was begotten of God keepeth himself, and the evil one toucheth him not" (1 John 5:18). If, therefore, our religion is to be more than an unworthy imitation of the real thing, we must separate ourselves from the life and carnality of the world. "Come ye out from among them and be ye separate" (2 Cor. 6:17), is the divine challenge. "And be not fashioned according to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds" (Rom. 12:2). So shall we prove the genuineness of our religion.

The Right Atmosphere for Weddings

We have long contended that a wedding ought to be one of the most sacred and solemn experiences in life, and that the ceremony ought never to be performed in other than a fitting atmosphere and environment. And we believe more concern would be exercised in this regard if more effort were put forth to cause marriage itself to be considered more seriously. The right view of the marriage vow, naturally insists on a proper atmosphere for the ceremony, and a proper regard for the atmosphere implies a serious view of the marital step itself. We hold therefore that it is not a superficial or unimportant matter, when we suggest that weddings—those of Christian people especially—should be held in the church or a home,—the two most sacred places on earth, and the ceremony should be by a minister of the Gospel. In confirmation of our claim that this is not a mere quibble, or a matter of personal prejudice, we quote the following from the editor of the "Religious Telescope:"

Only one church wedding in sixty is wrecked by divorce, according to the World Almanac, for 1926. This is indeed significant, in view of the large proportion of marriage unions—about one in seven—that comes to an end in the divorce courts. Of course, the church has no magic power to make marital unions divorce-proof. It is not because such unions are solemnized in church that they turn out better on the average than others, but because of the sacred regard for the marriage union that leads to their being effected in church, with the sanction of religion. The young couple that hies away to some squire or drives up to the parsonage unannounced, or leaves it to the clerk who issues the license to call somebody to come to the clerk's office to "tie the knot"—well, there is something lacking in their conception of a marriage ceremony. It scarcely is possible that a "tie" thus effected would be as strong as the one that takes place in the holy atmosphere of the church or of a Christian home. It would be interesting for some statistically-minded person to check up on the marriages that end in divorce and note conditions under which the marriage ceremony was performed.

Disillusioned Concerning Movies

The movie industry is not cleaning up, and will not, until drastic federal action requires it. Those who imagined it would do so voluntarily are being steadily disillusioned. The Public Relations Committee of the Motion Picture Producers of America is but a camouflage to give the appearance of respectability and to allay public fears. The General Federation of Women's Clubs recently withdrew from this committee because of this fact, and the action became the occasion for a vigorous word of protest against the policy of the Public Relations Committee by Mrs. John D. Sherman, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs. She recorded a very complete disillusionment as to the moral status of the motion picture industry. Said she:

"When the industry sees fit to withdraw a number of most objectionable films now being shown, it will go a long way toward establishing a greater degree of confidence in the oft-repeated statement that the industry is doing everything possible to raise the standards of motion pictures. Personally I am not content with any program that limits itself to emphasis on the good pictures with the idea that by this method alone the bad pictures will disappear. The bad pictures are popular; they swell the box-office receipts. But inasmuch as such pictures are a direct menace to the morals of young people, they are criminal and should be eliminated."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Henry Rinehart makes another report of funds received by the Brethren Home of which he is treasurer.

If you have looked upon the tract as a futile and ineffective instrument, read Brother Porte's Tract Corner this week.

Prof. A. L. DeLozier, who has been supplying the pulpit of the First church of Johnstown during the absence of the pastor, Brother C. H. Ashman, has returned to College Hill in Ashland again and reports an enjoyable summer's work. He also informs us the work of the Second church, a mission church with Brother Dyoll Belote as pastor, is making progress and that the new building is proceeding nicely, with the pastor giving very practical aid.

Brother Louis P. Clapper, our correspondent from Louisville, Ohio, reports the successful Daily Vacation Bible School of two weeks' duration and closed on July 23. Sixty pupils were enrolled under the direction of Brother R. F. Porte, the pastor, as superintendent. The school closed with an interesting and instructive pageant.

The second installment of Dr. Gribble's interesting story of African Wedding Bells appears in this issue. Dr. Gribble is due to arrive in New York August 5th and doubtless will be in attendance at General Conference. All who possibly can, should arrange to be there to hear her speak.

We are informed that Brother B. H. Flora has resigned the pastorate of the Ardmore, Indiana, church and that the church is seeking his successor. Any pastor interested may correspond with Brother A. Glenn Carpenter, South Bend, Indiana, Route 3. The official notice will appear in the "Announcement" department next week.

Brother W. I. Duker reports a very successful conference at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, in the month of July. Those mentioned as being on the program are Dean J. Allen Miller, Dr. G. W. Rench, and Brethren Melvin Stuckey and Frank Coleman, with Brother Harley Zumbaugh as song leader. Dr. Miller lectured throughout an entire week and Brother Rench gave a series of lectures. Brother Stuckey, besides delighting his audiences with several splendid addresses along his chosen line—religious education, stirred their emotions by reading an original poem entitled, "Shipshewana's Song", which was made a part of the conference report.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, pastor of the Ashland church, writes of some interesting features connected with the work at this place. It is to be noted that twenty-one new members have been received during the past month, and that without a special evangelistic campaign. The pastor deserves credit for the personal effort put forth to accomplish this increase. He and his family are now on their vacation and he expects to conduct an evangelistic campaign between now and General Conference time at Mathias, West Virginia.

An interesting letter comes from Lydia, Maryland, where Brother Thoburn C. Lyon is the faithful pastor. His emphasis on Brethren doctrines, his weekly Bible studies and his stressing of the prayer life are mentioned as outstanding features of his ministry. These are fundamental features and might well characterize the ministry of every Brethren pastor. The Sunday school and other auxiliaries are said to be alive and aggressive.

The following letter from Brother Alva J. McClain, secretary of the Foreign Mission Board reached the editor's desk just as we were about to go to press and after all the paper but this page was in the forms. That our readers may not be delayed in receiving the good news we give it place among these items:

PERMISSION RECEIVED FOR THE SCHOOL IN AFRICA

The friends and supporters of the African Mission will be gratified to know that their prayers for the school in Africa have been answered. I have the following communication from Brother Hathaway:

"The Mayor ... together with the Chief of this subdivision drove up in their Ford a few minutes ago and informed Miss Emmert that she could open a school at once. This is the second day of our Week of Prayer, and we take it as a direct answer from the Lord."

Brother Hathaway then goes on to say that this permission does not render unnecessary the presence of some one holding the "Superior Diploma" from France, for which Brother Jobson has been working hard during the past several months. Teachers with this Diploma must be had.

As if in answer to this need, word was received only a few days ago stating that Brother Jobson had passed successfully the difficult French examinations, and is now the possessor of the coveted Superior Diploma.

God still answers prayer, giving us "exceeding abundantly" in response to our needs.

ALVA J. McCLAIN.

The greatest good we can do the church and the Kingdom is not to enlist men in the service of the King, but to bring men into the relationship of sons of God. Employees are continually asking, What am I going to get out of it? while sons live and work as heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Going to College in 1926-7

By President Edwin E. Jacobs

By the Editor's kind permission, I will write my usual annual letter to the young people of the church relative to entering college. I have entitled this article, "Entering College in 1926-7," but the factors in a successful college year are much the same from year to year. Notwithstanding there is some difference.

1. If you are a graduate of this year's high school class, then this fall is the opportune time for entering college. It so happens sometimes that the young person has to stop out and work and this is highly commendable but it is still better if one can go right on to college. Business opportunities often present themselves, marriage is contemplated or entered into, or other circumstances arise which make entering later difficult or impossible. If at all possible, one ought to go right on after high school.

2. Entrance requirements will never again be lower. They have been raised in most places from 15 to 16 units. Entrance examinations are now given by most schools as a sort of a prognosis and they will never be easier to pass but more difficult. The time is already here when not every one can say, "I guess I will enter college this fall." Colleges have already all the poor students they want. They are now looking for the "A" students and those whose native endowment entitles them to entrance.

3. Moreover, the world in general is demanding higher standards of education. If jobs ever depended at all in the past upon a college education, they will depend more so in the future. Ministers' missionaries, physicians, and business careers are conditioned more and more upon a college education. Entering college in the fall of 1926-7 is the first step in meeting these conditions.

4. Then, too, if you are interested in any real way in the progress of Christianity, you will want to see as many young people as possible enrolled in our Christian colleges.

For my part, I am confident, that if the church wants to make its way in the future it must look well to the work of education. The verities of the Christian faith are eternal, to be sure, but they will always need to be supported and advanced by the best human intellect we can secure. Our Sunday school work, our Christian Endeavor and our church itself can not hope to win on ignorance.

If you think that the Christian faith is not being attacked and undermined today, then you have not read widely. The general influence at work may be gleaned from the organization of the A. A. A.—the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, in an eastern college and it is something more than a joke. It may be thought to be the claptrap of the shallow minded but we shall be mistaken if we think that we can meet such influences by the method of violent denunciation and castigation. Moreover when men high in church places, make pronouncements as they do relative to the Bible and its Christ, it is high time to sit right up and take notice. The answer that there have always been such men and such pronouncements, in no way meets the situation. There have been such men and such pronouncements as one can readily see now by their ill effects. But that method of laissez faire means only ruin. In such cases we should meet brains with brains, science with science, and match learning with learning. There is no other way. Such forces certainly dare not capture the field of learning and the seats of intellectual culture. The church has ever been the repository of culture and it must so remain. Hence, everyone interested at all in this phase of the work, should welcome capable young persons into our Christian colleges.

So the fall of 1926-7 is a very opportune time to enter any college,—Ashland College in particular.

The Inspiration of a Trip to the Holy Land

By Rev. Herbert K. England

A Testimony, Not a Conjecture

(This article was awarded the First Prize offered by Sir Henry Lunn for the best two articles on the above subject written by an American Clergyman. The contest was conducted by the Church Touring Guild of New York, of which Rev. S. Parkes Cadman is President. The judges were: Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, pastor of the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church of New York, Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, Chairman of the International Friendship Through the Churches, and formerly pastor of the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church of Brooklyn, and Edward Lunn, a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and a famous traveler. Ministers from almost every state in the Union took part in the contest. We believe the beauty and inspiration of this masterly written article will be appreciated. It points out not only the value of travel in the Holy Land which our ministers need to have urged upon them, but the incomparable worth and inspiration of the land itself in the life and history of the world.—Editor.)

It is said that Mohammed would never enter Damascus, because he wanted to go into Paradise but once and preferred to reserve that pleasure until after he was dead. If there should be anyone less disdainful of the thrills of a wonderland, it is but fair to remind him that Palestine lies this side of Jordan. For Palestine, with its witchery of loveliness and fascinating lore, is to sensation seekers what the emerald oasis of Damascus is to the parched and thirsty desert that surges up to its gates.

To enter the Holy Land is to salute the human soul in its native habitat and to find the Almighty at home. It is a venture not lightly to be undertaken, so much or else so little may come of it. To some it is a land of thorns and stones; to others, a land of wreaths and diadems. There are those who are bored with its petty dimensions, there are others who are born anew as its messages to the spirit sweep in upon them.

There is but one way to enter what, as of old, may still rightly be called "The Land of Promise." Let him who goes searching there have an alert imagination, a keen sympathy, and all the background of information with which he can persuade Fortune to favor him. If he goes thus equipped, nothing he will meet will seem dull or commonplace, for history calls from every hilltop, and the voices of the spirit whisper in every murmuring wind.

Four Gates Swing Open

Remarkably varied is the appeal of the Holy Land to those who visit it. Four gates swing open to welcome you, and through whichever one you enter you will find it good. The gate of nature, the gate of social interest, the gate of history, and the gate of religion,—take which one you will, and what inspiration awaits you!

The God of Nature has here uncovered some of his choicest handiwork. From Dan to Beersheba stretches a vista unforgettable to the lover of the broad out-of-doors.

To the North there rises the towering Lebanon range, sixty-eight times referred to in the Old Testament. In the wintry season it bears aloft heavy snow blankets, which, in warmer days, waste and linger like glistening ribbons in their crevassed retreats, as the advancing summer sun turns them to tearful rivulets. Here and there in secluded fastnesses hide a few fugitive cedars, remnants of abundant forests that once gave strength and grace to the palaces of Solomon. To the eastward, at the southern terminus of a lesser range, is mighty Hermon in solitary splendor, visible from wide horizons, and standing as a changeless guard over the infant Jordan River, to which it gives continuous birth.

The immortal Sea of Galilee, nestled among hills that rise like jealous sentinels on every side; the Phoenician plain, rich in stately palms, orange groves, lemons, almonds, and interminable rows of grey olive trees; hillsides cultivated with laborious patience, seared and gashed by jutting rocks that hold in place the soft, brown soil; while in every idle spot such riotous profusion of springtime flowers as seem for all the world like a scrambled rainbow, portray "the excellence of Carmel and Sharon" which to Isaiah was a picture of "the glory of the Lord." To complete the picture one must not forget many another scene of beauty and of boldness: the fertile plain of Esdraelon; the rugged land of Benjamin; the rock ribs of Judah, falling in precipitous decline to the bare plain of the Dead Sea, where, thirteen hundred feet below sea level, the melancholy town of modern Jericho keeps its dispirited vigil over the relics of ancient greatness.

The Ancestral Hills

Equally fascinating are they who live among these ancestral hills. In them you see the inevitable ethnic medley of people who dwell at the crossroads of the world. Over such ancient camel paths as wind along the shores of Phoenicia, or crawl uncertainly over the Plain of Dothan, there have gone for almost countless centuries the caravans of war and trade. Like tireless shuttles have they woven on this web the fabrics of ancient empires, leaving on the people who have dwelt here the patterns of the races of the world.

Here, too, one may behold customs long since grown static, as if unconscious of the flight of centuries; women grinding meal for the day under the rude millstone; maidens bearing heavy waterjars upon their heads; the family wash beaten white upon the stones of running brooks; grain winnowed by the wind; lambs carried at the end of the day in shepherd's arms; black tents, the homes of black-haired Bedouins; patient asses with loads bigger than themselves; disdainful camels swinging along under burdens as varied as the wishes and wants of mankind. Along the way are husbandmen pruning their orchards, and men and women tilling their fields with ancient implements. You begin to imagine that you are living in the days of Ruth and Boaz, when suddenly you are brought to time by the chug-chug of a tractor plough or a disgruntled and exiled Buick puffing along its complaining way. For modern life is breaking through the crust of the ages, whether for weal or for woe it will take more than a mere traveler to say.

Working Out Mandate Policies

But the social interests of these varied people goes deeper than the consideration of their daily customs. Two great European nations in the Holy Land are working out their mandate policies, of which the British at least presents elements of outstanding progressiveness. Good roads are binding the country together. The security of well patrolled highways stimulates travel. Sanitation and hygiene are lessening the burden of disease. Public education is giving the children a chance to learn the fundamentals of good living. The restraint of racial friction by the strong hand of equity and fairness is a blessing to all classes. These and other evidences of a new day in Palestine one notes with grateful appreciation.

They seem to be a tactful apology for the ruin and detritus of the war that still obtrude, wrecked houses, abandoned redoubts, rolls of rusted barbed wire, overturned lorries by the roadside, and white-crossed graves that recall the price of liberation from the Turk.

Interesting as Palestine may be from other points of view, it is when a person enters by the gate of history that he is really overwhelmed by the profusion of riches. More history has been forgotten in this part of the world than was ever enacted in many a more pretentious land. When ever was Palestine not contemporary with the world's disorders? What ambitious dynasty has not used this threshing floor on which to flail out the harvests of its spoils and power? Here, surely, one's "tread is on an empire's dust." Here conquerors have ever been at home. Joshua sweeps out of the wilderness to the east with a consuming mandate of "Thus saith the Lord." David wrings tribute from his hostile neighbors to build his nation's capital. Shishak, Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander, Antiochus, Titus, Godfrey of Bouillon, Saladin, Napoleon,—how these magic names call to mind the tremendous dramas of human passion that have been enacted here! Babylon of Egypt contended here for the hegemony of the world. Here the flower of Europe's knighthood burned itself away for a mediaeval ideal and so paved the way for the Renaissance and a modern world. How can anyone pass over the Plain of Esdraelon, perhaps the most fought-over piece of ground anywhere to be found, and view the crumbling remains of Tyre and Sidon, ancient mistresses of the sea, and stand on the bare breast of Hattin, and from the top of Olivet contemplate Jerusalem, seventeen times captured and eight times swept clean of its inhabitants and destroyed, without realizing that if he could know the history of this little country he would know much of the story of the unfolding of the civilization of today?

Spirit Lives by Faith

But civilization is a matter of the spirit, and spirit lives by faith. So we must enter the Holy Land by the gate of religion or we have not really entered it at all. Religion is the greatest thing that has come out of this land of many wonders. "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all", it can say of this its fairest child. Three forms of faith that have deeply stirred the world have found here their birthplace or their home. Every turn of the road calls to mind some mighty men of God. Every EVANGELIST dromfi H g.l.f.a 8f.e— nam 7sfge fihc 2 wayside name seems to remind you of the Book of books. Here lies Abraham, the friend of God, and here he digged a well. There a rugged prophet dwelt; there the fire-lit apostles left the memory of their presence; and yonder is the selfsame village where was born the one who was the Word made flesh, Immanuel.

Jerusalem

If Rome was once the capital of the political world, and Athens the capital of the intellectual world, Jerusalem may rightly be called the capital of the world of religion. Who can doubt it when in the temple area at Jerusalem he stands on the top of Mount Moriah? In imagination he can see temple after temple rise above the sacred rock. As time sweeps one away another takes its place. Now Solomon, now Zerubbabel, now Herod, rear their temples here. Then Hadrian, and, after him, Justinian, built their shrines where since the seventh century has stood the Mosque of Omar.

We cannot give generous attention to all the places of traditional interest, for they are many, but we soon realize that we come nearer to the true spirit of the masters of vision who lived in the Holy Land if we escape from their overlaid, artificial memorials and flee to the open spaces, where the same intimations of God that stirred Amos in the wilderness or the fishermen by the lake may stir us also. Best of all for this is the Sea of Galilee, so sweetly associated with the Master. Its exquisite beauty fits the gentle spirit of the friend of the toiling people. But where are the teeming towns that drew so heavily upon his self-giving ministry? Silence answers the roll call of the many cities that touched the lakeside in his day. Gone are they,

A TRIAD OF GRACES—AND THE GREATEST OF THESE

By Dyoll Belote

Hope

Ere the first ship put to sea
Thou stood'st upon the shore;
Our fathers turned to thee
Before they bravely tore Away the bonds they wore
And rose up, proud and free.

Before the babe's first cry
The mother turns to thee;
Before the maid's first sigh,
The boy's first victory,
Thou smilest. Oh! to see Thy smile still, as we die.

—S. E. Kiser.

Hope

Hope on! God's love light spans the sky
Through tears and sorrow, flee despair.
The word is written, "God is nigh
The broken heart." Thy grief he'll share.

His light is shining on thy soul.
How warm and comforting his touch
On life's springs, not in our control.
He loves so long and gives so much.

Hope on! How beautiful this grace,
A sunbeam from the sacred heart
That cheers us in the upward race
With him from whom we ne'er shall part.

—Z. Irene Davis.

O Doubting Heart

Where are the swallows fled?
Frozen and dead,
Perchance, upon some bleak and stormy shore.
O doubting heart!
Far over purple seas
They wait in sunny ease,
The balmy southern breeze
To bring them to their northern homes once more.

Why must the flowers die?
Prisoned they lie
In the cold tomb, heedless of tears or rain.
O doubting heart!
They only sleep below
The soft, white, ermine snow,
While winter winds shall blow,
To breathe and smile upon you soon again.

The sun has hid its rays
These many days:
Will dreary hours never leave the earth?
O doubting heart!
The storm clouds on high
Veil the same sunny sky
That soon, for spring is nigh,
Shall wake the summer into golden mirth.

Fair hope is dead, and light
Is quenched in night:
What sound can break the silence of despair?
O doubting heart!
The sky is overcast,
Yet stars shall rise at last,
Brighter for darkness past,
And angels' silver voices stir the air.

—Adelaide A. Proctor.

A Song of Faith

Day will return with a fresher boon;
God will remember the world!
Night will come with a newer moon;
God will remember the world.

Evil is only the slave of Good;
Sorrow the servant of Joy;
And the soul is mad that refuses food
Of the meanest in God's employ.

The fountain of joy is fed by tears,
And love is lit by the breath of sighs;
The deepest griefs and the wildest fears
Have holiest ministries.

Strong grows the oak in the sweeping storm;
Safely the flower sleeps under the snow;
And the farmer's heart is never warm
Till the cold wind starts to blow.

Day will return with a fresher boon;
God will remember the world!
Night will come with a newer moon;
God will remember the world!
From "Bitter Sweet" by J. G. Holland.

HOPE, FAITH, AND LOVE

Hope is like a harebell, tumbling from its birth;

Love is like a rose, the joy of all the earth;

Faith is like a lily, lifted high and white;

Love is like a lovely rose, the world's delight;

Harebells and sweet lilies show a thornless growth

But the rose with all its thorns excels them both.

Faith

If I could feel my hand, dear Lord, in thine,
And surely know
That I was walking in the light divine,
Through weal or woe;

If I could hear thy voice in accents sweet
But plainly say,
To guide my trembling, groping, wandering feet,
'This is the way';

I would so gladly walk therein, but now
I cannot see.
O give me, Lord, the faith humbly to bow—
And trust in thee!

There is no faith in seeing. Were we led Like children here,
And lifted over rock and river-bed,

No care, no fear,
We should useless in the busy throng,
Life's work undone.
Lord, make us brave and earnest, true and strong,
Till heaven is won.

—Sarah K. Bolton.

Growing Dearer Each Day

(Perhaps nothing more beautiful in its expression of appreciation of the love of the Master has ever been written than the following by Chas. H. Gabriel.)

How sweet is the love of my Savior!
'Tis boundless and deep as the sea;
And best of it all, it is daily
Growing sweeter and sweeter to me.

I know he is ever beside me!
Eternity only will prove
The height and the depth of his mercy,
And the breadth of his infinite love.

Wherever he leads I will follow,
Thro' sorrow, or shadow, or sun;
And tho' I be tried in the furnace,
I can say, "Lord, thy will be it done."

Some day face to face I shall see him,
And oh, what a joy it will be
To know that his love, now so precious,
Will forever grow sweeter to me.

Sweeter and sweeter to me,
Dearer and dearer each day;
O wonderful love of my Savior,
Growing dearer each step of the way.

Where Love Lives

Love's on the highroad,
Love's in the byroad,
Love's in the meadow, and Love's in the mart;
And down every byway
Where I've taken my way,
I've met love a-smiling—for Love's in my heart.

—Dana Burnet.

Love of God Divinely Sweet

O wondrous love so full and free,
That Christ my Lord bestows on me;
The things of earth soon fade away,
The joys he sends will ne'er decay.

So sweet and true thro' all the years,
It soothes my woes and calms my fears,
And softly falls like even dew,
To heal my soul and cleanse anew.

Full ransom paid for ev'ry sin,
Stooping below lost ones to win;
Love whispers songs e'en thro' the night,
My crown of life, my Fount of Light.

O love of God divinely sweet,
Bright ray of light from heaven's throne;
O love of God divinely sweet,
Sealing my heart to him alone.

—Lizzie DeArmond.

God Is Love

(The following lines are said to have been composed by a lunatic, and found written on the wall of his cell after his death:

"Could we with ink the ocean fill,
And were the skies of parchment made;
Were every stalk on earth a quill,
And every man a scribe by trade;—
To write the love of God above
Would drain the ocean dry;
Nor could the scroll contain the whole,
Though stretched from sky to sky."

Prohibition Not an Experiment

By Ernest H. Cherrington

General Secretary, The World League Against Alcoholism

Prohibition is not an experiment. Scores of cities and half the states were under prohibition many years before the eighteenth amendment was adopted. Maine, for instance, has been under prohibition for nearly 70 years, Kansas for almost half a century. Cities with a population as large as 100,000 or more had been under prohibition for a quarter of a century before the Eighteenth Amendment became a real issue in Congress. Hundreds of towns, villages, hamlets and townships were under prohibition by local option or state law long before the real drive for national prohibition began.

Prohibition in the United States represents public opinion translated into law. This fact is attested by the large majority that attended the submission of the amendment and its ratification by the legislatures of 46 of the 48 states. National public opinion cannot be determined by the attitude of a few large cities or a few states. That the people favor prohibition is reflected by the attitude of the population in most of the states, which show an increasing tendency toward upholding the law. In states which have long been dry, problems of enforcement repeatedly have arisen in large cities within such states, where public opinion has not been favorable to prohibition. There has been progress even in the wet states, where wet majorities are decreasing. Progress in enforcement is slow but progress has certainly been made. The enforcement, like the enactment of prohibition, in the last analysis rests on public opinion for its sanction. In the problem of enforcement a radical change for the better is apparent to the administration of the federal government. It is also true that most of the state and local officers have shown a determination to enforce the law. There is involved of course the fundamental problem of education of the people, which is slow but sure.

With all the difficulties of enforcement and with many problems arising in the efforts to secure proper observance, the actual beneficial results of prohibition have justified the efforts already made. Social conditions have improved. Politics are cleaner. Economic benefits have been multiplied. The general moral conditions in America have been elevated. Even a superficial survey of the result of prohibition will show that it is certainly a substantial though not a complete success. Even the casual observer must admit that there is less evidence now than formerly of the presence of the beverage liquor traffic, less evidence of drinking, brawls and disorders, and less evidence of the disturbances, accidents and fatalities that attended the use of liquor in pre-prohibition days.

Permanency of national prohibition in the United States is assured, first, because of the very evident improbability of the repealing or weakening of the national prohibitory law; second, because of the practical impossibility of modifying or repealing the Eighteenth Amendment; third, because the majority in favor of prohibition is gradually and constantly increasing in spite of the loud voiced liquor minority; and fourth, because of the demands of the new age which practically put the use of beverage alcohol out of the question for the future.

The great mass of labor which was unskilled a few years ago, is now skilled labor. The new age demands keen wits, clear eyes, steady nerves and unclouded brains. The industrial revolution now taking place in the manufacturing world makes prohibition and sobriety absolute necessities. In the world of transportation in which the railway express, the automobile and the airship are the important factors, there is no room for the beverage liquor traffic. It may have been tolerable in the age of unskilled labor, the ox cart, the water mill and the stage coach, but it is not tolerable in the new age of skilled labor, the electric dynamo, the automobile and the airship. The beverage liquor traffic certainly belongs to a lower and slower civilization.

We cannot have adequate enforcement and observance of prohibition until the people come to realize this vital truth and until they come to respect and observe the law, not simply because it is the law but because they have a confident belief in the fundamental reason for prohibition.

EVANGELIST 4
That process will require years of education but it is inevitable.

The need of the hour is not to surrender to those who defy the law but to use the nation's resources to demonstrate that this republic can enforce its own mandates; not to stretch or evade the constitution but to defend and protect it; not to follow the line of least resistance but to follow that line which alone will make for human welfare and for the preservation of national honor.

The primary issue is not political but educational. The real problem is not involved in the next general election but in the next generation.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Youth—The Greatest Going Concern

By Daniel A. Poling, President United Society of Christian Endeavor

The Closing Address at the recent World's Christian Endeavor Convention at Crystal Palace, London England.

Youth is the world's greatest going concern. Oliver Wendell Holmes has been quoted as saying, "If you haven't cut your name on the door by the time you've reached forty, you might just as well put up your jack-knife." And Dr. Osler was severely criticized for declaring, "Take the sum of human achievement in action, in science, in art, and in literature; subtract the work of the men above forty, and we should be practically where we are today."

With these extreme statements I find myself in controversy, but in my opinion it is a fact that important contributions made to human affairs in all departments of life after men and women have reached the age of forty have been generally the development and extension of ideas originated before that age was reached. In support of this contention, let us make a hurried survey in the field of science alone.

James Watt started his work on the steam engine at 24, completing it at 28; Eli Whitney patented the cotton gin when he was 28; Howe, the sewing machine at 26. Edison was 26 when he invented his system of multiple telegraphy and 29 when he brought out the phonograph. Bell patented the telephone at 29; Brush, his dynamo-electric machine at 26 and the arc light at 27; Westinghouse, the air brake at 22. Hall's process which made the manufacture of aluminum a commercial success was patented at 23.

Wells, Horton, and Long, each of whom claim priority in the discovery of the use of anesthetics for surgery, were all under 30 when their work in the field was completed.

Einstein was 26 when he propounded his theory of relativity.

Galileo was 23 when he evolved the law of falling bodies. It has been said that by this discovery he "probably contributed more to the physical sciences than all the philosophers who had preceded him."

Sir Isaac Newton, "the greatest genius that ever existed," born in 1642, entered Cambridge at the age of 19. He promptly mastered all the mathematical works then existing, and the year before he graduated he formulated the general binomial theorem. He took his B. A. degree in 1665 and before the end of that year had discovered the method of tangents and differential calculus, followed six months later by integral calculus. Thus, in his twenty-third and twenty-fourth years his contributions to mathematics were greater than the complete life work of any man before or since. In 1666 he propounded a part of his famous theory of universal gravitation. He failed to prove the theory at the time, because of an erroneous figure for the radius of the earth, then extant, but had this data been correct he would have made at the age of 24, instead of some years later, the greatest contribution to science the world has ever known. He invented the reflecting telescope before he was 26. And so we might go on indefinitely.

Pasteur, at 25, had gained a place of honor among the chemists of his day. And Madam Curie discovered radium at 30.

A brilliant writer, in whose research activities the facts that have been used here were assembled, states that in his investigations he was impressed by the number of young scientists whose work was influenced by a teacher or some other person who encouraged and directed youthful enthusiasms. Again and again he was confronted by such expressions as "His work attracted the attention of so-and-so." "At the university he came under the influence of the great so-and-so." "His father early recognized and fostered his ability." "To Professor So-and-So must be given much of the credit for his interest in science."

Certainly it must follow that the opposite is true, that many early enthusiasms have been killed, many an incipient discovery at least delayed, through the indifference or discouragement of some educator or parent. On the basis of facts and experiences that may be assembled from every department of human endeavor, I submit to you that it is a tragedy when we who are older blanket the enthusiasms of youth and when the leadership of church and state does not cultivate and inspire the highest aspirations of its young men and young women.

It is because the Christian Endeavor society has from the beginning understood the principle involved here and practiced its psychology that this epochal convention represents today the mightiest youth movement of the Christian Church.

We have confined our illustrations to one field. Certainly we should amplify it enough to remind ourselves that he who is the Captain of the world's salvation, Jesus the Christ of God, was himself in the full tide of his incomparable ministry and in the final ordeal of his perfect life, a young man. He had completed man's redemption at thirty-three.

As for us who are older, there is at least satisfaction in the thought that we may serve youth, this mightiest going concern, serve as inspirers, counselors, and guides; that by retaining the mind and spirit of youth we may carry on to the end of our physical days multiplying the activities that were born when we were younger and forever deepening our characters, broadening our outlook and increasing our moral authority.

That this may be done so as to hold with ever strengthening bonds of love and loyalty the mind of youth itself, the life of Francis E. Clark demonstrates. He challenged the Christian world with the genius of his plan when he was thirty. Today, at seventy-five, he holds it fast for Christ and for Christ's Church.

I venture to say that there are three injunctions that the Church must heed today if youth is to be captured and then sent forth under the Great Commission.

First: We must give youth our confidence. We must believe in youth. We must refuse to take counsel of superficial, pessimistic observers. We must face the facts. Never has there been a time when young men and young women were more intrinsically fine than they are today. In my experience with juvenile delinquency, the greater fault lies at the door of adult life. Give young men and young women leadership and example and they will repay their debt to the utmost, with the attributes of sound character and with clean and sacrificial deeds. Again and again I have seen them rise above sad home environments to build better than their fathers, and seldom have I known them failing in any real moral test.

You have heard much on this side of the Atlantic about the failure of prohibition and perhaps you have had repeated here the slanderous statements that this law has demoralized our young people. As one who knows the North American Continent across all its distances and who has been personally and intimately acquainted with its young people for more than a generation, I say to you that the charge is utterly false. Prohibition is not a failure and America's youth are not demoralized!

Boys and girls go astray in America. I face again and again in my own New York parish sad and terrible juvenile situations; but we do not indict all bankers when one banker defaults, we do not indict all representatives of governments when one or several politicians betray, we do not indict clergymen generally when certain ambassadors

MIDST CONTRARY WINDS—Matt. 14:22-27.

When winds are raging o'er the upper ocean,
And billows wild contend with angry roar,
'Tis said, far down beneath the wild commotion,
That peaceful stillness reigneth evermore.
For, far beneath the noise of tempests dieth,
And silver waves chime ever peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce so'er it flieeth, Disturbs the Sabbath of that deeper sea.

—H. B. Stowe.

TUESDAY

TRUST AND OBEY—Exod. 14:10-16.

Not thine, nor mine, to question or reply
When he commands us, asking "how?" or "why?"
He knows the cause; His ways are wise and just,
Who serves the King must serve with perfect trust.

—Henry van Dyke.

WEDNESDAY

"SUMMER IS ENDED"—Jer. 8:18-22.

"The mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small; Though with patience he stands waiting, with exactness grinds he all."

THURSDAY

"COME UNTO ME"—Matt. 11:28-30.

"Far, far away, like bells at evening pealing,
The voice of Jesus sounds o'er land and sea;
And laden souls by thousands meekly stealing,
Kind Shepherd, turn their weary steps to thee.
Onward we go, for still we hear them singing
'Come, weary souls, for Jesus bids you come';
And through the dark, its echoes sweetly ringing
The music of the Gospel leads us home."

FRIDAY

INSPIRATION FOR SERVICE—Luke 9:28-40.

"Lord, lead us to the mountain height; to prayer's transfiguring glow;
And may we bring a heavenly light to the dark world below."

SATURDAY

"FOLLOW THOU ME"—John 21:15-22.

"Do thy duty; that is best;
Leave unto the Lord the rest."

SUNDAY

TRUE ALLEGIANCE—Phil. 2:5-13.

By my tasks of every day,
By the little words I say,
By the friendships which I make,
By the roads my footsteps take,
My allegiance I proclaim—
My allegiance to a name—
Prove my right his cross to wear,
Cross and name of Christ to bear.

—George Klinge.

of the Church of Jesus Christ prove unfaithful in their ordination vows.

The young people of my country and continent are at least as good today as young people were in the days before I reached my majority, and in the opinions of some of us they show unmistakable signs of being not only wiser but better. They live in new times and are surrounded by conditions different from those their fathers knew. The stress and strain of Twentieth Century high speed, high power civilization bring them, as a rule, more quickly to maturity; but by every test, I have found them worthy of my trust and vindicating my faith.

We must give youth our confidence. Stop slandering youth!

In the second place, we must listen to youth. An old world listened to Columbus and a new earth arose from beyond a far ocean. And in each generation youth has much to say which unheard or ignored means tragic loss to society.

"My people doth not consider" was the ancient voice of divine wisdom. "My people doth not consider," and often in these complicated social and intellectual times youth is justified in repeating and applying these words to parents and public leaders.

We consider their deeds and their mistakes. We consider their real and their fancied delinquencies. We consider their inconsideration of their elders and their blindness to or usurpation of authority, but do we really consider them and their crises?

To do this, we must first of all give them our time. We have time for golf and time for bridge, time for business and time for politics, but we have, as a rule, little time for our children. As I sat engrossed with a next Sunday's sermon one morning, an exquisite little miss stood in my door and waited, waited for me to see her newest dress, waited in dimples and smiles. I was busy, terribly busy, busy saving the world! Too busy even to look up. And at last tired and verging on tears, my glorious baby cried out in her disappointment, "Look at me, Daddy, look at me! O, Daddy, you don't look at me!" And ringing around the troubled world tonight, I hear that cry and its complements—the cry of neglected sons and daughters—"Look at me, Daddy, look at me! O, Daddy, you don't look at me!"

Youth waits and wants to be understood. At least this is what youth thinks. Now, we may know that it is as impossible for youth to be understood by age today as it was when we were youthful, but we can at least make the effort that counts and wins. When young people feel our sympathy and find us listening, they think we understand, they know we try to understand, and that is what chiefly matters.

Those who have never listened to the prattle of little children and the at-time reckless pronouncements of adolescence have yet to hear the voice of the rising race. And those who, for any cause, whatsoever, turn a deaf ear to young womanhood and young manhood when they are vocal with their aspirations have missed the bravest songs of the ages. "Look!" my baby cries, and "Listen!" is the call of sons and daughters everywhere.

Finally, we must give youth a worthy task. And here we reach the very heart of our theme. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" was the high command of Jesus Christ. With that trumpet ringing in their ears, the young men who had followed in his train across Judean hills and by Galilean lakes, through Gethsemane valleys and to the summit of Calvary, went out to the ends of the earth and on to the last spiritual frontiers. The trouble with us has been, in dealing with young people, not that we have asked too much, but that we have asked too little. Burning crosses and red running arenas and inquisitorial tortures and Boxer Uprisings have raised up militant armies while soft and flabby pronouncements have brought us always to spiritual and moral debacles.

What, then, is the task for this generation of young people? My Christian Endeavor friends, it is a twofold task, and its great words are Evangelize and Humanize. The trumpet is still "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." The new earth of which Tennyson sang can be realized only as men and women who have been made new by the mystery of the Cross and the alchemy of its redemption are thrust forth into every department of organized society, into every problem of human life.

"Evangelize and Humanize?" We face the imperative of the words spoken by Mary, the Holy Mother, long ago. "Whatsoever he saith unto thee, do it!" It is not enough to repeat the words, to say in easy sentences the ancient creeds: We must practice our faith! We must Christianize our social order! We must make our theories of brotherhood practical! We must take Jesus Christ in deadly earnest!

We must take Jesus Christ in deadly earnest, for he is our only hope, our only sufficient Savior. We have tried every other leader and way and still we stand hard by catastrophes that have almost wrecked man. Wherever we have adventured our belief in the principles of the Sermon on the Mount, wherever we have practiced loving our neighbor as we love ourselves, wherever we have done good to those who have spitefully used us, wherever we have lifted justice above selfish gain and adventured our faith instead of our fears, we have seen rising out of the mists of suspicion and selfishness the new heaven and the new earth.

This convention has risen to many heights of aspiration; our hearts have been moved by many emotions; but beyond all other dreams, we have dreamed here of a lasting brotherhood, and deeper than any other emotion has become our passion for universal peace. We have spoken this electric word in every language of the earth, but always with one voice. It is well that it is so. Aye it must be so!

The only answer that the Christian Church can bring to the Prince of Peace she claims as Lord and accepts as Master in a time when nations still cast the dice of selfishness down national boundaries and in suspicion and fear still mass their fleets and enlarge their armies,—the only answer is "A Warless World."

And the Christian Endeavor movement, with its more than four millions of young men and young women in all lands and all churches and all races, may well become Christ's grand strategy for a new crusade, a crusade incomparably truer, immeasurably more potent than any that ever marched to reclaim the sepulcher of Jesus.

THE BIBLE IN THE HOME

The test of the nations is their loyalty to God's Word. The nations which have honored God's Word, and which are honoring God's Word, are the nations which have his blessing.

The state will never be guided into ways of constructive peace and permanent development through society's aim and desire to better mankind. Reform movements, no matter how strong and efficient they may be, can never reform the state or the nation until that reform begins at the fireside. There is no chance for men to do, in their interests and desires for others, what God has said the father and the mother, the husband and the wife, the brother and the sister must do.

The Bible is the one great power which God has given to us, to instruct how to lead our children and build our homes aright; and without the Word of God there is no dictionary to give to us the words and comprehension which constitute the vocabulary of the literature of Christianity; there is no other natural world in which we live, a knowledge of individual life that we may relate our lives to the individual life aright, and a constructive, earnest purpose to follow the principles which are incarnate in Christ's teachings.—John Timothy Stone.

LESSON LIGHTS

The First Popular Government

"Jehovah was now about to give mankind a new ideal in government. He was to inaugurate the beginning of civil liberty. He was to furnish them a constitution and by-laws. He was to allow them to have a voice in their own affairs, and he was to allow them to vote on the acceptance of their king. It is to be noted as a fact in human history that the first suggestion of a purely democratic or popular government under safe and sane limitations was never known among mankind until it was introduced by Jehovah himself in the commonwealth of Israel. All popular governments ever since emanated from that one precedent . . . He was to exercise toward them, and over them, all the functions of a great and beneficent sovereign. The whole procedure is marked by the strictest diplomatic form known to the children of men."

Now we shall gain most from this lesson and the other lessons in Exodus if we note carefully and apply to ourselves the various steps and principles through which the Israelites were prepared to become the people of God for the benefit of the whole world.

1. Cooperation with their rulers; and inspiration from God (Ex. 17:8-16).

2. Civil and political organization; aided by Jethro (18:1-27).

3. Covenant of allegiance; becoming citizens; preparations for receiving the Law (19:1-9).

4. Moral laws, the basis of all good citizenship; the Ten Commandments (20:1-26).

5. Social and ethical laws and institutions; applications (21-23).

6. Religious training and a place of worship; Tabernacle and Priesthood (25 and beyond).

Practical Applications

This lesson has many applications with regard to the organization of a nation; the relation of lawmakers to courts; the relation of each court to the others; and many other points largely political. But the main lesson for us here is our part in the work,—the need of teamwork in religion, if we are to accomplish all that lies before us; of cooperation of churches and individuals in the work of the kingdom, in order that it shall reach its maximum efficiency.

The Spirit of Service

The Community Spirit needed today is the spirit of service. "Whatever of service you owe to your country in time of war, you no less owe to her in time of peace; and even then, when you have given all you can, you have by no means paid to her all you owe. . . . What I devoutly hope is that the new fervor of national service shall not rest upon the precarious foundation of a temporary emergency, but upon broad and abiding grounds of genuine moral passion. And who knows but that at last God may not through the present need bring forth out of this great tragedy this supreme good: that of committing every one of us deeply, irrevocably, and to the end of our lives to the service of the commonwealth in which by the will of God our lot is cast."—Illustrated Quarterly.

Far-sighted Planning

Every church should plan to bring into its active work every member of the church, young and old, rich and poor, learned and unlearned, experienced and beginners. "Let us see that from the broad base of the people there is rising, there is expected to rise, the very sap and fruitfulness that comes out of the Eternal Foundation on which the people are built. Moses, good man as he was, was choking up the fountain, was keeping it from flowing out; and old Jethro coming from outside saw it at a glance."—Rev. John McNeill, D.D.

There has never been since the early church so much cooperation, so many things that tend to unity, as today. "Take three of the great Kingdom-movements of our day. Take first, the movement of church unity. By this is meant not organic union, but cooperation, union in the Spirit of Christ for the work of Christ. It means the Federal Council of Churches, the Christian Associations, especially the great cooperating movements like the Laymen's Missionary Movement. What is back of all this? Simply this: we believe that we can win the world for Christ's rule, and we are going to join our forces to do so."—Illustrated Quarterly.

Studying for Improvement

Studying for improvement. Jethro did not merely look on; he was an onlooker to some purpose. Back of his eyes were a sympathetic heart and a thoughtful mind. He was keen to see a defect; many are that, but he added the rare constructive quality and was able to suggest a workable remedy for the defect.

Observers like Jethro are needed in all sections of human society and all spheres of human activity. Everywhere is waste effort, too many motions to a task, too many men to a job or not enough men, the wrong methods, bungling plans, haphazard guesswork instead of well-proved science, men pulling at cross purposes, gross inefficiency and conceit without accomplishment. The human race muddles through, but it sadly needs a Jethro at every turn. Now and then one arises, an original thinker, a masterful organizer, and at once the wheels begin to turn faster, the cogs interlock smoothly, men sing at their tasks, and civilization takes a wonderful leap ahead. Such a man was Franklin, Stevenson, Whitney, Morse, Fulton, Edison, Bell. The Pilgrim Fathers were such men, and George Washington, and William of Orange, and Count Cavour, and Abraham Lincoln. Yes, and John Howard is to be added to the glorious list, with Wilberforce, and Shaftesbury, and Florence Nightingale, and Clara Barton, and Livingstone with a thousand and glorious missionary leaders, among whom are the lamented James S. Gribble, and our illustrious Dr. Florence N. Gribble, and the scholarly and devout Dr. C. F. Yoder.

Daily Vacation Bible School at Louisville

The Louisville, Ohio Brethren church conducted a two weeks' Daily Vacation Bible School, closing Friday, July 23. Sessions were held each morning and in spite of the very hot weather the children attended regularly and took a great interest in the school. Over sixty were enrolled, including the three departments, Beginners, Primary and Juniors. The school was in charge of our faithful pastor, R. F. Porte, who with his corps of teachers did excellent work. The school this year was strictly Brethren and has left a good impression in the communion for Brethrenism. On Sunday evening, July 25th, a program was rendered including Bible drills, memory work, dramatization of the Book of Ruth, songs, and closed with the pageant: "The Sale of the World's Children." At the auctioneer's request the Spirit of Childhood presented a large group of children to be sold to the highest bidder which proved to be "The Spirit of Christianity." Other bidders who were seated in the audience and sought to buy the children were: "Pleasure," "Queen of Vanity Fair," "Child Labor," "Ambition," "Free-Thinker," "Riches," "Graft," "Crime," "Ex-King Alcohol" and "Law." The pageant closed with a tableau with Christianity standing in the midst of the children, singing "Open the Door for the Children", followed by "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name", by the congregation. This service was indeed a fitting climax to the good work done during the two weeks of Bible training for our youth. It is needless to say that the D. V. B. S. will be an annual affair hereafter at the Louisville Brethren church.

REPORTS OF SUMMER GATHERINGS

Any society that sent a delegate to a Christian Endeavor Summer school or to one of the missionary summer institutes will of course arrange to get the benefit of its action by giving the delegate ample opportunity to report at some suitable gathering. A society that had not means or enterprise enough to send a delegate may find that some member of the society was present at such a school or at some conference of Christian workers. The fullest advantage should be taken of such a chance. Every one that has enjoyed the special privilege should be invited to share the fruits with others. Besides the general report the helpful methods of work described should be put within the reach of the committees most concerned, by holding a separate gathering for the purpose. In many cases new life would be infused into a discouraged or listless society, and the next year there would be no question about securing and sending a delegate or several of them.

A SOCIETY PAPER.

For Social Committees.

Have you ever tried the plan of editing a society paper for your socials? It will be written and read, of course. Choose a different editor each time. Let many contributions—in prose and verse—be selected. There will be funny hits, but always good-natured. There will be serious articles on Christian Endeavor work and how it may be improved. Put in bright missionary items and items of denominational news. Have much about the work of your own church. Make it all original. Change the editor for every social. Your society paper will soon become the most enjoyable feature of your socials, the one most eagerly anticipated.

HELPING YOUR CHURCH

By Richard Knowles Morton,

Pres. of the Shaw Christian Endeavor Union.

Helping the local church is a fundamental tenet of Endeavor work. There are many ways in which a society may help its church.

Securing a good attendance at the weekly church prayer meeting is one of the best. One society announces these meetings each week, giving the program and the special attractions. Sometimes the pastor lets the society take full charge of a meeting. Each week, however, the young people come out in a body, and convene for a few moments after the service in order to plan definitely for Sunday work. Occasionally a few groups are formed with a leader for each six or seven. These smaller groups, which naturally chum together, are easily collected during the early evening, and together make up a very worthwhile audience.

Another way is by helping in the church. The young people ought to do much singing for the church, and they should train themselves to do it well. Then, too, very few churches have all the help they want for giving the pastor reports of attendance, absences, and the like. If the church clerk desires to keep full (and perhaps illustrated) minutes and records, the Endeavorers should help him gather his material.

When a special campaign of any nature is on, the young people should be the ones to lead in the canvass of homes. They should promote frankness in all church business. Many troubles arise from withholding knowledge, and so the young people should try to spread abroad the exact facts with regard to any vote or statement that the officials have recently made.

On special occasions, such as an anniversary celebration, when much information must be gathered, the young people can assist greatly by placing conveniently at the disposal of the church-workers the historical data from which they must cull their essential facts.

The society members may help, too, by promoting co-operation within the church. If they can be sure that all the young people will stand together, the church need fear little difference or clashing of opinions and judgment.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for August 15)

Good Advice in the Book of Proverbs. Proverbs 1:7-9

Once upon a time, Mary and Martha Be-good were studying Proverbs in Christian Endeavor. Their superintendent told them about the writers and the wisdom of the Book. She told them, "Proverbs were written by Solomon and some of the other Old Testament characters who knew a lot. These people had many experiences and learned many lessons which they wrote down that we might profit and be better boys and girls. Mary and Martha were especially impressed with the advice about speaking softly. Also they liked the words about keeping still and about getting wisdom. They decided that they would watch for chances to follow these ideas.

At the end of the very next day, Martha said to Mary, "I got a chance to obey one of our Proverbs today. When Father told me that he advised that I should not go away on the trip that would make me late in beginning school this fall, I remembered the Proverb about wisdom and that it says, 'Hear the instruction of thy father', so I decided not to go. Let's keep a list of the times that we obey those three kinds of advice that we got from the Proverbs."

They found the Proverb about wisdom was one of the nicest ones at first. Each of them got quite a list of the times when they could follow their parents' advice, or show in some other way that they were willing to take instruction. Then one night they remembered that they were not paying much attention to the other bits of advice. Mary said, "Have you followed the advice about speaking softly or kindly when someone is angry at you or have you remembered to keep quiet when there were things that you wanted to tell and which were not best told. I think we ought to get some points for those, too."

The very next day as they were on their way to school a little girl joined them and started to talk about another little girl. It is not nice to talk about people and say mean things about them but that is just what Sadie Benaughty was doing. She said that a certain little girl named Doris had told a story and that she had cheated on an examination and had done a lot of other bad things. When Sadie Benaughty had left them, Mary said, "Here is our chance to get a point for each of us. You know one of our Proverbs is about being quiet. We will just be quiet about these things about little Doris. It would only make things worse to tell others what Sadie has said. I really hope there is some mistake and that Doris did not really do anything bad." So that night they each added a point for being quiet.

About a week later Martha had a chance to earn a point in a still different way. The boys and girls of her class were having a race in their class work. Note books, attendance, daily lessons and other things counted. So it happened that at recess one day, Buddy Asmarty stepped up to Martha and said, "I know why the girls are ahead in our race. The teacher likes them best." Martha said, "You know, Buddy, that the teacher is fair. She has even been having some other teachers look over the papers sometimes to see if they agree with her and she told us that if we had any doubts that we could see her about them." Then Buddy acted smart and told Martha that she was the teacher's special pet and a privileged character and a lot of things like that and that if the girls won the race it would not be fair. Martha knew that Buddy had really worked pretty hard on his side and that part of the reason he was acting so smart was because he felt badly about being behind so she kept from really getting angry at him and answered him, "Well, we don't know who will win yet but I think the most important thing is for each one of us to do our part well." Soon she and Buddy were on good terms and talking pleasantly instead of scrapping.

Wedding Bells and Kikuyu Belles

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

(In two parts. Part II)

All is intense activity in Kibora's village. A new hut is being built, the home of his bride. Meanwhile Kibora calls on Wangiko—his mother-in-law to be. For the young Kikuyu swain after having first obtained the consent of the chosen one, ignores her in the courtship, and she never even knows until it suddenly arrives, the date of her wedding. For 'tis her mother whom the bridegroom asks to set the wedding day!

Ndturu is working in her gardens. She truly loves Kibora, and shyly longs as loving maidens do, for the day to come when she shall be his wife. And today as she carefully weeds the millet, she wonders, hopes and fears, in that fashion in which feminine humanity has had from time immemorial. Suddenly she looks up with a startled exclamation. A hand has been laid violently upon her arm. It is none other than Kibora. But she is startled, even frightened, for to the Kikuyu girl, marriage though expected is always sudden. He does not say, "Marry me today" as says sometimes the ardent lover of civilized lands, but he speaks commandingly, not pleadingly "You must marry me today." Does she desire with feminine caprice, a way of escape, a day to 'think it over', to 'get ready' for the crowning event of her earthly life? It is useless, for Kibora is that very moment, carrying her off. Ndturu wants to go, of course, but modesty forbids that her little world should know it. So she begins a wailing apparently so intense, so hopeless and so awful, that the volume of its sound brings to her her girl friends from her own and nearby gardens. And they go with her to her future home. They cannot miss the wedding! And so likewise wailing, they go together—the bridegroom, the bride, and the bride's attendants to the marriage feast. With her they enter the hut, and not for a few hours but for four days and nights do they remain, wailing and feasting. But the ceremony is not completed. She must visit the paternal home once more. The fourth day of the ceremonies having arrived her attendants bring her the bridal veil—nothing more nor less than a bunch of leaves with which Ndturu covers her blushing face as her attendants escort her to the home of her father Kihika. She greets her father with the customary "WE MUHOR."—(You! are you in peace?). She falls upon her mother's neck. Her grief seems boundless, though by this time well nigh exhausted. She bids farewell to all the family leaving her voluntary attendants in the village, and goes back alone, still covering her face with the bunch of leaves, to the waiting, and we may well imagine nearly exasperated Kibora. Thus the ceremony is completed, and the honeymoon commences. During the whole of the month, Ndturu covers her face with her bridal leaves at the mere sight or approach of any person, man, woman or child, except her own husband! And during her honeymoon she does no cooking. Her mother-in-law attends to that! At last the honeymoon is over and Ndturu assumes the regular and heavy duties of the Kikuyu wife.

Down the mountain slope, and clinging closely in a sheltered nook to the mountain side itself was the mission station. At the time of Kibora's courtship and the resulting wedding, the missionaries were just becoming established. Eighteen months have now rolled by and their presence is being felt, not only by the natives who live upon the concession proper, but by the villages like Kibora's on the mountain slope just above, and even by those like Kihika's far up toward the summit. The daily ringing of the morning bell, summoning all who wished to the evangelist's services was now a customary thing. And Kibora and his wife, being near, frequently attended, not often together, not usually even on the same mornings but often enough so that by this time they both knew of One who is mighty to save. Ndturu is unhappy. She truly loves her husband. To her he is the centre of her little universe. The Kikuyu wife, having been consulted as to her marriage, and having as a rule married the man whom she loves is exceptionally devoted and loving. Hers is perhaps no less slavery, but it is the willing slavery of love. Why then, as Ndturu comes this morning to the mission service is her heart heavy, her face sad and woe-begone? Alas! she is a barren woman. And added to that sorrow which always heavily upon a true wife's heart, her husband, much as she loves him, and valuable as she is to him in other ways, cannot afford to keep her! She must be returned to her father and he must in return receive the forty sheep and goats with the cow and the progeny which has accumulated during these eighteen months. Be not too harsh in your judgment. Remember that Kibora was only a heathen Mukikuyu and that fidelity and disinterestedness, are not virtues that often flourish naturally in the unregenerate heart. Many a would-be Napoleon even in so-called Christian lands has put away his Josephine in order that he might take unto himself the Marie Theresa who is to become the mother of his futile heir. But had Ndturu had any knowledge of all this, 'twould have afforded her but scant comfort. Misery finds no real consolation in the company of the miserable, but must seek it where alone it can be found, at the throne of grace. And so the light which shone around Ndturu through the preaching of the word in her own tongue, led her to the Cross, the cross where suffering women throughout the ages have sorrowingly adored

One through whose sacrifices alone they found forgiveness of their sins. She prayed for Kibora. Even after marriage, the heathen woman prays to the gods of her clan, which does not include her husband. But the Christian woman has a new clan. She belongs to a new tribe, and is never satisfied until her husband is reconciled to her Savior. Did she pray for her own sake alone, or did she go a step further and pray for her husband's sake also that he might be redeemed? Oft-times we see marvellous workings of the Holy Spirit in the native convert's life, and streams of tender adoration spring forth as it were from the wells of deepest understanding, as the new-born convert claims the conversion of loved ones, not for self, nor yet for that dear other self, the husband or the wife, but for the sake of the Lord Jesus alone. And such prayer is always prevailing, such requests are always answered. But think, if you will, what it cost Kibora to come to Jesus! No hope of founding a clan was henceforth to be his, for the Christians taught that he must retain and be true to his barren wife. And so he faced the new life, enlivened by the new love, which began with the Lord himself, and made nearest and dearest of earthly loved ones his wife, Ndturu. No clan, no harem, no prestige, no seat in the elders' palaver house—but poverty and isolation, and loss of power and influence in that little world which was just as great to him as yours, reader, is to you—but Christ himself drew near.

Two years had passed since the conversion of Kibora and Ndturu and the establishment of their Christian home. Kibora was a winning evangelist. Ndturu was frequently found in heathen homes speaking of Christ in her quiet way. But today there is a bustle about their simple little home, clean and tidy, though scantily furnished. The missionary doctor is seen coming hastily down the hill just as the sun sinks over the mountain with her medical care in her hand.

Kibora is at the neighbors and he and his friends are deep in prayer. The hours pass slowly. But morning comes, and with it joy, for Kibora is the proud father of a son, the first of a family of children which in the Providence of God were eventually to grace his home. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men most miserable." But even in this world we have the promise, "Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart." Do you not long, Christian reader, to know what may be your part in the redemption of dark Africa? Do you not long to see more Kikuyu and other belles come to the Lord Jesus? Do you not long to hear wedding bells ring on in tribes yet heathen, in order that Christian homes may be established with God's manifest blessing on them? Nay, more, do you not long for that greater union than any earthly wedding when Christ, hastening back because of your faithful proclamation of his Word shall claim his bride? Do you not long for that "home over there" where spiritual children shall be your glad fruition? Oh! Reader in lands who have long known of Christ, remember of the heathen that they as well as you "must needs go home by way of the Cross."

For there is no other way but this. They'll never get sight of the gates of light if the way of the Cross they miss."

The Wealth of the Indies

Wealth consists of that which we value most. To a lover of nature, it is the sky, the winding stream, the snow-mantled forest, the tender fern frond, the skylark awing in the blue ether, the squirrel chattering on the limb, the deer drinking in a silent pool in the moonlight.

To a lover of books, it is piles of splendid volumes, or rare though dusty old tomes. It is life reflected on the printed page with marvelous skill; it is the stirring of the emotions because of the understanding of some great heart.

Wealth to the materialistic mind may consist of gold and silver, and stocks and bonds.

To the idealistic individual, wealth may exist in the glad light in the eye of a friend; in the smiling welcome of a child's greeting; in the wag of a dog's tail; or in those satisfactions born of loving our neighbor as we love ourselves, and in doing unto others as we would like to have others do unto us.

The wealth of the Indies—its jewels, and silks, and spices, and arabesques, and mysterious arts, can all be duplicated by the one with the eyes keen enough to see, and the soul alert enough to hear.

The price of a good woman is above rubies—and goodness or virtue is not restricted to zone or clime. Then, manly courage is not a matter of nationality, for "Greater love hath no man than the one who is willing, if need be, to lay down his life for his friend."

The wealth of the Indies is no greater than the ability to control one's spirit—for greater is he who can do this, and richer far, than one who captures a city with all its marvels of art, its mosques of marble, and its rare tapestries from a thousand looms.

Then the preciousness of a good reputation and of the heritage of honest and God-fearing parentage, are greater far than the spices brought upon camel's backs across the burning desert, or the rare woods from the mountains of Lebanon.

The East has its silks with the sheen upon them of untold and changing hues—silks so soft that they rival the fair, cool skin of the cheek of beauty. But no silk, though it be a queen's dower, can be so splendid, as the soft answer that turneth away wrath, or so priceless as the brooding love of a mother over a suffering child.

Oh, the wealth of the Indies is great enough that poets may sing its praises, and that artists may strive to reproduce its wonders! But greater wealth than this surrounds us at all times. Ivories, and peacocks, and perfumes stir the imagination. The languorous life of the Orient intrigues the intellect. But the wealth of the life of unselfish service, is the greatest wealth of all. It offers the cream of companionships, the jewels of friendship, the fragrance of the Lily of the Valley, with that promise of the final decoration of loyalty—the decoration of the King, who beckons us forward with the commendation, "Well done!"

The wealth of the Indies will fade and crumble to dust. The wealth of the life well lived will last for aye!—Emma Gary Wallace, Auburn, New York.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

SHIPSHEWANA CONFERENCE

It is with no small pleasure that we give the readers of the Evangelist a report of our "doings" at Shipshewana. This year, as in other years, a two weeks' conference was planned with the hope of increasing cooperation and growth among the Indiana and Michigan churches. A splendid program was planned and our only disappointment was found in the absence of Brother Martin Shively. As soon as we learned of his unfortunate accident arrangements were made to have Brother J. Allen Miller to remain and protect Brother Shively's place on the program. The work of the conference was of the highest type and our audiences proved our rapid growth. Brother Stuckey was with us for two scheduled addresses and he then gave us one in addition, proving his usual well-known generosity in service. Also Brother Rench added strength to the program by his very able and pleasing lectures. With men like Brethren Rench and Miller on the program, success was assured.

Brother Miller was with us during the first week and over two Sundays and it was generally conceded that his audiences were about three times as large as of the year previous. Brother Frank Coleman was on the program for one address and he gave the conference one of his usual addresses of unquestioned strength. Brother Harley Zumbach's presence assured us of splendid congregational singing and many special numbers which added much to the interest of the services. Many ministers were in attendance from time to time and prospects for the next year are most hopeful. The lots of the Retreat are selling rapidly and the improvements already made are a surprise and pleasure to all who come. Some sense of the beauty of the place and the inspiration it brings may be seen in the bit of beautiful verse that came to Brother Stuckey as he sat in meditation among the trees on his "lots." It was read by him in his closing address at the Sunday school conference and by unanimous vote the conference expressed its wish that this poem should be made a part of our report to the Evangelist.

Shipshewana's Song

By M. A. Stuckey

Shipshewana, lake of pleasure
To the weary pilgrim's eye;
Sing to me your glad some measure,
Let it echo to the sky.

Tell me how some Indian maiden
Shipshewana, fair and free,
Love to breathe your air quite laden
With the fragrance of the sea.

Tell me more O thou Muse of time,
Of her work and days of ease;
How she sought these rippling waters
And its shady, leafy trees.

Did she see at dawn's first breaking Streakings of celestial light;
Did it bring to her heart waking
Thoughts of wonder, life and might?

What to her did happy bird song
Mean throughout the live-long day;
Or the fading ev'ning twilight
With its shadows o'er the bay?

Did they whisper a language strange
Shipshewana, in thy breast?
Did they tell thy pure soul of change
And a happy hunter's rest?

Years have pass'd and bright days roll'd on Since you trod this peaceful shore;
Yet in fancy how our souls long
Just to hear you sing once more.

List, my friends, and hear her music
As she sings from realms of love,
With the angels' blessed chorus
And the happy saints above:

"Carry on! you Christian soldiers,
On these hills I used to roam;
Tell Christ's message: grand and glorious,
Tell men of the wanderer's home.

Tell them all the sainted story
Of prophets and heroes old;
Of the Manger Babe so lowly,
And his Gospel free and bold.

Tell it slowly, gladly, meekly,
To the heart-sick and the sad;
To his friends: the foe and friendless,
Who never Christ's joy have had.

Tell them Shipshewana's story,
Ere they pass their lives away;
The story of love and peace and light
And the land of heav'nly day."

After enjoying this poem others, we trust, will be induced to come and try out the inspirational advantages of the Retreat. However we cannot promise that the inspiration of the place will influence all in the same manner.

ST. JAMES, MARYLAND

Silence, isolation and non-participation tends toward stagnation. We have not fallen into that state. I hope the contents of this effort will justify that statement.

Slavery still exists south of the Mason and Dixon Line. We are servants of Jesus Christ. We are assisting him in his great imperative of ushering in his Kingdom. We are laboring and pressing forward with all energy assembled toward that end.

Forbidding the insignificant and commonplace occurrences, I shall endeavor to delineate a few of our out-standing successes and accomplishments since our last word to you.

We are very fortunate to have as our shepherd Brother T. C. Lyon. He is a faithful herald of the Gospel. He is successfully guiding our footsteps around life's pitfalls. He is strong and well-founded in the Doctrines of the Brethren Church. He is not timid in relating them to his sheep. He has been leading our weekly Bible Study, enlightening us, that we may profit from his shrewd interpretation. He has been consistently stressing the value received and the results obtained from a meditative prayer life. As fruits of his stressing, increased interest has been showed in the weekly prayer meetings.

We are a scattered congregation of God's children. Although we feel that we should assemble every quarter of a year, to introduce and initiate new plans for the succeeding quarter. Much business of vast importance is always settled. We always consider the future when negotiating our plans. The future is far superior to the present.

Our Sunday school is still alive. Interest is increasing as Sundays pass into history. Some new order of service has been planned by our competent superintendent, Brother Myron Bloom. This has proved to assist in the creation of interest. Our attendance is transitory. When followed by church, large crowds turn out, but on other Sundays, the attendance is far below what we wish it to be.

The W. M. S. of the church is active and doing its bit. They are always willing to help the church, if it be finance, physical or mental endurance. Although, busy times and inclement weather sometimes play havoc with their meetings, usually the meetings are well attended. Many enjoyable days are spent sewing and laboring to receive funds to give to others.

The S. M. M. has the "pep" esteemed by all. These girls are alert. They often perform tasks that we anticipate too intricate for them to accomplish. They are continually being crowned as victors with their colors flying. Girls are far superior to boys in the rural church. They excel in attendance, interest, cooperation and alertness that characterizes a successful group.

Remember us when upon your knees. We are in need of your prayers. We always reckon our success in eternal rewards, rather than in material, transitory accomplishments. We are sinners saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

WINONA A WORLD MISSIONARY CENTER

The special missionary part of Winona's program, at Winona Lake, Indiana, was conceived three years ago during the Bible Conference, conducted by Dr. W. E. Beiderwolf. It at once struck a popular and responsive chord in the hearts of both missionaries home on furlough and those who are concerned about modern missions in our churches of the homeland. Its success during the past three seasons has made Winona a great missionary center.

In addition to the School for Missions now operating under the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West, another World Wide School of Missions will be held August 3 to 11, under the supervision of Dr. Robert H. Glover, one of the foremost authorities and teachers of the world. He will be assisted by Drs. G. S. McCune and W. H. Heckman, who are men of broad scholarship, travelers and authors.

The work is interdenominational and already a number of secretaries of denominational church boards of missions have accepted a place on this committee. Several missionary organizations have expressed a willingness to affiliate themselves with this program.

It is the purpose of this committee to make Winona so attractive in every way that foreign missionaries retired will want to make this a permanent home and the furloughed missionaries may find helpful, spiritual, educational uplift for themselves and families.

Dr. Heckman and family with many other missionaries are already on the grounds.

Rev. John S. Hamilton, Winona Lake, is director of missionary activities.

"WE'RE LITTLE"

Having just perused Brother Starn's article in the last Evangelist in which are set forth some truly thought-provoking propositions, we feel constrained to add an echo.

In the account of Gideon and his three hundred we have a fine study of the "few" and the "many". The Lord said, "The people that are with thee are many!" Our cry today is, "We are too few!" "We are so little!" This we say, referring to the Brethren Church, as a denominational organization. But to our babies, on the floor at our feet, trying to walk, we say, "That's the little man! Sure, you can walk! Oh, you're a great big man! Now, try again! You're no longer our baby—you're daddy's big man!" Then we turn around and say to the missionaries on the various fields, "Were little—keep on crawling—or just give up." What inconsistency! What utter lack of vision! No wonder, as mentioned in the above specified article, strong leaders are seeking other organizations through which truly "progressive" enterprises may be prosecuted in behalf of soul-saving in these last and trying days of carelessness and worldliness ere the Lord come.

"For who hath despised the day of small things?" Zech. 4:10a.

"What then shall we say to these things? If God is for us, who is against us?" Rom. 8:31.

"For narrow is the gate, and straitened the way, that leadeth unto life, and few are they that find it." Matt. 7:14.

and in their stead is a miserable hamlet or two to keep company with Tiberias, the only place where the art of living is seriously considered. Here you see the fishermen bringing in their night's catch, as of old. You may be jostled by a leper in the crowd of poor and hungry people looking for a friend, and you find yourself wishing that the Master of wind and wave would come again and drop the mantle of his peace once more upon the weary folk. And then, looking up the hill slope a little way, you catch sight of the clean, fresh walls of a Christian hospital, rising from the bowers of a modest garden, and, walking through its wards, where for his sake doctors and nurses minister to the distressed and broken, you realize that the spirit of the Master has returned to Galilee and the benediction of the God of Love abides there still.

The Mother Land

According to the tale of long ago the giant Antaeus, son of Mother Earth, in his wrestling with Hercules received new strength whenever he touched the ground. When anyone grows weary in his contest with this wearing and exacting world and finds need for the renewal of his soul, let him go back to the land which is the mother of his race, and there, in the clear atmosphere of definite place and circumstance let there be again enacted before him these great dramas of the soul's struggle for truth and progress. A better man he can not fail to be who dwells a while in the Holy Land; nor can he go back home again without feeling as another felt who never had the privilege of standing on these fair eastern shores, yet out of his love for what it all has meant to humankind was moved to say,

"Blest land of Judea! thrice hallowed of song,
Where the holiest of memories pilgrim-like throng;
In the shade of thy palms, by the shores of thy sea,
On the hills of thy beauty, my heart is with thee."
Roselle, New Jersey.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Ashland

The last news you had from this place was concerning the dedication of our new church. I wish every church of the brotherhood that is contemplating building a new church might have the advantage of seeing ours. It is not perfect, yet it is approaching a good model for such people as have no more money than they know what to do with. I am sure that we should have a standing committee on church edifices so that grave blunders should not be built into churches for Brethren peoples who need some extra arrangements in their church buildings, usually not taken into consideration by architects who do not understand us. Too many baptistries of our churches are far too large. Trine immersion does not need so large a pool as a single immersion where the candidate needs almost the full six feet to be laid back in.

But other things have happened: the Baccalaureate, the Alumni Meeting and Banquet; the State Preachers' Retreat; and the regular services, usual and unusual. Our audiences now have a good many visitors or strangers whom we could not lure into the Chapel. We expect many more this fall and winter.

Baptisms and reception of members now seem to be a common occurrence, 21 having been received in the last month with more promised. We have arranged for a revival effort in November when we hope to reap in fields wider than we have been able to do formerly. We shall need the prayers of all who love us and want a good church in Ashland.

Vacation

Before this appears in print, we shall have started on our vacation which will be "Travel Flashes" for sure. Perhaps we can tell about it more later, but the aim of it is to be with the Matrias, West Virginia church for a dedicatory service August 8, followed by a revival effort of two or more weeks. We hope that this will be a vacation of help and inspiration to both the church there as well as to ourselves. We anticipate a good meeting and if you think of us, ask God to be with us that we may get glory to our Lord Jesus and save some lost sinners and build up the saints in their hope of glory. Then may we have a great conference at Winona. CHARLES. A. BAME.

Junior Endeavor Notes

On the way home from school Martha told Mary how she had won another point by using soft, kindly words instead of angry ones. Mary said that she thought they had better give two points for that each time for it seemed to be about the hardest one of all. So at the end of the first month Martha had more points than Mary, but they decided to keep right on and see who would be ahead by the end of the next month.

Father woke up with a start and listened. Then he said: "I think you're right, mother. I'll go and see about it."

Putting on his bathrobe and slippers, he went softly downstairs, saying to himself as he neared the kitchen door: "I certainly hear voices. There's more than one of them."

And that's how it happened that just as they had wiped the last dish the hall door opened, and there stood father."

"Well, upon my word," he said, "what's all this?"

"We're brownies, father," said Dorothy, "only you mustn't tell mother. We want to surprise her, don't we, Helen?"

"Yes," said Helen, "we're brownies, father, that come at night when everybody is asleep to help around the house. Now mother won't have to do the dishes in the morning."

"Well," said father with a smile, "you'll certainly surprise mother all right! And now that the work is done, off to bed again, youngsters!"

"Do we have to go to bed again?" asked Helen. "Isn't it most time to get up, father? We're all ready for school. Can't we stay up?"

"Certainly not!" said Mr. Brown decidedly. "Why, even the cocks haven't started to crow yet! Off with you to bed! You'll have a surprised mother all right in the morning."

And that's how it happened that next morning as they sat at breakfast Mrs. Brown said as she looked at her little daughters: "Whose helpful hands, I wonder, washed my supper dishes in the night and made it so easy and pleasant for me to get breakfast this morning? Can it be that there are brownies, after all?"

"We were the brownies, mother," said little Dot. "Were you surprised?"—Christian Science Monitor.

A Man Who Foretold the Coming of Christ

By Elizabeth Fulgham

A man with bowed head entered one of the most beautiful buildings that has ever been built in all the world. This was the great temple of Solomon which took 180,000 men seven years to build. Up long flights of marble steps from one court to another the man found his way until he stood before the doors of the holy place of the temple. In this room the walls and ceiling were of gold, and at one end stood a beautiful altar of pure gold. The man had been here many times before, for he was a prophet, the very greatest prophet of all time. He had stood in this beautiful room many times while incense was burned on the golden altar and offered prayers of thanksgiving to God. Often he had earnestly asked for God's guidance for the little nation of Judah. But now his heart was sad indeed. The ninth king of Judah had just died. That was sad enough, but sadder than all to the prophet was the fact that the king had died with a horrible disease called leprosy, a disease caused by the king's own sins.

As the prophet stood there he lifted his head and saw as in a dream, though it was much

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

Two Little Brownies

Dorothy and Helen were walking slowly home from school, talking of a story that Teacher had read to them.

"Of course," said Dorothy, "we know there aren't really any brownies. There really are no little live brownies that come at night when everybody is asleep and help around the house."

"No," said Helen slowly, "there really aren't any live brownies; but I sort of wish there were, don't you Dot?"

"Why?" asked Dorothy.

"Wouldn't it be fun if there were?" said Helen eagerly. "Wouldn't it be great, Dot, if some little brownies would come tonight when we're all asleep and wash up all the supper dishes, so that mother wouldn't have to do them in the morning?"

"Wouldn't it?" said Dorothy. "But they won't, you know," she added sadly, "because there aren't any."

"Dorothy Brown," exclaimed Helen excitedly. "I know how there can be brownies!"

"How?" said little Dot eagerly.

"Why, we can be!" said Helen. "Why can't we do mother's dishes for her after everybody has gone to bed?"

"Let's do it, Helen," cried Dorothy, "and make mother guess!"

"We will," said Helen very decidedly. "I should think we might be as helpful as brownies!"

And that is how it happened that long after everybody had gone to bed in the Brown house mother was awakened by some unusual sounds in the room below. She listened attentively for a moment or so, and then she said softly as she touched him on the shoulder: "Father, wake up! I'm sure I hear somebody in the kitchen."

clearer than any dream could possibly be, the glorious throne of the King of all kings, God. High and lifted up above the sins of wicked kings, above all the wrongs in the world, this pure, white throne of God seemed to reach far above the temple walls above the sky. The dazzling light from the great God seated on the throne filled the whole temple. Heavenly creatures called seraphim hovered about the throne crying: "Holy, holy, holy is Jehovah of hosts! All the earth is full of his glory!"

It seemed to the prophet that the goodness, purity, and glory of the Heavenly Father made him feel how impure his own heart and life were, and he cried out: "Woe is me, for I am undone! Because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, Jehovah of hosts!"

At this cry one of the heavenly creatures hovering about God's throne took a live coal from off the golden altar and with it touched the lips of the prophet to show that his sins were forgiven. Then came the voice of the Lord, saying: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

And the prophet whose heart has been humbled by this vision of God, cried out immediately: "Here am I; send me."

Thus was the prophet called to go preach to the wicked people of Judah, warning them to turn from idolatry and sin of every kind.

We know very little of the prophet's birth or of his parents, but he seems to have been very intimate with the kings of his time. He was probably a kind of preacher in the king's court. Certain it is that he faithfully advised the four kings who reigned during his lifetime. When they followed his advice, they did well, but always met failure and defeat when they refused it. For forty years he remained at his task, and no little task it was either to which the prophet was called by the glorious vision. Judah, his native country, was fast going to ruin because it was becoming less and less faithful to God and turning to heathen idols. Again and again the prophet sent out the warning to Judah. Always too he held before them the sweet promise of God:

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found;
Call ye upon him while he is near;
Let the wicked forsake his way,
And the unrighteous man his thoughts;
And let him return unto the Lord,
And he will have mercy upon him;
And to our God,
For he will abundantly pardon."

Sometimes his messages were burning accusations against the sins of his people; sometimes they were tender pleadings with his nation to turn back to God. But he is best known for the wonderful descriptions he wrote of the Christ who was to come, the Messiah for whom the Jews looked for thousands of years before the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem. These prophecies are the crown of the prophet's work and were literally fulfilled in the birth and life work of Jesus. The book of the Bible in which these glorious prophecies are found bears the name of the prophet himself. It contains sixty-six chapters, twenty-seven of which touch upon the coming of Jesus the King. It so happens that he began prophesying during the reign of the ninth king of Judah, and his name begins with the ninth letter of our alphabet. If you should fail to guess his name, you will find it in the very first verse of the twenty-third book of the Old Testament.—Christian Advocate.

TRACT PROMOTION CORNER

Propagate the Gospel
By Use of the Printed Page

The Tract in Egypt

Arthur T. Upson writes of the good effect from the use of tracts among the "bad quarter" inhabitants. "Any Thursday the faithful four may be seen distributing in the bad quarter of Cairo, and the usual number of tracts distributed any evening is about a thousand. We have often patrolled the distribution in the neighborhood and watched the men coming away after receiving the leaflets, but we have not seen as many as one per cent torn up."

Mr. Upson reports many men truly reformed from this ministry with the printed page. The eye is often very truly the "Gateway to the soul" and Christians do well to use the tract as an appeal to vision and conversion.

ASHLAND COLLEGE

Ashland, Ohio

ASHLAND COLLEGE will open its Forty-ninth Year, Tuesday, September 14, 1926. The following departments offer the customary courses:

ARTS AND SCIENCES, leading to the usual bachelor's degrees.

SEMINARY, recently extended on a six-year basis,—three in the Arts College and three in the Seminary. The Bachelor of Arts degree at the end of four and the Bachelor of Theology at the end of six years.

EDUCATION—Two years' course leading to elementary certification under Ohio laws. Also in other states with equivalent requirements.

Four years' course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Education. Certificates granted for state-wide teaching in High School. So in other states with exchange arrangements with Ohio.

MUSIC—Piano, full graduation courses with two teachers.

Voice, as above with three teachers.

Violin, with one teacher and an assistant.

In every relation and in all courses of instruction, the whole institution is frankly and avowedly Christian. In courses permitting religious discussion, Christian ideals are stressed.

Student life and activity are largely under the close and sympathetic supervision of two Deans, one for men and one for women.

Parents and young people are both alike asked to consider this College when contemplating further study.

What Will General Conference Do?

In propounding this question we do not have in mind any particular perplexing problem that will require General Conference action, for we know of no such problem that is disturbing the minds of our people. Neither are we thinking of the round of routine business that must be taken care of; every conference can be counted on to grind out the usual grist of such business without any urging. What we are concerned about is business that is not usual or ordinary, business that has to do with plans for concerted denominational effort and the promotion of especially urgent and vitally important ideals and aims.

We would do well to resolve to focus our attention on some special ideals and aims at this conference. We need some driving ambitions, some denominating purposes constantly before us to keep us from drifting into an easy, indifferent, time-marking attitude. We need to set fresh goals or renew our emphases occasionally, for the groove of routine effort tends to wear into a rut, if we keep persistently in it. Moreover, there are certain things in addition to our regularly set program, that we ought to be doing, but are not doing and will not do, unless we set ourselves to them with definite and determined aim. These ideals and aims are vital to the life and mission of our church and ought to receive our serious attention.

First, we suggest for the consideration of conference, that action be taken urging churches and their pastors to place greater emphasis on the promotion of home worship and religious instruction in the home. This would not be a new emphasis; we included it in some of our former programs, but we never worked it very strongly and since the close of those programs and movements it has been almost entirely lost sight of. But it is so vital, so fundamental, that we can never begin to do what we ought to do for the future godliness and uprightness of our children, the vitality and wholesomeness of our home, the perpetuity and power of our church and the greatness and strength of our nation until we in some manner bring about a revival of family religion. The church may do its very utmost in its many and varied ways of religious instruction, but it can never make up for the lack of religion and religious teaching and influence in the home. Also the church may fill its records with pronouncements against divorce, but it can do more to remedy the evils of broken homes by endeavoring strenuously to put vital religion into the home-life of professing Christians.

Second, we would like to see Conference renew its former emphasis on the instruction of the people in the principles of stewardship and tithing, and make provision for more effective encouragement to this end even than was given during our former program. This is not an indifferent matter, but one of vital importance to the spiritual life and progress of our church. We were for a time beginning to press this Gospel principle home to the hearts of our people quite generally and effectively, but we have of late grown very quiet about it. This is a serious neglect which we cannot afford to prolong.

Third, it would be a wise thing for Conference to urge upon our churches the importance of reviving and continuing instruction in temperance and good citizenship. The impression was all too general that when the prohibition amendment was passed, the evil of intemperance was wiped out, and that the task was henceforth up to the government merely to enforce the law, and the church had no further duty. But to make the nation truly dry is proving a mountainous task, and it has been made more formidable by the general let down of effort on the part of the church. Even the quarterly temperance instruction in the Sunday school lesson program has become a mere apology. We must awake from our sleep and get back to the fight for temperance and good citizenship. And in our efforts for the latter, we might well emphasize law obedience as strongly as law enforcement.

Fourth Conference should take cognizance of the importance of an aggressive and positive stand against war and militaristic propaganda and preparations, and our churches should be urged to come to the front with their opposition and make our stand clear and unequivocal. Practically every denomination has taken a strong position against war and is putting forth some real effort to encourage peace and to prevent war. And some of the greatest religious leaders of the world today are stepping flat-footed on the Dunker platform that the church can never bless any war. This is our day for leadership and for service, and we hold our peace. It is not well that we do so. The Church of the Brethren, the Mennonites and the Friends, who are sharers together with us of a history of opposition to war during times when other churches are inclined to bless it, are pressing forward to make good their place of leadership in this fight. They are even now counselling and planning together how they can make their leadership and influence more effective along this line. We belong in the front ranks with them. Why are we not there?

There are other evils concerning which we should like to see General Conference speak out against and urge the ministry and the churches to wield a righteous influence accordingly, but these aims are the most urgent, and are most nearly within our vision and bounden duty, and afford opportunity for a forward step sufficient for one conference. And these we suggest not necessarily as a program to be adopted but as emphases to be urged. There is one more item, however, that we wish to suggest in just a word. That is, that Conference should urge upon our pastors and churches more constant and effective effort at the cultivation of a high and fine type of denominational loyalty. We would not urge that kind of loyalty which looks with frowns and suspicion on other churches, but that which holds with love and devotion and strong faith to our own. Such a spirit is not incompatible with interdenominational harmony and co-operation any more than true class loyalty in a Sunday school works against the welfare of the whole school. Such loyalty is essential to the highest functioning of our church in all its various activities and efforts.

The Divine Compulsion

It would be a wonderful aid to success in life and to accomplishment in the Kingdom of God if we could always feel that divine compulsion was laid upon us in our tasks. Perhaps few things would result in greater blessing to the church than just to cultivate that quality of life and to build up that sort of conviction—that God has chosen and ordained us to a particular task and that we cannot possibly with good conscience get away from it. Certainly the preacher ought to feel that way about his preaching, and the deacon ought to feel that way about his ministry. And why should not the Sunday school teacher feel so about his teaching, or whoever he be who has an office or task assigned to him by the church or its auxiliaries and allied agencies for the building up of the Kingdom of God, why should he not feel that it is a direct charge from Almighty God? With such a sense of authority and commissioning back of our tasks we could not easily free ourselves from the urge and compulsion of obedience.

It is not uncommon to find the men standing back of the sacred desk being motivated and driven forward by such a feeling. The Rev. Kingscote Greenland, a notable London interviewer, asked that great soul winner, Gipsy Smith, "Why are you an evangelist?" It is said that the Gipsy raised himself in his chair, thrust forward his massive head, crowned with his still raven black hair, and with tremendous emphasis replied: "Because I cannot help it—I must. Necessity is laid upon me. I am as sure of my commission as of my conversion. I should no more dare to live without preaching Christ's gospel than to live without eating. I've got to do this thing—why, I don't know, but I have. It's my business, my divine work, and woe is me if I preach not the gospel. And God has set his seal on my ministry in five continents by permitting me to see tens of thousands of men and women brought home to him through my humble agency. Go out and call men in I must, and I will; I can do no other, as Martin Luther said." And if it were necessary, many others could be cited who are laboring in the ministry because they feel they must, they were divinely chosen for the work of preaching, they cannot escape it. And in this they are but following in the train of the leaders of the ancient gospel story. Paul said, "Necessity is laid upon me, for woe is me if I preach not the gospel." And Peter and John replied to the strict prohibition of the Jewish authorities, "We cannot but speak of the things we have seen and heard." And the Lord Jesus himself said, "I must work the works of him that sent me." Such conviction is the driving force of the gospel. Thank God for the ministers who are gripped by it.

But why should it be confined to the ministry? Why should not the men and women of the pew, whatever their position or responsibility, feel as strongly the divine urge in their own hearts? Is God a respecter of persons that he should lay his Spirit with much heaviness upon the preachers of his Word, and not upon those who occupy the lesser positions in the household of faith? Did he show himself thus in the days of the early church? Nay, but rather he poured his spirit of compulsion upon Stephen and Philip in as great abundance as upon Paul and Peter and the rest of the apostles. It did not require ordination to the ministry to feel the driving power of the gospel. The urge to daily service and to witness to the saving power of the Son of God was not dependent upon official responsibility or position. The vast majority of that long line of godly men and women who suffered martyrdom for the cause of Christ never had laid upon them holy hands of ordination; they were men and women of the laity, but they had the unction of the Holy Spirit. They felt the urge, the force, the compulsion of divine authority and compassion, and they were willing to go through fire and sword rather than be false to such an appeal. May the Spirit with such compelling force come upon the rank and file of our membership, so that our churches may be awakened out of their lethargy and indifference, and with a power that cannot be restrained and under a leadership that cannot be diverted from its course, carry forward the great work of Kingdom building with a success hitherto unequalled.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother G. E. Drushal, superintendent of the Riverside Institute at Lost Creek, Kentucky, reports that the school is in a very prosperous condition, well organized and enjoys the largest attendance in the history of the work. On their faculty is numbered one of their own local young men, who is devoting himself to teaching.

The dedication of the new Brethren church of Fort Wayne, Indiana, which was set for the first Sunday in August was postponed on account of rain, according to Brother Kimmel's statement, and is set for the 22nd of August. Indiana churches especially should take notice, for many of them will likely want to attend.

A paper will be published during Conference week, but none the week following Conference, that is for the date of September 1. Any announcement or newsletter that should be in the Conference week number of the Evangelist should reach the editor not later than Friday, August 20th, and you will be safer if you have it here by the 19th.

We have an interesting letter from the correspondent of the Pittsburgh church telling of some of their features. Their children's program was worthy of note. The Woman's Missionary Society continues to be an active force in the upkeep of that church, as it usually is in most of the churches. Brother A. L. Lynn, the pastor, is to be assisted in their fall revival by Brother W. C. Benshoff.

Brother Gearhart, Home Missionary Secretary, introduces the new financial secretary and matron for the Riverside Institute at Lost Creek, Kentucky. Brother and Sister Early and their splendid family are shown on the Mission page. They will add strength to the mission faculty at Lost Creek, and command the confidence of the brotherhood.

Brother Robert F. Porte makes his "farewell" bow in this issue, that is the last until after Conference, so he informs the editor. His service through the year has been highly appreciated by the editor, his copy well prepared and his suggestions brief and to the point. We trust they had an influence upon our readers causing them to appreciate the value of the trace more and inducing some at least to use it.

Dr. W. S. Bell's report of the College Endowment campaign from the Mount Pleasant and Jones Mills churches, in Pennsylvania, where he found the spirit of loyalty that has been uniformly manifest during the canvass. These two churches made a total gift of $1455.90, which is considered good, they being small churches. This brings the total amount of the campaign to $47,880.19, if we have figured correctly. We are assured that some very encouraging reports are to come yet before Conference.

The secretary-treasurer of the Ohio Mission Board, Brother R. A. Hazen, of Ashland, informs us that the financial status of this board is very good, money has kept coming from the churches so as to enable him to always pay the mission pastors promptly. That is as it should be, and reflects credit both upon the secretary-treasurer and upon the churches. The last quarterly payments on apportionments are now due and should be paid as promptly as possible. There are a few who are somewhat delinquent and it is important that effort be made to pay up so that we may not be required to show them in arrears at district conference time in October.

The "Methodist Protestant" tells us that the Rev. Charles Everett Draper, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Milford, Kansas, dissolved his congregation recently, and informed his members that the only way they could return to the fellowship of the church was by coming forward again and publicly taking the vows of the church all over again. This they did on the same Sunday night, and when they had renewed their obligations, the church was formally organized again. Dr. Draper explained this drastic action by stating that there was so much dissension within the church that he was unable to determine just who were members and who were not. If such action could effectively do away with dissension in churches, it might be well to try it in a number of churches. However we would not advise this procedure for pastors of congregationally ruled churches.

An interesting bit of news from Mexico City is to the effect that the government has granted funds for the purchase of school textbooks teaching "scientific temperance." Prof. Andres Osuna, who was recently in this country, states that an edition of 20,000 is to be printed. President Colles frankly lays claim to being a prohibitionist and the government officials are in favor of at least restricting the liquor traffic. Organized labor, claiming a membership of a million, and the largest organized body in the nation, has twice declared unanimously for temperance. With the inauguration of temperance instruction in the public schools, we may be confident of final success in the struggle against the liquor traffic. That is the thing that prepared the soil in the United States for such a splendid fruitage of prohibition sentiment.

GENERAL ARTICLES

God And Nature

By O. Clayton Starn

In all the literature of the world there cannot be found a more significant and impressive statement than that contained in the opening words of the Bible, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." As we look about us, wherever we are, we see many wonders of nature which are God's handiwork. Certainly, those who are never touched by the wonders of God's world cannot be more than semi-conscious of him. If the flowers and the trees and the rocks could but speak they would reveal the mighty work and genius of God in a way that would cause every knee to bow and every tongue to confess the sovereignty and omnipotence of the Creator. No one can have as full a conception of God without knowing something about natural phenomena as he can when he is acquainted with these wonders. This knowledge is important to all, especially the minister, who is responsible for the guiding of people's thinking concerning God. If more ministers possessed a greater knowledge of the facts of nature there would not be half the confusion between thoughts of nature and thoughts of the One who created the natural world.

In the world's great battlefield of thought no struggle has been or is being more fiercely contested than that between so called science and religion. This struggle is by no means abating in intensity but is rather gaining in momentum as the great stone of scientific knowledge rolls down the hill of research; as religious truth continues to reveal itself through careful study and through experiences of multitudes of valiant soldiers of the cross. Science deals with material phenomena of the universe, religion with moral and spiritual. To the writer there is no more lamentable and deplorable struggle than this. We believe it to be wholly without cause. On one hand the scientific man is tempted to conceive of religion as still embodying the prejudices and hostilities of some earlier period and on the other hand the religious man is strongly opposed to any scientific formula which is not in accord with beliefs he has incorporated into his theology. Each claims to know the truth. Each is determined that the one shall be submissive to the other. The spirit of compromise is wanting with the result that there is bound to exist between the two a state of dogmatic radicalism.

Theology and science cannot both be true and yet disagree. Does it not seem logical that a scientific fact and a religious truth must coordinate in content? The difficulty is not with either field as such but with the idea held of it. The theologian may be limited in his knowledge of cosmic phenomena and the scientist may be limited in his experiential knowledge of God-religion. Scientific theories once held sacred by religious men are now known to be false—as in the field of superstition. In ancient times when men began to experiment with chemical and physical phenomena they were counted as heretics and many were put to death. The Bible was held to be the infallible book and no one dared to express a thought unless found therein. And yet many of these same scientific ideas now conform to our religious thinking. These were man's ideas. The point to keep in mind is that our knowledge of the truth is bound to increase and many old ideas must thus be replaced by new ones. And this fact is bound to continue as long as the world stands. A favorite verse often quoted from

ELDER O. C. STARN,

Secretary General Conference and Pastor at Gratis, Ohio

Scripture is: "Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth is come he will guide you into all the truth." Some good man will claim to be under the guidance of this Spirit, hence his ideas must be correct. If he is set against evolution, if he is set against the geological idea of the formation of the earth, it is because the Spirit has thus prompted him. But the wisest of all men when he spoke these words did not mean that all the truth should suddenly be thrust upon the world and there be nothing further to offer as a future challenge to men. Rather, we look upon this as a continuous process.

A greater knowledge of the things of nature will correct warped theological ideas and a greater experiential knowledge of God will correct warped and false scientific ideas. If a scientific fact conflicts with a theological idea then the idea should be altered or discarded. Likewise, if a scientific theory conflicts with a religious truth then the theory should be dropped or changed. Neither should be hasty with their conclusions, for a wealth of hidden truth may be lost. Much religious experience is lost because some scientists have advanced a theory that substitutes a material God for the Christian God. They try to make the universe the body of God and nature his soul. This is not science, neither is it Christ-religion. Many scientific facts of today would have been in use long before had not the church during the Middle Ages waged such a relentless and uncalled for warfare against honest doubt and independent inquiry into the things of nature. "The many notable advances in physics, chemistry, astronomy and medicine made by Moslem scholars were lost on Christian Europe and had to be worked out again centuries later by the scholars of the western world. Out of the astronomy of the Arabs the Christians got only astrology; out of their chemistry they got only alchemy. Both in time stood seriously in the way of real scientific thinking and discovery." These impediments to both religious and scientific advancement should serve as warnings against hasty conclusions and narrowness.

The unnecessary conflicts between the facts of science and theological ideas only make many people less religious. In the fifteenth century an Italian by the name of Bruno was burned at the stake by the church because he declared belief in the theory of Copernicus. This same Copernician theory is now generally accepted. When the church makes such terrible blunders involving innocent martyrdom there is bound to be a loss of influence on the part of the church and confidence on the part of many people. Such untimely and uncalled for projections of the church helped to pave the way for the Reformation and the Renaissance.

In the present day, the church is duty bound to make a thorough investigation of all differences between science and religion or she will again lose out. People will refuse to accept her dictums if they plainly conflict with natural facts. And all the emphasis and pulpit poundings of the minister will be of no avail unless the truth is spoken. We are living in a "Missourian" age. The practical is referred above the theological or even the ideal. The man of God, whether he be preacher or scientist, has the opportunity today to guide people into the truth as it comes from God both through revelation, human experience and nature. We have the great scientific discoveries in chemistry, physics, biology and other sciences. Treatment of diseases, the automobile, airplane, radio, electricity and a host of others—all these should cause us to think of the great God who made all this possible. One cannot enter the chemistry laboratory without being amazed and awed at the wonderful changes taking place when two compounds are mixed. In the biological laboratory one is equally amazed in studying the beautiful and perfect organisms through the microscope; in dissecting invertebrates and vertebrates and noting the almost unbelievable precise, functional and mechanical arrangement of the organs of the body; in taking a cross section of the twig of a tree, the stem or root of the flower and note the delicate arrangement of the food and water conducting tubules. One of the most wonderful things to look upon is the cross section of a pine needle when stained. Then, too, the process of reproduction in both plant and animal life challenges the best Christian thought. The more of nature the more of God and the more of God the more of nature! Ministers and teachers should know these things if they would help guide aright the religious thinking of the young people who more and more are taking up scientific studies. And they must know these things if our young people are to be conserved! Atheistic science is being promulgated in many of our highest institutions of learning and this must be offset! Brethren, send your children to Ashland College where their thinking will be properly directed under devoted and competent teachers.

Let us not complain and bewail the day in which we live. It may be largely our own fault. As God is constantly revealing his power and wisdom to us through his natural world, let us not be afraid of it but make a thorough investigation before we reject natural law. Many of the most influential ministers of the world today are scientists and according to their statements they find no conflict but rather harmony. The church cannot prosper with a divided clergy. This is a day when we need cooperation and harmony and let us do our best to bring it about.

There can be no mistake but that a minister should have all the scientific knowledge that is possible for him to acquire. Others are acquainted with this field and if he would be a leader of thought, of God and his world, he must know something about it himself. Science when handled by ungodly men or atheists is a dangerous field. How much then we need men of God to understand these scientific truths and who are able to interpret them. This is a ringing challenge. We hope the day will soon be here when the minister and the scientist can work harmoniously together on the great problems of nature and life; when the lion and the lamb shall lie down together and both shall feed on the truth as it comes from God and no one shall be afraid to accept it as such.

A Historical Statement on the Growth of Prohibition

By Boyd P. Doty, General Counsel of the World League Against Alcoholism

"The adoption of prohibition nationally was the inevitable result of nearly one hundred years of discussing, tempering and experimenting with the liquor traffic and trying out every method proposed either by its friends or foes. Prohibition—local, state and national—came finally as the only alternative.

"The following chronological outline shows just how fast, how slow and how long—prohibition has been developing as the ideal and purpose of the Nation in best meeting the evils of intoxicating liquor.

"1826—January—Lyman Beecher declared that the 'National remedy for intemperance' was 'the banishment of ardent spirits from the list of lawful articles of commerce, etc.'

"1826—February 13—American Temperance Society organized at Boston, followed by many other organizations springing up in widely separated parts of the country.

"1883—First National Temperance Convention—Philadelphia.

"1834—Congress prohibits introduction of sale of spirituous liquor and wine in the Indian country.

"1836—Second National Temperance Convention—Saratoga, New York.

"1838—Tennessee repeals license laws and prohibits retail of liquors.

"1846—Maine adopted first state-wide prohibition law.

"1846-1860—Various states adopted local option and fourteen states adopted prohibition laws.

"1852—Massachusetts adopted prohibition.

"1855—Eight states adopted prohibition—Delaware, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, New Hampshire, Wisconsin and New York.

"1860-1870—Prohibition wave receded, leaving only few dry states.

"1873—Woman's Crusade, starting Hillsboro, Ohio, spread to many states.

"1874—Woman's Christian Temperance Union launched.

"1876—December 27—First prohibition amendment to federal constitution presented by Congressman Blair, New Hampshire.

"1882-1902—Crusade for and adoption of state and federal laws requiring scientific temperance instruction in public schools.

"1885—Second prohibitory amendment resolution presented by Senator Blair of New Hampshire and Plumb of Kansas.

"1886—Congress enacted law requiring that instruction concerning the effects of alcoholic liquors shall be given in all schools and academies under federal control.

"1888—Ohio adopted township local option.

"1890—Secretary of War declared that no ardent spirits or wine should be sold in the canteens.

"1890—Congress passed 'Wilson Law' subjecting all intoxicating liquors to laws of state into which shipped.

"1891—Congress prohibited sale of liquor within one mile of Soldiers' Home in Washington City.

"1893—Local option revived and given greater impetus by launching of non-partisan, inter-denominational Anti-Saloon League movement at Oberlin, Ohio.

"1893—Only six dry states in the Union. Four of these later repealed their prohibition laws, leaving Kansas and Maine as the only state outposts of prohibition.

"1893-1913—Twenty long, hard fighting years—the two dry states increased to nine and in thirty other states 25% to 90% of population were under prohibition.

"1899—John D. Long, Secretary of Navy, abolished traffic in beer and other alcoholic liquors on board ships and at Naval Stations.

"1901—Anti-canteen laws passed by Congress—abolished sale of beer, wine or any intoxicating liquors in any Post exchange, canteen or army transport or upon any premises used for military purposes.

"1902—Congress prohibited Americans from selling any intoxicants to natives of Pacific Islands.

"1903—Recreation buildings and saloon substitutes provided for army posts.

"1903—Sale of liquors in immigrant stations prohibited.

"1903—Saloon in basement of National Capitol Building abolished.

"1904—Beer halls in state and territorial soldiers' homes prohibited.

1906—Liquor Saloons in National Soldiers' Home prohibited.

"1906—Congress strengthened Internal revenue measure calculated to assist state prosecutions of law-breakers.

"1906—Oklahoma statehood bill passed by Congress prohibited liquor traffic in Indian territory for 21 years.

"1906—Liquor traffic among Indians suppressed.

"1907—Prohibition zones established around government institutions.

"1908—Liquor barred from United States Mails.

"1909—Congress passed C. O. D. liquor shipment measure to protect dry territory.

"1909—Anti-liquor code for Alaska.

"1912—People elected one-third of the U. S. Senate which submitted the 18th Amendment to the States. (Note: one-third elected 1914 and one-third in 1916, i. e. 5 months to four years before America declared war against Central powers).

"1913—Webb-Kenyon interstate liquor shipment law passed and repassed over presidential veto.

"1913—Number of saloons in District of Columbia reduced.

"1913—Memorable National Anti-Saloon League Convention attended by 5,000 delegates at which drive for National Prohibition was begun.

"1913—Nine whole states were dry. Total population in dry territory in all states—46 million people—or more than half the population. By 1919 one-half the people living in licensed territory were living in four states, one-quarter of all people in licensed territory were residents of six cities, more than half of all the saloons in the United States were located in 14 cities; 71% of the area of the United States was under prohibition laws.

"1914—Committee of 1,000 men authorized by above 1913 Convention and a Committee of 1,000 women organized by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union marched down the streets of Washington City to the Capitol Building and delivered to Congress, a memorial for National Constitutional Prohibition. From that day, to the 16th of January, 1919, when the 36th state ratified the 18th Amendment it was at least never the intention of the prohibition forces to give the liquorites a moment of peace. Every election—municipal, county, state, congressional and national—was a call to conflict over the existence of the liquor traffic.

"1914—One-third of U. S. Senate elected. See note under 1912.

"1914—Hobson resolution to submit prohibition amendment to federal constitution received majority but not 2-3 vote in House of Representatives.

"1915—Joint Resolution No. 55 introduced in Congress calling for submission of prohibitory amendment to federal constitution.

"1916—Senate Judiciary Committee reported favorably 13 to 3 this Senate Joint Resolution No. 55.

"1917—Congress enacted prohibition enforcement code for District of Columbia.

"1917—Federal law prohibiting liquor advertising in mails and bone-dry law prohibiting shipment of liquor into dry states.

"1917—Food control bill passed by U. S. House of Representatives forbidding use during war of all food materials for production of alcoholic beverages. Bitterly opposed by liquor interests. Modified at the request of the President. Food control made optional with the President. In this form bill passed.

"1917—Anti-liquor regulations for army and army camps and posts.

"1917—Distillation of liquor and importation of distilled liquor prohibited.

1917—Enforcement code for Alaska and prohibition for Porto Rico.

"1917—August 1st—Senate as elected in 1912. 1914. 1916 voted—65 to 20 for Eighteenth Amendment resolution.

"1917—December 17th—House of Representatives, elected 5 months before war was declared, voted for same—262 to 128.

"1918—January 8—Mississippi, first state to ratify the Eighteenth Amendment.

"1918—April 2—Massachusetts, by the vote of its legislature elected in November, 1917, became the 11th state and the first great industrial state to ratify the 18th Amendment by Senate vote—27 to 12,—House vote—145 to 91. Fifteen states ratified that year.

"1918—Prohibition for Hawaii.

"1918—Prohibition zones established around coal mines and war industries.

"1918—War-time prohibition. Same became effective July 1, 1919.

"1919—January 16—Nebraska became the 36th ratifying state. By this time the nine dry states had increased to thirty.

"1919—October—Volstead law enacted to enforce Eighteenth Amendment. Original vote in House, 287 to 100. Vetoed by the President. Passed over veto by 176 to 55 in the House and 65 to 20 in Senate.

"1920—January 16—Eighteenth Amendment became operative.

"1921—November 23—Supplemental prohibition act passed.

"Only fourteen states ratified before Armistice; thirty-two states ratified after Armistice; Florida, November 27th, 1918; twenty-nine states in January and one in February, 1919; with New Jersey as the forty-sixth ratifying state in 1922.

"Contrary to all precedent, a limitation of 7 years was put upon the time within which the 18th Amendment might be ratified. Time actually required for first 36 states, 1 year and 28 days. If the wets had been able to control either House in only 13 state legislatures out of the 48, they could have prevented the ratification of the 18th Amendment. They were unable to muster even this small number. As a matter of fact, only 3 of the 96 branches of state legislatures have voted against the Amendment. The total state Senate and House vote for the 18th Amendment was 5079, total Senate and House vote against 1265, a ratio of more than four-to-one.

"The 18th Amendment was the first to be submitted by a Congress in which the Senate was elected by the direct vote of the people."

The Oath and Divorce

By Samuel Kiehl

Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths; but I (Jesus) say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne; nor by the earth; for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great king. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because they canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil (Mat. 5:33-37). James 5:12 says, But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath; but let your yea be yea; and your nay, be nay, lest ye fall into condemnation. Dear reader, Jesus says, Swear not at all. James says, Above all things, my brethren, swear not. What do you say?

It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement; but I (Jesus) say unto you, That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery (Matt. 5:31, 32). Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery (Mark 10:11, 12). According to reports in the daily papers thousands of divorced persons are (wilful) transgressors by discarding these sayings of Jesus.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Jesus Christ, Source of Life

By E. Y. Mullins

Jesus said: "I am come that they might have life and have it more abundantly," to that I wish to call your attention. Jesus is the source of all life, vegetable, animal, human. He is the source of life in the intellect, life in the conscience, life in the spiritual nature. "In him was the life, and the life was the light of men." Jesus himself tells us what eternal life is: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Eternal life is to know God according to this saying. The scientific men tell us that life is correspondence between organ and environment. The eye is the organ, the light is the environment, and if there is correspondence there is the life of sight. The ear is the organ, and sound is the environment, and if there is correspondence, there is the life we know as hearing. The lungs are the organ and the atmosphere is the environment, and if there is correspondence there is life. If the organ fail, if the environment fail, if the correspondence fail, life fails. To have eternal life, says the scientific man, is to have an organism that will not die, an environment that will not fail, and a correspondence that will not be broken. The soul is the organism in spiritual things, God is the environment, and Jesus Christ establishes the correspondence, and all of them abide. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent,"—a deathless soul, an unfailing God, a divine Mediator.

"I am come that ye might have life," says Jesus, "and that ye might have it more abundantly." He gave his life that we might have life. Men say, he died the death of a martyr, and he did. But men say he died the death of a hero in a great cause, and he did, but far more. There was something unique, something mystic, something extraordinary in the death of Jesus, when he gave his life that we might have life. Does it not appear in those words which I read, "No man hath power to take my life from me. I have power to lay it down,"—and, listen to the majestic word, "I have power to take it again." There was something unique in the death of Jesus. It appears in those words in the garden, when he took up the cup and looked into its depth and anticipated the bitterness, and said, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." And a second time he took the cup and prayed that prayer, and a third time, and put it down, and then he said, "Not my will but thine be done." And on the Cross you remember the word, "O God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Martyrs have died more victoriously than that, if his were martyrdom. They have gone singing to the stake, over and over again.

That was the glory of early Christianity. It was more than that. Somehow Jesus grappled with sin and righteousness. Somehow his death took him into the very constitution of the spiritual universe. Somehow he opened the fountain of life to humanity. "I am come that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly."

I wish that we may note together briefly some of the ways in which the life that was in Christ is manifested in his people and through his people, and the first point I make is that the manifestation of this life is seen in the vital union between Christ and his church. The favorite figure of the apostle Paul is the head and members—the human body. He never wearied of referring to Christ as the head and Christians as the members, and he identified the members with the head. He identified the suffering of the believer with the suffering of the Savior, the power and grace and wisdom of the Savior with the need and struggle of the believer, and sometimes he grasped it with such clearness and force and intensity that he abandons himself to this very life in Christ. "The love of Christ constraineth me." What does he mean? Does he mean to say, "My love for Christ constraineth me"? Yes, perhaps, but more than that. Does he mean, "Christ's love for me constraineth me"? Perhaps he does, but more than that. I think he is thinking about that union between the members and the head, by virtue of which the blood flows through both, the life that is in the head is the life that is in the members. He puts it in various ways, you remember, "I have been crucified with Christ." It is a dying of the members of the head, and when he says, "The love of Christ constraineth me," he is not talking merely of his love for Christ or Christ's love for him. Both are implied, but he is speaking of that great tide of life embodied in Christ, that immense ocean of life flowing out of God and through his Son. The apostle is saying the same infinite love, the same divine impulse that thrills in me and gives me the same constraining love which made his appeal irresistible, which led him to lay his life down for the healing of man, which impelled him to promise forgiveness of sins to all who would believe on him,—that, says the apostle, is now working in me, and I too am constrained by the infinite love. That is the vital union between the believer and the Savior, who came that we might have life abundantly.

Again this life manifests itself in growth and development among Christians. Many Christians suffer from arrested development. Whatever is true in nature, certainly it is true in the realm of grace that there is a great deal of arrested development. The apostle Paul never ceased to grow. In his old age, as he looked out upon death, he says with a deathless peace in the words, "I count all things but loss, that I may know Christ." "That I may know Christ.—I, Paul, who have already written the Epistle to the Romans and to the Galatians and to the Philippians.—I count all things but loss, that I may know Christ." Do you not know him? "No," says Paul. You have already written Ephesians, that matchless Epistle, and you have already written that great Epistle to the Colossians, in which the headship of Christ is set forth. Do you not know Christ? You, who have done all this? "No," says the apostle Paul. "There are depths I have not yet explored, and heights I have not yet seen. Even today, waiting for death, I count all things else to be naught that I may know him."

It is the eternal freshness of Jesus, that we never do overtake him. It is the matchless mark of Jesus, that we never do master him. When we have mastered something we turn away from it. There is a sort of reversion that comes. You work at a problem in mathematics until you find a solution. You read a book, fascinating it may be, but when you have mastered it you put it on the shelf. You master the problem in mechanics, and when you have mastered it your interest ceases. It is said that when Edison had worked for years in perfecting the electric light, and the problem was solved, there was a revulsion for the whole problem, and we are told that Mr. Edison would walk around the square to avoid passing one of the things. Somehow, that is human nature. Men turn away from that which they have mastered. But Jesus fascinates the gaze of men today as he has never done in all the past. More books are written about him, and there is more anxious and agonizing effort to understand him socially and intellectually and religiously than is all history.

The apostle says in that same connection, "I count not myself to have attained, or am already made perfect, but I press on, if so be that I may lay hold on that for which I also was laid hold on by Christ Jesus." "I am still imperfect," and then he adds a striking word, "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded." According to Paul, Christian perfection is a sense of imperfection. Says the apostle, the sign of Christian maturity, the sign of Christian growth and perfection is to know that you have not attained, and that you have in you the principle of everlasting growth, for I think eternity will be the opportunity God has given to his children to grow.

Again, the life of Christ shows itself in that it develops the hidden sources in our lives. The depths of our nature are brought to light. The resources that are in us are made plain by what he does. This natural life he gives to us, but he says, "I have come so that a larger life may be yours."

There are those who make of life what the bee makes of the flower, who comes to it for what it can give him. If I give the flower to the child, he will play with it. There are those who make of life a plaything. If I give it to a botanist, he will analyze it. If I give it to a poet, he uses it as the springboard of his imagination, and regales me with poetry, as Shakespeare has done so often. Yes, a poet would use it thus. A mature saint of God would say of the flower, "it is God's gift of love to gladden my heart, and I can send it to some one and gladden another life." Life may be taken on any level. Jesus wants to take it on the highest level, and the deepest and the finest that is in it.

The story is told of a man who employed a painter to paint the portrait of his wife. He wanted him to catch a certain expression on her face that he particularly loved. But he couldn't exactly describe it, and could not bring the expression to her face. The painter was in a dilemma. He adopted the method of calling her attention to various beautiful things, and then submitting sketches of the expression which came. In the first interview she warmed to his talk, and the painter submitted his sketch, but her husband said, "No, that isn't it." At the next sitting he spoke of the ocean and the mountains, and all the beauties and wonders of nature, and she warmed to it, and he made his sketch, but the husband said, "No," that isn't it." The third sitting he spoke of poetry and drama and history and literature, and all that is beautiful and fine, and her face glowed, and he painted the picture, but her husband said, "No, you haven't got it yet." And the next sitting, without intending to do so, he fell into the subject of religion, and mentioned the name of Jesus Christ. Her face lit up and warmed at the word and the thought, and as she thought of Jesus and his religion and his love the artist sketched her face and brought it to her husband. He said, "That is it. How did you get that expression?" That is what Jesus Christ does. The richness that is in us he calls forth if we let him, as we wait before him, and put our lives in his hands.

I shall never forget a young girl in college some years ago who didn't respond to any appeal of schoolmate or teacher. An evangelistic meeting was being conducted. One night she came and talked with me. I asked her if she was interested in religion. I could get no response, but by and by she said, "I am sick and tired of the efforts all of you are putting forth to make a Christian of me. I don't want to be a Christian. I don't want God or the church. I want to live my own life in my own way. I want to realize myself, and I am going to be free." I said, "My dear girl, you have announced a great truth. You have preached half the Gospel. God has made you free, and he will not invade the circle of your personality against your will. It is only as you respond to him that he can enter in," and I quoted this text, "I am come that they might have life, and have it more abundantly." "You have physical life and beauty and magnetism and leadership and brilliance and the love of your schoolmates, but you haven't the spiritual life that Jesus brings, and what is more, you may exclude Jesus from your life, but if you do you will not know all that is hidden in your nature, the beauties, the impulses, and founts of power," and I left her. That night in the meeting, the last of the series, when I gave you the invitation, this girl came down the aisle in tears and gave me her hand and said,

"Thank God for the message of last night. I have put my life in the hands of Christ, and henceforth I shall be his servant."

My friends, we never come to ourselves without him. He came to discover us to ourselves, to show us what we are, and to enable us to become all that we can become. "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly."

One other thought. The light that is in Christ manifests itself in giving power to his people to transform other lives. Some one has said, "There are two marvelous things about Christ. One is his power to make bad men good, and the other to transform these bad men into agents of redemption," and he has done so throughout the ages. He can make a bad man into a saint. He has done it thousands of times. They say that charcoal and diamonds are the same, only to make a diamond it takes thousands of years and the marvelous transforming power of nature. At any rate, Jesus does that. He touched Paul the persecutor and made of him Paul the apostle. He touched the charcoal and made the diamond. He touched Augustine, and made one of the greatest of the theologians of the ages. He laid his hand on Hadley of Water Street, the drunken bum. Jesus laid his hand on Hadley, and the charcoal became a diamond, and Hadley became a flaming evangelist of the redemption that Christ brought. Yes, he wants to transform you and me into agents of redemption. He wants to put into our hands the power that was lost in former times.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Christian Growth

Mrs. C. E. Klingaman

OUR SCRIPTURE

They go from strength to strength, every one of them in Zion appeareth before God (Psalm 84:7).

But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day (Proverbs 4:18).

But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ (II Peter 3:18).

And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment (Phil. 1:9).

I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus (Phil. 3:14).

That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, increasing in the knowledge of God (Col. 1:10).

Strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power unto all patience and long suffering with joyfulness (Col. 1:11).

As newborn babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby (I Peter 2:2).

And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: to the end he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God (I Thess. 3:12-13).

We are bound to thank God always for you, Brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of everyone of you all toward each other aboundeth (II Thess. 1:3).

OUR MEDITATION

Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ was not an idle Christian. From his early childhood he was always seeking the way to increase his Christian life; always ready and willing to do the commands of his Father.

We, like him, must always be alert to press onward to the high calling of him who laid down the rule we were to follow. Christian growth, to be real, must be progressive. No parent would be satisfied with the growth of his child if day after day and year after year it remained the same helpless babe it was in the first months of its life. And no farmer would feel comfortable in the knowledge that his grain would stop short in its growth when the blade appeared, and would never produce the ear, or the full corn in the ear. Therefore let us go from strength to strength and let no eventide come to our Christian growth, but may we be continually climbing upward. If we stop to linger we will fall by the wayside. The promise is: "Seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you."

Perhaps then, the first aim in Christian growth is service. No matter how poor, how rich, or how proud we may be, we have all been put in God's garden to grow. Put yourselves out in the sunshine of his presence and let the dew of heaven come down upon you, and see what the result will be. Leaves and flowers and fruit must surely come in their season. Abide in the Vine. The divine Husbandman, who has the care of the Vine, will care also for you, who are his branches. He will prune, and purge and water and care for you so that you will grow and bring forth fruit. Only see to it that you impose no hindrance to the shining of the Sun of Righteousness, or the falling of the dew from Heaven.

There is great danger that we will put off our Christian duties until tomorrow, when we should have done them today. We must work while it is day for the night cometh when no man can work. Perhaps neglecting to pray daily is one of our greatest delinquencies. Daily prayer is the greatest factor in aiding Christian growth. By daily prayer "we can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us." We also have the word, "that in everything ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; being filled with the fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ." Our Christian growth will need no effort to grow if we trust in him and ask him daily for guidance and strength to grow in grace (not unto grace). Ask in his name and it will be given unto you. Search the Scriptures for therein you find Christian grace and life. Paul grew in Christian grace by much praying and trusting in him.

Again, we can grow in the Christian life by the help of our friends whose lives are filled with overflowing grace. We all have someone who has helped us when we have been discouraged and sad. Our earthly friends can show their love for us and help us to hold on to that which is good and true. With his help and theirs we can bask in the sunshine of heavenly love. We can drink of the Water of Life. We can look and our soul shall live and grow.

We must not expect to grow in grace by dependence on self or self effort, but we must learn to put our growing as well as everything else, into the hands of the Lord and leave it with him. We then will grow as the lilies of the field—without wearying care and without anxiety. We will grow by the power of an inward life principle; grow because we cannot help but grow; grow because we live; grow because our Lord has planted us in his garden to grow for him.

In order to "grow in grace" therefore, the soul must be planted in the very heart of Divine Love, be enveloped by it, and steeped in it. There must be a "letting go" of all restraint so that the fulness of Divine joy may be ours. The soul must grow in the apprehension of infinite love daily; must learn to intrust everything to his care, and must have no shadow of doubt regarding his ability to order all things well.

Finally, be careful for nothing; but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God that passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

OUR PRAYER

Help us, dear Lord, to be kind and good in every deed as we should. Help us to grow a little wiser day by day, to school our minds and bodies to obey. Fill our hearts with thy love and send us grace from above. Help us, dear Lord, to be a friend indeed to those who are really in need. Help us to shut the door on hate and foolish pride; but open then, to love, the windows wide. Help us, dear Lord, to grow in Christian grace that we will never fail to give thee, thy place. Help us to be worthy of all we ask, and may we be found faithful to the last, is our earnest prayer. Amen.

Waterloo, Iowa.

SEEING JESUS

There is something about the very name of Jesus that calls to the heart of the sufferer. It is like sweet balm to his bruises and soothing oil to his wounds. Jesus! To know him brings luster to the eye and hope to the breast. Oh, why do men insist on looking at him through the dusts and mists of cobwebs of twenty long centuries, when his magnificent personality is among us as fresh and vigorous as that morning when he stood by the Sea of Galilee and said: "Children, have ye any meat?"—Selected.

The End of the Law

"In no other religion was it made so clear that the end of the law is to make men righteous. Because, if there be one thing which history has taught more clearly than another, it is that a nation cannot lose its religion without losing also its virtue and its integrity; and the fate of nation after nation, in epoch after epoch, has shown that ages of mental disbelief are ages also of moral iniquity."—Farrar.

"Recall the most terrific storm that you ever experienced either on sea or on land. Then think of that storm as choosing a high and rugged mountain peak as its center, revolving with its awful power and blinding fury around that mountain peak as the spokes of a wheel revolves around its hub. It is hard for us who are not used to the hot fury of an eastern thunderstorm to get any adequate idea of the overwhelming and profoundly terrible power that broke loose over Sinai, when God spoke to Moses and his people through the mighty forces of nature."

Reasons for the First Commandment

The reasons for the First Commandment are (1) that there really is no other true God, (2) The accepting him is absolutely essential to a covenant agreement with him, (3) We become like the God we love. To love him is the foundation of true religion and morality.

You shall not make anything your god except the true God. Can any man do this? Certainly. What is my god? That of which I think most and which I love most is my god. If I am covetous, money is my god. If I am a pleasure-seeker, pleasure is my god. If I am supremely selfish, I am my own god. And as God's laws in nature are never broken with impunity, so not until a lie is as good as the truth can any man put a false god in the place of the living God without damaging himself.

The Second Commandment

The Second Commandment does not forbid pictures and statues, unless used as representations of God. Because all images misrepresent God. They are not like God, nor can they be. They are in no wise "like pictures of a friend." "Anything coming between man's spirit and God the Spirit is a hindrance to worship, and not a help to it.

The Third Commandment

"You shall not use God's name irreverently. Do men do this? Yes, continually. Every oath is a breaking of this law. Every curse smashes this law into a thousand pieces. Every legal oath falsely taken is condemned by this law of God. In New York City this law is broken millions of times every day. Boys learn to think that it is manly to break this law, and young men try to invent new forms of swearing. If every time this law were broken in New York City a peal of thunder were heard, it would probably never cease thundering. But there is a thunder of God unheard, and that keeps rolling on against blasphemers, and will one day roll over their heads in awful billows of pain and woe."

The Fourth Commandment

The Fourth Commandment recalls the industrial life of the ancient world. Kings and princes are luxuriating in palaces for whose splendor we know no name more dazzling and brilliant than "Oriental." All other human beings are spurned as of lower caste. Of these the lowest is that of the laborer. Toil is unremunerated by wages and has no rights that are respected. War, not work, is deemed the legitimate and honored occupations of men. To labor is a dishonor and a curse.

Possibly we talk too much about what not to do on the Sabbath. Here is the great thing to do: worship; keep the day sacred for religious duties and inspiration, the culture of the soul of yourself and of others. The wall of this law is to keep out all those things which would destroy the power of this law of love. There is no existing institution which has so much to do with the highest interests of man, his morals, his character, his civilization, his comfort, his freedom, his onward march to the millennium, as has the Sabbath, rightly kept. He can never be a good stalwart Christian who pays no heed to the Sabbath. We need time for thought, for worship, and for meditation on things that lay hold on eternal life, and that the Sabbath gives us. The fact is that anything that hinders the growth of the soul should be avoided on that day, and we should give our spiritual natures all the chance that they can have to grow. Now if any one wants any more rules to apply to Sabbath keeping, if they go to God in prayer, asking for guidance, he will give it to them. Only let us be careful not to copy the example that many others set us, without asking God whether he will lead us in the right direction.—Illustrated Quarterly.

"No Sabbath, no worship; no worship, no religion; no religion, no morals; no morals, then—pendemonium."—Crawford Johnson.

The Four Commandments in Brief

These Four Commandments may be entitled, as one whiter has it: 1. The Commandment of Monotheism—no other gods; 2. The Commandment of True Worship—no man-made representations of deity; 3. The Commandment of Reverent Speech—nothing irreverent even in jest; 4. The Commandment of a Sacred Day—devoted on principle to the higher part of man's nature.

Scarecrows on the Highway

Within several weeks several books have come to us portraying the world as being on the verge of ruin. One of them quotes a great scholar as saying that we are facing annihilation of the race by a new war that will soon be upon us. A number of ways of meeting the condition are suggested. But we sometimes wonder how far these people know what they are talking about. So far as we are concerned we believe the condition is tremendously exaggerated and the ground upon which make the assertion is this, God is not being counted these days as a force in opposition to these evil things that have come to us in the trail of the war. All kinds of social schemes are suggested in which the church is held up to ridicule and contempt because it does not waste all of its time in organizing societies and working out programs to save the world from catastrophe. In many of these books there is no mention of the fact of Christ or of his great blessed power, but even at the expense of being conspirt to be considered in solving the problem. The world has been many a time at its wits end and God has come down and performed miracles of power. The man who reads human history and leaves God out of it is a poor scholar and he is just as poor a scholar today as he was in the eighteenth century among the deists and the sceptics. We can say as the psalmist said, "Our hope is in the Lord" and there is no use in writing books about making a new world without taking God into consideration. We feel that a great part of this scarecrow business on the highways of life is the result of human egotism that seeks to put up scarecrows and then try their skill in making them effective to keep away evil. It is a little dangerous now for a man who wants to get the reputation for scholarship to put too much emphasis upon the supernatural Christ and his almighty

Christian Endeavor Is Denominationally Worth While

By Rev. Frank Linn Freet,

Executive Secretary of the Ohio Christian Endeavor Union

Unquestioned proof that Christian Endeavor is definitely faithful to its emphasis upon denominational loyalty, and that it proves its worth by even enlisting and developing leadership for denominational enterprises, was recently proved in one of Ohio's large cities.

In a denominational institute appealing to young people from all the church, whether interested solely in young people's classes, or in Christian Endeavor societies, missionary societies, or special clubs, 177 registered, and a careful survey demonstrated that all but 29 of this 177 came from churches where the Christian Endeavor society is emphasized as an important agency of training. Practically every one of the 148 referred in their registration to being Christian Endeavorers. They enrolled not alone in methods' courses of Christian Endeavor, but in classes for Sunday school leadership, missionary interest, and church history and doctrine, showing that real Christian Endeavorers are found serving the church and her organizations outside of their own society.

In this same territory annual statistical reports from seventy-six young people's organizations proved that societies not carrying the name of Christian Endeavor, but some other indefinite name, are the ones lacking in missionary activity, and do very little work outside their own church, according to their own reports. Again it is demonstrated that a true Christian Endeavorer practises unselfishness, showing the spirit of Christ outside his own narrow circle.

Intenders, Endeavorers, Performers

We are reminded by an article in "The London Christian Endeavor Times" that the great British editor and author, Mr. William T. Stead, who went down in the icy waters off the coast of Newfoundland, in the wreck of the Titanic, devoted one of his famous character-sketches to the founder of the Society of Christian Endeavor, in its early days.

In the course of the article he used one striking phrase. He said that the founder of the first Christian Endeavor society wanted the young disciples who first joined it to be "lifted from being intenders, to becoming performers, by being endeavorers," and said that they would "receive impressions and form religious habits during the first few weeks of conversion which would never be lost. The first three months would set their stamp of sustained devotion to Christ, or sluggish indifference to his claims, on their whole subsequent lives."

This was written more than thirty-five years ago, but it is just as true as ever it was. The great aim of Christian Endeavor still is to change intenders into performers through becoming endeavorers.

We are all intenders. There is scarcely a moral failure who walks our streets who does not intend, or has not intended, to do better. But he never became a performer, because he never strenuously endeavored.

The whole world might be divided into intenders and performers. The mere intender remains a weak nonentity. But let him rouse himself, summon his faculties, strive to advance, endeavor in good earnest, and he joins the ranks of the men who have moved the world and blessed their day and generation. He has become a performer, because he has become an endeavorer.—Pilgrim, in C. E. World.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for August 22)

Hymns Every Junior Should Know. Psalm 100:1-5

Once upon a time there lived away down in dark Africa a little boy named Jimmy. Jimmy was a little white boy. His mother and father were missionaries to the people in that country. And oh, there were so many people who needed to know how to be good and to love others and to love Jesus! Jimmy's mother and father were busy from early morning till late at night. Most of the time this little boy had to take care of himself. Early in the morning, his mother taught him his lessons and told him what he was to study for the next day. Then came the thing that he liked best of all the day, his father gave him his lesson on his violin. Jimmy had just gotten big enough to use a new violin that was bigger than his first one. When he was five years old he was given a small sized violin and ever since that time he had been practicing and playing. Father helped him with his work each morning and then he practiced during the day when he had to entertain himself.

Jimmy had gotten used to spending the day by himself but he often wished very hard for some playmates that were white like himself. On his eleventh birthday when he received his new three-quarter size violin, his parents told him that they would take him with them on some of their shorter missionary trips. When he went he took his violin along and practiced while his folks talked and he was very proud one day when they went to a town where there was a group of Christians and he played the hymns for them to sing. Jimmy liked to play hymns. Because he liked music and everything pertaining to music so well, Jimmy learned to sing hymns in the language of the tribe in which he was living. After he had learned some of the old familiar hymns like, "God Will Take Care of You", "Jesus Loves Me" and a few others, he heard his father saying that the songs or hymns of the people of Bible times are the Psalms. Then he decided that he wanted to learn some of the Psalms in the African tongue.

One day, Jimmy started out with his folks on a short trip. It was a very nice day in the cool season of their year. The sun was bright but not too hot. The journey that day was to a small village where there was to be a service. Jimmy sang a hymn and played his violin for the people to sing to. Then at the end of the service, a man came into the midst of the group. This man was a Christian who lived quite a little distance on from this village where they were having the service and in the opposite direction from home. He said that his little boy was sick and that he wanted both the mother and father missionaries to come and see if they could help him. They could not refuse him but they did not know what to do with Jimmy. They decided that they would just have to take him with them.

When they arrived at the home of the sick boy, the mother and father went in. They found the boy sick with a very contagious fever, so they told Jimmy that they would have to both work very hard to save the little boy's life and that Jimmy should stay in sight of the house but not to come in. Jimmy decided that he would like to play some on his violin, so he wandered as far away as he could go and still be seen from the house and sat down on a rock and started to play. Soon some children gathered round him. Then some older folks wandered up. Jimmy knew that these people had never heard anyone play the violin, and that they wanted to listen. Soon he decided to sing some of his hymns. He sang them to them and then he said the Bible hymns which we know as Psalms to them. The people liked these words of the hymns and Jimmy's music so well that they listened and listened till Jimmy's father came out and told them all about Jesus. Later, when they became Christians, some of them told Jimmy that they wanted to thank him for teaching them the first lessons about God in his songs and music. Then Jimmy was very, very happy and decided to try to learn many hymns and teach many more about Christianity that way.

The Modern Missionary

By Alexander M. Allan, Bogota, Colombia

The Christian missionary of today does not spend much time under a palm tree, preaching to savages with a Bible under his arm. He is more usually found at a typewriter, and does more bookkeeping than is generally supposed.

He does not often have the dreary voyages and the isolation of the pioneers of half a century ago; his furloughs are more frequent, and his living conditions much better.

Neither does he have, however, the quiet life of his predecessor; he has far more strain, more organization, and more demands on his mental force and nervous energy.

The ideal modern missionary is the human keystone of an arch, the inspirer of a group of national workers, the brain of a movement, the prayer center and counselor of a national church.

Long ago it was desirable that his furlough come as infrequently as possible—travel was so difficult;—now it is considered of the utmost importance to recruit the forces, sharpen the mind and refresh the spirit of the missionary through more frequent furloughs, so that he may be more adequately furnished for his task.

Suffering was the keynote of the early pioneers; efficiency is the watchword of the present generation.

"Take care of the Lord's money even if his servant's suffer" was the old battle cry. Today we hear it said rather: "Take care of the Lord's servants, even if it costs more."

Then a missionary gathered his audience as a personal evangelist; the day soon came when the radio will be used to preach the Gospel simultaneously to thousands of villages.

Though methods change, the spirit of Paul, the greatest of all missionaries, is still what we most covet: the grace, patience, endurance and love, coupled with the art of creating and fostering churches, in which Christ is all and in all.

The Outlook In Palestine

Last year between two and three thousand Hahutzim, as the pioneers of the Zionist movement are called, passed through Haifa. They are establishing settlements, not in the Jerusalem district, but on the plains, and many of the worst places are being transformed into a veritable Garden of Eden. There are about one hundred and ten colonies altogether under the Zionist movement.

When the great Jewish University was opened, Rev. S. B. Rohold, of the Carmel Bible School, and his wife were given front seats, despite the fact of their being Christians. This shows the extraordinary change which has taken place in the Jewish attitude towards Christianity in the past few years. Dr. Klausner, of the Jewish University has written an epoch-making "Life of Christ," and four thousand copies of the first edition in Hebrew, printed in Jerusalem, sold immediately. It was reprinted in Poland, and translations in England and America have recently appeared. Dr. Klausner's book has also opened a new era for selling the New Testament in Palestine, and thousands are now reading it. One leading Jew, who has not actually become a Christian, has been instrumental in putting a copy of the New Testament in every room at the Jewish hotels. When Canon Dauby, a great scholar who translated Klausner's book into English, lectured in St. George's Cathedral, Jerusalem, two-thirds of the audience were intellectual Jews.

The suspicion on the part of the Arabs towards the Jews is apparently breaking down, and the former are now even uniting in schools. Among them too is a growth of demand for the Scriptures.—Selected.

Rev. M. D. Early, Wife and Family Group

In our home mission news several weeks ago, we wrote briefly concerning Brother and Sister Early. They are now faithfully performing the duties assigned to them at Riverside, Lost Creek, Kentucky. Brother Early is our Financial Secretary and Teacher. He is also in charge of the Boys' Dormitory. Mrs. Early is Matron of the Girls' Dormitory. They have come to this work highly recommended by a number of California Brethren and others who know them. We are confident they will mean much to our work in the Kentucky mountains. Let us all pray that they may be a blessing to all with whom they come in contact.

An Urgent Need

The Light plant installed some years ago at Riverside, has about seen its best days. It was a used plant when it was installed. It has done remarkably well, but some provision must be made very soon to give them a bet-

 That no mortal its wealth can unfold
 His grace is a storehouse of riches to me ter lighting system. The old plant has been too small since new buildings have been added, and this has helped to reduce its efficiency and caused it to wear out more rapidly. We all know that good lights are almost imperative for teachers and students to do their best work. We have no reserve fund upon which we can depend for an expenditure such as this will entail. It will doubtless cost over a thousand dollars to install a lighting system that will be adequate. The matter will be thoroughly discussed when our Board meets at Winona, and plans will doubtless be made to get busy on this project at once, but where will we get the money to pay for it? THINK and PRAY over this and let us know what you can do to help in this worthy cause.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Mt. Pleasant and Jones Mills Churches

MT. PLEASANT AND JONES MILLS CHURCHES GIVE FINE SUPPORT AND PUSH
THE DIAL FORWARD FOR NEARLY $1,500.00

These two churches showed a fine spirit and met our expectations in supporting the Endowment. They have no resident pastor and are numerically only a few, but are true Brethren and deeply interested in all the interests of the church.

Mt. Pleasant

It was a real pleasure to work with this group of believers and recalled the early beginnings of the church here, as some twenty years ago I organized the church in this place and followed it with two tent meetings and was pleased to find many that accepted Christ in those days, who are earnest followers of the Lord. They have never been financially able to support a pastor for full time and for the past ten years have been faithfully served by Brother William Crofford of Johnstown, who is a business man, who like Paul of old supports himself by his own hands and takes times to preach the Word of God on Sunday. They have a fine Sunday school and some earnest active workers and leaders. The Church of the Brethren have partly completed a magnificent church here, but are now delayed for lack of funds. If the membership of the church of the Brethren could effect a union with us here and take over their building it would be a happy solution of giving a good strong work. It would be well for the Pennsylvania Mission Board to keep this in mind and keep in touch with the situation. Mt. Pleasant is a beautiful city of about 12,000, located in a scenic part of Westmoreland County and surrounded with a dense population and is a promising field. I AM A FIRM BELIEVER IN STRENGTHENING THE ADVANTAGEOUS PLACES OF WORK WHICH WE HAVE ONLY HALF DEVELOPED, BEFORE OPENING OTHER DEPENDENT FIELDS. MT. PLEASANT GAVE $706.80 TO THE ENDOWMENT.

Jones Mills

This is one of our oldest churches and is also numerically weak, but through all the many years of its existence has done her "bit" to further the cause of the Master. I wonder if these small churches are not doing just as important a work as our larger ones? I know that in proportion they are doing much more. Our church here is located in a small village, but has a thickly populated farming community in which there is no race suicide evident. They maintain a good Sunday school and are being ministered to by Brother W. S. Baker, who like Brother Crofford is another Paul, who works and earns his living during the week and preaches here on Sunday. Jones Mills is located only 12 miles from Mt. Pleasant on one of the paved highways and both places are close enough so that if arrangements could be made they could be served by a resident pastor. I found the people here interested in a greater Ashland College and one of the reasons was because some of their young people had received their education here and others are planning too.

JONES MILLS GAVE $749.10 TO THE ENDOWMENT. This makes the total of these two churches $1,455.90.

W. S. BELL.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

The school work has now been well organized, and is now moving on nicely and smoothly, except that some are working too hard because of not having enough help yet. This help is sorely needed.

The day's school work begins with chapel services at eight o'clock, and ends at three fifteen in the afternoon. Chapel is now so crowded that all cannot find seats at times. This condition we have never had before so early in the school year.

The following help is now here: Brother and Sister Early of Los Angeles, California, he acting as financial secretary, teacher in the high school, and other work; she acting as matron, and nurse, and does much other work; Mrs. Grace P. Sraek of Long Beach, California, who teaches the Bible in the day school; Miss Bessie Hooks of Kittanning, Pennsylvania, who teaches full time in the high school; Miss Carrie Stoffer of Homeworth, Ohio, who teaches grades seven and eight; Mr. Jasper Mullins, a local young man who teaches grades four to six; Miss Connie Moore of DeQueen, Arkansas, who teaches grades one to three. Mrs. Drushal is now teaching in the high school until the regular teacher arrives. She also assists in the Bible work. Mrs. Mullins is helping with the cooking.

Brother Mullins, a local young man, teaches at just the same salary that the others get, forty dollars per month and board. This shows that our local young folks are willing to make the sacrifice in salary that Riverside may do its work. We think this shows a fine spirit of sacrifice and devotion to the cause.

It is planned that all the workers possible arrange to be present for the morning service at the Institute and then all who can go out in the afternoon for services. Brother Early now goes to Clayhole in the afternoon. Brother Mullins holds forth at Leatherwood, and the writer at Haddix. These places are from three to six miles away. Also in the afternoon there are two Christian Endeavor meetings at the Institute going, a Junior and Senior meeting. Thus are all as busy as possible on the Lord's day disseminating the Gospel.

One of our graduates last spring, a splendid and very capable young fellow, came in to get his credits for entrance into College. He has found that a Christian Church College here in Kentucky offers a scholarship to certain high school graduates, and he is trying to get the scholarship. Another of our graduates, a very able fellow, recently wrote me asking if I thought it advisable for him to try to go on to college without some money ahead. Of course we are telling him that it can be done, but that it is hardly advisable to try it. We wonder why the Board of Trustees of Ashland College could not offer at least one scholarship to Riverside graduates, per year, this scholarship to be selected from Riverside's graduates each year by the faculty. It is all in the same church, and we wonder why it could not be done. President Jacobs has already given a favorable opinion for the idea. This would keep Riverside more closely in touch with the work of our College, and would be helpful in different ways it seems. Other denominations are after these and are offering inducements. Why cannot we do the same?

We had one hundred and thirty-six out to services here the 25th of July, and one hundred and fourteen the first, and this was a very rainy day. I wish you could have seen some coming through the rain.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

DEDICATION POSTPONED ..

The dedication of the First Brethren church in Fort Wayne, Indiana, has been postponed until August 22nd.

The Brethren people of Fort Wayne had made great preparations for the dedication of their new church on August 1st.

They had great anticipations and thought they were going to do great things on that day, but providence ordered it otherwise. On Sunday morning about two o'clock it began to rain and continued until 1 P. M. At the time for the morning service it literally poured until the streets were flooded and the boys and girls put on their suits and went bathing.

Many cellars were flooded and the papers said that this was the heaviest rain in the history of Fort Wayne. So we concluded that "Discretion was the better part of valor" and we decided to postpone this important event until Sunday before our General Conference. This will give our people and the ministers especially a splendid opportunity to stop over for the dedication, on their way to Conference, and we certainly hope that you will do so—brethren.

The Editor himself has an outstanding invitation to stop over and give us added inspiration on this day.

Coming back to this rainy day, I wish to say that we were disappointed but we are not discouraged. The new church was completed, everything was spick and span; the decorations were beautiful and our anticipations were sanguine and our joy knew no bounds.

But "O! what a change!" When the time came for service the streets had turned into rivers and the mud was everywhere in abundance, and the countenances of the people told the whole story, and still the rain continued to fall.

But Dr. Beachler was equal for the occasion and changed his theme for the service and preached just as though nothing out of the ordinary had happened. A number of the people from Muncie were there and from the New Paris church and many other churches and we had a splendid service.

At 2:30 P. M. Dr. Beachler gave us another of his fine sermons and by this time the house was well filled and in the evening Brother Whetstone from Nappanee preached for us and we had a fine audience and also a fine sermon and the services for the day were over.

We were sorry that it happened just the way it did. But we needed the rain, for it had not rained for three weeks. Well then it did rain just when we did not want any rain.

Well, right in this, the first service, we praised the Lord for the rain—for after all, how much good this rain did and how little harm. "And we know that all things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." Well! I am so glad we know it. So we do not need to guess at it, nor to worry about it. So we are looking for greater and better things because of the rain.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PITTSBURGH

A few lines again from the Pittsburgh Church, and we will endeavor to relate the happenings of interest since our last report.

On Sunday evening, June 6th, our choir rendered a musicale par excellence—a festival of old-time songs. The entire hour was turned over to the choir for the rendition of their musicale. The choir numbered about 15 voices. An excellent crowd was in attendance—an appreciative and attentive audience.

On June 10th the Women's Missionary Society again put forth an effort to enhance their treasury for the purchase of a new carpet, in the form of a Strawberry Festival. While perhaps the attendance at this affair was not possibly what it might have been, it did net a neat little sum to be added to their treasury for their very noble purpose.

On Sunday morning, June 13th, Children's Day was observed with an appropriate program. The main auditorium of the church was filled to capacity—literally "packed." The program was very good; the children acquitted themselves in a most creditable manner; and to the Sunday school's Committee we give all the thanks for their painstaking and untiring efforts expended in training the children in such an excellent manner.

Rev. and Mrs. Lynn left on Sunday, July 4th, for their Annual Vacation, to sojourn for a brief time with their loved ones in Virginia's famed Shenandoah Valley, so for three Sundays we were without the services of our pastor. Our own good Brother Gans filled the pulpit for two Sundays; on Sunday, July 11th, Brother Melvin A. Stuckey, who needs no introduction throughout the brotherhood as Field Secretary of the National Sunday School Association, was with us in the interest of Sunday school work, and gave a very excellent talk. Unfortunately, the Sunday that Brother Stuckey was with us was one on which the weather was rainy and disagreeable, with the result that our Sunday school that Sunday was at its worst, the attendance being only 75, and this is a source of the deepest regret to the officers of the school. The very disagreeable weather, together with the vacation period at its height, combined to force a combination of unfortunate circumstances which the officers very much deplore. However, we are sure that Brother Stuckey fully grasped the situation, and we are confident that the next time he visits our school he will find a very much alive school.

The Quarterly Church Business Meeting was held on Wednesday evening, July 14th, and, while but a few of the members were in attendance, much business of importance was transacted, at a time of the year when the transaction of church business usually ebbs. Necessary action was had toward holding our annual revival this fall, which this year will be under the direction of Rev. W. C. Benshoff, pastor of the Berlin, Pennsylvania, church.

The church has received its annual coat of paint and has been entirely redecorated and freshened up. Last week the new carpet was laid, so, after the necessity of holding the Sunday school session and church services in the basement on the last Sunday of July, we returned last Sunday, the first day of August, to find, not only a bright, newly-painted auditorium, and a fine new carpet on the floor, but also we had our pastor back with us again.

While the vacation season is still on, a large share of our membership have enjoyed their vacations and are now back, so that we hope the attendance at both the church and Sunday school sessions will begin to increase.

It will soon be National Conference time again, and we are hoping that a number of the Brethren of Pittsburgh will avail themselves of this opportunity for spiritual refreshment, as well as to avail themselves of an opportunity for physical refreshment by spending a week in the quietude of dear old Winona Lake.

MARY A. McMASTER.

Like Unto Christ

"When Jesus came into the coast of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man am? They said unto him, Some say thou art John the Baptist; some, Elijah; and others, Jeremiah." No more significant statement can be written of any one than that which is recorded of these three characters. There was something about the way they lived and preached that was similar to the impressions Jesus made on those who lived with him and heard him preach.

In reviewing the life of Jeremiah, we are brought face to face with a practical and spiritually-minded prophet. In the days when all outward things were rushing to destruction and the enemies of God's people were threatening the overthrow of Jerusalem, he puts emphasis on inward, personal and spiritual religion in strong contrast to the outward and formal side of religion which was practiced by his fellow countrymen. On one occasion he brought the Rechabites into the temple and set wine before them. They refused it because of their vows which they declared they would not break under any circumstances. Then Jeremiah turning to the temple worshipers urged them to be as loyal to their vows and promises as were these rustic horsemen of the desert.

Jeremiah was the prophet of God to the human heart. He was like unto Jesus in that he had caught a spark of the divine and had woven it into his own life. Here is a fine example for those of us who are the messengers of God. The salvation of our hearers must begin with our salvation, and we cannot attain unto salvation unless we first know something about it. This knowledge comes in one way only—a complete surrender to God. A heart-searching preacher first searches his own heart, "If our heart condemn us not we have boldness toward God" (1 John 3:20). Jeremiah was like unto Christ in his oneness with God and in the boldness of his preaching.—Selected sidered an ignoramus we are willing to say that even now in this year 1926 the "Lord God omnipotent reigneth," and that when the tide of overwhelming evil is turned and swept back to hell where it belongs it will be at the hand of him who made the world in righteousness and who has preserved it by his providence.—The Methodist Protestant.

her along. Mary Ruth with her doll carriage walked behind Aunt Frances, and Betty Jane with her doll carriage walked behind Mary Ruth.

Aunt Frances had a hard time getting that procession safely to Nanna's house, and many boys and girls who passed them stopped to laugh. If Betty Anne had walked faster, then Mary Ruth would have walked faster. If both the children had walked faster, Lassie would have walked faster, and Aunt Frances would not have had such a hard time. Once or twice she had to bump-bump-BUMP Barbara Jane's baby carriage against that wide, wide old shepherd dog to make her move at all.

The old dog was tired when she reached Nanna's house. She didn't wait to be invited in, but went in, and all the afternoon she watched the little girls.

At dinner Lassie was impolite to the cat. She ate the cat's dinner right out of the cat's dish, and the cat had to run away fast and hide.

After dinner Aunt Nellie said, "I will take mother and the children home in the automobile. We shall all go with them." Aunt Eda and Aunt Frances were staying nights at the children's house because their father was away out West.

The old dog barked when the mother and the babies, Aunt Eda, Aunt Frances, and one of the cousins climbed into the automobile. She barked and barked and BARKED. She acted a little cross too.

"What is the matter, Lassie?" Aunt Nellie inquired. "I hope you do not think we are going to take you in the automobile."

"She is too big," Betty Anne said. "There is not room for her."

"The dog will follow the automobile," said mother.

"We'll drive slowly," Aunt Nellie promised. Then she called, "Come Lassie, come Lassie!"

Lassie wouldn't come. She sat on the piazza at Nanna's house and barked and barked and BARKED.

Mother was sorry because Lassie would not go home. She said, "Poor old doggie!"

She is thinking about something, and she will come home when she gets ready. Don't worry," Mary Ruth advised.

Nevertheless Aunt Nellie did worry. But when she reached home again the big dog came to meet the automobile. She was barking loudly and acted cross. There was no one in the automobile then but Aunt Nellie and the cousin.

It sounded as if the dog were saying, "What have you done with those little girls?" But really the dog must have been saying, "Please take me home!"

Twice Aunt Nellie tried to coax her to follow the automobile, but she wouldn't.

At last Aunt Nellie said, "Do you expect me to drive you home, Lassie; is that what you are thinking about?"

It was. Aunt Nellie opened the door and the dog slowly, slowly climbed in; she filled the space in front of the back seat with her body, and put her long head over Aunt Nellie's shoulder.

Aunt Nellie did not enjoy that drive. When it was ended and the back door was opened

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

When Lassie Went Visiting

Mary Ruth, Betty Anne, and Barbara Jane are three baby sisters who live in a beautiful white house on a lovely street in a New England city. Their next-door neighbor is a big, wide, slow-walking old shepherd dog whose name is Lassie.

The old dog loves babies and believes that it is her business to take care of Mary Ruth, Betty Anne, and Barbara Jane. When Mary Ruth was born Lassie was the first of the neighbors to notice that a baby had come to live in the white house. The first time that Mary Ruth went out for an airing in her baby-carriage, Lassie went too; walking along, soberly, like a friendly bear.

One day not long ago the mother of the three sisters wished to make a call in the afternoon, and it happened to be the afternoon when Elizabeth didn't work but always went visiting. Aunt Frances said over the telephone, "I will come for Mary Ruth, Betty Anne, and Barbara Jane and bring them home to Nanna's house. It is a beautiful day and we shall walk." Aunt Frances invited mother and the children to come to Nanna's house and stay to dinner. Mother would make her call before dinner.

Aunt Frances put Barbara Jane, who was only four months old, into the baby carriage and tucked the robes around her. Betty Anne put her doll into her doll carriage, and Mary Ruth put her doll into her doll carriage, and the happy procession started down the street.

But in a minute Mary Ruth laughed and called out, "And here comes Lassie!"

Sure enough, Lassie came walking along, walking along, soberly, like a friendly bear.

"Lassie was not invited," said Aunt Frances. "Lassie will you please go home?"

Lassie would not go home. She walked in front of the baby carriage, and she walked so slowly that Aunt Frances almost had to push Lassie climbed slowly, slowly, slowly out of the automobile and walked to the little girls' front door instead of her own. She barked and she barked and she BARKED until Aunt Frances came to the door with Barbara Jane in her arms.

"It is all right, Lassie," Aunt Frances said. "The children are here and are going to bed."

Then Lassie went home and barked at her own front door. When the door was opened she went in without saying "I thank you" or "Good-night" to Aunt Nellie.

Aunt Nellie smiled all the way home to Nanna's house, although she says she truly hopes that Lassie will never come visiting again.—Frances Margaret Fox, in The Youth's Companion.

Ashland, Ohio

ASHLAND COLLEGE will open its Forty-ninth Year, Tuesday, September 14, 1926. The following departments offer the customary courses:

ARTS AND SCIENCES, leading to the usual bachelor's degrees.

SEMINARY, recently extended on a six-year basis,—three in the Arts College and three in the Seminary. The Bachelor of Arts degree at the end of four and the Bachelor of Theology at the end of six years.

EDUCATION—Two years' course leading to elementary certification under Ohio laws. Also in other states with equivalent requirements.

Four years' course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Education. Certificates granted for state-wide teaching in High School. So in other states with exchange arrangements with Ohio.

MUSIC—Piano, full graduation courses with two teachers.

Voice, as above with three teachers.

Violin, with one teacher and an assistant.

In every relation and in all courses of instruction, the whole institution is frankly and avowedly Christian. In courses permitting religious discussion, Christian ideals are stressed.

Student life and activity are largely under the close and sympathetic supervision of two Deans, one for men and one for women.

Parents and young people are both alike asked to consider this College when contemplating further study.

For catalogue and further information, write to the president,
EDWIN ELMORE JACOBS, M. Sc., Ph. D.

ROOMS AT WINONA

A Suggestion for Tract Distribution

The writer had the privilege recently of seeing an inexpensive yet adequate plan for the distribution of tracts in churches. The material used was khaki colored denim or similar material. Pockets were sewed on in various sizes to accommodate the tracts of varying widths. Above this tract holder was a card with the legend, "Free Tracts—Take one." Any church may have something of this nature in the vestibule and attention may be frequently called to the tracts placed there. When new supply is received and placed in holder some public mention of the fact should be made. Our churches may have just as expensive tract holder as they please but this one I saw appealed to me as easily made and inexpensive and efficient.

BRETHREN TRACTS

The Plea of the Fathers—Does it Need Revision? (16 pp.) by G. W. Rensch, per dozen, 25 cents.

Baptism, (8 pp.) by Gillin, per 100, 50 cents.

Our Lord's Last Supper—A New Testament Ordinance, (16 pp.) by J. L. Kimmel, per dozen, 25 cents.

Feet Washing, A Church Ordinance, (4 pp.) by Gillin, per 100, 35 cents.

The New Testament Teaching of the Lord's Supper, (6 pp.) by Rensch, per 100, 45 cents.

Doctrinal Statements, (52 pp.) by Miller, per dozen 75 cents, single copies, 10 cents.

Some Fundamental Christian Doctrines, by J. M. Tombaugh, 25 cents postpaid.

Advantages of Being a Member of The Brethren Church, (18 pp.) by Rensch, per dozen, 25 cents.

These are well written doctrinal tracts, concise and to the point. Every Brethren church should have a liberal supply for distribution among prospective members and also among many who are already members of the church, but who have no clear idea of the peculiar doctrinal teaching of the Brethren.

The Catholic Hierarchy Versus the Mexican Government

The Catholic hierarchy has flooded the country with newspaper propaganda concerning an alleged religious persecution in Mexico. But the plain truth is that there is no religious persecution in Mexico, only a contest on to determine whether the Mexican government or the Roman church is the supreme civil authority in the land. And because of this fact we should not allow our sympathies for religious freedom to be unwittingly appealed to by this hue and cry on the part of the Catholic over-reachers. The restrictions placed upon religious teachers in Mexico are not inspired by any religious antipathy on the part of the government, nor any desire to interfere with proper religious exercises, either Catholic or Protestant, but merely to check the political activities of the Roman church.

Protestants should be careful to say nothing or do nothing to embarrass the Mexican government in its desperate effort to free itself from the overlordship of the pope of Rome. For four hundred years Roman interests and aims have dominated affairs in that land and held the people in ignorance and superstition, pilfered their wealth and kept the peons in poverty. And for a century, as the light of freedom, personal rights and individual worth has flickered in upon the consciences of these people, they have been growing more and more restless and clamorous for their liberation. And the only reason why the issue has not been definitely raised before is that the present government is the first one that has had the strength and courage to call in question the universal but preposterous political claims of the Catholic church. President Calles is a strong man who has the interests of his country at heart, and he is trying to guarantee education and opportunity to the millions of poor, down-trodden people of his land, and to guard the incalculable natural resources and the inherent political rights of Mexico against the plundering propensities of conscienceless foreign wealth and the political ambitions of an unprincipled religious hierarchy.

The purely religious work of the Catholic church, or any other church, is not being interfered with, nor hampered. This is evidenced by the fact that Protestant mission boards are making no complaint or demonstrations over the religious restrictions, which are being enforced impartially with Protestant and Catholic work alike." American Protestant societies are conforming to Mexico's regulations," said Dr. Ernest F. Hall, publicity secretary of the Presbyterian foreign board. "Mission work is going on as usual, so far as can be learned.

According to the law, no foreign clergyman can conduct services in Mexico. That has been our policy for several years." Speaking for the Congregational foreign board, Rev. Herbert E. Rugg claimed that officials of his church felt there was no reason to believe that the work of their missions in Mexico would be restricted. Bishop George A. Miller said recently in the Western Christian Advocate, "That no religious persecution is in progress in Mexico is proven by the fact that this present Latin situation applies to Protestants exactly the same as to Catholics and is being impartially enforced on all alike. So far as I know, the only difference between Protestants and Catholics at this point is that the Protestants are consistently obeying the law and going on with a religious work undisturbed, whereas the Catholics are defying the constitution, and raising a cry of religious persecution in order to gain sympathy for their non-existent wrongs."

Protestants may not agree with the Mexican attitude toward the teaching of purely religious matters and yet they are making no fuss about it, possibly for two reasons. First, they realize it is but the inevitable reaction against the long-standing and intolerable oppression of the Catholic priesthood and their constant meddling in political matters even to this very hour, and that the reaction is mild in comparison with the suffering and injury that has been endured. Second, they do not propose to play "second fiddle" to the Catholic demand of the Mexican government for its old place of dominance over the people in political affairs. Bishop James Cannon, Jr., who for eight years had supervision of the work of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, says: "The effort which has been made by Roman Catholics to link up Protestantism with its attack on the Mexican government has been so far an utter, dismal failure. Protestantism has no faith in such pleas for 'religious liberty.'" The Catholic church really knows no such thing as religious liberty when it has the power to control affairs. In all Latin American countries today the Roman church is doing its utmost to hinder the worship of Protestants and to retard their mission activities, as our own missionaries in the Argentine can testify. Such a plea is so ridiculously inconsistent in Catholic mouths that Bishop Miller sees in it "a comic touch." He says, "The Catholics have now organized a 'league for the protection of religious liberty.' This is very interesting in view of the fact that while the recent Eucharistic Congress in Chicago was viewed with admiration and approval by Protestants in the United States, and no objection was made to its realization, we have the contrast of the effort made in 1916 to hold an Interdenominational Protestant Congress for all Latin America in the city of Panama. The Catholic bishop organized a protest and made it impossible to hold a single session of the Congress in Panama, compelling the gathering to meet in cramped quarters in a hotel on the Canal Zone." That is the history of their dealings with Protestants. They have everywhere shown themselves intolerant and ready to exercise the most extreme measures of opposition and persecution in their dealings with Protestants. And they have not changed their attitude. That does not argue for the adoption of an intolerant, bitter-spirited attitude on the part of Protestants toward Catholics, but it does show up the insincerity of the Catholic cry for "religious liberty."

The Opportunity of Labor Sunday

The approach of Labor Day reminds us of the opportunity of Labor Sunday. It is a day that has come to figure large in the minds of a vast number of our church people as well as with myriads of those who are not related to the church. It is a day that is coming to represent the interests of all those who labor with their hands and is regarded by them with a peculiar reverence. This fact alone should be sufficient to make us realize the importance of placing Labor Sunday in our church calendar for proper observance. The people should be made to feel that the church blesses labor and honors the laborer. It will mean much toward enhancing the church's influence over their lives if they are led to believe that the church's leadership places itself alongside of them and displays a sympathetic understanding of their tasks and problems.

It affords also a splendid opportunity to ennoble and sanctify the popular conception of labor. That is far more important than we realize. It is a great and worthy contribution to the lives of men to bring them to look upon work, not as a curse, but as a Godsend, a blessing, the natural and necessary course of a living, growing human being. Idleness and not work, is the curse of mankind. Indolence and not energy is the enemy to true happiness. Slothfulness and not toil is the shame of men. Let us teach men the dignity and glory of work, and that by it, are to be found, the abiding joy and the high purposes of living. Christian men ought to go to their work not as driven slaves, but as freedmen and sons of God. For it is in labor that we realize to a marked degree our divine likeness and kinship. Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." And he says to his followers, as did the owner of the vineyard, Go work today in my vineyard. Work, even hard, toilsome work, is not slavery, unless one has the spirit of a slave. On the contrary, if one realizes the privilege and responsibility of it, if he knows the joy and divinity of it, work, no matter the kind or the strain of it, leads one into the emaciated, satisfying, strength-crowned life, that life that finds its struggle being continually rewarded by heaven's benediction upon it and divine co-operation in it. It is such a life that understands the significance of Paul's statement when he said, "We are laborers together with God," for, he assured that it is as true in our daily toil with hand and brain, as in our so-called religious work. Such a note needs sounding more frequently than is customary. We need to realize that the duty of work is as bounden and as Scripturally enjoined as that of faith, and Labor Sunday offers a fine opportunity to drive home such a message.

Also, what a wonderfully fine thing it would be to sound the note of brotherhood and good will in the labor and industrial worlds. We do not hold that the church need burden itself with the responsibility of working out solutions to the multitudinous labor difficulties that disturb the peace and prosperity of our country. But it can and ought to bear home to the heart of employer and employee alike the great Christian principles which must govern all and by which alone peace, cooperation and the highest interests of all concerned can be achieved. Such principles bind both together in mutual interest and concern. They cause the worker to be mindful of interests of his employer and to work to his rightful advantage. At the same time they make the employer realize that the laborer is more than capital and that his welfare is before profits. Nothing would go farther toward the solution of our industrial ills and the prevention of further difficulties than just the adoption of such an ideal, and the urging of it onto the minds and hearts of men and women is the high privilege of the ministry, and the opportunity is especially appealing on Labor Sunday.

In line with this thought, Mr. James Myers, the Industrial Secretary of the Federal Council's Commission on the Church and Social Service, offers this splendid suggestion:

Labor Sunday offers an opportunity. It is not expected of the church that it shall make pronouncements designed to settle all the intricate problems of industry. But the church can show that it cares. It can demonstrate that it is eager to cooperate in all constructive efforts towards a better world in industry. Under the mantle of religion let capital and labor come together on Labor Sunday in a friendly spirit "to worship the Lord and to inquire in his temple." Out of such friendly and reverent drawing together for worship there should come inspiration for the more permanent forms of cooperation which will insure an orderly progress for industry and guide our feet into the paths of peace.

This is an opportunity to make specific application of the oft-repeated declaration that the Gospel is sufficient to meet every need of this disturbed and sin-sick world. If we believe it, let us demonstrate it and show ourselves faithful stewards of the manifold grace of God.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon asserts that over eighty per cent of federal expenditure is due to war, and adds, "This will be the inevitable situation as long as war is the method of settling international disputes."

Brother E. J. Rohart, pastor of the mission church at Winchester, Virginia, and a graduate of Ashland College last June, reports a successful Daily Vacation Bible School which he conducted single handed, opening with an enrollment of seven and closing with forty. The demonstration program at the close was quite well received and was repeated in one of the large local churches.

If, when ministers meet in a social way, they would compare notes on how they can be personally helpful one to another and let their ministry shine for God instead of exchanging criticisms and reports of ministerial disaffection, there would result an added impetus to the work of the church that would be astonishing.

A modern writer has said, "The youth now needs fathering quite as much as he needs mothering." But this fact is not generally realized as is indicated for instance in the very name that is popularly used instead of "father." How would it sound to remark that a boy needs "daddy"? But then many fathers don't deserve any more endearing and exalted a designation than "Daddy."

Brother C. C. Grisso, chairman of the Entertainment Committee of General Conference, writes that the health conditions at Winona Lake are excellent this year. He also assures us of ample facilities to take good care of all who may desire to go, and urges last-minute decisions on the part of those who have not planned to attend Conference. We would add, what we have often said, that numbers have a great deal to do with the enthusiasm of a conference and enthusiasm counts greatly in the final success. So, "come on, let's go."

Dr. G. W. Rensch, in this issue, supplements the report previously made concerning the very successful Bible conference held at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana. It was a "retreat" that was genuinely Brethren, as Brother Rensch points out. Besides mentioning a goodly number of the other leaders and speakers of the conference, he pays a highly merited compliment to the moderator, Brother W. I. Duker. The development of this conference site seems to be going forward apace, much credit for which, we doubt not, goes to Dr. Rensch himself, as also to Brother J. W. Brower, and others of the promoters.

We are pleased to have a report from Brother F. G. Coleman, who, having been impressed with the scarcity of church news in the Evangelist, as he said to the editor in a personal communication, set himself to the task of helping to make up the lack. That is a very wise thing to do, as we have suggested repeatedly and we hope others will reach the same conclusion for themselves. The Flora, Indiana, church is going forward splendidly under Brother Coleman's leadership, fifty-seven having been added to the membership during the time since he took charge of the work. A number of other marks of encouragement and progress are reported, outstanding among which is the work of the W. M. S. Its work is very commendable. The Sunday school averages above 200 considerably.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, passes on to the Evangelist readers one of those thoroughly enjoyable surprises, such as was meted out to him at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and which help to give life to such a campaign. Brother and Sister Krepps' gift of a 100 acre coal farm is very conservatively estimated at $10,000. They deserve credit for such a generous gift, and all the more because of their genuine modesty. Brother E. F. Byers is the pastor of this church and under his leadership this church is courageously setting itself to a challenging re-building program, which would stagger those of less faith. The total gift from this church was $10,755.01, which, added to the amount previously reported by Dr. Bell, puts the dial at $58,635.20.

During the first six months of 1925, according to records compiled at the Tuskegee Institute in the Department of Records and Research and reported by Dr. R. R. Moton, principal, there were nine lynchings in the United States. This number is the same as the number for the first six months in 1925, it is four more than the number five for the first six months in 1924, six less than the number 15 for the first six months of 1923, 21 less than the number 30 for the first six months of 1922, and 27 less than the number 36 for the first six months of 1921. The races of the persons lynched and the number in each race were: Negro, 6; White, 2; Indian, 1. The states in which the lynchings occurred and the number in each state are: Arkansas, 1; Florida, 3; Kentucky, 1; Mississippi, 2; New Mexico, 1; Texas, 1. It is encouraging to note the steady decrease in this crime over the period of years mentioned, but it is a shame that it should occur at all in an enlightened, Christian land like America. And we must note with still greater shame that men who call themselves Christian sometimes are guilty of promoting that spirit of bitterness and rash conduct and mob rule that provide the soil in which lynchings flourish.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Present Need

By Edwin Boardman, Jr.

"For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again." II Cor. 5:14-15.

This is an age of antidotes—a seeking for solution to the perplexing problems which face the world and its people. The trouble with many of the so-called solutions is that they barely scratch the surface of the problems they are intended to solve.

The church has felt and is still feeling the pressure of perplexing doubt and the more perplexing problem of the loss of vital faith on the part of its membership. The burden of this message concerns the finding of the necessary solution to this particular problem.

1. Perhaps we can best arrive at a decision regarding the present need of the church today by using the process of elimination.

1. The church does not need a new ethic, or standard of conduct. The teachings of Jesus regarding individual and social conduct have never been surpassed. The Sermon on the Mount with its emphasis on true altruism and individual rightness of life is the supreme expression of man's relation to his God and also his relation to his fellowmen. In this message of Jesus there is no uncertainty regarding the high calling of mankind and every angle of his teaching in this celebrated discourse, and his other concise messages having to do with society as a whole make plain the fact that conduct is centered in the depths of the love passion. Once love becomes paramount there is no length to which an individual will not go for his fellowmen. Jesus was the greatest exponent of his own teachings.

Jesus' ethics have not failed. They have seldom been tried in the church. We are suspicious of each other. Hatred too often takes the place of self abnegating love. The Golden Rule is a nice group of words for Christians to repeat piously as a cardinal part of the teachings of Jesus, but the Golden Rule means absolutely nothing to us unless it gets behind the tongue and permeates the life conduct of each one of us. Do we love our neighbors as ourselves? When we're compelled to do something we ought to do, yet which we do not want to do; can we be big enough to recognize our obligation and do twice as much as has been demanded? Have we really tried voluntarily going "the second mile", or parting with both our cloak and coat? Remember Brethren, Jesus was a social revolutionist par excellence. He was faced with caste, class and petty misunderstandings and hatreds. His ethics cut right across the life of his day and laid its shame and meanness bare to the gaze of all men. That is the reason he was so cordially hated by the leaders of the Jews. Think you that he would be any less sparing now if he once got into our churches and saw what was passed off as his teachings in the active life of the average congregation?

Don't let us say we need a new ethic in the church. We need only to practice the ethics of Jesus and this part of the problem will be met.

ELDER EDWIN BOARDMAN, JR.
Pastor the Brethren Church at Waterloo, Iowa

2. The Christian Church does not need a new religion.

Any religion must be judged by the type of life it actually produces, not by the claims it makes for itself. The other Sunday evening I heard a preacher eloquently plead for a new world religion that would embrace the faiths of the other half the world than that encompassed by the white races. His idea was that deep down underneath man's worship under various names was the endeavor to find God, therefore there ought to be a combination of the best in each faith so that a world religion could be evolved. The argument is not new. It may have some truth in it. Mayhap some of us are too dogmatic in declaring that Christianity the supreme religion, the true world religion, but we base our dogmatism on the fact that Christianity really works in everyday life and the severer the tests put to it the more triumphantly it comes to the front. Let us briefly scan some of the religion that by the number of their adherents might well make a bid for the title of supremacy. Brahmanism, Buddhism, and Mohammedanism are the most virile of these. Like Christianity, these are oriental religions and also like Christianity they presume to point man to a more or less worthwhile destiny. What have these religions done for their worshippers?

Brahmanism is the religion of India—the religion of caste. This religion was practiced by the early Aryans after their defeat by Zoroaster and the consequent migration of the people into northern India. Caste was established—we are told—to preserve the purity of the race in the beginning, but in the last three thousand years it has become a worship from which vital life has passed. Three hundred and fifteen millions of Indians testify by their national life the absolute failure of this religion of caste. India—with one-fifth of the world's population has been a dependency to a nation having scarcely one-eighteenth of the world's population, and until a new life seizes India's people that race will always be in the dependent class. Pauperism, illiteracy, superstition and fear are the most visible contributions of Brahmanism to its followers.

Buddhism is of a different sort. It is a religion of calmness, self abnegation and nothingness. Its founder was a wealthy young ruler of a part of northern India who, some 400 years before Christ was born, came to the conviction that the way to happiness was by the route of kindly deeds, poverty, and the hope that the God who ruled the destinies of men might have compassion on him and kindly annihilate him after this life was over. At the time this conviction came to him this teacher—known as Gautama Buddha—made the great renunciation, i. e., left his kingdom, his beautiful young wife, his baby son and his wealth—and became a mendicant friar and teacher dressed in rough garb and begging sustenance from kindly disposed people. His great hope for the future was found in the word, Nirvana—"nothingness", for this spelled peace, freedom from the danger of having one's soul transferred at death to the body of some lesser and perhaps more unclean animal. Buddhism has some wonderful writings, some splendid philosophy, indeed some kindred doctrines to Christianity itself. In fact there are not wanting scholars who have maintained strenuously that during the eighteen silent years in Jesus' life that the Master was in India some of the time and there got acquainted with Buddha's teachings, revamped them and gave the world Christianity. What has Buddha done for his followers. His teachings drugged China and put her to sleep, and all over the Celestial kingdom the calm visaged, folded handed images of Buddha bespeak the religious state of the old China. With one-fourth of the world's estimated population China today is still a helpless Gulliver bound by the desires of weaker peoples than herself. Here, too, illiteracy, poverty and superstition have bound a fine virile race of people into the age long repose of a long dead teacher.

Mohammedanism is the gospel of force, fatalism and fanaticism. Mohammed was a dreamer of dreams and a teacher with the tremendous conviction that he was a chosen vessel of God. His first converts were poor people, but ten years before his death he began the forging of that terrible army of Mohammedan soldiery which swept everything Near East and Northern Africa, and was only prevented before it until the crescent flew from every section of the from planting itself on the European peoples by the herculean efforts of Charles Martel—the "hammer of the Franks". Today Mohammedanism has its tremendous grip on 232 millions of bigoted, fanatical believers and its contribution to the world can best be measured by the slaughter of dissenting peoples, the ignorance and bigotry and intolerance of the Mohammedan world and the backward state of the peoples who have espoused the cause of the Prophet.

Over against these religions we can briefly sum up the power of the Christian faith by the type of life it has produced in the European and western worlds. Poorly interpreted it has been; its spirit wholly lost in some generations, but for all that the Christian nations today are the leading powers of the world not only in the apprehension of a finer type of religious life but also from the standpoint of education, humanitarianism, prosperity, and physical progress. The Christian world has been cursed by wars, hatreds, misunderstandings, but for all these we believe that we can justly point to the facts of vital life and claim that Christianity is the finest approach of the soul to God, and the finest approximation of the godly life in practice. It would be just as right for a group of blind, deformed, mental defectives to rail at all of life as a failure just because the enjoyment of existence in the present world had been denied them, as for anyone to say Christianity is a failure when it has been so little tried, and yet has been able to do so much.

3. The Christian church does not need the breakdown of the various denominations to solve its present problems.

Denominationalism is only a curse when we permit differences in church government and church ordinances to break down that larger spiritual unity that must always characterize Christians. A single, physically unified church helped to produce the shame and moral decadence of the Middle Ages, and wrote upon the pages of church history some of the most infamous records to be found anywhere. It was while Luther was making the rounds of the holy places in Rome, where he saw the shameful mockery of religion by the chief religionists of that time, that the voice of the Word of God came to him like a loud peal of thunder—"The just shall live by his faith", and really started the German monk on the path which lead directly to the moment when he lit the fires of the Protestant Reformation.

Among all the sins and petty bickerings and differences of Protestant denominationalism these two things can be said for it—and they account for a heap of wrong—(1) It has helped to keep the Christian church clean and wholesome in the expression of pure religion. (2) It has pushed forward to great heights the missionary achievements of the church in the last two hundred years.

We feel safe in contending then, that though Protestant Christianity could well get along with fewer denominations yet the present need of the church is not primarily a doing away with denominationalism. If the Almighty had wanted us all to see things alike he would certainly have given us the same mental makeup and the same group of grandparents.

II. What then is the present need of the church? It is the dynamic sense, personally experienced, of the passion of Jesus. The heart of the gospel—the real reason it is called good news—is found in the words, "Christ died for us." Jesus' express mission was to lay down his life for sinners. Its corollary is: Those of us who have become saved from our sins must learn to lay down our lives for the brethren. Paul puts the truth splendidly in the text of this message: "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge that if one died for all then were all dead; and that he died for all that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves but unto him who died for them and rose again." There you have it—the church needs a real re-living of the vicarious life in its membership.

Calvary is not a spectacle, a catastrophe, a means of easy escape from the weight of transgressions, a fire escape from the torments of some future hell. Calvary is a triumph, a challenge to self abnegation and sacrificial service for others, a call to supreme living. Jesus came to give life to men. He could best accomplish that end by dying and by his consequent resurrection from the dead show men the pathway to glory. By his own experience Jesus taught that there were worse things that could happen to a man than dying. It was a great deal worse to live to no purpose in life. So Jesus put the color of blood and the blackness of the grave into the forefront of his experience for by these factors he wanted to show his followers that one truly knew how to live only as he learned how to die for a worthwhile end.

The apostles caught this idea of Jesus' passion and they went everywhere intent on one thing—to tell what they had seen and heard. An easy religious experience had no charms for those men and women. They had seen their Lord suffer. They wanted to suffer in like manner with him. Hence they counted it all joy when they could endure scourging and death for his sake. Continually they learned how to go beyond the cross into the joy of the resurrection. They early learned what it meant to be dead in Christ. But they didn't stay dead. They recognized that one who was dead in him had the obligation to live for others even as he gave them the example. The death at the cross was unto self and selfish desires. The new life was "for him" and for others.

This is the present need in christendom. We need all of us—laymen and preachers alike—to see Calvary as a responsibility as well as infinite blessing. We need to learn to die with him so that we can live again to bless others. When that happy moment comes into the life of the individual Christian, and into the lives of sufficient numbers in the various congregations, there will be no need of constant appeal for loyalty to Christ and his church; for money with which to support centers of higher Christian training; for the raising of local church budgets; for an enthusiasm in our Christian experience that will be as a consuming fire within us. These factors will be the normal outcropping of our life when once we have learned to die in him and live for him. If we would take our religious life as seriously as we take this fleeting seventy years of earthly material living there is nothing on the earth or in hell which would be able to stop the triumphant onrush of the Kingdom experience of having "His will done on earth as it is done in heaven." In the first century the Christian church was poor in wealth, humble in spirit, but tremendously powerful in spiritual dynamic. Because of these things the apostolic Christians could laugh at odds which today we would call impossible. Today the church is tremendously rich and powerful in material ornamentation. Beautiful churches and cathedrals dot our cities and rural districts, wonderful organs send forth triumphant strains of music that might well vie with that of heaven itself, dignitaries in the church go about in black dress suits or the more splendid gown of the elite preacher, the Roman church has all the gaudy trappings of the mediaeval period of splendor and corruption, we all of us who call ourselves Christians would count it a desperate thing if we did not have our automobiles, splendid homes and a reasonable amount of the luxuries of life—yet despite all of this wonderful prosperity externally, we have lost that power of the Spirit which was the characteristic mark of Jesus' real presence in his Body, called the church. We must not deduce the idea that poverty makes for spiritual power or that prosperity makes for spiritual poverty. But we dare say—without fear of successful contradiction—that the Christian who catches the real spirit of Calvary will never let material wealth be a deterrent to spiritual power, rather he will use that wealth to do the correspondingly greater work that can be done with his means. So with the church. Rich and increased with goods, she has become poor and blind and naked. She needs to get back to a real appreciation of the passion of Jesus in her life so that once more she will become the source of vital propagation of the faith as she will have become the center of vital power.

Such propagation cannot be done by a few thousand preachers and a few thousand missionaries. It must be done by all Christians. We must have something to tell the world and then tell it. That does not mean an attempt to let foreign nations where a non-Christian religion thrives, have the testimony of the gospel while our own nation goes to the devil either. It may be more unromantic to save a Mexican Catholic from his superstition in New Mexico than it is to save an Argentine Catholic from the same thing in the province of Cordoba, but it is just as necessary. The poor in our large cities must have the gospel preached and carried to them just as much as the poverty stricken in India need that beneficent ministrations. Chicago, New York, Philadelphia and a thousand other towns in America of the north need their festering cancers of shame cleaned out just as vitally as any city south of the equator. It is our failing, as average Christians in this land, to pass the buck to missionaries in foreign lands by doling out a few thousand dollars annually for the support of large mission enterprises, while we calmly forget that the Spirit of Calvary demands that we begin preaching at the home base as well as abroad. That kind of a mission spirit is just so much plain "buncombe." A personal realization of the passion of Jesus will drive us forward like people "possessed," so that unbelievers will cry out as Festus cried to Paul, "Thou art beside thyself." Would God, some of us really would become crazy about the Gospel of the Cross.

Seeing Ourselves and Our Work

By M. A. Stuckey, Field Secretary, National Sunday School Association

(This excellent article, previously published in "The Educator", is reprinted here by request of appreciative readers, who thought it worthy of a wider reading.—Editor).

It is a hard thing for any man to think of himself as he should and infinitely harder for him to properly evaluate his own work. It is a process that requires the wisdom of the best men who have ever lived and also that of angels. That it is highly necessary for all of us to take an occasional inventory of our lives and their respective accomplishments, not even the most hesitant will doubt. It simply must be done. If onlookers look, let them look; if critics criticize, let them criticize; if howlers howl, let them howl; and if whiners whine and gossipers gossip, let them continue their whining and gossiping until you have completed your work. Then you may sit down and pose as a criticus criticorum meditating on future plans and achievements while many chat their very lives away.

So it is with individuals. And so also with institutions and organizations. Only in the latter case there are those present to judge, and their number is usually more than one. For our purpose let us take, for example—and a good one—the Sunday school. Who shall judge it? Shall I? Shall you? The question is not an easy one, and, if we possess the dispositions of Christians, methinks there will be little effort on our part even to be critical. Perhaps the Sunday school will have its judgment day, when its workers have been promoted to the "upper sanctuary." May we not seriously wonder about that day?

However, for practical purposes, such meditations are of little value. Our modern day Sunday school men and women want to know how to make a school go; how to keep it going; how to know whether it is going and how to judge it aright. The Great Judge, they know, will judge our judgments and work individually.

The present task is to be that of asking a few questions relative to local work wherever we have Brethren Sunday schools. Others may be spared this time. We are to see ourselves and our work. We may be "standin' in the need ob prayer," enthusiasm, encouragement, energy, or what not!

New Recruits

1. Is your community being gleaned continually for new recruits?

"Where hast thou gleaned today?" may well be one of the Scripture mottos of many seekers for souls. Has your school felt the force of the fact that personal evangelism is the greatest "performance of Christianity." Do you have a program of "revival" and educational evangelism which will not be offensive to any one? There is a large soul experience connected with the winning of the lost and its benefits and pleasures come to those who bring others into contact with the Bible and the living Lord. Working in the vineyard of the Lord where the laborers are few and the harvests white, is a task almost too great for ordinary mortals. Yet we have been thrust forward to do the most holy work men can do, and that too by our Master and our Guide. Have we made disciples? Have we worked today?

Increasing Interest

2. Is the interest of the pupils of your school increasing and does this manifest itself in an increasing average attendance? If so, why? If not, why not?

There are always existing reasons for decreased attendance. Coldness, carelessness, poor management, friction between workers, etc., these things kill effective work over night. Have our teachers been congenial, on time, well prepared, earnest, honest, and prayerful? Have they lived right, acted right and prayed right during the week? Is your school growing because you have a group of alert, active, and attentive teachers' and officers? If so, then recognize their efforts with a hearty thank you. It would be appreciated wonderfully. Has that same group of teachers and officers encouraged weak pupils, discouraged parents, and active young men and women in the fine art of living? Have reasons for success been abundant because a strong, aggressive program is now in operation, or special days and new features are in evidence?

Democratic School

3. Is your school becoming more democratic?

It will be democratic if everybody has a definite part in its manifold work. Certainly a Sunday school has within its scope the possibility of developing the latent mental, moral, and spiritual powers of every individual within its walls. Have we enlisted the sympathetic interest of everybody? Has needed discipline been administered? Has good work received its reward in occasional prizes and hearty public mention? Moreover, has your school taken advantage of the Daily Vacation Bible School? So many of our churches have and with profit to all concerned. Have you watched carefully the movement of Week Day Religious Education and noted much of its splendid work? If you can answer "yes" to these questions, then you are becoming more democratic in your work.

Lofty Standards, Goals and Ideals

4. Are your standards, goals and ideals kept high?

All these are of value for they (1) Get things started; (2) Help to keep the work well-balanced; (3) Give precision and a well-defined program; (4) Guarantee better work; (5) Avoid extremes; (6) Tend to promote unity in every phase of work; (7) Define our work; (8) Show us what to do. Are not these things of value?

Have you ever seen our Brethren Standard of Excellence in print? It has ten major considerations: Home Work, Organized Classes, Teacher Training, Gradation, Missions, Citizenship Instruction, Life Work Decisions, Conferences and Conventions, Denominational Requirements, and Library Suggestions. Do you know that you may have it sent to you free in a hand book which has between its lids of forty-four pages vital material for all of our workers? Are you acquainted with another important denominational Sunday school organ: THE EDUCATOR, a magazine for teachers and officers.

Do your goals call for a greater Sunday school and church? Are you building great lives as a result of our work? Is character being formed in such a way that the Master Teacher would sanction it? Do your boys and girls glow with enthusiasm for Jesus Christ?

Efficient Workers

5. Do your workers show signs of increasing efficiency as a result of their training?

Of a necessity the school's forces must steadily be maintained and increased. Great need always abounds for additions to the ranks. Are your new and old workers receiving more religious training continually? Is their knowledge of the work increasing? Is this shown forth by appreciative scholars? Remember that your school will only increase in its effectiveness as the workers increase in their efficiency. Are records well-kept, business well-transacted, and everything well-planned?

Growing Bible Students

6. Does your school know and appreciate the Bible?

At the very present there is an appalling ignorance of things Biblical. Colleges, high schools, and kindergartens—all evince a positive need of more Biblical training. Is your body of teachers and scholars conquering this lamentable defect? Is information on the cardinal doctrines of the Christian faith lacking? Do your pupils know what the Bible has to say about God, Man, Repentance, Faith, and other cardinal emphases? Or, to be even more specific, is your school being indoctrinated in things Brethren? Do our growing boys and girls know why we have special ordinances, and why, to use the common parlance, we believe peculiarly?

To test your knowledge of the Bible, do you have occasional memory Bible drills? Do scholars carry their Bibles to and from the services? Do you have quarterly Biblical mottoes for your schools' thought and memorization? Is your period of Biblical instruction sufficient long to reap the best results from lesson study? Do you fritter away too much time in an illy-prepared foregoing worship program? Success and idealism in the Sunday school are built up largely on an enlarging conception of the Bible.

Church Members

7. Are your pupils uniting with the church and is their devotional life manifesting itself in loving service for their Lord?

The charge that modern youth is false is largely unwarranted. If youth is irreverent and irreligious there is perhaps a reason for it. Have you discovered that reason or reasons? Have young men and women, boys and girls, been invited to join the church? Is the church the smallest or the largest thing in their lives? Have they a regard for the tradition of their forefathers? Reasons? Are you "analyzing, and philosophizing and surmising and theorizing and reasoning about youth?" You had better live with them, and love them. Have you given youth something to do in the church? Says a prominent Detroit minister: "I've learned this: that when young people get up on a platform they have something definite to say, they say it, and sit down; we older folks often have little to say, take a long time in saying it, and do not stop when we have said it." Finally, are the hidden longings and aspirations of youth sufficiently challenged to make them want to join the church?

Life Service

8. How many scholars are enthusiastic about entering some phase of life work of a decidedly Christian nature?

One large church in our brotherhood has a corps of over thirty life work recruits and they are serving now. Many smaller churches have a few or even one. How many such recruits has your church and school given to the cause of the Kingdom? How many have you turned toward a training school like Ashland College and Seminary? Or, if not there, to some creditable Christian institution? How many may choose the ministry, the medical profession, Christian teaching, evangelism, etc., if they are encouraged, is yet an untold story. The Brethren church needs such leaders; the Kingdom waits for them; and the world needs them badly now. Oh! leaders of men! thrust forth your sickles into the ripening fields; gather the sheaves and bind them up for the harvest season. Ample rewards shall await us all if we prove faithful and untiring in our harvesting. What shall the harvest be? A veritable church full of Brethren men and women fit for the Master's use and service.

Our task is done. And if we have seen ourselves and our work just a wee bit better, the writer shall have counted this effort a success and be glad for better Brethren Sunday schools.

Finnish Athlete a Teetotaler

Finland and the United States, the driest nations in the world, led all rivals in the Olympic games. The final national placing was as follows: America 255; Finland, 166; Great Britain, 85½, and France 26½. All bars and liquor advertising were removed from the sector where the American athletes were quartered. In place of wine, mineral water was provided for the contestants. England, though drinking less hard liquor, is consuming more beer and wines, and three per cent more absolute alcohol than last year. One authority stated that this fact was mirrored in her Olympic standing where she dropped from the rank of the leaders. Finland and America also lead the world as the only two nations to meet all government expenses and also reduce the national debt out of current income, as the result of prohibition policies.

The victor in the 10,000 meters flat race final at the Stade de Colombes, Paris, the Finlander, Ritola, who beat the world record, accomplishing his 10 kilometers in 30 minutes, 23 seconds 1-5, is an advocate of total abstinence, says the International Bureau Against Alcoholism. This is what he said on the subject of alcohol and sport in an interview published some months ago:

"Before I began to compete, I used to smoke and occasionally took alcoholic beverages; but, when I began to train as a runner, I soon saw that I should have to give up both if I wished to obtain good results. Accordingly from the outset of my training I abandoned tobacco and alcohol; for in my opinion their use invariably prevents one from becoming a first class athlete."

The Swedish runner, Wide, who came in second in the same race, is likewise an abstainer.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Transfiguration in Our Day

By Prof. A. L. DeLozier

TEXT: "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed (transfigured) by the renewing of your mind."—Romans 12:2.

What is the apostle discussing here? Christian sacrifice. Christianity is preeminently a religion of sacrifice. I haven't the space to elaborate upon this fact, but I will say that we are not in Christ if we do not grasp this note of sacrifice. Selfishness plays no part in the Christian religion.

"Be not conformed" to what? This world. What? Are we to hold aloof from the world, as a phase of our Christian sacrifice? I am frank to say that I cannot take anything else out of the text before us. This is a note of consecration. The life of the Christian is consecrated. It isn't lax and loose and undistinguished from the world. There is a line of demarcation between the Christian and the world. There must be a terminus where the world ends, so that Christianity may begin. There is sure to be a frontier between the devil's territory and that of our Lord. There is a Pillar of Hercules, or a Rubicon which divides. As the old Latins put it—A Ne plus Ultra, or Ultima Thule.

The chapter starts with an injunction to present our bodies. Then if we get the body in right relation to God, the text would urge that the mind be in right relation to things infinite and eternal and thus the whole man will be consecrated.

The first part of the text shows up something as a hindering element in our consecration. We have a tendency to go, to float or swim with the stream, to get on the band wagon, to be in the fashion. We let things go unchallenged. We become unanimous and think that that "O. K.'s the matter"—"so mote it be, with all my heart. Amen. Willingly. This is conforming.

TO THE WORLD. As someone suggests, not a world in any sense of completeness. At least it is a world too small for our minds with their limitless powers of comprehension. The earth is 8,000 miles through. The mind's world should be vastly larger in its dimensions. Therefore why chime in, why ditto everything, why give our nod of approval, why acclaim, ratify, endorse or put our vise upon everything? Why be an echo for the world's jazz, silly sayings or whatever, that are not at least on a sound basis. The apostle is here using the great principle of substituting one thing for another. It is a secret that solves half of life's battle with sin. We all use it consciously or unconsciously. Otherwise our lives would be shamefully wrecked.

"Be not . . . But . . . Be not conformed, BUT be ye transformed." Transformed takes the place of conformed and that is what I mean by substitution. Some of our Brethren in the past may have overdone this great doctrine of non-conformity, but are we today taking it as seriously as we should? It is a doctrine which one may trace all through the Bible. We may start in Genesis 12:1—"The Lord said unto Abram, get thee out of thy country and from thy kindred, etc." Then we find the Nazarites and the Nazarene bow. The underlying idea here is that of separation. Cp. also Deut. 7:2; 1 Cor. 7:39; 2 Cor. 6:14.

This Christian doctrine of separation goes so far as to disfellowship unruly brethren in the church. And so we may say that as regards conduct and living, the Christian is insulated, segregated, disentangled from the world. He is in the world, to be sure, but the world is not in him.

To come back to the text, we have here two very important Greek words. The one translated CONFORM means primarily SCHEME, and has reference to the outward, empty, superficial. The changeable outward fashion such as clothing, gestures, words, accidents. It reminds one of the words in 1 Corinthians 7:31, "For the fashion of this world passeth away." And so if one were to paraphrase it, we could say: Be not fashioned according to the fleeting fashion of this world. Do not cherish a spirit devoted to the world, following its vain fashions and pleasures, do not play the worldling, assuming a guise of artificiality, a powder-and-paint sort of life. Do not masquerade. There is a hint here at hypocrisy. The hypocrite is one who goes about with a mask. Like the Pharisee he is an externalist. Like the great engines of warfare, he is camouflaged.

The Houston Post recently gave a very fine illustration of how this feverish tendency to CONFORM works out. "She had debated whether or not to bob, and two or three times had turned back. Here she was at last properly shrouded in a barber's chair, a trifle pale, but grimly determined to go through it and conform to the world. 'How

LOVE'S COMPASSION—Luke 15:20-24.
Yet a great way off he saw me, ran to kiss me as I came;
As I was my Father loved me, loved me in my sin and shame.
—Tersteegen.

TUESDAY

PRAYER FOR FORGIVENESS—Psalm 51:1-8.
Lord Jesus, I long to be perfectly whole;
I want thee forever, to live in my soul;
Break down every idol, cast out every foe;
Now wash me and I shall be whiter than snow.
—James Nicholson.

WEDNESDAY

DIVINE USE OF SMALL GIFTS—John 6:5-12.
Yield thy poor best and ask not how or why,
Lest one day seeing all about thee spread
A mighty crowd and marvelously fed,
Thy heart break out into a bitter cry;
"I might have furnished, I, yea, even I,
The two small fishes and the barley bread."
—Frederick Langbridge.

THURSDAY

THE WHOLE DUTY—Luke 10:25-28.
Love God with all your soul and strength,
With all your heart and mind;
And love your neighbor as yourself,
Be faithful, just and kind.—Watts.

FRIDAY

FRUIT BEARING—Mark 4:1-9.
"I gave thee of my seed to sow, Bringest thou me my hundredfold?"
Can I look up with face aglow,
And answer, "Father, here is gold?"
—Lowell.

SATURDAY

TEACH US TO PRAY—Luke 11:1-4.
O thou, by whom we come to God,
The Life, the Truth, the Way;
The path of prayer thyself hast trod:
Lord, teach us how to pray!

shall I cut it?" asked the barber, callously displaying his full kit of gleaming instruments. The patient gazed at him in fascinated horror, hesitated and then quavered: 'I think you'd better give me gas.' " Thus we see by the text that Paul warns against a loose conformity to the externals of the world. This is Christianity, in spite of our great educators of today who inform us that our great aim in the staggering educational program of the hour is "Happiness for this world, with other worldliness entirely out of date."

This brings me to the second Greek word. It gives us the word METAMORPHOSIS, so much used in some fields of thought. The word MORPHE gives us quite another idea of form. Instead of denoting the mere scheme, outward shape or external part of a thing, it denotes the distinctive nature and character of the object, its very essence. I cannot quote the passages where it occurs, but some are Mark 16:12; Romans 8:29; II Corinthians 3:18; Philippians 2:6. In Philippians 3:21 we have both of the words in question. Hence, to continue our paraphrase, Be not fashioned according to the fleeting fashion of this world, but cultivate a spirit attached to God and his Kingdom and cause, governed by the laws of the Bible. This means nothing short of a change of inner life. This is what I mean by the transfiguration that is so much needed in our day. For the word FIGURE and the word FORM are closely related, but when we say TRANSFIGURED it seems to convey a stronger meaning than if we say TRANSFORMED.

The profane poets amused and abused the world with idle and extravagant stories of metamorphoses. According to these, human beings were changed into beasts, stones, trees, and even into fire, water, or the like. So that Peter was led to say concerning Christ's METAMORPHOSIS or TRANSFIGURATION: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses to his majesty." So that, while in mythology it may be but a poetic conception, yet in Christian usage, METAMORPHOSIS becomes indeed real. It represents the real and abiding change.

Have you been thus transfigured, or are you following the crowd, seeing the world? Are you just mixed in with the crowd, doing the popular thing? Do you take your cue from New York and Paris? Are you one of those who insist upon a jazz religion? A New York preacher recently made the following statement: "The people of New York want a religion with a jazz tempo. They have driven some preachers to shooting off fireworks and wearing red vests. A great deal of the preaching of New York is idiotical sensational. The clergy are trying too hard to get attention above the hubbub, etc."

Let's not be like old Uncle Billy who went to the state fair and at noon got mixed in with the crowd of city folks on the way to dinner and woke up to find himself on the outside and then went home because he "Wasn't gonna pay no fifty cents to git back in agin." Believe me, if you follow the crowd, you'll land on the outside of the Kingdom. Let us rather be TRANSFORMED, TRANSFIGURED, or if you please, METAMORPHOSED by the renewing of our minds that we may "prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

Roman Catholics and Mexico

The following is the summing up of the Church Problem in Mexico, by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This excerpt from Bishop Cannon's article is taken from the New York Times Current History Magazine for July, 1926, in which appears a very interesting symposium from every angle of the problem. Bishop Cannon had supervision of the work of the Methodist Church in Mexico for eight years.

The effort which has been made by Roman Catholics to link up Protestantism with its attack on the Mexican Government has been so far an utter dismal failure. Protestantism has no faith in such pleas for "religious liberty." Whenever and wherever the Vatican has had the power it has permitted no freedom of worship. It did not permit it in Mexico, Cuba or in South American countries as long as it could prevent it. It endeavors today to stifle all Protestant efforts in Spain, Poland, Italy, Rumania and indeed everywhere else. It is in so doing perfectly consistent with its exclusive claims. But it cannot secure support from Protestantism in its effort to compel the Mexican Government to give to the hierarchy its old position of domination over the people under threat of present pain and future damnation. It is even possible that Protestantism for the ultimate good of Mexico may decide that, although it can never agree that any human government or agency has the right to restrict the simple preaching of the Gospel entirely free from political activities, yet it may hold that right in abeyance rather than seriously embarrass the Mexican Government in its present life and death struggle to free the country from clerical domination of the people. Certainly the present-day situation in Italy, Spain, Poland and other countries is sufficient proof that nothing would be more hurtful to Protestant aims and activities and to religious liberty in Mexico than a victory for the Roman Catholic hierarchy led by the Vatican in the present conflict. Although there is no certainty that the Government will be obliged to take such steps, yet it is possible that it may be necessary for the present distress to prohibit religious activities of any kind by the Protestant missionaries, not because the Government believes those activities will be hurtful, but because Roman Catholics clamor for a technically consistent enforcement of the Constitution may require it.

Perhaps the most significant fact for citizens of the United States which has developed in this matter is the open effort which has been made by Roman Catholics in the United States in response to the Apostolic letter to compel the Government of the United States to aid the Vatican in the accomplishment of its designs upon Mexico by demanding, not only in the press but in the Congress of the United States, actual intervention in Mexico by the United States Government to secure again for the church the position and power which for four centuries it so shamefully abused. The violent attacks upon the Mexican Government in both houses of Congress, culminating in demands for intervention, and the intemperate denunciation of President Coolidge by Archbishop Curley of Baltimore for entertaining a Cabinet officer of the Mexican Government are symptomatic of the tendency of the leaders of the Roman Catholic hierarchy to confuse the proper relations of Church and State, and to expect the Civil Government to be subservient to the order of the church.

See Jesus' attitude to life. The word "life" was often on his lips. He loved the thing and therefore loved the word. He wanted men to live. The tragedy of the world to him was that human life was everywhere so thin and meager. "I came that they might have life, and in abundance." It is his aim to break the fetters and let life out to its completion. Jesus was always arguing with men about the right way of living. Life was to him ever a treasure of transcendent importance, and his question, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own life?" is one of those sentences which, having once dropped into the world's mind, is sure to stay forever.—Charles E. Jefferson.

If I knew one who faced his age and all ages in better spirit, greater wisdom, or truer devotion than Jesus showed, I would commend and follow him. If I knew any better plan for a personal life than Jesus' plan, I would commend and adopt it. If I knew any better basis for life's decisions than Jesus' basis for his own life decision, I would commend it and rest my life upon it. If I knew any better outcome in any life than the outcome seen in Jesus' life, I would try to go the way that reached it.—Bishop McDowell.

The Ten Commandments: Duties to Man

Scripture Lesson—Exod. 20:12-21.

Reference Material—Deut. 5:16-21; Eph. 6:1-9; Col. 3:18-25.

Devotional Reading—Prov. 3:1-7.

Golden Text—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Lev. 19:18.

LESSON LIGHTS

Last Sunday we studied our duties to God; today we study our duties to our brother man.

These give principles, not rules. Our civil laws are founded on them.

The Fifth Commandment. 12. Honor. In heart and in life. This means far more than to obey. It is to love and reverence them, and to remember that "they are within the scope of their rule, the representatives of God." Thy father and thy mother. Both are equally included. "By Oriental customs, the terms 'father' and 'mother' are by no means limited to one's natural parents, but are applicable to superiors in years, or in wisdom, or in civil or religious stations."

That thy days may be long. Implying also prosperity and happiness. This refers to the nation, rather than to the individual. Just so long as the majority of a nation have the habit of obedience to constituted authority, just so long will the nation prosper. And yet to some extent it is literally true of the individual. Disobedience to parents quickly leads to disobedience to the laws of God and of country, which, more than all other things, shortens the life and destroys its prosperity.

The Sixth Commandment. 13. Thou shalt not kill. This forbids not only actual murder, but all things which tend to murder: as anger, passion, hatred (Matt. 5:21-25); as suicide, that cowardly self-murder; and those slower forms of suicide, wrong habits of life, gluttony, strong drink that leads to murder so often. "The breadth of this commandment is that 'we hurt nobody by word nor deed; that we bear no malice nor hatred in our heart.'"

The Seventh Commandment. 14. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Christ himself explained this seventh commandment as forbidding the impure thought and desire as well as the impure act itself. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," while the impure soon lose all sense of divine things.

The Eighth Commandment. 15. Thou shalt not steal. This forbids all acts of dishonesty; such as (1) taking what does not belong to us without the consent of the owner, or with his consent if he does not realize the full extent of that to which he is consenting; (2) false returns of taxes or custom-house duties; (3) neglect of our part in matters of public good, as libraries, churches; (4) selling goods under false labels and under-measure; (5) giving too small wages; (6) not earning as we agree the wages we receive; (7) beating down prices too low; (8) gambling, raffling, lotteries; (9) all business that injures others' lives and property, as selling intoxicating liquors.

The Ninth Commandment. 16. Thou shalt not bear false witness. "The law refers primarily to false evidence given in a court of justice, and then, naturally, to any false testimony about another given under any circumstances." "This is a summons to hold in sacred regard the personal reputation or good name of every child of God." Lying in its worst form is stated in the commandment, and thus includes all its children of every kind. It also prohibits telling part of the truth as the whole, and misrepresentations. This forbids (1) lying; (2) slander; (3) speaking what is bad of our neighbor, even when true, without some real need of doing it; (4) hypocrisy; (5) acting lies; (6) gossiping; (7) misrepresenting others; (8) not being careful to find out whether what we say is true.

The Tenth Commandment. 17. Thou shalt not covet. This is a unique commandment. Search all the laws of all the world, and you will not find one which resembles it."

Covetousness is not the desire for more; that desire is at the basis of all progress and civilization, and it is right to seek to satisfy

it. Covetousness is the desire to possess what another person has. It is a greater sin than envy, which merely wants a duplicate of what another person has. Envy leads to discontent with ourselves; but covetousness, a fiend.

The Cure lies in giving to those in need, to every good cause, heartily, cheerfully, liberally, giving ourselves as well as our money.

18. Trembled. The word means they actually shook in their terror.

19. Lest we die. If no one could see God and live would not hearing his voice be as terrible? God was doing them the greatest favor, but they were so conscious of sin and impurity that they were afraid.

20. Moses tells the people that this was all done in kindness, to warn the people from disobedience to God's commands.

21. People stood afar off, in fear, and awe. Moses drew near. Why was not Moses afraid? We know that he was, physically (Heb. 12:21), but he had that sort of fear which drew him to God at all costs.—Illustrated Quarterly.

LESSON POINTERS

1. Love to God and love to man are like two magnets placed in connection; each one makes the other stronger.
2. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" is the measure of our love to our neighbor, and will solve many difficult questions as to how we should treat others.
3. The "Thou must" of Sinai becomes the "I ought," "I will," "I can," "I can do all things through him that strengtheneth me."
4. "Not only all our words but all our works, our sayings and doings, nay our very character and conduct, should be pervaded by truth—be genuine, sincere, transparent."
5. The Tenth Commandment throws back a light upon them all, showing "that they were to be applied to inward desire, which is sin, as well as to the outward action, which is crime."
6. Killing the soul, through loss of honor and all that means greatness in human nature is the lesser alternative.
7. The impure thought, and such actions as give rise to such thoughts in ourselves or others are breaking the seventh commandment.

AFFECTION

God sometimes washes the eyes of his children with tears in order that they may read aright his providences and his commandments.—T. L. Cuyler.

His Teacher

I need not fear to trust my child to her;
I knew it by the lighting of her eyes
When first she stooped to take his hand in hers
And speak a word of greeting. He was shy
And hardly dared to raise his eyes to hers,
Nor hush her name in tones she scarce could hear;
But she with infinite patience won his heart,
And with his heart she also won my own.

I do not fear to trust my child to her;
For when she spoke, her voice was low and sweet,
And when she moved her step was quiet, too.
Even her laughter, as it bubbled forth,
Was low and sweet, and deep with tenderness.

And yet I know that from her he will learn
The needful lessons of obedience,
Cheerfully rendered, to authority.

I do not fear to trust my child to her;
For I have seen young faces lifted up
With eyes of trustful wonder to her own,
Sure of her understanding sympathy
With all the little joys and griefs of youth;
Finding in her the eternal motherhood
Of one who finds all childhood worth her care,
And takes it to her infinite heart of love.

Christian Endeavor Evangelism

By Amy Nichols, Gem, Kansas

The Christian Endeavor has a very important place in the church. It is a training school for the young in Christian service and leadership.

The young people of today are the hope of tomorrow and as the twig is bent, so the tree is inclined. The mind impressions of the young person will largely be those that will determine his future. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

The Christian Endeavor work gives the young people food for pure thoughts and noble ambitions, the sort that will be the seed for greater deeds of service later in life. How important then, that the young people, who are full of vim and courage, be given a definite field in which to train for Christian work and service. The Christian Endeavor is our field. The seeds we sow and the harvest we reap depends upon us.

How can we, as Christian Endeavorers help to evangelize the world? First, by our example, by leading a real Christian life; by developing a strong Christian character, so "that others may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven." Our Endeavor work is of great help to us in shaping our lives and characters. We pledge ourselves to read our Bibles and live the prayer life. If we live up to the spirit of our pledge we surely will become stronger spiritually.

Aside from the influence our lives exert, in order to win others to Christ we should become personal workers. Through the work of want to help you and to help to teach your relatives and friends and all the people of your country to learn about our Christ who is your Savior, too.

Here are some of the things that we are going to do to help you. All of us can pray for you. Isn't it nice that Jesus hears us over in this country and can bring that message to you by making you happier even though you be far across the water from us? Just think, when Jesus was here on earth, he loved little children. He took time even when he was very busy to bless the little children and make them happy. So we can know that he will hear our prayers though we be but small boys and girls.

Another thing that we can do is to save some of our pennies and give them to missions to help send nice missionary ladies and men over to help you. Some of us have been doing this already. Others of us are going to begin doing it. Sometimes we have a chance to send you some other things, too. Did any of you ever receive some dolls and toys and things that we sent? We have not sent very many of them, but we think that if we can find out what you want we can send you some.

One of the very big things that some of us are doing for you is that we are getting ready to come and see you. We are still small but some of us are planning to be missionaries. We are studying hard so that we can get enough education to work for you. We remember what you said about liking doctors and nurses, so some of us are planning to study medicine when we grow up and come over and help all the sick. Others of us are studying to teach in your school. We want to get the proper kind of education so that we can come and work with little children in the schools. Or we want to get more advanced work so that we can teach the big students in your older schools and get them right ready to go out and preach and teach.

We are anxious to get some more radio messages from some more Junior Boys and Girls in other countries and if any of you can think of anything that you would like to have us do; just tell us about it in your next radio message and we will try to do it. Tell us some more stories about your lives. If you would like to hear about our churches and schools over here, maybe we can tell you some time. Maybe you already know a lot about them from what the missionaries have told you. We send love to all you Juniors and pray for you.

What Answer Shall We Broadcast to the Mission Field? Rom. 10:18

Junior Boys and Girls, do you remember the radio messages that we have been receiving from the little children of other lands? Do you remember the messages from the little Indian boy, the story of the little Chinese girl and the message from the little foreign boy in our country? This time we are to try to think of a nice Radio Message to send back to them. Think real hard. What shall we tell them? Let's try to think out some messages to send that will make them happy and make them feel our friendship. Is that a good idea? Then, let's start:

Hello Boys and Girls of China, Japan, India and all other children who are just beginning to know about Jesus:

All of us, little Junior workers of America, want to send you our love and we hope that you are happy. When we were very small we thought that everyone was just like us and knew all about Jesus. When we became a little older we began to hear about you and we are very interested in all of you. We like to hear the stories of how you became Christians and about how you love our missionaries that we have sent you. All of us

This and That About Japan

By Rev. A. D. Woodworth, D. D.

The islands which Japan took over from Germany at the close of the war are eight in number and are scattered over a part of the Pacific eight hundred miles wide by two thousand miles long. On these islands for two and a half years a revival has been going on with 2,500 additions to the church.

Mr. Seimatsu Kimura, who spent one hundred days on the islands three years ago, says the natives are very simple hearted, that their creed is made simple to meet their needs. The converts must sing a Christian hymn when they get up in the morning, must offer a prayer to God through Jesus Christ, and must read in their Bible daily, in addition to this they must promise to go to church every Sunday and must promise not to lie, or steal, or engage in the sin of licentiousness.

That seems simple enough, but if our home Christians were put on that kind of a religious diet, we wonder if a lot of churches would have all their pews filled every Sunday and a membership much more spiritually inclined than they now are.

Since the Japanese government took over the islands, the people have been taught to wear clothes, that is, to wear a shirt. This they are said to wear until it wears out. Having then nothing to wear, they catch cold. And this is said to be one of the disadvantages of civilization.

A large part of the subsistence of the natives depends upon the coconut, which is both food and drink. Contrary to the customs prevailing elsewhere, the men provide the food, but the women are the fishermen.

To one group of these islands one of the Gulicks, a family famous for the many years spent in foreign lands, thirty years ago having spent over four hundred years in missionary service, went as a missionary. The stories which he told of his missionary experiences, have been handed down by tradition, and are entertaining unto this day.

He had an idea that if he paid special attention to the old chief and made a Christian out of him, he might have greater success in gaining the rest of his people. Among other things he tried to teach him to write, but without great success. One hot day when the chief was tired, he pushed away his writing materials with disgust and this is what he said, "This kind of writing does not amount to anything. But there is a kind of writing which I want you to teach me. The other day a ship came into the harbor. You wrote on a piece of paper a few words and a man took it to the captain of the ship. Then the captain got a big box out of the ship and your man brought it to your house and put it under the bed. That is the kind of writing that counts. Teach me that."

Mrs. Gulick found it necessary to have a servant, but she did not want to have a naked man about the house. So, Mrs. Gulick made him a shirt and put it on him. The first objection to it was that it was too tight. But the shirt was roomy. The next objection to it was that it was too hot. But the material was very thin. The crowning objection to it was that if he wore that thing through the town the girls would laugh at him. But they got him to wear the shirt.

Having succeeded with a part of their program, they proceeded to the second part, which was to have him wear breeches. Mrs. Gulick made them and the servant was taught how to put them on. But the next morning when they got up and looked out of the house, they saw the servant with a friend of his parading up and down in front of the house, each wearing a half a pair of breeches. On questioning the servant, he said, "You have been teaching us from the Bible that when we have things, we should be generous and divide them with those who do not have. So I have just followed out what you taught."

The water of the islands was brackish and could not be used for drinking purposes. So all the people of the island were forced to drink coconut water. The natives from childhood being accustomed to climb the coconut trees, went up and down like squirrels. One day when Gulick was thirsty, he asked a native boy to climb a tree and throw down some nuts. The old chief was standing by when the request was made and this was his comment, "You are a pretty man to come out here to teach us when you do not know enough to climb a coconut tree." Judged by such standards, I fear a good many of us would have to surrender our boasted superiority and confess ourselves beaten. We never can compete with the natives in many things.

Nevertheless "the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" and we bring to men the pearl of great price.—The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Moslem Missionaries in America

Islam's invasion of America is larger than generally known, but it is not making the headway its high priests have hoped for, and it seems unlikely, to say the least, that it will make any serious inroads on Christianity. Still, it is worth knowing that the followers of Mohammed are seeking converts in this country the while they are keeping immigrant Moslems loyal to Islam. Strangely enough, writes Mary Caroline Holmes in "The Moslem world," a magazine devoted to Christian missionary work among the Moslems, it is not orthodox Islam which has become missionary in character, but a movement within Islam which originated in India thirty-five years ago. Mirza Ghulam Ahmed, whose ancestors were Turkish, believed he had a special mission to bring about a regeneration of Hindus, Mohammedans and Christians. For the Mohammedans and Christians he was the Christ, he believed; for the Hindus an avatar, or incarnation, of Krishna. Mirza Ghulam held that Christ was taken from the cross alive, that he came to India, teaching and preaching, and that, dying in India, he was buried in Srinagar, Kashmir, where his tomb is shown today.

The Ahmadiya movement, as it is known, says the writer—formerly a Presbyterian missionary and now engaged in Near East Relief work—spread to Europe. In Woking, England, a mosque has been built and a measure of success attained, converts having been made even among titled persons. In Berlin, are two mosques, and in Paris, says the writer, a mosque has been erected by government aid. Here in America, we read:

"New York is a center of Moslem activity, the missionary in charge hailing from Madagascar. He is working solely among the negroes in Harlem, but has not succeeded in making converts to any extent, and thus far has been unable to open a mosque. When Siki, the Sengalese, a Moslem, was buried, the funeral was conducted by the Rev. A. Clayton Powell, pastor of the great Negro Abyssinian Baptist church, and not by the Moslem missionary.

"The New York negro is too strongly entrenched in the powerful Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Catholic bodies to be drawn away in any marked degree to a non-Christian faith. At the same time, Moslem propaganda is being carried on, and the proclamation of the equality of the races as a basic doctrine will have its appeal.

"It was a surprise to learn that in Yonkers, New York, there are not less than nine hundred Moslems, some of them converts and all white, holding regular services for worship on North Broadway.

"St. Louis is another scene of active work, with less to show in the way of converts than Chicago. While the missionary there regrets that he has not been able to persuade one single white person to become what he calls a priest—Islam has no priesthood; he means a Mufti—he boasts of several colored priests.

"California is the western limit of Islamic activity, with centers in San Francisco and Los Angeles. I have no data on the extent of the California work. Judging from the lack of marked success anywhere east of the Mississippi, it is safe to assert that the status quo of Christianity remains unchanged on the Pacific Coast.

"Bahaism, an offshoot of the Persian type of Islam, is represented by some few thousands of adherents, all American converts.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

The Biggest Gift So Far in the Endowment Campaign (Excluding the Jesse Eyeman Estate) Came From Uniontown, Pa.

This group of heroic Brethren should be an example to the entire brotherhood in the way of SACRIFICE, COURAGE, FAITH AND WORKS. This is one of the new churches, which a few years ago was a mission point. A faithful few here had struggled through the years until they had a fine brick church erected and paid for. They began to feel relieved from financial burdens, when a thing happened that would have completely discouraged those of less determination and faith. The coke coal vein that lies beneath the surface of the most of this section had been mined away from under the church, the surface gave way and destroyed the foundation of the church building to the extent that the entire building had to be torn down. Just a short time before this happened they had spent nearly $4,000.00 in improvements, a large portion of which had not been paid at that time. There were only two courses before them to follow, one give up the work and disband, the other to rebuild and go forward. They were not long in deciding the course they would follow, that was, GO FORWARD. They recently purchased a building site in the same section of the city for $13,000.00 which has two houses on it, one suitable for a parsonage, the other will have to be moved when they build. The two lots are located on a very desirable corner. The building will be delayed for two years on account of finances. They are now worshipping in a very desirable place, only two blocks from the old church in a modern school building and torium and have been given assurance they can continue until their new building is erected. They are planning on erecting a modern brick building, which when completed will be an honor to the church.

WHEN I COMPARE THE LITTLE DEBTS THAT SOME CHURCHES CARRY, WHO TRY TO EXCUSE THEMSELVES FROM SUPPORTING THE COLLEGE ENDOWMENT ON ACCOUNT OF "THE LOCAL DEBTS AND NEEDS", I FEEL LIKE POINTING THEM TO UNIONTOWN. This people never dodged the campaign and though I felt like passing them by, they said "COME, WE WILL DO OUR BEST", and they did.

The Big Surprise

Was a gift from Brother Harry Krepps and his wife, of 100 acres of the famous 9 foot Pittsburgh coke coal vein. This same vein of coal has sold as high as $1,500 per acre in Pennsylvania. The land is located on the main line of the B. & O. railroad in Hancock county, West Virginia. This with a large tract was under an option for $130.00 per acre, some holdings in this locality have refused to sell under $200.00 per acre. A very conservative estimate of its value is $100.00 an acre, a price for which Brother Krepps would not sell. We have placed the gift at $10,000.00 and if the college holds it long enough will be worth many times more than the estimate. Brother Krepps is very modest in this gift and desires no publicity he given, as he gave it out of a heart of love for the church and the cause of Christ. He and his wife have been of great help to the progress of the work in Uniontown. They have no children and have arranged that all their property after they are through with their work on earth, shall go to the college and the general interests of the church. Here is ANOTHER EXAMPLE GIVEN BY UNIONTOWN AS TO PERSONAL STEWARDSHIP. There are hundreds of our people who have no immediate dependents, to whom the Lord has entrusted money and property, who should be looking forward to that day when the question is asked, "Whose shall these things be?" and should so arrange their affairs, that they might answer "Yours, Lord."

Besides the gift of Brother Krepps and his wife, the Uniontown church have $755.01. Making the total gift for Uniontown $10,755.01.

Last, but not least, I desire to speak a word for the pastor, Forest Byers, who recently assumed the pastorate here. He was formerly one of my boys when pastor in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and both he and his wife I received into the church there. Naturally I have more than ordinary interest in them. He was a booster for the College all through the campaign and gave me his entire time while there. He is well qualified to be of great help in their building project, having had much experience with a large construction company in Pennsylvania. We have no doubt as to the future of the work there under his leadership, supported by a loyal membership.

W. S. BELL.

BRETHREN RETREAT AND BIBLE CONFERENCE

First, it was what its name implies, a real place of prayer. No one will ever forget the morning meetings; the first week led by Dr. Miller in his own way, throwing around his studies of the book of James a deep devotional spirit. The real revival spirit was present. One could not help but wonder what the effect would have been had all of our churches been represented by great numbers. The second week the quiet hour services were led by Brother Stuckey—two mornings—Brethren Diker and Wirick. Each in their own way brought masterpieces. Heaven was brought down close to the earth in these precious morning hours. And the atmosphere was entirely Brethren, if you know what that means; and those who were here, know.

North Liberty again sent two of her young people for a week. The W. M. S. of this church is doing what every Brethren church could do, and what Methodists, United Brethren, Evangelical, and Church of the Brethren are doing. Brother Stuckey's addresses should have been heard by every official board in the District. Our reputation as ministers and officers for all pulling together in the program arranged by District Conference is certainly attracting SOME ATTENTION among other church people. We are what we are because of WHAT WE ARE. We can be different whenever WE WILL, that's all. In some of the commercial organizations of the country the following little chorus has been used repeatedly, and I am told with good effect. It is sung to the old tune, "Granny Will Your Dog Bite."

"When we get together, together, together,
When we get together, the happier are we;
For my work is your work, and your work is my work,

When we get together, the happier are we."

I move you, Mr. Chairman, that every disgruntled nunny in the 'desitric' be required to sing that chorus every morning at the breakfast table for a month before his credentials are accepted in the "Exalted Order of Do-things." "As many as favor the motion will say 'I'. 'I-I-I-.~!!'" "The I's have it, and the rule will be strictly enforced. A—men!

Brother Duker, the presiding officer of the Bible conference just closed, merits this mention. In that happy mood which begets happiness, he stood before us day after day, leading, directing, admonishing, speaking a word of recognition as a delegation from some church would file into the tabernacle for the day; never failing to call attention to some special good thing in address, or song, and without a note of disappointment when some one failed to appear on the program; that man Duker makes an ideal leader for just such a meeting. He should be kept at the helm as the old ship of success is certainly coming into the harbor.

Brethren Flora, Tecter, Leatherman, Grisso, Coleman with his evangelistic note and great message, Stewart, and Maus brought good cheer from their respective fields. Besides Brethren Stuckman, and Whetstone brought great sermons. We missed Brother Riddle and his people from Bryan, Ohio.

The last night brought us a great climax with the largest crowd ever convened in the tabernacle for a night meeting. The churches from Elkhart, Goshen, and Nappanee, had had worked out a pageant, religious, beautiful, instructive and inspiring. This, with many of the addresses were of Chautauqua order. From all we have been hearing, there will not be room in what buildings are on the ground for the people next year. But there are a lot of fine new cottages on the east side which can be secured. Brother Brower and his trustees are doing a real piece of constructive work in their handling of the real estate end of the park. They are compelled to lay off more lots. Remember the Conference through its trustees own about 40 acres here with more than a half mile of lake front.

There is a great crowd of fine Brethren here and many more coming. When the lots begin to sell for around $500, some of you Brethren will wonder why you have waited so long. Better write J. W. Brower, Milford, Indiana, about that summer home you have been dreaming about, and remember that is among real born-and-bred Brethren. If you are not of that type, and you locate here, you will either become one, or life will be made miserable for you. Here's the glad hand; what more do you want?

G. W. RENCH

A TRIMESTER IN JOHNSTOWN, PENNA.

Since coming to the college six years ago, I have not found much time for writing nor indeed have I had occasion to write for this department of our church paper.

One year ago I had the privilege of supplying the Fair Haven and Rittman pulpits over the summer. I trust the good brethren and sisters of those churches will forgive me for not writing about our work at those points. I shall not do so at this late hour. But I do feel constrained to say a word about our First church at Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

On May first, Brother Ashman went to California and asked me to take over his work during his three months' absence. After a protest and a little hesitation at stepping into a pulpit and a work so efficiently manned, I consented and had the pleasure of becoming intimately acquainted with one of the very best churches of our beloved brotherhood.

Johnstown is a typical Pennsylvania city. It has 9,000 Italians, 1,000 Spaniards and perhaps 1,500 or more Mexicans, to say nothing of the Russians, Greeks, Slavish, Poles, etc., concerning whom I made no inquiry because of not possessing their sneezy tongues.

I feel that the Brethren church ought to be doing something for the Spanish speaking people of Johnstown. The Italians are being cared for by the First Presbyterian church of the city, which has a native pastor and a separate mission with services in Italian, an Americanization program, etc.

Johnstown is laid out in the form of a Chinese dragon or as one brother suggested to me: "In the form of a lobster on its back." Our membership is scattered through the original boroughs Kernville, Horners-town, Moxham, Roxbury and Dale. The latter is an independent little zone within the city.

As is generally known, we have a church at Moxham and one at Morrellville. Some of the members of the First church live in those sections of the city, but are permitted to unite with the mission points or remain with the mother church as they see fit.

I had the pleasure of attending the cornerstone laying of the new building now under construction at Moxham. Brother Belote is making a 100% effort to put that work "across" and many are taking heart because they now believe it will be a success.

During my sojourn I noted also that "Joe Gingrich, the Morrellville pastor, is soon to have a fine new parsonage.

Now to come back to the First church, I found the work in splendid condition.

One of the most gratifying things of all was the discovery of such a fine, loyal bunch of young people. They take an active part in religious things and seem to lack the earmarks of the Boeotian, irreverent, simian, superecilious type, so characteristic of a lot of our youth of today (unless my eyes and my intelligence completely trick me).

Much could be said from many angles about the work. The splendid building and equipment, the fine and inspiring choir with Prof. Lloyd Jones (genuine Welsh) leading, the fine pipe organ with Mrs. Harry Darr (nee Effie Goughnour) presiding. May I say that even our sexton "Sam" Launtz occupies a place of no small dignity, running a free jitney service on various occasions.

If space permitted, a word could be said about the various auxiliaries and their efficient officers. From every standpoint the work is "looking up."

It is hard to measure the possibilities of a work like ours in the flood city. The universal testimony seems to be that Ashman has done and is doing a great piece of work there.

I have appreciated this supply privilege as a fine change of occupation, and I could only wish for my teaching colleagues here at the college, the same sort of beneficial change at least once in a while. Our prayers shall surely follow Brother Ashman and all of his co-workers in so fine and substantial a field in the work of the Kingdom of God.

A. L. DELOZIER.

FLORA, INDIANA

I have just received, and read with interest, the Evangelist for week of August 11th. I wonder if every one reads the Evangelist in just the same order as I. First the Editorial Review; second the News from the Field; third the Editorial; fourth the Brethren Pulpit. Please notice the first interest is in what the other fellow is doing. I must confess to a natural aversion to the writing of a report. However, if my reports are as eagerly read by my Brethren as their reports are by myself, then I will put aside this aversion and report the work here.

Our last report of February first left us in the midst of the follow up work after our revival of January. As reported at that time some forty-four were baptized and received into membership. Since then we have received, by relation and baptism, thirteen—making a total of fifty-seven for the year. Ten of the last named coming to us from the Darwin church which discontinued as an organization.

I need not remind you that the Flora church is one of our strong churches. Here we have as fine a following as you will find anywhere. Some of the most capable leaders that we have ever been privileged to work with. Of course we have our problems and certain hindrances to the work, but with the faithfulness which is manifest we are very optimistic of the future. We hold second place in the list of seven churches in the city. The Church of the Brethren is first in membership and attendance. A very fine spirit of cooperation exists between all of the churches. Because of certain conditions we deemed it unwise to enter into the Sunday night union services which are held at the community park during July and August. After explaining the situation to the Ministerial Association they excused us from these services without any harm to our relationship. The results from holding our own Sunday evening services have more than justified the action. There has been a gain in the evening services since last December, at which time we took up the work, of three hundred per cent.

For three years the Flora church had no Christian Endeavor or other young people's meeting. We were successful in organizing a society, but later discontinued meeting on account of the union services. Up to that time the attendance was good and we will begin services again September first. We do not have the following of young people that we should, due to the fact that they have been long neglected at this place. With the help of certain strong leaders we hope to be able to report a real revival along this line.

The Easter Mission offering, while not what it should have been, was in comparison a great victory for the Lord. Keep your eye on us next year. The Educational Day and Benevolence Day offerings were equally good. The school observed Children's Day with a fine program and were greeted by a crowded house. Flora boasts of a very fine W. M. S. This society aside from contributing $75 to the expense budget, gave an additional $50 to a special church offering, $50 to Foreign Missions, $100 to Ft. Wayne Mission, $25 to Ashland, and a substantial sum to the parsonage fund. The Sisterhood Girls will have charge of the banquet at the National Conference. The Sunday school has climbed up considerably over the two hundred mark and prospects are good for further increase. So, Brethren, all in all we praise God for his great leadership and blessing upon his people here in Flora. We do not play to the public nor resort to clap trap methods. We just stand by the "Old Book" and good Brethren doctrine. If that fails we are perfectly willing to fail with it. We have never seen it fail, have you?

As this is a report we feel that we can tell you that after four months of service we were called for another year, beginning October first, with a very substantial increase in salary, and given the privilege of holding two meetings. One of these will be in the Hagerstown church and the other at Berlin, Pennsylvania. These meetings begin October 25th and continue to December 5th. May we ask that you remember us in prayer as we labor in these places for the salvation of precious souls. We will be assisted by J. Basil Long and wife.

This is a lengthy report, but if the editor does not blue pencil half of it we will try and report again about February first, 1927, if the Lord tarries and it be his will.

FRANK G. COLEMAN.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA, NEWS

The mission church here has just passed through a four weeks' session of Summer Bible school under the leadership of the pastor. The school opened with an enrollment of seven and closed with forty on the roll. Three hours of intensive study and work were spent each day for five days a week. The children showed a fine spirit and aptitude to learn the simple truths of the Scripture. The time was spent in teaching the children to read the Scriptures daily, urging them to believe them to be safe, practice them to be safe and live them to be holy. Much time was spent in memorizing the Scriptures. Each child memorized 25 verses, besides learning from memory the Books of the Bible in the form of a poem which gave each one a knowledge in one sentence of the seed thought of each book. Twenty Bible choruses were learned from memory, also other vital questions concerning Jesus Christ and his Word. The children were also taught the value of prayer and each one participated in the practice of the presence of the God of prayer. They were made to realize the need of reverence in God's house and before his throne. At the close of the session a unique Bible demonstration program was given by the children, first in their own church and then it was repeated in the M. E. church South, the largest church in Winchester, having a membership of 1200. The people just marvelled at seeing what little minds could do for God and humanity here upon earth. The children are glad to repeat their program in any church upon request. All they ask is a voluntary offering for the benefit of the much needed heating plant of the church, also to complete the basement for Sunday school purposes. A request is made of all sincere intercessors to pray that the Word which these children have taken in his grace may bring forth an abundance of fruit for his honor and glory. God grant us more teachers who will have a zeal to bring up and nurture children in the Scriptural way.

WISDOM WAITETH AT DAWN

Wisdom is radiant and fadeth not away;
And easily is she beheld of them that love her,
And found of them that seek her.
She forestalleth them that desire to know her, making herself first known.
He that riseth up early to seek her shall have no toil,
For he shall find her sitting at his gates.
For to think upon her is perfectness of understanding,
And he that watcheth for her shall quickly be free from care,
For she goeth about, herself seeking them that are worthy of her,
And in their paths she appeareth unto them graciously.
And in every purpose she meeteth them.
For her true beginning is the desire for discipline;
And the desire for discipline is love of her;
And love of her is observance of her laws;
And to give heed to her laws confirmeth incorruption;
And incorruption bringeth near unto God.

the various committees of our Christian Endeavor, we are taught initiative and self-confidence without which we could not be bold in the work of the Lord.

Our Lookout Committees should strive to win others to God. They try to interest the young people in our Endeavor work, they strive to secure new members, and they emphasize loyalty to our pledge. Work of this kind can be done by all of us, too often it is left to a few, but Christ's plan was that all who hear the Word should pass it on to some one else.

The Prayer-meeting Committee is important in selecting good leaders for our Christian Endeavor prayer meetings. All active members should be encouraged to lead frequently.

The Social Committee may be a real help in soul winning. Many times a smile, a friendly word or two may encourage a discouraged soul and may even be the means of winning some out for Christ. We may each cooperate with this committee by being kind and considerate of others. We should be ready to speak a word of welcome or friendly greeting to any stranger who might come to our church. We sometimes do not know how far our influence may extend along this line nor how much good we can do.—The Christian Conservator.

They have built a splendid temple just outside of Chicago which is symbolic of their cult. One wonders if these converts realize what the name taken by their late leader, Bahai Ullah, means. And if they do, is he accepted as the 'divine Effulgence of God' as this name would indicate? In many cities they have stated worship with libraries and reading rooms.

"Still another form of Islam is here, Sufism, Persian mysticism. Its followers too have headquarters in New York, and hold regular services, which are advertised in the papers.

"It would seem from the foregoing that we shall have to regard Islam as an active missionary force in our midst. And what are we going to do about it

"Christianity has nothing to fear from comparison with other faiths. 'And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me,' is as true today as when he uttered those prophetic words. He does not lie buried in Srinagar, but is alive forevermore, as Islam will yet find true."—Selected by Wm. A. Gearhart from "The Literary Digest."

THE TIE THAT BINDS

TETLOW-WAGNER—Chester Tetlow, of Downs, Kansas, and Miss Leona Wagner, of Portis, were united in holy wedlock, at the Brethren Parsonage, Wednesday evening, May 26, 1926. The groom is a grandson of a former charter member of the church, and the bride has been a member for a number of years. They are at home on a farm near town, and attend our Sunday school and church services. May the blessing of God be upon them.

W. R. DEETER.

PFIFFER-MASON—A very pretty wedding occurred on June 22 in the Brethren Parsonage in Smithville. At this time Mr. Elmer Pfeiffer and Miss Anna Mason were united in marriage, the ring ceremony being used by the writer. These young people are residents of Fremont, Ohio, being members of the Fremont Brethren church, and will continue to reside there. The best wishes of a host of friends attend them.
MORTON L. SANDS.

AMSTUTZ RUTT—The Smithville Brethren church was the scene of a very beautiful and impressive marriage ceremony on Sunday, June 29. This was the occasion of the marriage of Mr. Harvey J. Amstutz to Miss Beulah Rutt which occurred immediately following the regular morning services. The ring ceremony was read by their pastor, Rev. M. L. Sands. The groom was attended by Mr. Frank McKee of Orrville and Mrs. Perry Hurlacher of Waynesboro was matron of honor. Miss Laura Eichelberger of Ashland presided at the piano and Mrs. Lydia King Frieze of Detroit sang two very beautiful solos. These young people are prominent members of the Smithville-Sterling church and the best wishes of a host of friends go with them on their journey through life. May God's richest blessings rest upon them both.
MORTON L. SANDS.

BOWMAN DODDS—Mr. Herbert E. Bowman and Miss Mamie Mildred Dodds were united in marriage at the home of the writer, Washington, D. C., August 3, 1926. The bride is the daughter of T. T. Dodds of Harrisonburg, Virginia, and has been a successful school teacher in her community. The groom is the son of Rev. J. M. Bowman, also of Harrisonburg. Both are members of the Brethren church at Bethlehem. May God's choicest blessings attend them as they journey through life together. Ceremony performed by HOMER A. KENT.

JACKSON-YOUNG—Arthur Jackson and Edna Young were united in marriage at the home of the bridegroom, at Roanoke, Indiana, at 2:30 P. M., July 27, 1926, by the writer. The groom is the son of Mrs. Jacob Schoeff. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carry Young of near Roanoke, Indiana. Both are esteemed young people and may God bless them with a happy home.
W. F. JOHNSON.

IN THE SHADOW

LEMON—George Lemon, a member of the First Brethren church, Portis, Kansas, died June 2, 1926, aged 70 years and a few months. He was the father of eight sons and three daughters, all of whom with the good wife are living. Funeral services were largely attended, and conducted by G. J. Wolters, assisted by the writer.
W. R. DEETER.

SHILLINGER—Susan Shillinger, daughter of Andrew and Nancy Yarian was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, August 19th, 1832, and departed this life July 21, 1926, aged 62 years, 11 months and 2 days. She was the second member of a family of ten brothers and sisters and was the second of this group to be called by her Master to the life beyond.

In 1901 she was united in marriage to Charles Shillinger of Roann, Indiana. To this union were born two children—a son and a daughter. The son preceded his mother in death in infancy, and the husband and father just thirteen years ago on the same day as the mother. The deceased was a member of the Roann Brethren church, and hers was a consistent Christian life, being spent in service for the welfare and happiness of others. She will be greatly missed by all who knew her and in the home the loss of a mother is keenly felt by a devoted daughter. No language can express the beauty, the power, and the majesty of a mother's love.

Those in mourning are—the daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Baber; three brothers—Wilson and Samuel Yarian of Roann, Indiana; Sylvanus Yarian of Los Angeles, California; five sisters—Mrs. Mary Swihart of Roann, Indiana; Mrs. Gertrude of Akron, Indiana; Mrs. George Smith of Chili, Indiana; Mrs. William Bretz of Watertown, Ohio; and Mrs. Alfred Warsaw of New York, and many other near relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor, O. C. Lemert, in the Roann Brethren church, and the body laid to rest in the Roann I. O. O. F. cemetery.
O. C. LEMERT.

SWIHART—Anna Horner, the daughter of Eli and Catherine Horner, was born May 15, 1847, in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, later moving with her parents to Ashland County, Ohio. In 1866 she came to LaGrange County, Indiana, near Brighton, where she lived the remainder of her life.

On November 13, 1872, she was united in marriage to Joseph Swihart. To this union were born five children, Aura M. Wolfe of North Liberty, Indiana; Rollin J., Jason E., and Alma E. McDonald of Brighton and Bertha A. Merrifield of Glenview, Illinois. She also leaves six brothers and ten grandchildren.

She accepted her Savior early in life and continued faithful to the end. She lived ever for those about her and was a shining example of service and self sacrifice.

While at the home of her daughter in North Liberty she was stricken with pneumonia and passed away July 15th at the age of seventy-nine years and two months. She is mourned by all who knew her. We will miss her cheerful greetings and her deeds of kindness are beyond our power to reckon, but our loss is her eternal gain.

Funeral services for Mrs. Joseph Swihart, who passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. G. Wolfe, at North Liberty, Indiana, were held Sunday afternoon, July 18th, at the Brighton Chapel and burial was made in the nearby cemetery.

Rev. J. Allen Miller who had been attending the annual conference of the Brethren church at Shipshewana Lake, officiated.
BERTHA E. MERRIFIELD.

PAYTON—Marguerite Ann Payton was born in Fort Wayne, Indiana, May 16, 1922 and departed this life July 26, 1926, after an illness of three weeks' duration, a complication of scarlet fever and diphtheria. It was a relief when the Messenger came to take her out of this earthly struggle which meant so much suffering for her. She leaves to mourn her departure a mother and step-father, Harry Bonawitz, one sister, two step-brothers, one step-sister and four grandparents. She was a girl of unusually sweet disposition and had many friends. She will be sadly missed in the home, in Sunday school and wherever she was known. Our loss will be heaven's gain.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

OPEN FOR REVIVAL WORK

I will be available for evangelistic work from September on. Anyone interested may address me as follows:

EMMA M. ABOUD,
2150 Eight Ave., Astoria, L. I.
New York City.

FILLMORE, CALIFORNIA

The Fillmore church is seeking a pastor to take charge of the pastorate for the year beginning January 1, 1927. Applications should be made to the following address,

E. R. ROBINSON,
521 Ojai Road, Santa Paula, California.

OPEN FOR PASTORATE

I have resigned at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, and will be open for a call to a pastorate. Anyone interested please write me at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, or see me at General Conference.
JAMES S. COOK.

ON TO WINONA

This bit of information may be a little tardy, yet we believe it may help some to decide at the last moment to wend their way to Winona. The first thing I wanted to say was about health conditions. I am glad to inform the brotherhood that if there were any cause for alarm as to health conditions last year, this cause has been removed. There is not a case of sickness of any kind at Winona at present. The water supply is excellent, using as they do, the same supply of water that is used in the city of Warsaw. As to lodging I would say, there will be room for everyone. Winona is prepared to comfortably entertain almost every man, woman and child in the Brethren church, for I am told they can easily care for 20,000 persons. The same rates prevail as in other years. You will not need to secure your lodging in advance. If you had not planned to come, after reading this, pack your grip, jump into the flivver and head it toward Winona. We assure you the best of accommodations, even the kind for your liking at a very meagre figure. This ought to be the greatest conference ever. It will be, if every church will see to it, and have its full share of delegates. I shall be glad to assist any one in finding suitable lodging. If I can help you, inquire for me on arriving. Thank you.

C. C. GRISSO,
Chairman Entertainment Committee.

ASHLAND COLLEGE

Ashland, Ohio

ASHLAND COLLEGE will open its Forty-ninth Year, Tuesday, September 14, 1926. The following departments offer the customary courses:

ARTS AND SCIENCES, leading to the usual bachelor's degrees.

SEMINARY, recently extended on a six-year basis,—three in the Arts College and three in the Seminary. The Bachelor of Arts degree at the end of four and the Bachelor of Theology at the end of six years.

EDUCATION—Two years' course leading to elementary certification under Ohio laws. Also in other states with equivalent requirements.

Four years' course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Education. Certificates granted for state-wide teaching in High School. So in other states with exchange arrangements with Ohio.

MUSIC—Piano, full graduation courses with two teachers.

Voice, as above with three teachers.

Violin, with one teacher and an assistant.

In every relation and in all courses of instruction, the whole institution is frankly and avowedly Christian. In courses permitting religious discussion, Christian ideals are stressed.

Student life and activity are largely under the close and sympathetic supervision of two Deans, one for men and one for women.

Parents and young people are both alike asked to consider this College when contemplating further study.

For catalogue and further information, write to the president,

Downward Revision of Moral Standards

"Downward Revision" has long been a term to capture the popular imagination when applied to tariff problems, and it has some sound reasoning back of it, but when such words are applied to moral standards, as they frequently are in practice if not so often in theory and declaration, they are wholly lacking in any reasonable foundation. Downward revision in this connection is based upon the very human disinclination to go against the current, or popular practice. People prefer to drift, to go with the crowd, to take the easier course. Such a course, however, militates against strength and efficiency, and makes impossible the development of the highest and finest character. And the more one pampers self by lowering the standard and easing up on the strain, the more unworthy and disappointing is the result. The more a gardener neglects his garden the more the weeds will grow, the harder the soil becomes and the more stunted and unresponsive becomes the good fruit of the ground. Evil and inferior qualities are as ubiquitous as weeds, and without constant and determined resistance will find their way into life with dreadfully disappointing and even disastrous results.

This is saying nothing new; it is a fact perfectly familiar to everybody, and yet there are great hosts of people who deliberately fold their arms and follow the line of least resistance. Because the majority of his crowd played cards, smoked cigarets and tipped in bootleg liquor, a young man who had not been used to such conduct began to indulge, at first lightly and then more generously, though he himself was a church member. It was easier to fall in line than it was to resist the temptation. A splendid young business man, who was getting ahead financially in a very remarkable way, but who was nevertheless a victim of excessive smoking and was beginning to reap the fruit of such dissipation in his own body, said when admonished to quit, "But I can't; the habit is too strong." What he really meant was that he did not want to endure the discomfort and effort of quitting, that he preferred to indulge the pleasure and ease of continuing. A young couple entered upon their new home with nightly prayer and the reading of the Word and the offering of thanks at the meals, but in the community where their home was established they formed intimate contacts with friends and neighbors who were worldly and godless, and joked about pious folks and religious matters, with the result that these two young people became very cautious that no one should suspect them of being given to religious practices, and finally they lost their relish for it and gave it up altogether. It was easier for them to drift into worldliness than to endure the ridicule of friends. A young lady who was a talented Sunday school teacher and had been a spiritual power among her classes of girls in the past, began to break over at the earnest solicitation of a particular group and to go to the movies quite regularly and to attend quiet little dances on occasions. Her girls and their mothers nearly all indulged in such things and they insisted that it was perfectly right. She thought it was easier to yield a little to her girls' importunities than to run the risk of offending them by her refusal and an undue effort to force upon them her higher and more spiritual viewpoint, to which they seemed averse. The result was that she went from little to more indulgence, until she so neutralized her spirituality that she lost her power. Some very godly mothers of a certain church, with little children prattling about their feet, picking up every word and suggestion and imitating every bearing and habit of dress, and with the women and girls of the church and community trusting in the steadfastness of their examples, though all others might be frivolous and unstable, as confidently as the religious devotee reads the Word of God, began to feel the strain of maintaining their conservative ideals and habits. So they counselled among themselves that they might be making themselves needlessly peculiar and out-of-step with the crowd and that there was really no harm in being up-to-date and no virtue in being out of style. They began to conform to the latest fashions, subtracting from the modesty of their dress, the naturalness of their features, and the womanliness of their hair, until they felt decidedly less distinctive and more at one with the world.

But so many evidences of this tendency to weaken before our high standards have been pouring in upon us that we would become monotonous if we should attempt to enumerate them all. From the ministry as well as from the laity they have come. A Protestant minister said in our hearing, "There are some things in the Sermon on the Mount that we cannot practice now, that is literally; they are impractical from that standpoint, but the spirit these admonitions of our Lord convey, is very fine and must continue to be our spiritual ideal." And he instanced his remarks by citing the injunction to turn the other cheek and to give the extra cloak. "Ripple," in the "Christian Endeavor World," calls our attention to the fact that a Jewish rabbi in New York got into headlines by declaring that the Ten Commandments were out-of-date and ought to be revised so as to be more in harmony with modern life. The Sermon on the Mount, too, he said, ought to be discarded for the reason that it is impossible to live up to it. "Ripple" remarks that "There is a strange similarity between those arguments and the arguments we have long heard about the Christian Endeavor pledge and the Eighteenth Amendment. Young people cannot live up to the Christian Endeavor pledge, we are told; therefore abolish it or tone it down almost to the vanishing point. Similarly we are told that the Eighteenth Amendment cannot be enforced, and consequently should be abolished or modified so that its enforcement would be equivalent to non-enforcement." Then he adds, "To argue that ideals should be abolished because they are hard to reach is unconvincing ... One cannot get rid of the feeling that people want to abolish them because they are so inconvenient. They hurt the conscience. It would be so nice if nobody ever reminded us of our duty, or the voice of God did not call at certain moments, 'Thou shalt not.'"

No, there must be no downward revision of moral standards. So long as the sparkling diamond is desired above the dull, uncut stone; so long as the mighty and stately oak of the forest is more valued than the tender sapling; so long as the strong, beautiful and self-controlled life is more highly prized and respected than the weak, undisciplined, selfish, ugly soul, just so long we must not, dare not permit a lowering of moral standards.

Checking the Divorce Evil

We do not half realize how serious a problem the divorce evil is, nor how it is continually increasing. That alone can explain the church's undue silence regarding it. We do not understand that it is becoming a real menace to the American home and to national ideals and strength. We have imagined that because church folks do not belong to the divorce stratum and know very little about it, that there is very little of it. Of course it requires very little observation to convince us that there is all too much divorce within the church itself, but it is certainly true that there is very much more outside than within. It is very evident, however, that we do not realize the extent and the spread of it, not the importance of taking steps to check the evil. We seldom preach about it, seldom write about it and very seldom is it the subject of any discussion or conversation, excepting in a gossiping way. There are many men in positions of civil authority, who are rebuking us by their interest in combating the evil and are calling us to cooperate in the task. The church cannot afford to keep silent or to withhold its influence in so serious a social problem. It has a divinely given message on the question, positive and preventive as well as corrective, and to fail to deliver it is infidelity to its commission.

Judge Morschauser, of New York, in an article in the Woman's Home Companion, points out that the number of divorces per thousand population is increasing while the number of marriages is decreasing. He calls all to cooperation in an effort to solve the problem and offers some suggestions that would be worthy of a pronouncement by an ecclesiastical body, if he had laid an additional emphasis upon proper moral and Christian training in the home. They should start us to thinking seriously about the matter. Following are his suggestions for the check of the increasing divorce rate:

1. Lessening the strain in home and business life. In their ambition, parents push their children to the breaking point. They must go through school quickly. They must make teams and fraternities and sororities. They must be popular. They must look smart, and keep up with the fads of the day.

2. The passing of stricter, uniform marriage laws. It should not be possible for a young couple, intoxicated by driving forty miles an hour in the moonlight, to rouse some village justice and be married before the intoxication passes. A license should be granted only in the county where the woman resides, and the application for the license should be made at least two weeks in advance.

3. Divorce should be made prohibitive, and legal separations should be substituted for divorce. Repeatedly I have seen that both parties regretted the action when a case actually came to trial. The plaintiff would have withdrawn the charge if she had not feared the scorn of meddlers who urged her to bring suit. Again only false pride, the determination not to admit her mistake, prevents a reconciliation in court.

And when I tell you that for every one hundred and fifty cases in which the decree is granted in my court are one hundred in which reconciliations are effected, you will understand why I believe that, in their hearts, most couples want not divorce but an adjustment of their difficulties.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Bryan, Ohio, reports the work of that congregation as moving forward in an encouraging way. A successful Vacation Bible School was conducted and the total enrollment was 64. Brother Riddle was superintendent of the school, in which work he has had previous experience. The pastor has been retained for his fifth year at an increased salary.

Brother George E. Cone, pastor at Milledgeville, Illinois, reports the reception into membership by baptism of four on a recent date. The church in its physical appearance is undergoing improvement. The pastor also reports having been engaged in Daily Vacation Bible School work, a union school which numbered 115 enrollments. Brother Cone taught lessons in "The Tabernacle of the Wilderness" and found the work very profitable as well as enjoyable.

According to custom, one issue of the Evangelist will be dropped at the General Conference season, this year, being the issue immediately following Conference, or the issue of September 1st. The next number will be under date of September 8th. We suggest that district conference program committees whose conferences meet in early October would do well to get their programs in the editor's hands for that issue.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes that encouraging progress continues in our Argentine mission field. Several good Sunday school teachers have been added to the mission at Rio Cuarto. The attendance at the two stations in Buenos Aires is very good and the locations are apparently strategic. The thing that impresses us about the report is the vastness of the field and how constantly our workers must be seeking to spread themselves out to the limit. How challenging is the task and opportunity of the church, when such conditions in this and other fields are brought to our attention. Truly the harvest is plenteous but the laborers are few.

Brother G. E. Drushal writes another interesting letter concerning the progress of the work at Lost Creek, Kentucky. The regular Sunday services have reached a high water mark—154. Brother Mark Early, who with his wife recently joined the Riverside Institute force, is being used in the pulpit as well as business manager and teacher. The statement that Riverside has contributed fifty per cent of the educational uplift in Breathitt county in recent years, we can easily believe to be true. It has been a work of very great and good influence and continues to be so, and as such deserves the loyal support of the entire brotherhood.

Brother George H. Jones, on behalf of his committee appointed by General Conference to arrange in some manner to take care of the interests of the boys and plan for their interest and development in religious ways, makes an appeal in this issue for all who are concerned to come to Conference and meet with the committee. The letter came too late to accomplish its purpose, but we are giving it space because of the interest it may create and the hope it may give the youth to know that actual effort is being put forth to do something for them. There ought to be a very general participation in this canvass of plans and programs. The ministry ought to be one hundred percent interested in this problem, and if not all have plans to suggest, all might be profited by hearing the discussions and having their vision of the problem enlarged.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports what another group of small Pennsylvania churches did for the Endowment campaign. The churches visited are Aleppo, Quiet Dell, and Sugar Grove, the Green county circuit, being served during the summer by Brother Orville Ullom, graduate of Ashland College; and the Highland church in Washington county, where Brother Thomas F. Howell is pastor. These churches showed their loyalty to the extent of $841.60. Not every congregation can put the Endowment dial forward by great leaps, but every one can give at least a little lift, and with every one doing its best, whether little or much, the campaign is destined to go over the top with a shout. It speaks for a growing interest in Ashland College to find every group of Brethren, large or small, in every nook and corner of the brotherhood, coming forward with a generous gift for the support of our own church school. The dial now stands at $59,476.80.

Items of Interest

The Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde type of church member will eventually be detected and brought to task for his duplicity and when that happens, it will ill-become him to assume a defiant attitude toward his accuser.

The Western Christian Advocate notes the recent death of Dan Crawford, a missionary in Africa, was of universal interest. He had been a servant of Jesus Christ in the Congo for a long lifetime. He went there from his native heath in Scotland, following closely in the footsteps of Henry M. Stanley. He located himself in "the long grass," as he was wont to call it, and remained for twenty-seven years without returning to civilization. He made one of the most remarkable records since the days of Livingstone. In 1913 he came out and back to his friends, told his story, wrote a book, "Thinking Black," and went back leaving a trail of light behind him.

Sixty members of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, besides more than a hundred visitors, representing all parts of the South, met together at Tuskegee Institute for the seventh annual meeting of the commission. The meeting was the most largely attended, and in the opinion of many the best, in the history of the movement. Among the number were many well known ministers, educators, business and professional men, Y. M. C. A. secretaries, and leaders of women's religious and civic organizations. Racial and interracial problems were discussed, and special effort will be made during the coming year looking toward better railroad transportation for Negroes, fairer distribution of school funds, improvement of the environment of Negro children, better housing and sanitary conditions, and the encouragement of home ownership.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Christian Attitude Toward Science

By Prof. R. R. Haun, Head Dept. of Physics, Ashland College

Modern science is said to have begun with Gallileo, who lived the latter part of the eighteenth century. He was the first to demonstrate and prove his theories by experiments, and consequently to state with authority many of the ideas that the old natural philosophers, as they were called, believed to be true. He proved the laws of the pendulum, upon which our clocks are based; he verified the laws of falling bodies and gave the famous Archimedes principle dealing with the buoyancy of objects immersed in liquids. Many of the other important laws of the universe were first formulated and proved by Gallileo. One of the ideas he had was that the earth revolved around the sun instead of the sun around the earth. Now this was unfortunate for him, because the rest of the people of that day believed that the sun revolved about the earth and when Gallileo continued to teach the opposite and incorporated the idea into his book, then the church took action, placed Gallileo on trial, pointed out to him that such an idea was impossible and contrary to the scriptures, and finally compelled him to recant his teachings and sayings about the matter or else be expelled from the church and sent to purgatory. And yet Gallileo was right and the church was wrong and every boy and girl is taught now in geography just exactly what Gallileo maintained and the church opposed at that time.

The church also opposed the idea that the earth was round because a figurative expression is to be found in the Bible about the four corners of the earth. And so ever since the days of Gallileo it has continually opposed new ideas that have been developed by scientists, always in the end being forced to give in and accept the new idea and adapting herself accordingly.

This has been a very unfortunate condition, which while improving still continues to exist today and proves detrimental to the best interests of the church. In the first place it severs the men of science from the church by unjustly criticizing the work that they are doing. But worst of all it is helping to estrange the young people from the church. In this modern day of education, there is scarcely a child who does not in the public or high schools learn something of science and come to appreciate the exactness and reliability of the scientific method. When a principle is taught them and demonstrated and they justify the idea with their own personal experiments in the laboratory, then they are impressed with the reliability of scientific procedure and the foolishness of questioning the results. Having thus been convicted of the absolute truth of the science they have learned, they question mentally their religious leaders and teachers who slur and ridicule scientists and scientific achievement, when they should be helping their pupils to adjust the differences where they seem to arise. Naturally too they are characteristically passing through a general period of doubt at that time and so they are further alienated by this condition.

Now this idea that science is detrimental to religion is absolutely false and without foundation. It probably has arisen for several reasons. In the first place because of incidents like the one mentioned at first, where discoveries of science have appeared at first to be contradictions to the Bible and were fought instead of investigated and adapted by religious leaders. In the second place, scientific men, because they are continually thinking in terms of ideas that they can demonstrate by experiments with physical exactitude, have a tendency to neglect those truths of the inner life, which can not be so easily demonstrated. And yet it is not true that scientists are atheists, or that they try to explain away God, and numerous quotations can be given to show the faith of real scientists. Sir William Crookes says, "I cannot imagine the possibility of anyone with ordinary intelligence entertaining the least doubt as to the existence of God—a Law Giver and a Life Giver." Lord Kelvin says, "I cannot imagine anything so absurd as atheism." Sir Oliver Lodge makes this statement, "the tendency of science, whatever it is, certainly is not in an irreligious direction." And just in the last few years a group of the leading scientists of the world have signed a statement expressing their belief and conviction in God.

In the third place people sometimes express the idea that science tries to explain everything without God. On the contrary however a study of science really acquaints one better with all of the detailed laws and principles of the universe and makes one realize more than ever the necessity of an all powerful and all wise Being who can thus create a universe so wonderful in all detail and so marvelous in its perfection. The tremendous size of the universe as revealed in the study of Astronomy showing as it does that some of the stars are so far away that it takes light traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles a second thousands of years to span the space between us and them, testifies to the omnipotence of God. The perfectness of all of the laws of the universe with complete absence of discord, as one observes in any of the sciences is a tribute to his omniscience. The mere fact that water expands on solidifying, which is contrary to the properties of practically every other known substance, is an indication of the care and providence of God. For if water like other substances were to contract on cooling, it would become heavier and sink to the bottom and thus the rivers and seas would freeze from the bottom up and all of the fish life would be frozen out. And so the more one studies the sciences the more clearly he can see the hand of God in and through it all.

In fact it is not only true that science has not been a hindrance to religion, but it has actually been a contributing factor in the development of religion. Most especially is this to be seen in the fact that it has made a great contribution in bringing religion out of superstition and mysticism. Among the primitive peoples, was made up largely of magic and superstition. When one was sick, the sickness was due to the presence of an evil spirit and consequently the evil spirit must be appeased by mystic and religious rites. If rain was needed it was to be obtained by flapping the arms in imitation of falling rain, thus suggesting their need to the divine being. Similar ideas were found among the Hebrew people and as late as the eighteenth century, when bells were first put on churches in Europe, they were placed there for the purpose of keeping the evil spirits away, as is explained on the inscriptions upon some of the church-bells. In the meantime science has shown the meaning of sickness and the cause of rainfall and will in the near future prove the possibility or impossibility of spirits influencing the physical world around us. And thus continually science has helped us to come to a purer and higher religion because it has helped us to throw away a lot of these superstitions with which it was so closely linked in the past. And such work it may continue to do for us in the future if we but give it a chance.

Furthermore science is making its contribution to religion in that through science missionaries are able to make a first approach to foreign peoples. Especially is this true of medical science, since through rendering medical aid to the people, their confidence is obtained and the way opened up for further work. Also the industrial achievements and scientific machinery play an important part in the appeal to the natives of the southern continents.

Finally, science is making a contribution in that like religion it stands for the truth. The truth about the universe is the highest aim and ideal of all science. The truth about God is the highest aim and ideal of religion. And to one who accepts God as the maker of the universe, as not only Christians but even extreme scientists do, the study of one can not but lead to the other. The scientist may have theories of the universe that are wrong and conflict with the true knowledge of God. The theologian may have theories of God that are wrong and will conflict with the truth of the universe. But when the truth is known in each case there can not and will not be any conflict between them. If God made the universe, one can not study his production and learn something that is not true of him. On the contrary one must be led to a closer and better understanding of him.

What then should be the Christian attitude toward science? In terms of the above the answer is easy, and is that there should be cooperation at every opportunity that presents itself. The Christian institutions ought to be the greatest places of scientific research in the world. The Christian people and the Christian leaders ought to be the most eager people of all to learn of new scientific discovery and be the interpreters of these facts in terms of the God of the universe. When apparent conflict arises, instead of trying to suppress the idea, if it were given time, it would adjust itself. If the scientific interpretation is wrong, no one will find it out quicker than the scientists themselves, who are studying that particular idea. If the theologian's idea is wrong, a theologian will discover it more quickly than anyone. Why should an issue be raised and the faith of a lot of people shaken because they can not understand all of the points involved in the issue? Let all work together for the purpose of knowing the truth about God and his universe and if that ideal is placed first, there need be no disputes and no difficulties. Ashland, Ohio.

The Hope of the World

By Louis S. Bauman, D. D.

A careful study of world conditions today almost forces the conclusion that the problems of humanity have about outgrown the wits of humanity. The problems confronting the nations today have become so immense in their sweep and so complex in their elements that the minds of the boldest optimists verge on despair.

War-torn and bankrupt nations are beginning to feel that the doctrines of economists, the fair speeches of statesmen, and the uncertain "scraps of paper" signed by their rulers are worse than useless. Burdens increase. Masses grow hopeless. Hatreds become more hateful. War-clouds hover threateningly. Men are conscious that there has been a shipwreck, a catastrophe. They scarcely know who or what is to blame. They know that things seem to have gotten beyond the control of the wisest of their seers. Confusion runs rampant everywhere.

A great newspaper writer wrote the other day: "Joseph Sartori, the Los Angeles banker, brings back a bleak and discouraging picture of Europe. No sane person can deny that the whole world is entering upon a period of strain and terrible peril. Every country in Europe feels herself sinking into a hopeless morass of debt and ruin. Yet, every country feels itself strong, as yet, in a military way. If there is anything more dangerous than a nation under arms, feeling the approaching pangs of starvation, I don't know what it is. A hungry soldier is worse than a hungry wolf. It may be a bitter fact, but it is an undeniable fact—Europe's day of glory has passed."

We cannot understand how any man can face the world situation today and fail to see that the world is in need of some masterful, if not miraculous, saving power. Perhaps it is in need of some saving power of which it has long known, but has never seriously tried. It is rescue, not reform, that the nations of the earth sorely need. And, where are we to look for the only power that can rescue? Who is there that can breathe life into the miasmatic atmosphere that seems to be settling like a pall over the whole world, and save the dying?

Beyond question, at the base of the world's woes today lie the old age-long racial hatreds that have been responsible for nearly all the blood that has run in rivulets upon the battlefields. If these foolish, silly, childish hatreds could be driven forth from the hearts of men, what is there to prevent mankind from instantly entering his "Golden Age"? The bosom of earth literally bursts today with life-giving milk,—enough to fill to the full every empty stomach among men, and that three times a day. And the same old Mother Earth stands ready to yield her riches of clothing and housing for all the millions of earth. She is lacking in no material gift whatever. She simply overflows with wealth. And yet, and yet, poverty, misery, and woe, stalk forth everywhere among her dejected children. Something is radically, radically wrong, somewhere!

The simple truth is, men are not living in proper relations with each other. It has been the same old story throughout the ages past. Four hundred years before Christ, Socrates despaired of his fellows as he watched them needlessly bite and devour each other, instead of devouring the fruits of the earth. In desperation, he cried: "We must wait till some one comes from God to instruct us how to behave toward divinity and toward man!" And so we feel today! But, the great difference is, unlike Socrates, we do not have to "Wait!"

Some One has come from God to instruct us. The one thing needful is for men to take his instruction seriously. The pure Gospel of Christ, known to men for twenty centuries past, awaits first serious trial by the nations of the earth. So long as they rebel against bowing to its authority in all things therein, they will continue to sink from despair to deeper despair. Some day, the Christ-rejecting nations will "touch bottom." They are not far from it now. In their extremity, to keep from perishing in their iniquities, they will turn. Real Christianity awaits that day she knows must come. In that day, men will be set free from all their chains by the dynamic power of God's truth and love as seen in the face of Jesus Christ, and exemplified by his life.

When the dynamic power of God's truth and love really begins to operate,—when mankind shall have come to an end of its own useless inventions,—when the Gospel in its glorious fulness shall be made a really serious practice among men,—then and not till then will there exist that righteous attitude of mind among races now antagonistic, that is absolutely indispensable to human welfare and happiness. When the world of men once comes to realize, as sooner or later it must, that the living God who sits above it and watches over all through the passing centuries, "is no respecter of persons," and that "He hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth,"—when they come to understand that with all that it implies, then, and not till then will there be the desire and will to peace, the necessary determination to get at and to grasp the view-point of others, and the purpose, to cooperate and build up a happy world order. In that day the nations of earth will at last have learned the truthfulness of the old Siamese proverb: "When in love, even boiled vegetables are sweet; when you hate one another even sugar is bitter."

The processes whereby the world will be brought to end its rebellion against the Christ of God, to bow its proud knees to his authority as "King of Kings and Lord of Lords," to accept his attitude of mind in all its social, political, commercial, moral, and spiritual affairs,—those processes are known to God and revealed through his Word to those who wish to search and know. God is making no mistakes. He walks this earth exceeding sure though his steps are often centuries apart. His great purposes are ripening fast. If man's civilization is really toppling to its fall, we may be sure that God is making bare his mighty arm to establish the kingdom that shall never pass away, even as he spake through Daniel, his prophet. It is written by another of his mighty prophets: "He will not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set justice in the earth." Omnipotence is not dismayed by the failures of men.

"It seems to me that you missionaries have the most hopeless work in the world," said an English lady to Elizabeth McCauley, missionary at Guntur, Indian; "yet, you never seem depressed. What is it that makes you so happy?" The reply was short and simple: "The work is not ours, but God's!"

In that simple answer lies the secret for overcoming all depression that may come to us as we gaze out upon the seemingly hopeless struggles of the war-like, weary, sin-polluted, fever-tossed nations of men. Faith does not despair. She knows that "The work is not man's, but God's!" Long Beach, California.

Reverence in Worship

By Professor A. T. Robertson

(The following article from the facile pen of Dr. A. T. Robertson, professor of New Testament Interpretation in Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and popular Bible lecturer, was previously published in "The Christian Index." It impressed us as being advise so universally needed that we are passing it on to the Evangelist readers.—Editor).

It is incongruous to have irreverence in worship. Real worship requires reverence and is impossible without it. But one does not always find it even in Roman Catholic churches which make more of the worship than most Protestants do. In the Antwerp Cathedral in 1890 I saw a lady diligently counting her beads and saying her Ave Marias and Pater Nosters while she watched me and other visitors in the cathedral.

Protestants, except Episcopalians, have put the sermon to the fore so much that they often overlook the element of worship, especially during the sermon. Then we feel at liberty to take a nap or to let the mind wander and sometimes one sees a supposed listener reading the hymn book for diversion or occupation. The preacher has to bear the burden and the blame for whatever disconcerting interruptions appear while he is preaching. But it is not always his fault. The listener may be wholly to blame for various reasons, though sometimes the sermon may call for too little or too much mental effort to hold the attention of the listener who does not mean to be inattentive and certainly not irreverent. Persons have been known to slip out of church during the course of the sermon, sometimes to the dismay and the confusion of the preacher, though some preachers grow hardened to such experiences and take them as a matter of course.

The social side of church life makes reverence in church more difficult than one could wish. Some city churches have a large vestibule at the front where people may pause after church for exchange of social greetings and where the pastor may hold a sort of reception if he so desires. Certainly this is much better than for the pastor to be expected to greet the departing audience at the church door with the cold wind blowing upon his overheated vocal organs.

In most churches the benediction is the signal for an instant buzz of conversation throughout the auditorium. Many sensitive souls feel that is more or less of an anti-climax to the worship just before and tends to dissipate the spiritual impressions already made. There is something to be said for this view, beyond a doubt, though it is not easy to see how it is to be wholly corrected without a distinct loss to the social atmosphere that seems to count for so much today. Some people call a church cold and chill if they are not warmly greeted by pastor and others after the service. But clearly the services truly should be over before the social phase begins. One can sometimes hear whispering before the benediction is pronounced. While the last hymn is sung, one may see people putting on their overcoats or wraps or overshoes or reaching for umbrellas or hats so as to be able to make a dash for the door the moment the close of the service comes, if indeed they do not depart during the singing of the last verse of the hymn. I know one pastor who had several times begged the audience to desist from such unseemly behavior without success. So one morning while the last verse was being sung the pastor put on his overcoat and started out without the benediction. It was a drastic procedure, but the story goes that it cured that particular church of that irreverent habit, though it caused a deal of talk meanwhile and not long afterwards the pastor left for pastures new. It is often true that people will not tolerate in the pastor what they do themselves.

It is unseemly for the Sunday school to run over time and to interfere with the opening part of the worship. Sometimes the audience seems pitifully small till the Sunday school comes trooping in quite late. Better late than never, to be sure, but, if we are going to have the morning or the evening worship, we should contribute our share to making it real worship and helpful to all. The spirit of the preacher is often tried by the small audience with which the service starts off. I once knew a deacon who was always late and who always came in just after the collection. People drew their own inferences about this peculiar habit but it did not add anything to the worshipful spirit at church.

The pastor himself may lose sight of small breaches on his part. I recall a pastor who was busily turning the leaves of the hymn-book in search of the next hymn, while another brother was leading in prayer. I was in the pulpit with the pastor and heard the noise of the leaves of the hymn-book as the pastor rustled them. That incident made a very unpleasant impression on me. I could but wonder what the pastor really was thinking about God and our attitude toward him in prayer. To have a good hymn selected was a fine idea, but not at the cost of such a breach of reverence on the part of the real leader in the worship.

It is only too common for members of the choir to pass pieces of music, to turn the leaves of the hymn book, or even to whisper about the music while the preacher is trying to lead in prayer. I have had precisely that experience only too often. I had rather have reverence on the part of the choir than artistic singing without it. Such conduct on the part of choir or preacher overlooks the fundamental thing in worship, the presence of Almighty God. Anything that ignores the fact of approach to God detracts from the worshipful spirit. It is needless to say that such thoughtless conduct on the part of the leaders of the worship sets a horrible example for the audience.

It can not be assumed that all the audience have bowed heads or even closed eyes during prayer. That ought to be true, but it is not always the case as anyone who comes in late to church during prayer can observe for himself. To sit bolt upright with open eyes during public prayer is sheer irreverence. It means that one is not in the spirit of worship and declines to participate in the act of public adoration of God. That is a bold defiance of all the decencies of public worship. It betrays an irreverent spirit and an impenitent heart.

To be sure each individual can worship God in church even if the atmosphere is not conducive to fellowship with the spirit of God. But people come to church largely because they feel the need of this communion with God and the fellowship of the saints. It is not enough for the sermon to be able and eloquent. The music may be noble and inspiring. The people may be cordial and warm-hearted. But one has missed the main thing if he has not found the merey-seat and humbled himself in adoration before the God and Father of us all.

There are hindrances enough all about us that have to be overcome by those who come to church. All too many do not come at all. Those who do come should find not only a welcome but real help in the worship of God. It will pay pastor and people alike to put their minds on this subject. Each one contributes his part to the atmosphere of worship. There are churches where one feels at once when he enters that he is in a place where people really find God, a Bethel in fact, the very house of God. At such time one knows that he is in the presence of God and he gains refreshment and strength to go forth again into the conflicts and struggles of life.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

"A Weeping God"

By R. Paul Miller

TEXT: "And when he was come near he beheld the City and wept over it." Luke 19:41.

The Scriptures never speak of the laughter of Jesus; though he came to bring us joy unspeakable and full of glory, yet he, himself, was a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief.

Truly, could our portion have been one of joy had it not been that his path was one of sorrow? I wish you could picture to your mind's eye the Savior with his handful of disciples, wending their weary way along the dusty road leading to Jerusalem. At the foot of the Mount of Olives is Bethpage. As he passes this little village he sends his disciples for a colt upon which he might ride over the mountain into Jerusalem. As they go on their way the multitude of disciples grows. The praise increases. They seem to catch the spirit of heralding the entrance of the Messiah into his own city. They begin to cast their garments in the way, and to herald him as he who had come in the name of the Lord, but suddenly as the city bursts into full view, Jesus stops and breaks out into loud sobbing. What queer conduct is this for one who is being hailed as a king? How contrary to all expectations of one thus extolled. But Jesus knew the shallowness of all this praise and that it would soon turn to condemnation. Now you naturally ask, who weeps? Let us see; it is the Son of God. What a lesson there is here for thousands of men today who have steeled themselves against all emotion, and who feel that to shed tears is not manly, or strong, or proper. It is such an attitude that is making this world cold and heartless and despairing. Tears of sympathy, how beautiful they are, how precious, and yet how increasingly scarce, but here, behold, the Second Person in the Godhead, the very Son of God himself, the Creator of the universe, the King of Kings, Lord of Lords, the Father of Eternity, the Judge of the quick and the dead, and he who sustains all things by the Word of his power, and he is weeping—a weeping God; privileged were the ears that heard the sobs of God that day; sacred is the ground that received the tears of Jesus there as he wept.

Can the world be indifferent when God is weeping? Can they play while God sobs out his heart? Let us draw up close to his side this morning and find out why Jesus wept. What was it that when Jesus looked out over that wonderful city, he broke out in weeping? It was not because there were so many sick and crippled and suffering among them, for he could heal them. It was not because they were ignorant, for he could teach them. It was not because they were poor, for he could feed and clothe them all. O I tell you there is something far worse than being poor. Many a man poor in this world's goods is rich in Glory. Hear me, the greatest need of this city is not for hospitals, it is not for schools and free lunch counters, or parks. But Jesus wept because the people of that city were lost.

Jesus had left the Ivory Palaces of Heaven, with the love that angels never knew. He left the throne of God and all its glory. He left the Father's side and his blessing. What for? Only that he might love lost men back to God, but now they had spurned his love, and were even then seeking his life. That is why Jesus wept.

THAT IS WHY PAUL WEPT. Hear him in Acts 20: 31 as he speaks to the Ephesian elders: "Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." That great Apostle who had seen Paradise, and who had heard words unspeakable to human ears, who had brains enough to rule an empire, who had stood before Felix the Governor, and Festus the King, is hereby found weeping over the souls of men. Can you not see this great man weeping as he goes from house to house, way into the night, seeking sinners?

For many years Saul of Tarsus had no tears, he had only terror for the Christian, but one day outside the gates of Damascus he caught one glimpse of Jesus, and from that day on his wonderful life is but one long record of suffering and tears over the souls of men. But behold today, a tearless church, a self-composed church, a church amusing themselves, a powerless church, with heartbroken sinners dropping at her doorstep unnoticed and in despair. God pity the tearless church. Yes, and behold today, the tearless Christian; cold, prayerless, indifferent, selfish, unmoved by the awful and certain fate of lost souls all around them; while his boys and girls are sinking down in sin, his brothers and sisters and friends and neighbors are lost and without a hope. The Christian sheds not a tear as he beholds it all. The greatest tragedy ahead of the tearless Christian is waiting at the Judgment seat of Christ, when standing face to face with the record of a tearless life.

When Jesus was on earth he wept over lost men. When John was converted, he thought only of lost men. When Peter was converted, he began to weep over lost men. When Paul was converted, he began to weep over lost men. We never hear of Caiaphas or Pilate or Herod or Judas weeping over lost men. And now for the sobering thought: WHICH CROWD ARE YOU STANDING IN THIS MORNING? Among which ones would your heart feel most at home? Would the present condition of your heart blend more quickly with the cold and hardened soul of Pilate, or the broken heart of Jesus?

O I confess to you that my heart is sick as I think of the days and weeks and years that I have spent with a cold heart. Days when some one was going down and I could have helped but I did not care. I believe that the thing that will cause me to hang my head the lowest when the searching eye of my Lord goes over my ministry, will be the fact that I was too well satisfied to be saved myself, and caring so little about others. Are you going to meet God with a cold heart and empty handed?

T. T. Martin, that mighty winner of souls, tells of a river tragedy several years ago out in the Middle West, of a city on the banks of the river, with a great falls situated just one mile below the city. This night six vessels, loaded with freight and passengers, tied up about evening at the wharf. The United States Weather Bureau had a signal out for a tornado, but the sailors laughed and ignored it saying that it had often been displayed without being realized. So they left the passengers on the boats and went into the city to carouse. A seventh boat soon tied up to the wharf. The captain saw the signal and ordered the men to stay on board and keep up steam. The men protested, saying that they had had a long trip and they desired to have a night of recreation. The captain said, "Boys, I would like a night of recreation also, but that signal there means danger to this vessel, and all that are on it. Every man, therefore, stays on board to protect the passengers and keep up steam." With a flash the tornado struck the city that night. One hundred people were killed outright. It tore those ships loose from their moorings and sent them drifting in the raging waves, down toward the falls, a mile below. Amid the terror of that black and awful night the passengers on those drifting ships were screaming for help, but the crews had left the boats and there was none to aid but the captain of that seventh vessel, who turned to his men and commanded, "Start ahead for the falls," not for the harbor, as many would have thought, but down stream he headed that vessel, toward the other ships that were swiftly drifting towards certain death at the falls, with their crying, helpless passengers. As he reached the vessel nearest the falls he lashed it to his own. Then turning, he steered for the next vessel, and with grappling hook and rope he lashed that one to his own, and in those black, mountainous waves he lashed vessel after vessel to his own, until the last one was secured to his straining ship. Not until then did he shout, "Now for the harbor," and towing those six other vessels in the teeth of that black and shrieking storm, with every part of his ship straining and creaking from the load with his siren going full blast, he reached the harbor safely with them all. He did not feel that it was enough to be safe himself. He was too much of a man. He was too noble to lie securely in his own safety and let the others go. O my brother and sister, with others drifting helplessly down before the storm of sin and unbelief and deception of this world, are you satisfied to let them go down, feeling that you are safe yourself? God grant each one of us the privilege of towing at least one drifting soul back to the Christ this coming year. And Jesus wept because of men's lost condition. How we need this truth today, that all men outside of Christ are LOST! LOST!! LOST!!! How we need to realize this. How prone many people are to feel that it is different with their loved ones. How the fond mother hastens to tell how good her boy is, even though he has not confessed Christ. How quick the wife will tell you that her husband is good at heart, even though he is trampling under foot the blood of God's Son.

A father came to me one day and asked me to pray for his son. I asked why. The old man choked up and said, Brother Miller, I have tried to make myself believe it is not true, but according to my Bible, my boy is lost, my darling boy," and his voice trailed away in a cry of despair. If people would only realize the truth about the unbelieving loved ones, there would be more praying for them then. There would be more tears for them and there would be fewer of them eternally shut out from God. However many virtues they may have, however religious they may be, if they have not made Christ their Savior, there is no morning for them.

HEAR THE WORD OF GOD; "If ye die in your sins, whither I go ye cannot come. If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." John 8:21-24.

No doubt many of you know of the great ministry of Wayland Hoyt, that great soul winner of Minneapolis. He had a true Christian woman in his church whose husband was not saved. He prepared a sermon especially to reach that man, and asked the man's wife at the morning service to urge her husband to come to the evening service to hear it. But in the afternoon a big storm arose. Very few came out, and this man and his wife were not there. It is needless to say that Mr. Hoyt went home discouraged, but he could not get this man off his mind. Sitting in his study later in the evening he thought to himself, "What a poor effort I am making to reach that man, why don't I imitate my Master and go and preach to him face to face?" He looked at his watch, it was midnight. Thought he, "It is too late, what would others think of me to go calling at such a time and in such a storm," but the longer he waited the more disturbed he became. He had no rest nor peace until at last in desperation he threw on his storm coat and plunged out into the night. Near the man's house he looked and he saw a light through the window. Looking at his watch he found it was one o'clock. He thought, "That man will think I am crazy to call upon him at such a time," but nevertheless he went up and rang the bell. It was quickly opened and the man recognizing him, at once drew him into the house eagerly. He said: "Thank God you have come, Mr. Hoyt, when my wife told me of your interest in me it stirred me up to my need. I could not rest and I have been trying to read my Bible and pray, but now that you have come, will you show me how to be saved?" In five minutes that man was saved, and a child of God.

Our Worship Program

A DEVOTIONAL OF SCRIPTURE AND VERSE
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

"THY KINGDOM COME"—Matt. 6:5-10.

"Lord, when we pray, 'thy Kingdom come',
Then fold our hands without a care
For souls whom thou hast died to save,
We do but mock thee with our prayer."

TUESDAY

THE SENT ONES—Matt. 10:5-8.

The only hands he has, he has to borrow from us,
The only feet he can use are ours,
The only lips he can speak with are ours.

—Robert E. Speer.

WEDNESDAY

SAFE IN HIM—Matt. 8:22-26.

The storm may roar without me,
My heart may low be laid;
But God is round about me,
And can I be dismayed?

—Anna Waring.

THURSDAY

GOD'S LOVING GRACE—Luke 15:18-24.

Love ever gives,—forgives,—outlives,—
And ever stands with open hands,
And while it lives, it gives.
For this is Love's prerogative,—to give,
and give, and give.—John Oxenham.

FRIDAY

THE WORD MADE FLESH—John 1:14-18.

The homage that we render thee
Is still our Father's own;
Nor jealous claim nor rivalry
Divide the Cross and Throne.

—Whittier.

SATURDAY

MY BODY AND I—2 Cor. 5:1-4.

This body is my house—it is not I;
Triumphant in this faith I live and die.

—Frederick L. Knowles.

SUNDAY

A TRANSFIGURATION WISH—Luke 9:29-33.

If I covet one high grace,
It is this—upon my face
Just show an inner light
To illumine others' night.

Give me such a look—so high—
That the saddest passer-by,
On a sudden glad, shall say,
Somewhere shines the sun today!

—Anna Burnham Bryant.

(Prepared by G. S. B.)

May God help us. How often have you felt the awful condition and crying need of some poor soul. You were pressed in spirit to go tell them of your Savior, but you said, "I am unfit, I am incompetent," and you turned away, and perhaps that soul is in Eternity now, and without hope because you failed.

You can weep when your loved ones are laid on the operating table. You can weep when disgrace has haled them before the court. God give you holy tears for those who are lost for all Eternity.

Jesus wept not only because men were lost, but because he loved lost men. I almost tremble to mention this point, because it is such sacred ground. Brother, do you love lost men? O yes, of course you would like to see everybody saved, but that is not love for lost men. I tell you I once thought I loved lost men. I had won many men for Christ and felt quite good over it, but one day in a meeting in Oak Hill, West Virginia, a woman came to me with a broken voice. She said, "Brother Miller, my heart is broken. As I came to church this morning with my baby in my arms, I passed my husband on the street and plead with him to come to church with me, but he gruffly refused and turned away. I had to come on alone, and O he is so hard and sinful, and now my children, especially my oldest daughter, are following him into disgrace, but I will pray for him day and night until he goes down in the grave, but O brother, I know you love lost men, will you help me pray for him?"

I confess to you that I felt that day as a pigmy in comparison to her love for that lost man. O my people, do you love lost men? Have you ever wept over a lost soul? Sisters, do you love lost souls, has your heart ever been broken over another's fall? Does your heart go out to the dear girl who has stumbled, or do you criticize her and avoid her? God bless the dear faithful women who in love and tears are turning souls back to God. "He that goeth forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." Have you sown in tears, in love? Then what will your harvest be?

I want to tell you of a little silver-haired, sweet-faced mother whom I met in a certain meeting in Pennsylvania a few years ago. You know there are some women who seem to get more beautiful as their hair turns to silver. Well, she was one of that kind. In that meeting numbers of young people were being saved. She had a son in another city not far away and he was not saved. Naturally her thoughts went out to him, and for his salvation. She sent for him to come home. He came home that he might attend those meetings. But he was a very heady, proud young man and very self sufficient, feeling little need of any powers beyond his own. Each night I would see them sitting together, and on her face would be pictured all the varying expressions of hope and of pleading, of prayer and then of despair, as service after service would close with the boy still unsaved. The last night came, quite a number of young people were down at the cross, giving themselves to God, but her boy was not there. I can never tell you the look upon her face in that hour. Others spoke to him but with arms folded across his breast he remained unmoved and obdurate. The last plea was made, the last prayer was offered and farewell was being said. After all the others had come up and spoken their farewell message, I noticed that this little woman had been standing alone, waiting until none others were around me. Then she slowly came up, hardly lifting her eyes to mine, she held out her hand. I said to her, "Sister, I am sorry for you," and she looked up to me then, but there was not a tear on her face. She was beyond tears, and she said to me, "Brother, I don't want to go home. It seems that I just cannot go home with my boy lost. I cannot stand it. Why, Brother, if I thought I could just lay down right here and die, and that over my dead body my darling boy would come and give his heart to the Savior, how happily I would die this very minute."

O Christian, do you love lost men? Do you have a heart like that for those who are lost? Would you feel at home in the company with Jesus and Paul this morning with their broken hearts? Could you stand by the side of this little silver-haired mother and weep with her over some of your own?

Let me call you this morning to mingle your tears with the tears of Jesus. Let your sobs unite with his. Let me call you to seek a broken heart for lost men. Let me call you to a love for lost souls, that will win them from their sins to Christ. "AND HE BEHELD THE CITY AND WEPT OVER IT."

The New Ten Commandments According to Modern Paganism

By Charles Daniel Brodhead

Modern paganism laughs at the old Decalogue as outworn and outgrown, and has substituted these as its own Ten Commandments:

1. Thou shalt have as many gods as thou desirest.
2. Thou shalt not think of God in any traditional way but only according to the latest fad or fashion.
3. Thou shalt not be careful with thy tongue when thou speakest the name of Deity or usest vulgar speech.
4. Remember every Sunday not to keep it holy but to use it wholly as a day of selfish pleasure and religionless vacation.
5. Keep no filial obligations to thy father or thy mother but look to them for food and house and cash. Speak often of them as "old fogies."
6. Thou shalt not destroy war.
7. Thou shalt not maintain any old-fashioned sex distinctions and standards nor the conventional safeguards of morality and self-respect and honor, nor keep as binding the easily-plighted wedding vows.
8. Thou shalt not steal, if the amount is too small, nor if thou canst not get away with it.
9. Thou shalt not withhold thy tongue from poisonous gossip nor clever alibis at the expense of thy neighbor.
10. Thou shalt not be outdone by thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not be outdone by thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his hobbies, nor his car, nor anything—irrespective of its price or thine own ability—anything that is thy neighbor's.

Jesus Christ is the Master in the school of life. When we read the Gospels, we say: This Man understands, he knows, he sees into the heart of things, he is Master of life at first-hand; and there is no phase of it that is hidden from his knowledge. He moved through life, carrying burdens, surmounting difficulties, trampling down temptations, soothing sorrows, and illuminating mysteries. The key to the calm and triumphant faith of Jesus is to be found in his words: "Your Heavenly Father knoweth." How can we be certain of that? We have only to put him to the test. If we follow him as our Master, we shall find that we can face life unafraid. He will teach us to wrest from life its hidden meaning, and to discover in some of its darkest experiences buried treasure. Jesus is the Master of life, and we can only learn to live as we sit at the feet of the Master.

The Tent of Meeting

Scripture Lesson—Exod. 33.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 5:1-7.

Golden Text—Jehovah spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. Exod. 33:11.

LESSON LIGHTS

The Circumstances

After the giving of the law, the people ratified the covenant with God. Moses was again called up into Mount Sinai to receive the tablets of stone and further instructions. He remained there for forty days. It was a testing time to both leaders and people. They had just taken the oath of allegiance, but they were inexperienced and weak in faith. It was during this absence that the golden calf was made (Exod. 32:1-35).

Testing of the People

There was real danger which made them restless and fearful. They were alone in the wilderness. Enemies behind them in Egypt; enemies before them filled the land to which they were going; enemies in the desert might arise at any time and cut them off, as they had already been attacked by the Amalekites (Ex. 17:8-13).

These weeks were their time of trial, of growth, of progress, of development. As Phillips Brooks has well said: "There is no danger that comes to the Christian church, as there is no danger that comes to the Christian man, that is not capable also of being considered as a chance, an opportunity of larger work and of developed life." The people felt thrown upon their own resources. Rightly used, this was an opportunity of growing in patience in self-reliance, in strength of character, in obedience.

But Aaron and the people failed to stand the test, and made and worshiped the golden calf as a symbol of Jehovah.

The Testing of Moses

It was no time for Moses to remain apart, even in communion with God; there was work to do below, which his mountain-top experience fitted him to do. To test him, God offered to destroy the nation and make Moses the second Abraham of a new and greater people. Moses stood the test, rejected the tempting offer, and urged upon God three pleas for mercy.

The Tent of Meeting

Some think that the tent was removed from the center of the encampment because of the great sin of the Israelites in the matter of the golden calf; more likely, however, the common custom of Moses is here described, evidently his custom before the more elaborate tabernacle was constructed. That was pitched, at each remove of the Israelites, in the center of the encampment, to typify the presence of God in the midst of his people; but at first, as on Sinai at the giving of the Law, for the sake of inculcating reverence, the vast distance between the Infinite Majesty and his creatures was emphasized by this separation of the Tent Meeting from the camp.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Our Tent of Meeting

"When I see a youth, to whom religious worship has been the atmosphere of childhood, gradually withdrawing himself from the means of grace I tremble for him. I tremble for him because I have seen what it means. I have seen the light of aspiration dying out of young eyes, as the sunshine dies from a cloud, leaving only gloom. I have watched character and all the finer part of a man deteriorate. I have known rich men whose spiritual decay has been in the ratio of their worldly success, and at this hour I can think of men whom I loved, who once came with me to the house of God to keep Holy Day, who now lie in jail and the penitentiary, who are dying in charity wards of hospitals, who are rotting and starving in the streets, and all their misery began when they forsook the Tabernacle of their God. Consider it! Joshua, strong man as he was, knew where the strength of his life lay. It was in the temper of devoutness. He knew that he must grow a soul before he could live a great life and achieve a great career, and hence he 'went not out of the Tabernacle.'"—Rev. W. J. Dawson, D. D.

God's Presence with his People

"Any man who has before him some great task for the world or for humanity may very naturally feel with Moses the need of the constant presence and guidance of the Almighty. When we think of the apostles going forth in their weakness to conquer the world with only the gospel for their weapon, we do not wonder they leaned hard on the staff of Christ's promise that his presence should go with them. When we think of Martin Luther standing alone against the power of the Roman Catholic church and of the greatest monarch of the world, we do not wonder that he felt his utter need of the divine presence. When we see Columbus sailing out into the West in his crazy little caravel, across unknown seas, into unknown dangers, seeking a new world that no man had ever seen, and in whose existence no man but himself believed, we do not wonder at what he said to his children on his deathbed, that he ever felt himself the instrument of divine providence, and ever relied on the present help of God. And when we read of the profound conviction of George Washington—all through those seven dark years while the feeble colonies battled with the military power of Great Britain—that only by the guidance and blessing of God could he hope for success, this, too, does not surprise us. Nor again does it seem strange that men like Stanley and Livingstone, exploring the unknown depths of the Dark Continent, should have been deeply impressed with their need of the presence and protection of Almighty God. But I hold up the example of Moses as a model not only for those who have a great task to accomplish for humanity, for civilization, or for the church, but for all men without distinction—for the most obscure, for the humblest of us all. There is not one of us who ought not to feel as Moses felt, that he could not face his life or his work without the assurance of the presence of God."—Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D. D.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SECRETARY ITINERATING IN BRAZIL

A series of ten lectures have recently been given at the Union Theological Seminary, Recife, Pernambuco, Brazil, by Rev. Herbert S. Harris, Secretary of the Brazil Sunday School Union and field representative of the World's Sunday School Association in that country. The course was given in five days to the twenty-two prospective leaders in the Protestant religious life of Brazil. The themes are suggestive and indicate considerable scope. They were: 1, Antecedents, History and Mission of the Sunday School; 2, Fundamental Elements of Sunday School Work; 3, The Scope of Religious Education; 4, Psychology Applied to Religious Education; 5, Pedagogy Applied to Religious Education; 6, The Organization and Equipment of Sunday Schools; 7, Elements of a Christian character and How to Attain Them in the Life of the Pupil; 8, The Church Facing Her Responsibility; 9, The Work Organized for Conquest; 10, The Place of the Pastor in the Work of Religious Education. These themes make a fine outline for addresses in the home land as well as when delivered in Portuguese in Brazil.

The Bible in the Courtroom

Visitor—What are you doing here?

Bible—I wonder.

Visitor—You seem to have been much used.

Bible—They don't use me any more.

Visitor—You are no ornament; you look old and worn.

Bible—They still dust me.

Visitor—Are you unhappy?

Bible—Not as unhappy as I was.

Visitor—Why?

Bible—They used to kiss me and swear, or lay their hands on me and swear.

Visitor—Did that make you unhappy?

Bible—Yes; I was a fetish.

Visitor—What are you now?

Bible—A relic.

Visitor—And you want to be—

Bible—A power.

Visitor—Let me brush those legal papers aside; they are crowding you.

Attendant—Look out there! That's the Holy Bible.—Arthur B. Rhinow, in Christian Century.

Summer-Time Endeavor

By Sandusky Curtis

Christian Endeavor is not a movement of the seasons. Its programmes call for twelve months of activity. It is an organization which observes the complete calendar year.

Never think that summer is the ideal time to close down the society. It is a time when the society should be alive, for the topics discussed and meetings held beneath God's blue will sink deep into young hearts impressed by the wonders which the realm of nature unfolds. As an aid to the devotional life of the society, while the weather is warm inject some recreational features into your work. Recreational activity is not contrary to Christian Endeavor principles, for we can be Christians at play as well as at work, so long as our play does not overshadow our work.

While there are local plans you can originate, there are several we may now consider, which if worked out will add joy and gladness to the boys and girls, men and women, who are seeking to boost summertime endeavor.

A Tennis Tournament. If there are societies near by, have a single and a double team for each. Have the games well supervised, and try to get Christian Endeavor officials. Give the winning team some trophy. A loving-cup would be good. Let the societies furnish the cups, one for singles and one for doubles. It might be a good plan to agree to award a cup to the society whose representative or representatives win for two successive years.

A Swimming Match. Plan a swimming-match if your society is near a body of water. If there are other societies within a short distance, ask them to join. This contest can be worked out in the city swimming pools, but is suggested as an outdoor feature in keeping with the summer idea.

A Golf Tournament. There may be local golfers to compete in a golf match. This would arouse much interest if properly advertised, for there is much interest in golf.

An Outdoor Crossword Match. Get a local crossword enthusiast to make a crossword puzzle on canvas, and place it on a bill-board. Have the key to the white squares plainly written, but do not show them to the representatives of the societies competing. (Have only one from each organization until the match is on.) Get a timekeeper, and allow but a short period for a representative to state to a person who can print neatly what the answer is; if it is wrong, the next society man or woman has a chance. Score one for the society answering the question, and zero if it is not answered.

A Baseball League. The ever-popular baseball game can be used to good advantage. Have a league for the nearby societies, and play a short two-half season with a "world series" if the team at the top in the second half is not the same as in the first.

A Field Meet. Field meets are ever drawing cards. Be sure to have races for the girls. Enter the various societies in your district, and make suitable awards to the winners. The expenses can be met by the sale of tickets, and printed programmes can be made to pay if carefully handled.

Outdoor Meetings. Have some of your summer devotional meetings out-of-doors. The unusual will be attractive. These meetings must be full of vigor and able to hold the attention and to impress the greatness of God in nature.

All of these plans should be advertised well. They should ever reflect the spirit of sportsmanship and reverence which are taught in Christian Endeavor.—C. E. World.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for September 5.)

Dare to Tell the Truth Ephesians 4:25; I Samuel 3:15-18

Once there was a Junior Superintendent who had such a nice group of little boys and girls that she used to take them on little picnics and have just stacks of fun with them. One time they decided to go out on Sunday evening and have their C. E. lesson out on a hill top. At four o'clock sharp everyone was ready to go and they started out. Some of the children carried the lunch baskets. Others skipped along the path without a load. After a short time the superintendent asked if they didn't want to sing. Soon they were having a good time singing their little C. E. songs. When they arrived at the top of the hill they decided that there was time enough to play a game before the picnic, so everyone gathered in a little group and what do you think that they played? They played a Bible game. They took the alphabet. The first little boy gave the name of a person in the Bible which started with the letter A, the next named the same one and gave one that began with B. Have you ever played that game? Each one started out by saying, "I went to Sunday school this morning and I learned about" such and such a person. After the game was over and one of the little girls had won because she remembered all the names that had been given when the others forgot, the teacher said, "Children, why did you all tell so many stories? You know that you did not study about all those different people this morning and I am surprised that you would say that you did." Everyone looked at their leader in a very surprised manner. Then one little girl said, "We were just playing a game and pretending that we had studied about those people. Isn't that all right?" The teacher smiled and said, "Yes." Then she said, "We are going to eat supper now and while we eat, each of you are to try to think of some story about people who told the truth when they were tempted to tell a story or about people who did not tell the truth when they should have.

Soon supper was over and everyone was seated around their leader. Each one had been thinking very hard. The superintendent started them off. She told the story about Peter. You remember the apostle Peter, who was a very dear friend of Jesus. Do you know about the time that this apostle lied? He was scared that some people that had taken Jesus and were hurting him, would take him too, so he said that he didn't know Jesus. Afterwards, Peter was very, very sorry that he had told that lie and he suffered a great deal because of it. Do you know that you will suffer if you tell lies? It makes you feel bad inside and then you are sorry that you did not tell the truth.

Several of the children told short stories. It was pretty hard for some of them to think of anything to tell. One of the best stories was told by a little girl named Mary. She said that one time her little brother was naughty. This is what he did. He took a whole lot of cookies out of his mother's cookie jar and took them to school and ate them. When he got home his daddy said, "Johnny, did you take some cookies today without asking for them? If you did, I am going to switch you." Johnny thought and thought. He said to himself, "Why should I tell him that I did and get punished when I can say, 'No' just as easily and then not be whipped?" But Johnny had always told the truth, so he looked up at his daddy and said, "Yes, I did." Then Johnny was truly surprised for his daddy smiled and whipped him just as though he were not very angry after all. Then his daddy told him that he had seen him carrying the cookies and that if he had said "No," he would have been whipped much harder than when he said "Yes."

All the children decided that it was always best to tell the truth. So they told their leader that they were going to always try very hard to tell the truth and then she felt happy and so did they. Thus ended the very happy picnic.

Under the Southern Cross

By C. F. Yoder

I have taken the above title again because I must write of several places. In my last letter I told of our evangelistic meetings in Rio Cuarto which closed with baptisms and a splendid love feast. Since then the attendance has continued to increase slowly and there is progress in all departments. We have been able to add several good Sunday school teachers and have begun another normal class to prepare teachers. Six have begun the course, all the other teachers having already won their diplomas. The women now have monthly meetings on Wednesday afternoons and also the girls.

I have also been able to visit our work in Buenos Aires. Our new hall is located within a square of our lot and the work there is meeting with success. The attendance is from thirty-five to forty, which is about all that the hall will seat. The meetings are not disturbed and the people seem to be in earnest. Rents however continue to be high, and it would be possible to erect a hall with living rooms on our lot for what we pay out in rent every three years. When we first came to Buenos Aires this place was on the very edge of the city; now it is in the geographical center, and two miles further out we now have a second work. One of the believers at his own expense has erected a hall and maintains it while giving us the free use of it and helping all he can in the work. There is no other mission within twenty squares of either of these missions. I preached a week in Buenos Aires and had very good attendance and interest. By the time I can go there will be quite a number ready for baptism. Brother Anton and his wife are working hard and sacrificing all they can to advance the work. The field is very great and they need the prayers of all.

After a few days at home I have again joined the Bible Coach while Brother Yett spends a few days at home looking after his work as treasurer. The coach is now in Moldes, about sixty miles south of Rio Cuarto. This is a prosperous town of about seven or eight thousand inhabitants (although some here say there are 15,000, counting the colonists near by). This is the fifth time that we are canvassing the town with Bibles, either with the coach or with workers sent from Rio Cuarto, and we have a large list of sympathizers to whom we have been sending literature each month. Now we mean to try to get these together and have regular meetings. As there are daily trains both ways it will be easy to come from Rio Cuarto.

However, every time I leave Rio Cuarto I have to neglect work there which seems to be equally important. The laborers are so few for a field so vast. By means of the new autos in Laboulaye and Cabrera we now have meetings in new places but of these I will write in another letter. We pray that the approaching Conference may mark a great advance in all departments of our work.

Moldes Argentina, July 27.

Seedtime in Turkey

By Mr. F. Lyman MacCollum, Constantinople

Behold the colporteur went forth to sow.

"But that trifling book cannot possibly contain the 'true Gospel,'" objected the Turk, a brass worker by trade. "We know that it took seventy camels to carry the parchments on which was inscribed the Gospel which Allah sent down to his Highness, Jesus. After he went off to Afghanistan and died,—is there not his grave to this day?—his disciples took and wrote this Gospel to suit their own purposes. I've been told that the original parchments containing the 'true Gospel' are in the Imperial Museum here in Stamboul."

"If that is true, why has not the Government made copies in a printing press, so that all the world might have the true light?" suggested the colporteur.

"I can't say as to that. I don't mix in politics," answered the mechanic. "But I do know that your book is false, and that I won't read it."

The colporteur moved on; for against such devious superstitions reasonableness is more effective than reasoning.

"Yes, I would like a Bible," said the wealthy Greek merchant, "the best you have. Something with a lot of gilt on it, for I can afford the best."

The colporteur was at the cashier's window receiving the price of a handsome volume, when the operation was arrested by a bellow from the furious merchant.

"A Protestant Bible! American! Get out of here with your cursed books. Here, you, bring me water,—quick." And there publicly the merchant washed his hands of the taint left by contact with the unorthodox Bible.

The colporteur moved on.

"Go sell your Holy Books to the Westerners," said the government clerk in loud tones. "Your book commands peace and love, but how do they obey, these white Christians? They are like hammer and anvil which, though mined from the same pit, are forever at war. And they do not keep their wars to themselves, but draw us in and devour us. Fighting is no sin for Moslems, but how will the Christians explain their wars and aggressions when they come to judgment before Allah? Their Book will condemn them. When the Christian nations believe their own Book, it will be time enough to offer it to Mohammedans."

Sadly the colporteur moved on.

It was one of those courts in front of a cafe, where beneath a canopy of grapevines men pass the long days playing backgammon or dominoes and talking the endless talk of idleness. As they understood the nature of the book which the colporteur was offering them, one and another of the Mohammedan habitués rose respectfully to their feet, kissed the volume, touched it reverently to their foreheads—and handed it back.

"When he accepts Christ," thought the colporteur, "what an example the Turk will set to the rest of us in reverence for things sacred."

He moved on.

"I would like a copy of the Holy Book in a good binding, to keep on my desk opposite this Koran," said the Turkish colonel. "Don't be afraid of me," he smiled, "See, I haven't even got my sword this morning." Then he continued more gravely, "I know little about your religion, but I admire some of the Christian customs. I am told that Christian families gather together morning and evening to pray and sing. I wish we had such a custom. But with us, as you know, a man's family is like his stove or any other necessary sort of furniture. We have no such religious intimacy in our homes. And on the third day of our week I see you all, book in hand, going to your places of worship, each man with his family. The sight always fills me with regret that we Mohammedans may not do likewise. I shall read your book often and gladly."

With glowing heart the colporteur moved on.

Turkey is today, perhaps, the most difficult field in the world for the distribution of Scriptures. The government of the republic is engaged in the immensely difficult enterprise of freeing education, law, and even government itself from religious control. The struggle is too critical for gentle methods. It follows naturally (in this country) that, if Mohammedan sensibilities are being roughly dealt with, Christian activities are going to suffer even more.

These trials are but the storms of spring without which there would be scant harvest when the time comes. The whole march of events in Turkey—the dispossession of Islam, the translation of the Koran into Turkish by a government committee, the desperate grasping after the form of Western culture—all such overturnings are breaking up the hard soil of centuries.

Where now are the sowers with faith to follow the plowshare of the Almighty?—Bible Society Record.

To do my daily tasks till done,

And lighten the burden if even but one;

To do what God would have me do,

To do what he would want me to.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Our Isolated Churches Back of the Endowment

Green County, Pa. Circuit and Highland Church Report

These churches are somewhat isolated and form a group near each other. They are located in the southwestern part of Pennsylvania and situated in rural communities.

Green County Circuit

There are three churches in Green County, known as Aleppo, Quiet Dell and Sugar Grove. The churches at Aleppo and Quiet Dell belong to our people and the one at Sugar Grove is a Union church, belonging to our people and the Church of God. The Sunday school is maintained in all these places and preaching services part of the time. These churches were for years served by our Brother Murray, who was called to his reward several years ago.

I was impressed with the opportunities of this field and regret that so little is being done in meeting the need. We have here, fairly good church buildings, a thickly settled community, large families and practically an open field to work in. Cameron, West Virginia, is only 7 miles from the farthest church and Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, a college town not far. There is no aggressive work being carried on and no resident pastor. Brother Orville Ullom who is attending school, is serving the churches this summer. The three churches here are near enough to each other that one man could serve them and the combined membership are financially able to support a man. Unless there is a resident pastor here on the field, it will be only a matter of time when the work here will be greatly weakened, as some of the members that are moving to Cameron and Waynesburg are already uniting with other churches. Some of the young people of this community have in the past attended Ashland College and I found the people sympathetic and interested. The gifts to the endowment were as follows: Aleppo, $370.00; Quiet Dell, $188.75; Sugar Grove, $75.85; a total of $624.60 for the Aleppo circuit.

The Highland Church

This is a country church located about thirty miles north of Waynesburg and about 12 miles from Washington, Pennsylvania, and Brother Howell is the pastor. They have here a small membership, that are doing their best to keep up the church. My work here was broken into by the sickness in my home, but through the aid given by Brethren Moore and Phillips, who greatly assisted, the church was canvased. The people here are not rich in this world's goods, but are anxious to see the church go forward and gladly cooperated and did their part. The total gift was $217.00, making a grand total for these small churches of $841.60.

W. S. BELL.

BRYAN, OHIO

A few words from this place may be in order, since for lack of time only, we have not given any report for six months or more.

We are glad to report a good steady, healthy activity in the many departments of the church. Nothing so startling has been done, but many things for which we are glad call forth a satisfactory expression from the church. The church has taken care of her obligations for every special day in a fine way.

Two very fine gifts were presented to the church during the spring, one a combination library case and desk by the Senior S. M. M. The other is a Copper Bulletin case mounted on a steel frame, by the Ever Ready class. On this appears the name of the church, and all announcements, especially the pastor's subjects for the coming Sunday.

A successful Vacation Bible School was conducted in July by the pastor and a number of the teachers and workers of the church. The service was all voluntary and was a distinctly Brethren school. There were however, a few from other churches who attended. There were 64 enrolled and the attendance was exceptionally good.

At the last regular business meeting, the pastor was recalled for the fifth year, with some extra consideration. Our ministry here has been pleasant and we hope that the fifth year may be the most prosperous of all for the Kingdom.

During July and August the churches represented in the ministerial association have union evening services. The young people's meeting are also union and are held in the same church on each Sunday evening where the regular worship is conducted. There has been a very excellent attendance at these union services during the summer.

We are talking now of Winona and the conference soon to convene, so in goodly numbers, we will meet you there.

Pastor, E. M. RIDDLE.

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

From June 23 to July 2 was our Vacation Bible School. It was a Community school, fostered by the Wysox Township Sunday School Association. The enrollment was near 115, with an average attendance between 90 and 100.

The special part of the writer was to superintend the Intermediate Department, teach the Bible lessons on the subject, "The Tabernacle of the Wilderness" and construct a model of the Tabernacle.

The construction was made on the basis of an inch to the cubit throughout. It was an enlightening study and an interesting task to build the model. The writer feels sure that he knows more about the Tabernacle than he ever knew before. The textbook used was "Suggestive Lessons on the Tabernacle" by Mrs. A. L. Dennis. Any one willing to work and ready to learn would do well to take up such a study and construction with your Intermediates in D. V. B. S.

On July 14 we had the privilege of baptizing four and receiving them into membership in the church.

We are busy all the time and quite happy in the work. Progress may not be as rapid as in other places, yet we are moving in the right direction.

Just now church and parsonage are receiving a fresh covering of paint and one can notice a wonderful improvement in the looks of the buildings. Other plans are working out gradually.

We hope progress for the Lord will be realized in all our churches. "Forward" certainly is and should be the watchword throughout the brotherhood.

COMMITTEE ON BOYS' WORK

I am writing in view of a very important fact. Among the outstanding phenomena of modern times is the so-called "Revolt of Youth." Eminent men like Luther Weigle, Walter Athearn, and Judge Lindsey feel that we are facing a tremendous alternative—youth will lead us into worse conditions, or we will capture them for Christ. What will the answer be?

Our National Conference executive committee was impressed with the need, so, after making provision for our girls in the Sisterhood camp, where they have their own organization and program, they made room for a tentative effort to solve the Boy Problem, rather the Youth Problem, the problem of relating boys of intermediate age (12-14), senior age (15-17), and young men (18-24) to the church in some vital way.

Half of the youth problem, as it relates to our girls and the church, has been taken care of fairly well. But the other half, and it looks like the big half, is to relate the boys in an effective way, to the church program. In a conference at Evanston, Illinois, at Northwestern University, as you may have noticed, there was a great survey, with this fact in mind. The meeting had for its theme "Youth Looks at the Church." Some very practical and unexpected answers grew out of it. It will pay to read the report.

A whole library of books has grown out of the condition. In addition to the Evanston report and Judge Ben Lindsey's book, one or two others are outstanding: "Character Building in a Democracy" by Walter Athearn, "Youth in Conflict" by Miriam Van Waters and others, but these are typical. We all see there is a big problem. Perhaps you know how it can be solved, perhaps not, but the problem is too big to be solved off-hand. It is too big to be solved at one session of a leadership conference. It is a problem for prayer, for thought and for experiment. Educators are all concerned and none ought to be more concerned than the religious educator. Great churches have been wrestling, and are wrestling now with the problem. Great reformers are experimenting and tabulating the results of their experience. We will have some program after awhile.

We want several meetings to discuss and consider these things. We are concerned. We are planning for such a meeting during Conference week. We would like to have you look over your Conference program and put an "X" at 1:00 P. M., Tuesday, at the Chapel of the Inn. This will be the first. We want you in on it. We are exclusive, only those who are deeply interested are invited. Bring a written report of your experiment, and its success. If you have had none, don't try to write some other person's. It isn't practical. We will have time and room only for practical things. You may bring the written report of another who is unable to be present, but boil it down.

Out of these conferences we will make some kind of a report, which our National Conference of 1924 requested, when they created a committee and authorized it to study and bring in a report of what could be done with the Youth Problem. This committee needs your help as a leader of youth. We need your help as a lover of youth: as a thinker and minister to youth: as one, like the prophet of old, who feared for the future, unless youth is led to consecrated character. We are at the parting of the way for our youth; may we lead them to Christ.

Committee,

GEORGE H. JONES, Chairman,
Byron Bowman,
W. I. Duker,
Donald Bane,
Edwin Boardman,
W. O. NISH, Secretary.

P. S.—Bring to Conference all kinds of game materials, baseballs, bats, volley balls, swimming suits, tennis raquets, etc.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

We have just passed through the experience of having the largest attendance at the Sunday services ever seen here at a regular service, the attendance being one hundred and fifty-four. This seemed good without any special effort. This was on the eighth. On the fifteenth there were one hundred and twenty-eight out.

The boarding pupils are allowed to go home once a month, and the Sunday of the fifteenth was the time when the most of them were at home. This was a very good attendance for that Sunday.

Brother Early preached at Riverside Sunday the eighth. He preached a very good sermon, which was well received by the people. On the fifteenth he preached at Beattyville, where one of our former graduates holds a pastorate.

Last week a number of our pupils were attending for the whole week, the Agricultural Club Camp, held near Lost Creek. The whole school was dismissed for one day, and teachers and pupils attended the camp for the day.

On Saturday the seventh, Riverside's baseball team was defeated by the Chavies team. The Riverside boys played well considering it was their first game of the summer or early fall season. The score was seven to nine in favor of Chavies.

Brother and Sister Early have made the Library at Riverside an important gift of two sets of books. One set, A History of the World, the other, World Classics. Both these sets were needed very much, and all concerned are very grateful to Brother and Sister Early for the gift.

We are anxiously waiting for the new light plant. While writing these notes, we had to stop and wait twice because the lights went out. If ever there was a place which needed a good lighting system Riverside now needs it. Most of last year, it was repairing, repairing, and spending money on this old plant, which is about all gone now. We do trust that we will not need to wait long for this much needed light.

One of Riverside's former students, a young man who had been in school here about twelve years ago, recently spoke at the morning chapel services. Among other things he said that Riverside Institute had contributed fifty per cent of the educational uplift of Breathitt County in recent years. Then add to this the moral uplift, and then ask ourselves the question, Has it been worth while?

Our freshman class in high school is now so large that our school rooms for the same are hardly large enough. That class taxes our room equipment to the limit, in fact it must recite in Bible in the Chapel that all may be seated.

Some of Riverside's teachers are now thinking of getting ready for Winona Lake, and the Conference. Our prayer is that the Holy Spirit may be the real leader there, and that all may follow as he leads.

RELIGIOUS RULES FOR VACATIONERS

Doctor S. Edward Young of Brooklyn suggests these regulations for vacation observance:

Eschew the idea that you can lay up religion enough through the winter to last through the summer. Piety, like the ancient manna, will not keep sweet of itself from one day to another.

Do not assume that it takes less grace to keep you on vacation than when you are at your regular tasks. It probably takes ten times as much.

Never by act or word or example make it harder for some one else to be religious. You are your brother's keeper, whether you choose to be or not.

Avoid the notion that recreation consists in giving the flesh its fling. None of us has so overdone the spiritual as to require the opposite as a respite.

Beware lest you load your mind with trash and regale your eyes with the degrading and your ears with the vain in an effort to be gay. It is not a sprinkle of powdered sugar that your tired nature needs; but wholesome, different occupation and beneficial, different experiences.

Join the Six Minutes Summer Club. It started only the other day. Those who belong to it mark off at least six minutes to the very beginning of the day and give the first part to reading the Scriptures and the second to prayer and the third to listening to God. Become good listeners to the Almighty, out in the open or shut in wherever you are. The majority of us try to talk to God more than we try to hear what he is saying to us.

Review mentally every day the main points you really believe in your heart of hearts concerning the Deity and your duty to him and fellow-mankind and then try to practise them. We likely have already learned enough or all we will learn till we do a little more what we now know.

Remember how many others have it worse than you and how much worse your condition might be and thank God for your blessings. —Homiletic Review.

DECORATING THE EDITOR

Our friend, Editor N. R. Melhorn, of "The Lutheran," who is well known for his wit and humor, as well as for his editorial ability and brotherliness, writes thus humorously concerning the new title recently bestowed upon him, a distinction for which we herewith issue our sincere felicitations:

"On June 14, Carthage College of Carthage, Illinois, conferred upon the junior editor the degree of Doctor of Literature. We hereby acknowledge the honor with sincere gratitude. As a matter of safety first, we did not inquire of the college authorities their reason for this mark of esteem, preferring to use our own interpretation of its meaning. Though quite aware that originally the term doctor meant teacher, like most people we first associated the title with men of medicine and surgery. With absolutely no authorization on the part of Carthage College, we therefore lay claim to a diploma which empowers us to meditate and to operate on manuscripts and other copy that become a visible, readable and active entity in "The Lutheran."

"In the resemblance of our fellow physicians, we demand the privilege of burying our mistakes, where they will molder into dust. We also declare that we are entirely satisfied when the contributions to our columns become energetic agents in stimulating thought and action, courage and wisdom throughout the United Lutheran Church. The occasion seems ours, when we may disclose phases of the editor's work. One of them is to fit copy and space. You can no more put a 1600 word article on a 1500 word page, than you can pour five quarts into a gallon bucket. But an issue of a paper is a more difficult problem than a bucket, because the latter may be only partly filled or if too much is given it, gravity automatically takes care of the surplus. We have to operate on too extensive or too scant manuscripts. We hereby observe that such operations generally wound the writer of the copy. He considers that we have crippled his production. Sometimes we learn it has been badly mangled.

"But our second and greatest trouble may be termed our acting as dietitian. What to select for the continuing health and growing vigor of our readers is a great task, as you can imagine. As a Doctor of Literature, the editor of a religious journal feels that his reader's commonest disease is "lack of appetite." We do not accuse our reader's of being anaemic, but rather of being overfed. Most people lack healthy hunger for church and religious news. A good many folk esteem a church paper in about the same class as the average man likes a pill. We disguise, camouflage and sugar-coat as well as we know how, but we often desire to get our constituency by the nose and dose them with what we think they really need. We presume this confession will keep the United Lutheran Church on guard against facism so far as empowering its editors to become Mussolinis is concerned. At any rate, Carthage College has duly terminated our period as undergraduate. We can now cut and slash, etherize and stimulate, diet and prescribe with the satisfying consciousness that we are entitled to do so. Of course the church can change doctors." —Reformed Church Messenger.

"THANK YOU"

Everybody likes little Carl Rosenblum, he is so cunning and small and fat. He has lived in America just a little while, and he can speak only two English words; but it sounds so funny to hear him say "Thank you!" to whatever is said to him, that no one can help smiling. And I think this is the reason that he gets cookies and slices of gingerbread at every house where he is sent on an errand.

One day Carl was trudging along with a basket of clothes which his mother had washed and which he had to deliver to a nearby neighbor. He was a droll little figure, with his chubby legs and round, fat arms.

Some boys playing marbles on the pavement were quite amused at this comical sight; and they began to laugh and shout, "Sausage-bags!"

Now, Carl did not understand a word; but he saw they were speaking to him, so he turned his little face to them with the sweetest of smiles, and said, "Thank you!"

You should have seen how ashamed the boys looked then! One of them smiled and nodded at little Carl, another gave him a nice red apple, while another took his big basket and carried it for him. So the good-natured little fellow trotted off, thinking what kind boys they were, and what a pleasant world this is to live in. And perhaps we should all think so, too, if our tempers were as sweet as his and our hearts as warm and true as Carl's.—Unidentified.

He Has No Enemies

"He has no enemies you say?

My friend, your boast is poor;
He who hath mingled in the fray

Of duty, that the brave endure,
Must have made foes. If he has none
Small is the work that he has done.
He has hit no traitor on the hip;
He has cast no cup from tempted lip; ;
He has never turned the wrong to right;
He has been a coward in the fight!"

A dentist's drill of excellent workmanship was discovered in England during excavations on the site of an ancient Roman camp.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

Teddy's First Voyage

Our Teddy laughed as he sailed away

While he could see the shore,
And when the land was out of sight
He only laughed the more.

And when they stowed him safe away

Within the upper berth,
He filled the tiny cabin full
With shouts of boyish mirth.

He laughed and laughed; "I don't call this

A sleeping-room at all—
A pantry cupboard, don't you think?
And very, very small."

And when the sun came shining in,

He caught its earliest beam
And woke his father with a shout
To tell a funny dream.

"I thought the cupboard rocked and rocked.

I wasn't me myself,
But just a big, big frosted cake
Upon the highest shelf

"While I was rocking there I thought

A freckled boy about
As big as me came climbing up

And picked a raisin out."

—Florence Mellish, in The Congregationalist.

Polly's Letter

By Hilda Richmond

"Do you know, mamma, sometimes I'd rather not have a birthday and presents than to write all the letters thanking people?" said Polly, frowning at her box of note paper.

"Why Polly Walton!" said her mamma, in surprise. "Aren't you glad you can write and thank grandma for her nice book?"

"Of course, I like the book, mamma," said the little girl, quickly, "but it's such hard work to write. Won't you do it for me this time? If I get the leastest mistake, you make me do it over again."

"No, Polly, you must do it yourself. Grandma would know my writing at once, and she would think you did not care for the book. If you are careful, you will not have to do it over. Miss Katherin says it is a pleasure to grade your papers at school because you write so nicely."

Polly loved Miss Katherine, but even this bit of praise did not make her happy today.

She had a heavy frown on her chubby face when she carried the paper to her mamma, and was glad to know there were no mistakes in it.

"I won't have another birthday for a year, and Christmas is a long way off," she said, as she put the red stamp in place. "Maybe by that time I'll like to write letters."

Just a week later a letter came for Miss Polly Walton from Uncle Jack and in it he said: "Your letter to grandma was so neat and nice that I would like to have one too. The day I get a letter from my Polly as clean and correct as the one grandma shows to all her visitors, I shall hurry to the store for a certain ring with a blue stone to send to the little girl who can write beautiful letters." There was another page to the letter, but Polly did not wait to hear it. She buried her head in her mamma's lap and wept.

"I'll have to tell him all about it," said Polly, when the tears were wiped away. "I think that would be honest; don't you, mamma?"

"Yes, I think it will be the best thing to do," said mamma. So Polly took out her note paper once more.

"Dear Uncle Jack," she wrote, "it isn't fair for you to send me a ring, for I was naughty about grandma's letter. I coaxed mamma to write it, and only had everything right because I was afraid I would have to do it over. I am sorry, but you must not buy me the ring. Your loving Polly."

But Uncle Jack said a girl who could confess her faults like that deserved a great deal nicer present than a ring with a blue stone, so he sent a long chain with a pretty locket on it. In the locket, Polly found a little note from her uncle that said: "I think you will remember."

And Polly does remember. She writes a great many letters now, and takes pains to have them as nearly perfect as possible. "I couldn't be happy with my locket if I didn't do my best," she always says when any one praises her letters. "It reminds me all the time."—The Methodist Protestant.

The Little Carpenter

"O dear, I can't bore this hole straight! I never can do any carpenter work anyway!" grumbled Edgar with a frown. "Uncle John, please give me something else to do around the farm. I am too small to do this kind of work."

Uncle John laughed. "Come here, Edward," he said, "and I will show you some one smaller than you are who can do better work than that."

Edgar came to the fence where his uncle was at work, and Uncle John pointed to some holes on the underside of the fence. "Feel how smooth these holes are," he said. "Now put your ear close to the fence and listen. Do you hear anything?"

"Yes," said Edgar excitedly. "I hear a buzzing."

"I thought you would," said Uncle John. Now watch."

Very soon a large black-and-yellow bee flew out.

"O, isn't it a beauty?" cried Edgar.

"Yes, and she is as smart as she is beautiful," answered his uncle. "This little hole goes back about an inch and then makes a sharp turn and runs at right angles for about a foot. It takes this busy little carpenter several weeks to do that. When it is finished she flies back and forth to the fields and gardens to get honey and pollen from the blossoms. With this she makes a paste and fills the ends of her new home. Here she places an egg and then seals the tiny part of the house with a wall made of small chips from the hole mixed with a secretion from her mouth. Against this wall she packs more honey paste, places another egg in it, and seals it as before. She does this until the tunnel is filled. The egg which is placed first is the first to hatch out a tiny white grub which eats the paste. Mother Carpenter Bee has put there. Then it sleeps, and while it is sleeping its skin grows hard and rough, then it opens and a perfect bee comes out. Baby Bee tears down the tiny wall its mother built, only to find its way to the outside world checked by another little bee in the next cell. When that one comes out of its grub shell, they break down the next wall and so on and on until the last bee is hatched and the whole brood flies out into the golden sunshine. Then Mother Bee patiently bores out another home."

Edgar picked up the gimlet. "If a little bee can be as patient as that, I can too," he said.—Emma Florence Bush, in Christian Advocate.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

BLOUGH-BARKHYMER—Miss Mary Barkhymer, daughter of James and Emma Barkhymer, and Robert Nelson Blough, both of Johnstown, were united in wedlock June 22 at the parsonage of the Third Brethren church by the Rev. Joseph I. Gingrich. Miss Nellie Barkhymer was the bridesmaid and Edward Eppley was best man. The impressive ring ceremony was used. Mr. and Mrs. Blough will be at home to their many friends in Coopersdale. J. L. GINGRICH.

MACK-STUTZMAN—Miss Viola Belle Stutzman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Stutzman, and D. Raymond Mack, both of Indiana County, Pennsylvania, were united in marriage May 5, at the parsonage of the Third Brethren church by the Rev. J. L. Gingrich. Mr. Mack is a teacher in the local high school. The ceremony was witnessed by the parents of both the bride and bridegroom. The beautiful ring ceremony was used. Mr. and Mrs. Mack left for an auto tour of the Mid-West, after which they will be at home to their many friends at Armagh, Pennsylvania. J. L. GINGRICH.

IN THE SHADOW

GOODSON—Sarah Jane Goodson, born at Washington, C. D., Ohio, November 13, 1861, answered the last call on earth June 9th. She was the wife of David J. Goodson, and for the past year had lived at Hicksville, Ohio. She formerly lived in Bryan and was a member of the First Brethren church since 1920. Her funeral services were conducted by her pastor, the undersigned, in Hicksville, assisted by the pastor of the Radical U. B. church. E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

FIRESTONE—Elmira Mercer Firestone, a devoted member of the Bryan Brethren church for a number of years was compelled to lay down her earthly armor after several months of illness. She quietly passed to her Eternal Home June 25th. Funeral services were conducted in the church just as she had directed, by her pastor. E. M. RIDDLE.

BROWN—Gintherella Brown was born in Wayne County, Ohio, in the year 1850. She was the wife of Isaac J. Brown. She was stricken with paralysis more than a year before her death. The writer was called and in her home she accepted her Savior and his beautiful promises. She was never able, however, to be baptized. Funeral at the First Brethren church in Bryan, June 26th. Services were in charge of the undersigned, assisted by Rev. Martin of the M. E. church. E. M. RIDDLE.

ASHLAND COLLEGE

Ashland, Ohio

ASHLAND COLLEGE will open its Forty-ninth Year, Tuesday, September 14, 1926. The following departments offer the customary courses:

ARTS AND SCIENCES, leading to the usual bachelor's degrees.

SEMINARY, recently extended on a six-year basis,—three in the Arts College and three in the Seminary. The Bachelor of Arts degree at the end of four and the Bachelor of Theology at the end of six years.

EDUCATION—Two years' course leading to elementary certification under Ohio laws. Also in other states with equivalent requirements.

Four years' course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Education. Certificates granted for state-wide teaching in High School. So in other states with exchange arrangements with Ohio.

MUSIC—Piano, full graduation courses with two teachers.

Voice, as above with three teachers.

Violin, with one teacher and an assistant.

In every relation and in all courses of Instruction, the whole institution is frankly and avowedly Christian. In courses permitting religious discussion, Christian ideals are stressed.

Student life and activity are largely under the close and sympathetic supervision of two Deans, one for men and one for women.

Parents and young people are both alike asked to consider this College when contemplating further study.

The BRETHREN EVANGELIST

- ONE IS YOUR MASTER AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN -

Conference is Over

And we are back at our work

Now let us cooperate to make this the best year in the history of the Brethren Church

For Christ's Sake

A Prayer for Christian Unity

*O Master of the Galilean Way,
Forgive us for the vows we fail to keep:
Forgive us that we so neglect Thy sheep,
So idly waste this shining harvest day!
Forgive us for the stumbling blocks we lay
Along the paths by which men seek Thee! Sweep
From our small minds the strife that holds Thee cheap!
Break Thou the Bread of Life to us, we pray!*

*What matter if we cannot understand
The mystery of Love that is Divine,
Nor pierce the veil! Dear Lord, our faith increase
To know that, since our hands may reach Thy hand,
Our lives are made all-powerful, through Thine,
To heal a wounded world and bring it peace!

The 38th General Conference is History

We have been to Winona, have transacted our business and have returned to our homes, and with us we have brought back much from conference discussion and personal fellowship that will linger with us to inspire our hearts and encourage us in our tasks during the coming year. We will not deal in superlatives concerning this conference, as delegates are inclined to do concerning any conference or convention. It is quite customary to say unthinkingly out of our enthusiasm, "This is the best conference we have ever had." It is always good to feel that way, for it is a sure indication of a genuine enjoyment of the conference. But if one is inclined to measure his words, he must know that memory is short concerning the multitude of splendid things enjoyed in the past and that it is next to impossible to say truthfully of each succeeding conference, that it is better than the last.

The Spirit of Fellowship

But the Thirty-eighth General Conference was a good conference. Any one must say that who was there and had the spirit of fellowship and the work of the church at heart. It was not a conference beyond criticism, one seldom finds such, but it had many things to commend it. It was good in the spirit of fellowship that prevailed. One of the fine things we get in coming together on these occasions from the various parts of the brotherhood is that spiritual and social refreshment that comes from souls having much in common meeting and holding lofty communion one with the other. It means much for Brethren to come together and share their joys in the Lord, talking over their accomplishments of the past, the blessings of the present and the hopes and plans for the future. This good spirit and rejoicing together was noticeable on every hand, on the conference ground, in the meeting places and in the hotels. This is a good thing to seek and to encourage at our conferences. Just at this point, however, we might sound a warning, that we do not allow our desire for fellowship to lead us into the habit of loafing and gossiping during conference sessions.

The Attendance

The conference was good in attendance. The official delegates numbered a few less than last year, but the number of people in attendance seemed to be about as large as in the previous conference. Some people came long distances and many came from nearby churches without credentials, came not as delegates but just to enjoy the conference. The attendance kept increasing until Sunday morning, when, in spite of strong counter attractions, the Sunday school was the largest we have had for several years, the number being 1038. The attendance at the morning preaching hour when Brother A. V.

Kimmell brought his inspiring message was very good, there being fully 600 in the auditorium notwithstanding the fact that Billy Sunday was holding forth in the big Tabernacle a short distance away. In the afternoon, when "The Messiah" was being presented in the Tabernacle, the main floor of the Auditorium was practically full and many were in the gallery to hear Prof. J. Raymond Schutz deliver a lecture on "Peace." And while many went home before the Sunday evening session as usual (not a very good habit however), it was heartening to Brother W. I. Duker, who brought the message, to see that a goodly number had stayed to the very last. Another instance when the loyalty of the Conference delegates was manifest, and which made for good attendance was Thursday evening when, as a special feature of Rodeheaver's Music Week Program, Marian Talley sang to a packed house in the Tabernacle, and our crowd was lessened scarcely at all.

A Good Spirit Prevailed

It was a good conference judged by the spirit that prevailed in the conference sessions. There were no bickerings, quarrellings or unkind remarks on the conference floor. Business was transacted expeditiously and with harmony. Discussions were carried on in a proper spirit and manner, and there seemed manifest a spirit of cooperation and of interest in the largest welfare of the church. Not every one was fully satisfied with all that was done, possibly, and some would liked to have had steps taken that were not taken. But no one was insistent upon his own way or ideas to the extent of marring the good spirit of the conference. It adds much to the worth and influence of a conference when leaders can always possess their souls in the midst of transactions and discussions that do not meet their approval or do not satisfy them, and can show a fine Christian consideration of others' rights and feelings. The extent to which some of our leaders have learned this has added much to the spirit of harmony in our conferences. And the more we can yet grow in this grace, the more we will add not merely to outward harmony, but to genuine good will and love among the Brethren.

Emphasis of the Program

It was a good conference from the standpoint of the program. It was well executed and those who gave addresses, sermons and lectures were well prepared; we heard no one who impressed us otherwise. The high spiritual tone running through the entire program was inspiring. It seemed that the program had been planned with a view to making an appeal to the devotional life and to imparting strength to the faith and aspiration of the individual soul. And if the social responsibilities of the church were passed over in some of their important phases, yet from that deeply devotional attitude of mind and zealous spirit of loyalty to the Word developed to a remarkable degree ought to flow during the coming year obedience in effort and sacrifice in behalf of the great and worthy programs and undertakings calculated to make the spirit and teachings of Jesus regnant in the world. In our close adherence to the Word of God we rightly emphasize as the first and outstanding note of the Gospel the call of the Lord Jesus to the acceptance of His saving grace and the importance of possessing a hungering and thirsting attitude after righteousness on the part of the individual. But as soon as we have found our way to the foot of the cross and have been cleansed and renewed by the blood of the Lamb, we hear the admonition, Go, preach, teach, make disciples, bear one another's burdens, be peace makers, be loving and helpful to all, especially to those who are down, visit the sick, clothe the naked, feed the hungry, minister to the prisoners, and in a multitude of ways we are to let the light of our good works shine before men to the glory of God the Father. And that, please God, we will do, if the true spirit of loving devotion and loyal allegiance to all the words of the Master takes possession of us, as we were repeatedly and rightly urged to do during this conference.

The General Interests

The general interests of the church were given a respectful hearing and Conference bespoke the loyalty of the brotherhood in their behalf. Foreign Missions was prominent on the program, as is right, and also Home Missions, which should not be allowed to lag behind. Our educational interests, as centered especially in the college endowment campaign, were emphasized. The Benevolence work of the church, including both the Superannuated Ministers' Fund and the Brethren Home, was properly stressed. The Publishing Interests received attention, as also the departmental organizations, including the department of the Layman's Organization. It was encouraging to see a larger interest taken in some of these departments of our church's activity, and practically all of them were able to report a commendable support on the part of the brotherhood during the year, a thing which speaks well for their management. It was good that our program committee gave such proper time and place to these activities; it points to their vision of the importance of keeping such things before the people. We are sometimes inclined to grow weary of emphasizing "the same things over year after year" and to wish to push them off in a corner, where the briefer the notice and the sooner over the better. We have confidence in the good judgment of a majority of any Executive Committee that may be elected, that such an unwise move will not be attempted. These are the things we have in common, the work we must do together, the problems we must unite in solving; and the bigger they grow the more difficult are the problems, the more necessary is cooperation and the more important that we have time for propaganda and reports concerning them. These are the things that really bring us together, and we should not grow restless at the repetition of emphasis they receive, nor seek to crowd them into the most inconspicuous hour of the day, where they will serve as fillers for a transition period between two popular hours. The propagation of these interests should not be allowed to become monotonous. If they have been so, it is the fault of those in charge of them, and the way to make them bristle with interest is to put some gray matter into the working out of novel and attractive ways of presenting them. In the main, however, those charged with the direction of these interests have been alert and aggressive in presenting them before General Conference and they deserve our commendation and support. Some of these interests do not, by their very nature, lend themselves readily to an inspirational program, but they are vital to the welfare of our church and we should not fail to give them our time and interested attention.

And it was a good conference because the weather was auspicious. We had rain on Monday and on Sunday, but through the week between the weather was ideal for a conference. And the weather has much to do with the success and enjoyment of such a gathering. We have reason to thank Almighty God for his blessing upon us in this manner. (More about the Conference next week.)

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Next year's conference is to be held at the same place and during the same week in August—22 to 28.

Sister Emma Aboud informs us that the mission work she has been promoting in New York City has been disbanded for lack of "funds and the right kind of cooperation." She is now engaged in open air mission work at Coney Island.

Members of the Pennsylvania and Illiokota districts will be interested in their district conference programs which appear in this issue. Both are to be held the first week in October, the Pennsylvania conference meeting at Berlin and the Illiokota conference at Des Moines, Iowa.

The matron of the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, reports the gifts made to that institution during recent months. These indicate a very general and practical interest being taken in the Home. This is commendable as pointing to the fact that Brethren people are not unmindful of their obligation to the aged and infirm.

We rejoice to learn of the improvement of the health of Mrs. W. S. Bell, whose condition was so critical during Conference that Dr. Bell was unable to attend until the latter part of the conference, when a change was made for the better. Public prayers were offered during Conference for her recovery.

Brother H. E. Eppley, who recently announced through these columns his intention of taking up the work of an evangelistic song leader, appeared before the National Ministerial Association at Winona Lake and offered his assistance to pastors in their evangelistic campaigns on the basis of a free will offering taken at the close of the meeting. He may be addressed at Winona Lake, Indiana.

The sad news reached us at General Conference of the death of the wife of Brother E. M. Cobb, pastor of the Second church of Los Angeles. We did not learn the details, or the exact date. The National Ministerial Association wired a message of sympathy and consolation to Dr. Cobb. And we extend in behalf of the Evangelist family our heartfelt sympathy.

At the first business session of General Conference the new officers were elected in a very expeditious manner and are as follows: Moderator, C. H. Ashman; Vice Moderator, R. P. Miller; Secretary, O. C. Starn; Assistant Secretary, Herman Koontz; Treasurer, N. G. Kimmel; Statistician, George Cone. Members of the important Committee on Committees were elected and are as follows: G. W. Rench, J. A. Garber and G. T. Rouk.

The dedication of the new mission church at Fort Wayne, Indiana, which was postponed from a previous date on account of rain, was carried through as planned on August 22, with Dr. W. H. Beachler as the dedicator in charge. Brother J. L. Kimmel, the efficient pastor, who has accomplished a remarkable piece of work in the few months he has been on the field, stated that over $2,500 was raised on that day and most of it was from members and friends of the community.

Brother R. D. Barnard, pastor of the church at Mansfield, Ohio, came very near not getting to General Conference, but he did get there late, and when he did come, he brought with him a very broad and happy smile. And we knew what had happened, for the following announcement had preceded him: "Rev. and Mrs. R. D. Barnard announce the birth of Doreas Maurife on August 24, 1926." We extend congratulations on behalf of the Evangelist family to Brother and Sister Barnard on this happy occasion.

NEXT WEEK MORE REPORTS AND IMPRESSIONS OF GENERAL CONFERENCE. We are giving our readers an opportunity this week of reading the two very able opening addresses of Conference, the Retiring Moderator's Address given by Prof. J. A. Garber on Tuesday morning at the first business session, and the sermon by the Retiring Vice-moderator, Rev. Charles H. Ashman at the first session on Monday evening. You will also enjoy the report of the outstanding features of the Foreign Mission interests and developments of General Conference by Rev. Marcus A. Witter, member of the Foreign Board.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, pastor of the Ashland Brethren church, gives us some "travel flashes" which record an extended vacation trip, taking in the Niagara Falls, the Sesqui-Centennial Exposition, Gettysburg and ending up in a revival at Mathias, West Virginia. He found a splendid people in the fertile little valley between the mountains where Mathias is situated. Brother Arthur Snider is pastor of this church and leader of the community, and is supported by a very capable lay leadership. Brother Bame reports a large and enthusiastic attendance at his meetings, but heavy rains interfered considerably with the results.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes an interesting letter from South America, telling of progress and of need in that large and difficult mission field. He recently spent a week with the Bible Coach, relieving Brother Percy Yett, who had been absent from his family more than six weeks. Miss Nielsen is teaching and leading in the various auxiliaries of the church at Rio Cuarto. Everywhere there is much to be done, many calls for the establishment of new missions and too few workers to seize all the opportunities that offer themselves. Surely no one has a right to waste time in these days when in every nook and corner of the world's vast harvest field, people are seeking the light of God and many are destined to grope in darkness for the want of teachers of the Gospel.

General Conference set aside a day on which the Layman's organization might receive an offering from the churches of the brotherhood. That day is the second Sunday in September, and the offering is to be added to the fund which they are collecting from which to make loans to worthy young men seeking to prepare themselves for the ministry or missionary work of the church. It is a worthy project and deserves the loyal cooperation of every pastor and church. It is not a plan designed to pauperize any student, but to loan them money to help them through school with the expectation that they shall pay it back promptly when they have gotten out into the work. This will meet a long felt need and if the churches will give it their support, they will in a few years find it bearing splendid fruit in the ministry of noble young men. Read Brother Earl Huette's article on another page. He does not tell us to whom the money should be sent, but that information will likely appear in a later issue.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Retiring Moderator's Address

By Prof. J. A. Garber

Dear Brethren in the Lord:

Once more we are privileged to meet together in General Conference to take stock of our present situation in the Christian economy. We have met to express sincere and hearty gratitude to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ for his leading and blessing during the year, to share in and to hearten one another with the free fellowship of many brethren under one Master, to receive and consider reports that will occasion rejoicing and searching of heart, to be instructed concerning and empowered for the unfinished tasks immediately ahead.

Since the secretarial and statistical officers of the conference and the several auxiliary organizations are required to present an accounting of our stewardship in the various activities of the church this is not the time nor place to detail the fruitage of our labors of love. Suffice it to say here and now that the required reports will disclose no effort extraordinary nor any phenomenal success. Judged by the newsletters in the Brethren Evangelist our evangelistic efforts have turned many to the Lord and added a certain number to the membership of the church. The gain will be offset in part by the usual losses. Some new church buildings have been erected, the most noteworthy being at Berlin, Pennsylvania and Ashland, Ohio, by reason of their history and centrality. Faithful and fruitful work has been done by our missionaries at home and abroad. Ashland College and Seminary are coming afresh to the focus of our attention because of their growth and growing needs. The Brethren Evangelist under the skillful direction of the able Editor has been a generating medium of information and enthusiasm for the whole church.

More detailed references at this point might smack of numbers and statistics, machinery and money, promotion and publicity. Undue consideration of these matters may hinder rather than help to accomplish the real mission of the church. To borrow from a great Bishop's diagnosis of a big church: the kingdom of heaven suffers from the violence of excessive organization, of too high expectation in managerial offices, of too frequent flaunting of statistical tables, of too much confidence in publicity, of extravagant and wasteful living to the point of vulgarity by many professing Christians. People are asking, What place is Christ to have in the scheme of things?

That pointed question accounts for the strangeness of the foregoing observation from one who has been engaged in promotional work. Mechanics may be mistaken for dynamics. Church organization and conference decisions may be exalted to the exclusion of Christ's spirit. He must ever be revered as the great Head of the church and the supreme desire of all nations. Both the church and the nation will find in his sufficiency the grace and power, truth and way of life. He alone has the words of eternal life and, also, the plan for our temporal life. For us men in time and through eternity it is the Christ of God or—nothing.

As he pathetically sorrowed over Jerusalem so he is seriously yearning for the mind and heart of the world. Like then, so now, men are still divided over him. Yet there is an impressive turning toward him all over the world. In non-Christian lands the leaders of thought as well as the masses are acknowledging his supremacy and seeking a better understanding of him. Him whom they ignorantly seek we must make known unto them. A similar attitude obtains in our own country. There is a limited number of persons who profess unbelief and who are bold enough to announce their plans for the propagation of atheism. There is a larger group of persons who, some consciously, others unwittingly, accept and teach subtle science, materialistic philosophy and Behavioristic psychology, each of which is subversive to Christian belief. Then there is another group more definitely connected with the household of faith whose philosophy of life is practical materialism; these persons put things first rather than the kingdom of God.

Making due allowance for these opposing or hindering attitudes on the part of certain people, the heart of humanity is hungry for God. Man continues to be incurably religious. His religious hungers never can be wholly satisfied with the substitutes of religion. And, serious-minded men are evidencing a growing distrust with the so-called substitutes of religion. They are unwilling to trust science and philosophy, education and culture, economics with the solution of the baffling problems of today. They have discovered, or are discovering, that no one of these substitutes, nor all of them combined, gets at the root of human problems. The tap-root of all human ills is sin. "Missing the mark" is a good definition, if you mean failure to live in right relations with God and man. Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to (and destroys) any people. Righteous people are dependent upon a savior that can save them from their sin. That Savior is Christ for whom men hunger secretly or openly in their better moods.

In this summary analysis of human life we may find the real cause for and deeper meaning of the reassuring utterances of outstanding men. They oftentimes make us feel that the thinking leaders of all walks of life have turned preacher. At any rate they do not hesitate to place God to the fore of their thought and to claim Christianity as the essential need of the hour. "I have never known," says Robert Millikan, "a thinking man who did not believe in God. Every one who reflects at all believes in one way or another in God." And he further holds that the influences flowing from Jesus of Nazareth and the growth of modern science have made goodness characteristic in the conception of God. Not long since Mr. Filene, a Jewish merchant of Boston said: "It is Christ or anarchy within the next fifteen years." In announcing a new world order in Parliament Lloyd George said: "It is Christ or chaos."

Our late Presidents and the present incumbent in the White House have sensed the human need and declared that the only hope of humanity is in Christ and his way of life: Lest we forget let Wilson speak anew out of the silence:

"Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually. It can be saved only by becoming permeated with the spirit of Christ and being made free and happy by the practices that spring out of that spirit."

Let Harding speak in a similar way and vein:

"I tell you, my countrymen, the world needs more of Christ; the world needs the spirit of the Man of Nazareth. If we could bring into the relationships of humanity the brotherhood that was taught by Christ we would have a restored world."

Let Coolidge unveil the secrets of safety, past, present and future, while drawing some lessons from the fathers of the country:

"We must think the thoughts which they thought. Their intellectual life centered around the meeting house. They were intent upon religious worship. * * * While scantily provided with other literature there was a wide acquaintance with the Scriptures. * * * If we are to maintain the great heritage which has been bequeathed to us we must be likeminded as the fathers who created it. We must not sink into pagan materialism. We must cultivate the reverence which they had for the things that are holy. We must follow the spiritual and moral leadership which they showed. We must keep replenished, so that they may glow with a more compelling flame, the altar fires before which they worshipped."

These memorable words are redolent with religious devotion and appeal. They read like fresh paragraphs from the history of the church and of the Bible itself. They frankly tell us that "our dangers today are not economic or foreign; they lie in the possible submergence of the moral and spiritual by our great material resources." (Quotation from Herbert Hoover). They restate for us the age-old standing challenge of providing the ministry of the spirit for a materialistic age, which is the inescapable and majestic mission of the church.

Materialism tends to measure and evaluate everything in the terms of matter, and this materialistic tendency runs the whole gamut of our modern life from thought to conduct. Certain philosophers and scientists are markedly impatient with knowledge that does not rest wholly upon observable, tangible facts. That distrustful attitude is due their method of studying that which can be seen, heard and handled. Many moderns prefer that strange-like literature, art and music which appeals subtly to the senses, and which are sought in the easier way, through cheaper journals, the movie, victrola and radio. Supplied thus such persons say, "Let us eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die." To secure the needed wherewithal to avail themselves of commercialized pleasure such persons chase the almighty dollar and value all labor in the terms of the cash it will yield. Well may such say of themselves:

The world is too much with us; late and soon
Getting and spending we lay waste our powers.

Flippant indifference or blank pessimism rather than freedom and joy and righteousness in the spirit follow in the wake of materialism.

Needless to say, this is only one side of our modern life. The persons described above represent only a cross section of life both in and out of the church. There are many others who are trying, and yet many more who would try, if properly guided, to live the Jesus way of life. It most certainly runs counter with the materialistic way. His mind has been clearly made known to us: Seek ye first the kingdom of God and its righteousness and all else shall be added unto you. This recognizes the infinite worth and spiritual content of human life, emphasizes the consequent sacredness of all human relations and proclaims the inherent possibility of all men living together as a family of brothers with one Father. Motivated by brotherly love they are to bear one another's burdens in sacrificial service and so both fulfil the law of Christ and co-operate with him in securing the abundant life for all in the kingdom of peace, joy and righteousness.

From these basic Christian principles would naturally flow such avowed convictions and purposes as: The inviolate sanctity of every human life irrespective of race or color, including its right to a good birth and a normal childhood with ample opportunity for play, school and appropriate work and the further right of useful labor and fruitful living under wholesome social conditions. If conditions within the family hinder or cripple they must be seriously considered. If recreational facilities are inadequate or improper they must be provided and supervised. If industry menaces or impoverishes life in any form it must be regulated; men take precedence over money. If an institution like the saloon destroys physical vigor and moral manhood it must be outlawed; and the law is to be obeyed and enforced. If war is inhuman and endangers civilization it must be repudiated as a method of settling differences between nations; international good-will supersedes international hatred from which wars come. Christians must be against all inhuman activities that injure or destroy human life. Christians must be for every human endeavor that conserves and enriches human life. Persons so minded and so disposed are the fruits of Christianity.

Fruits always appear on trees with roots. Knowing what was in man Jesus, as previously pointed out, went directly to the root of human difficulty. He showed and told us how to get rid of sin and to change human nature. As a man thinketh so is he. Then let him change his way

Layman's Day, Sunday, September 12th.

By Earl Huette

The second Sunday in September is to be observed in all Brethren churches as Layman's Day, according to decision of the recent General Conference. It is desired that the laymen shall have charge of the morning service on that day, when they will explain fully the Student's Aid Fund. This will be a splendid opportunity for the laymen to take charge of the service and show what they can do, and at the same time relieve the pastor somewhat, if he is willing. There will be an offering taken, all of which offerings taken throughout the brotherhood on that day will be turned into the treasury of the Student's Aid Fund.

The money in this Fund is available as loans to young men who aspire to the Brethren ministry, but have not sufficient money to put themselves through Ashland College. The loans that will be made possible by this Fund may be the means of supplying your church with a good pastor in a few years. Certainly if you can help in building up a fund that will perpetuate itself and grow in size and usefulness with the years, and be the means of aiding worthy young men in their preparation for fields of Christian service in the Brethren church, you will be willing to do your bit.

Remember the day, September 12th. And if that day should prove inconvenient, set aside the next Sunday, September 19th, to this purpose. And it is for that reason that we are sending this notice through the Evangelist at this time. It could not be otherwise than late, coming out as it does in this the first issue since General Conference and during the week just preceding the Sunday set aside for this observance. But if the personal communications have not reached you in time to enable you to make proper plans for this day, we ask you to use the first Sunday convenient.

Remember also the purpose. Help to make it possible for some possible future pastor of your church to get the education you will demand that he shall have. Let every church observe Layman's Day.

Dayton, Ohio.

of thinking (repent) and turn from the evil to the right way of life (become converted) and receive Christ and he will be given the right (adoption) to become a child of God (to be a Christian). Forgiven and justified through faith in Christ (forgiveness and justification) he observes the ordinances (baptism and communion) and grows in the grace and knowledge of the Lord (Christian growth) toward the stature of manhood in Christ (Christian character). As a fruit bearing branch in the kingdom he becomes known by the fruit of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, self-control. Therein we have the subjectivity and objectivity of the New Testament methodology of changing human nature, which is a valid method for the church.

The crux of the present problem is: are we prepared and inclined to employ this method in doing the work of the church? Are we able and ready to bear testimony to this New Testament experience? That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled the Word of Life. * * * That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you that you may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. The writer, mark you, is speaking as a witness to an experience in fellowship. So witnessed the other of the apostles in Asia Minor and the Roman Empire. So witnessed our early church fathers in Germany when the state churches, having lost the testimony which their founders bore, sought to coerce their members to submit to creedal beliefs and church practices. So witnessed our later fathers at Berlin, Arnold's Grove, Ashland, Dayton and elsewhere when the so-called German Baptist Brethren, having lost again the testimony of church founders, resorted to coercion with the weapons of decisions handed down from Annual Meeting. So will we witness today, unless we have missed the experience and lost the path thereto, by holding forth this faithful word of life (the New Testament) and saying this is our only rule of faith; anything more is too much; anything less is too little; just the same we do not need for we have this.

Like the Brethren of the early 80s, of 1723 and of 1708, we will call upon all seekers of the way to join with us in the study of the Scriptures, according such persons the right of private interpretation under the leading of the Holy Spirit who is to lead us into all truth. Alexander Mack's study classes, similar to those conducted by the Pietists, were places of inquiry and discussion. Pioneers believe that more light will break forth from the Word, and pathfinders are not afraid to follow the light.

Like those who have led the way we will challenge all sincere disciples who are willing to obey the truth to share life with us in the church as a co-operative enterprise in Christian living. The lives of many of our fathers were so interlinked with their brethren that each lived for all and all for each. They not only helped one another with their hands and beasts of burden, but loaned money to a brother without interest. Loyalty to Christ and love of their fellows impelled our forbears to co-operate in industry, to print Bibles and various literature, to establish schools general and religious, to declare against the use of intoxicating liquor and to refuse to become a party to war.

Like those who have preceded us in this challenging way of faith and conduct we will bear witness to our free fellowship with Christ and with our fellowmen and to the practical outcomes of that fellowship in everyday living. We will accentuate the Christian ethic along side of Christian theology. For the patent and urgent need of our day is an ethical demonstration as well as a theological presentation of Christianity. "However great be our rightful emphasis on orthodoxy of thought the deepest necessity is for orthodoxy of life" (Robert E. Speer.) "The great common heresy of men lies in the fact that they do not really and truly believe in the things in which Jesus Christ believed and for which he gave his life" (Alva M. Kerr)

That is (These church leaders are speaking to churchmen), too many doubt if the life which Jesus lived and incarnated in his disciples can be reproduced and demonstrated in twentieth century disciples. Otherwise we would face the perplexing problems of the hour with less timidity and uncertainty. Unafraid and confident Paul and others attacked infanticide, sexual lust and divorce, unspeakable orgies of pleasure, the greed of industry, economic and social slavery, class discrimination, racial hatred, brutal murder, war between nations and pagan philosophy with the dynamic of the gospel. Witness the result in changed lives that gave us the present civilization which no one of us would want to exchange for life in the old Roman Empire. A like attack with the whole gospel upon race prejudice, class conflicts, paganistic pleasure, unjust industrial conditions, lawlessness and crime, tendencies toward war will enable us to change the life of our day with the introduction of the spirit of Christ. But he must be taken in all seriousness and with complete confidence in every phase of our modern life.

To take him seriously and to follow him confidently we must set our house in order. Not that the day of departure is dawning; but the hour of opportunity is here. We are not only to wait and to watch but to witness and to serve. Complete and thorough preparation is required for both ministries in the church.

1. In the New Testament order evangelism is made the first form of witnessing. There appear to have been special evangelists, pastoral evangelists, teaching evangelists and personal evangelists. The first named class seems to have been unduly magnified in later years, giving rise to professional and mass evangelism with their attendant evils. There certainly is an imperative need for the revival of personal, pastoral and educational evangelism both at home and abroad. A commission of representative leaders would help to give direction and effectiveness to our evangelistic efforts.

2. Missions are an extended form of evangelism. The purpose of missionary work is to present the gospel to those who might otherwise be neglected, both at home and abroad. Fortunately we have come to see something of the relation that rightly prevails between so-called home and foreign missions. Too often less glory seems to attach to the faithful workers who stay by the stuff at home. To determine the distribution, the discovery and training of workers for both fields, to plan their support in the light of possible resources and to allocate the funds, to work out a sound policy for beginning a new work anywhere a commission of representative leaders to generate confidence in and enthusiasm for our missionary program would prove useful.

3. The extensive program of the church must be co-ordinated with its intensive program of spiritual development. If evangelism yields disciples the "teaching of them all things" contributes to Christian character and fidelity and effectual testimony to the reality of the Christian experience. Education is as much a function of the church as is evangelism. The educator is as essential as the evangelist. Since the state has largely taken over general education the church has been relieved of large but not entire responsibility. Religious education must be provided by the church. It must also provide collegiate training for the older young people, and care for others in the state universities. Several hundred Brethren young men and women attend these institutions of higher learning every year and with scarcely any attention from their church. These must be shepherded as well as those who attend our only church college. Ashland College and Seminary must have the larger support which they need, deserve and are asking for. Failure in the present endowment campaign will curtail the future work of the church. A commission of representative leaders would assist us in visualizing our total educational task and in working out a co-ordinated program which would include home training, church schools, public school, college and university, seminary and missionary.

4. Another need is training in Christian living. It is one thing to teach folks what to do; it is another thing to

Some Outstanding Features of Our Foreign Mission Work

By M. A. Witter, Member Foreign Board

In no part of our General Conference work is there a more manifest interest than in the work of our Foreign Missions. The announcement that our missionaries were to speak always brought the attendance at the sessions up to the highest point. Not only with our own Brethren people is this interest shown but Dr. Gribble tells us of how the French and Belgian religious magazines for the children are using the story of the wonders of our Lord's work in the M. O. C. at Bassai and Yalouki to kindle the zeal of the children and young people.

Well may we thank God for the manifestation of his good pleasure upon the work in the last year. At Yalouki 239 were added to the church by baptism, after having accepted Christ. At Bassai 417 were led to Christ and added to the church by baptism. In the Argentine 64 were baptized and added to the churches of our missions there. About 720 souls in all made the surrender to Christ in this one conference year in our foreign mission churches.

Another cause for rejoicing and thanksgiving is the opening of the way for schools for the children in Africa. After long delay on account of the French requirements that only those holding the "Superior Certificate" be permitted to open schools in the French Equatorial Africa prayer was at last doubly answered at one time. Brother Johnson who has been studying in France was given the "Superior Certificate" and at the same time Miss Florence Bickel was recognized for her faithful work on the field with the permission to open a school. She has already enrolled 35 of the curly headed little African boys and girls and they now are meeting daily to study the mysteries of a written and printed language. May God grant that this knowledge may enable them to become acquainted with God's word and that these little ones may develop into mighty men and women of God, winning hosts of their own people to Christ.

Our hearts are also cheered by the news that five native African evangelists are faithfully preaching the gospel and are winning many souls as they go from village to village with the wonderful story of Jesus' love and his power to save.

Those who had the privilege of hearing Brother Clarence Leroy Sickel, missionary to Argentina, and of seeing the stereopticon views of the work in Argentina cannot be in doubt about the wonderful progress that has been made in our South American missions. The splendid properties now owned, the fine groups of Sunday school children and the intelligent young men and young women who are being won to Christ, all bear striking evidence of the rich blessing of God upon the faithful witnessing of our noble band of missionaries in this land of perverted religious teachings. How can we ever appreciate the true value of the dividends that the Lord has granted to the investors in this great missionary work?

When we consider these splendid returns upon the investment already made both in South America and in Africa our hearts cannot fail to experience a keen pang of regret that we cannot, because of lack of funds, greatly expand the work in both of these highly responsive fields. However we must keep the expenses within the income provided for the work by the gifts of the church for this purpose. Last year about $38,000 were expended for the work and a like sum will be needed this year without expansion. With success like God has granted in this work who could think of retrenchment? The funds on hand however are about $12,000 short of what will be needed for the year to maintain the work at its present level. A very good balance of $25,577 shows in the treasurer's report of July 1 but we must remember that that report is the showing just after the Easter Offering (the largest ever made by our church) is in and before the year's expenses are taken out. A whole year's expenses must be carried before another Easter offering. Will you join in prayer to the Lord of harvest that means be supplied to meet all of the needs of the faithful reapers that have been thrust forth into the harvest? And will you pray that the work may ever continue to expand and that for every life that the Lord shall call to this work funds may be supplied to support that life on the field?

The splendid support of the W. M. S. is a great encouragement in this work. These noble women are planning the support of the entire Bassai station. A number of churches are learning the joy of supporting their own missionary on the field. This is as it should be and the same plan should appeal to individuals and Sunday school classes as well.

We look confidently to the Lord and ask that still greater progress be made in this year. And shall we not permit his Holy Spirit to dictate our gifts of money and of effort to that end? Kittanning, Pennsylvania.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Greatest Wonder of the Ages

By C. H. Ashman

(Opening Sermon of General Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 23, 1926)

TEXT: "His name shall be called Wonderful." Isaiah 9:6.

Centuries ago the Greeks selected the "Seven Wonders of the World." They were, "The Pharaohs of Alexandria, the Hanging Gardens of Babylon, the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, the Statue of Jupiter by Phidias, the Mausoleum of Artemisia, the Pyramids of Egypt, and the Colossus of Rhodes." But what were they? One was a garden artificially built for a heathen Queen. Two were tombs for the dead. One was a temple dedicated to a heathen Goddess. One was a freakish metal cast. One was a statue representing physical charm. They were largely a testimony to muscle, brute strength, and superstition.

Not long ago the Editor of the Popular Mechanics magazine invited 1000 Scientists to choose the "Seven Wonders of Today." Their ballot selected these.—Wireless Telegraphy, the Telephone, the Aeroplane, Radium, Antiseptics and anti-toxins, the Spectrum Analysis, and the X-ray. These all give testimony to the keenness of man's intellect. They represent the marvels of modern inventions and discoveries. They bear witness to the "rule of ideas."

Someone has made this selection of the "Seven Great Natural Wonders." The Natural Bridge in Virginia, Mammoth Cave in Kentucky, the Giant's Causeway in Ireland, Niagara Falls, the Grand Canyon, the Alps Mountains, and the Northern Lights. Four of these seven great natural wonders are in our own beloved United States.

Now, centuries before these selections had been made, Isaiah selected the Greatest Wonder of the Ages. Leveling the telescope of prophetic vision down through the centuries, he foretold the coming of this greatest Wonder. He said, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given: the government shall be upon his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." This is the text of the entire Bible. To it agrees the entire Old Testament. From the first promise of the Redeemer in Genesis until the Angel's announced to the Shepherds on Judea's hillsides that Christ was born, there runs through the Old Testament a stream of prophecy of Christ's coming. Everything of the Old Testament focuses around this promise in Isaiah. The New Testament is a unit in focusing upon Christ. Matthew describes him as the Counsellor, the one who fulfills prophecy, proving himself to be the Messiah. Mark describes him as the Mighty God who wrought miracles of healing. Luke describes him as the Prince of Peace. The remainder of the New Testament is just an expansion upon these Gospels. Christ is the center of the Bible. Study the Bible in the light of Christ's person and work and it becomes a consistent unit. Ignore the person and work of Christ and the Bible becomes a puzzle.

How is Christ the Greatest Wonder of the Ages? Not in his external appearance. Some are prone to envy those who saw Christ in the flesh. It was a great privilege! How did Christ look? The greatest artists of the ages have attempted to paint pictures of him. Some have tried to express his tenderness and their pictures make him look weak and effeminate. Others have tried to portray his virility and their pictures make the Master to look despotic and stern. It has been said that Caesar commanded that the likeness of Christ be cut in the face of an emerald. If this command was ever carried out, the emerald has been lost, for no genuine likeness of Christ has ever been found. All pictures of him are inventions and failures. God wisely saw to it that no picture of Christ was handed down. He desires that we worship CHRIST, not an image or picture of him. We look forward to seeing him. When he appears again in the clouds, then we shall see him as "The Wonderful." He will appear as the Lily of the Valley, the Rose of Sharon, the Bright and Morning Star, the Fairest of Ten Thousand to our soul." But, today, his greatness is not to be found in the external appearance he assumed when he was on the earth.

Jesus Christ is the Greatest Wonder of the Ages as to who he was and is, in his person. He was and is and always has been the Son of God, Deity, the Very God of very God. He became Immanuel, God manifest in human form, but although veiled in the flesh, he was no less Deity. We do not speak of his divinity, but Deity. Some today who speak so glowingly of his "divinity", speak almost equally of "our divinity." Some speak of him as, "The Divine Idea." Between the "Divine Man" and the "Divine Idea", there is very little choice. We speak of his DEITY!

We present the following proofs of his Deity. Christ is proven to be Deity by his Eternal Existence. He is "the same, today, yesterday, and forever." He always has been, always is, and always will be. The Trinity of the Godhead is taught in Genesis when God said, "Come, let US make man in OUR image." The name used for God in the Genesis account is the Uni-plural name, teaching the trinity. Christ claimed to have glory with the Father, "before the earth became." John declares, "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was God." Christ declared to the Jews, "Before Abraham was, I AM." Not, "I was", but, "I am." He used the same name for himself as God used to Moses when he said, "The great I Am has sent you." Jesus Christ is the eternal, self-existent one. He was never created! The expression, "the only begotten of the Father", refers to Christ's position in the Godhead, not to origin of existence.

Christ's Deity is proven by his Virgin Birth. Isaiah foretold that this would be the "Sign" of his Messiahship. To be a Sign, a thing must be different from all else. Christ's entrance into the flesh was the only one of its kind. Isaiah foretold that he was to spring forth as "a plant out of a dry ground", contrary to natural law that would demand moisture to produce the plant. Daniel beheld him as a "stone cut out of the mountains without hands", that is produced without the operation of human generation. Christ himself was never born of Mary, his body and humanity was given birth by her, but not Christ himself. In Hebrews 10:5, Christ himself declares, "a body hast thou prepared me." All that was born of Mary was the body of Christ and that was supernaturally conceived through the power of the Holy Spirit. The Virgin Birth of Christ is an unchallengeable proof of his Deity. That is the reason the devil is attacking it so today.

Christ's perfect Being proves his Deity. We do not speak of his perfect character, but being. Being is what we essentially are, character is what we are made to become. Character is produced. Christ was never produced. He was. The word Character first referred to the tool used in chiseling marble. Then it was applied to the product of the chiseling. Then it was applied to human character. Before human character is produced, there must be a chiseling process. But, the character of Christ was never chiseled, produced through evolution or education. He was essentially perfect in being. He could say, "Which of you convicteth me of sin", not because he had not sinned, but because he was a perfect being. You cannot explain Christ by any law of development, heredity, or environment. He always was and always is and always will be a perfect being, because he is God!

A LESSON IN OBEDIENCE—1 Sam. 15:17-23.

Teach me, O Jehovah, the way of thy statutes,

And I shall keep it unto the end.

Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law;

Yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart.

—Psalm 119:33, 34.

(Prepared by G. S. B.)

Christ's perfect teaching proves his Deity. "Never man spake as he", was the verdict of his enemies. We are hearing much these days about the reputed failure of Christianity. The question is asked, "Has Christianity Failed?" The answer is, "No, it has never seriously been tried." In every individual case in which the teachings of Christ have been obeyed, they have produced results. Politically, socially, industrially, morally, the teachings of Christ have never been applied in the world. Whenever they are, they will produce the perfect order. Today they are being individually accepted, but the day is coming when they will be universally accepted. In the Millennium when Christ reigns in person on the earth, they shall be obeyed and then shall come that reign of universal peace, justice, and righteousness among men. Centuries have rolled upon the scroll of time since Christ taught, yet his teachings have never been equaled, nor will they ever be, for they are perfect. They prove his essential Deity.

Christ's mighty miracles prove his Deity. He said one day, "believe me for the very work's sake." All the forces of nature were obedient to him. All forms of disease recognized him as Master. Even death yielded to his command. But, one day he made a strange statement. He said, "Greater works than these shall ye do." What could be greater than the miracles he performed? What did he mean? We believe he referred to the transformation of lives through the influence of his gospel down through the centuries. The changed lives today are a greatest testimony to Christ than the miracles of nature or healing he wrought. Why? Because each transformed life is a miracle! Each changed life through the saving power of the Gospel is a greater testimony to his power than the stilling of the storm or healing of the sick. All about us are millions of miracles of saved people proving Christ's Deity.

Time does not permit the dealing with his death and resurrection as unchallengeable proofs of his Deity. Now let us turn to another part of his being.

Jesus Christ is the Greatest Wonder of all Ages, not only in his essential Deity as the Son of God, but also in his essential Humanity as the Son of Man. Oh, the depths of humility and humiliation in his condescension to be found in our likeness! He laid aside the "glory of God, the appearance, manifestation of the Godhead and took upon himself the "form of man" and was found "in fashion as a man." What an exchange! From the throne to the manger, what depths of humility! Could you live in the form of a dog? That would be no greater humiliation than Christ endured when he took upon himself our humanity.

Behold the humility of his walk in life! He walks the paths of old Judea, weary and footsore, yet he could be riding in the chariots of fire such as took Elijah to glory. He asks a drink of water of the despised woman at the brink of Jacob's well, yet Angels would bring him water from the River of Life that flows from beneath the throne of God. He sleeps upon the mountain side, the dew of a tropical clime sparkling upon his brow as kissed by the morning sun, yet, he is the one who owns the palaces of heaven. He says, "the foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, yet the Son of Man hath no place to lay his head", yet he is the Creator of the universe. He never owned a foot of real estate, yet he created the earth and the fullness thereof. He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, yet he was the Lion of the Tribe of Judah and could crush empires beneath his heel. He goes forth bearing his cross as a sheep dumb before her shearers; in his humiliation his speech is taken away, yet he had only to whisper the wish and legions of angels would have come to his side. Why this humility of his humanity? He who was rich became poor that we through his poverty might be exalted. He came down from heaven to earth that he might lift us up from earth to heaven.

Why this assuming our humanity? He identified himself with us as the Son of Man that we might realize his sympathy for us. He was tempted in all points as we are tempted that we might know he can succor us in temptation. He taught us that he is a High Priest that can be touched with the feelings of our infirmities. He was baptized to set before us an example of fulfilling all righteousness. He identified himself with our humanity to become the Second Adam, the Head of the race. He is the Greatest Wonder of the Ages in his Humanity.

Behold the Wonder! Deity and Humanity united in the Person of Christ! The Son of God and the Son of Man in our Lord blended. The Very God of Very God becoming the Son of Man, born of the Virgin, assuming, not our carnality, but our humanity.

We dare not stop here! Christ's Person is worthless without his Work. Why did he become flesh and dwell among us? For one supreme purpose, to make Atonement for sin. You may have the Virgin Birth, the Perfect Being, and the Matchless Teachings of Christ, but if you stop on the other side of the cross, you rob Christ of his greatest wonderfulness. The church today is being divided into just two classes of persons. Some magnify the life and teachings of Christ WITHOUT THE BLOOD and the others equally magnify the life and teachings of Christ WITH THE BLOOD. The difference in church members today is a DIFFERENCE OF BLOOD!

Jesus Christ is the only Savior from sin, and Christianity is the only saving religion in the world. Some years ago a Parliament of Religions was held in Chicago. Joseph Cook of Boston was chosen to present the supreme claims of Christianity as a world religion. He used the scene from Shakespeare of Lady Macbeth. He said, "Here are Lady Macbeth's hands. There are blood stains upon them, the blood of the murdered King Duncan. She rushes to and fro, rubbing at the blood stains, crying out, "Out, damned spots!" But they remain. She cries out, "Can all the perfumes of Arabia sweeten these red hands?" Then Joseph Cook asked that Parliament of Religious Representatives, "Is there a religion present that can wash away these stains of sin?" None answered. Then he said, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." Christ is the only Savior and Christianity is the only saving religion.

We have read that in the East Indies there grows the Manchanceel Tree. It has beautiful foliage. The fruit appears like a golden apple and emits a pleasing aroma. But the juice of it is deadly poison. If one, being received by the beauty of the foliage or the aroma of the fruit or the enticing appearance of the fruit, should sink the teeth into the fruit and become poisoned, what is to be done? By a providential arrangement of nature, there grows near the Manchanceel Tree a White Fir Tree. It has been discovered that the juice of the White Fir Tree is an antidote for the poison of the Manchanceel Tree. We have all tasted of the Manchanceel Tree of sin. Christ is the only remedy for the poison of Sin. He is the White Fir Tree of Salvation.

FROM DAWN TO EVENTIDE

The East is reddening with the rose of dawn;
The moon is waning in the growing day;
The mist is lifting from the dewy awn,
And all things wake!
I wake in faith.

The South is glowing in the golden noon;
The earth is teeming with exultant life;
The heart is straining for a richer boon,
And all things work!
I work in faith,
In faith, my God, in thee.

The West is robing at decline of day;
The cloud is homing on the friendly hill;
The bird is trilling forth its vesper lay,
And all things rest!
I rest in faith,
In faith, my God, in thee.

LESSON LIGHTS

The Law Breakers

Swarms of smugglers slip with noiseless motors or under sail into the inlets and bayous. Their scouts ply back and forth between offices of government agents, offering bribes, and furnishing official honor at every touch. Regiments of political malecontents preach misleading doctrines of personal liberty to excuse violation of law. Thousands of bootleggers are robbing honest business to pile up illegitimate fortunes of fabulous size. And under them all are battalions of hirelings, thugs, stick-up men, "con" artists, and "hy-jackers," skulking beneath the foundations of society, attacking it from below. But the aristocrat and ranking officer of the whole nefarious gang is the bootlegger. He has lately risen in power and fortune beyond the wildest dreams of avarice. From him there is most to fear; from his wealth, his organizing ability, and his social standing, if you please, for there are many communities where he is hardly regarded as a criminal.

In the past twenty-seven months 78,000 cases arising in Federal courts for violation of the National Prohibition Act have passed in review before me. Turning the spotlight at random on some of them, such a picture as this stands out:

An importer, dapper man about town, adventurer, vastly prosperous. He owns four schooners, and many small boats and launches which land liquor in burlap bags on the shores of inlets where it is stored in cemented caves in the swamps. Darkies take it by truck to box cars in which it is crated as fruit or potatoes. County sheriffs along its routes, and at landing points, are paid from four to six hundred dollars a month—"not to see things." This king of bootleggers maintains his own detective force, headed by an experienced confidence man wanted in several districts of the United States for murder, forgery, and swindling! He has such an army of employees and henchmen that last summer some of them congregated at his roadhouse every afternoon to play baseball. They call it the "bootleggers' team," and this modern pirate claimed to be practicing to challenge the "revenuers"! His income mounted into many millions of dollars a year. And all his tangible property the Government could locate is now tied up to secure the payment of the fabulous income tax he dodged. When faced with exposure, he started bribing the jury, and chose, all unsuspectingly, agents of the Government, who were consorting as bootleggers in his gang, to do the bribing. Although the community generally knew the character of his business, this man was so rich that he was almost accepted in respectable society, until a jury found him and his henchmen guilty of a revolting network of conspiracies.

In a recent round-up, investigations of the Federal Government revealed that in the past three years one of these ring leaders of lawlessness had derived such stupendous revenues from the illicit importation of liquor and other contraband that the income tax he should have paid the Government was $1,243,254; another one owed $301,816. Lesser fry in the organization had dodged taxes ranging from $53,000 to $245,000.

Just for a moment consider that an immense amount of money had to be made for them to owe so much income tax. Do you think it is fair for the business of your family to be taxed to the breaking point to maintain the forces of law and order, while these denizens of the underworld flourish and pay not tax? If good people were not eagerly buying the wares of these men, no such illegal profits

'Tis better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted.
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through

When the ominous clouds are rifted.
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

could be made. Marketing to their own lawless kind would furnish "lean pickin's."—Condensed from an Article in Good Housekeeping, by Assistant Attorney-General Mabel Walker Willebrandt.

Who Shall Enforce the Prohibition Law?

The roots of all good government lie in the community, and prohibition will never be satisfactorily enforced by the Federal Government alone. Its judicial equipment for punishing violations is too meager, and the laws which United States judges must enforce in addition to the Prohibition Act are too many. During the past fiscal year one hundred and twenty-eight judges handled a total of 78,189 cases in which the United States was a party. Fifty-eight percent of this number arose out of statutes relating to intoxicating liquor.

The Eighteenth Amendment places concurrent responsibility on state and nation to carry out its purpose. The State should prosecute the local violators, and the Federal Courts should be left with uncongested dockets so as to bring to speedy justice the criminal whose widespread operations present a national menace, in that he furnishes to the illicit liquor trade the wholesale sources of supply. The crux of legitimate criticism against prohibition enforcement is that Uncle Sam does not spend his time on bigger cases.

Every agency at the command of the United States Government must be mobilized and coordinated to the apprehension and conviction of the smuggler who is slipping in immense quantities of liquor over our borders, and the dealer in so-called "non-beverage" liquors who diverts his alcohol into beverage channels; these are the two sources of wholesale supply. Instead, however, the Federal Government is carrying the burden of thousands of cases of local importance only.

You have no right to say that prohibition is a failure if your own police wink at its disregard. You have no right to complain that the Federal Government does not punish offenders quickly enough, nor have you a right to indulge in the complaint that it cannot be enforced, if your police courts are failing to jail the offenders in your own community. Because that duty is theirs, and there are enough decent people in every county and city, if they will get together, to make officials do their duty—Condensed from Good Housekeeping, by Mabel Walker Willebrandt.

Your Part in Law Enforcement

You are a citizen of the United States as well as of your State. Your citizenship is dual; your responsibilities also are two-fold. But:

Do you know whether your city has an ordinance against the use of intoxicating liquor and the maintenance of saloons?

Do you know whether your police department is honestly enforcing such ordinance?

Do you know whether your State has an adequate prohibition law as vigorous as the National Prohibition Act?

Do you know whether your State police, your sheriff, your county district attorneys, and your State and county courts are doing their share to enforce that law?

Do you know who your State, county, and Federal prohibition agents are?

When you hear of a violation of the prohibition law do you report it to your local agent? Then do you follow it up to see whether the evidence you have submitted is used?

Are you willing to testify as a citizen to facts that may be within your knowledge to prove the existence of a blind pig or other rendezvous of lawlessness?

Do you do your jury duty—even if it means inconvenience?

Do you vote at every election?

Do you honestly study the character and fitness of the men who seek public office?

Do you study the legislative and administrative measures that are submitted on your ballots?

Do you protest against clubs to which you belong serving liquor surreptitiously?

Do you allow to be served in your home liquor that you did not acquire prior to January, 1920?

Do you indulge in the popular pastime of talking about "my bootlegger" and by such chatter increase his illicit patronage?—Mabel Walker Willebrandt.

Christian Endeavor Publicity

By Louis P. Clapper, Publicity Superintendent

(Address at Christian Endeavor Session of General Conference, August 27, 1926)

Members and Friends of Christian Endeavor: It seems to me that we are entirely too conservative when it comes to giving our Christian Endeavor activities publicity.

First, we might ask ourselves the question: Is publicity worth while, or, does advertising pay? Have you ever stopped to think what advertising has done in the past and is doing today?

Advertising has put Castoria down your throat before you ever heard the words "Christian Endeavor." Advertising put Arrow collars around your neck, it has slipped your feet in Holeproof hosiery, it has given you Grapenuts and Shredded Wheat for breakfast and has placed Heinz's "57" varieties upon your dinner table. Through advertising you are using Old Dutch Cleanser in your kitchen and bath room, your wife is the proud owner of a Hoover sweeper. Advertising has put Congoleum rugs in your floors, Kelley-Springfield tires on your automobile, and, last—but not least—we men have the pleasure of a clean shave daily with the famous Gillette razor.

I believe by this time you all agree with me that "It Pays to Advertise."

Now then—Brethren—if it pays to advertise these material things, why won't it pay to advertise the GREATEST thing in the world—THE LOVE OF JESUS CHRIST?

Don't be afraid to use Printers' Ink. If your church is fortunate enough to have a parish paper, use its columns to bring before the church members and friends what you are really doing as a society. Another very good method of giving your society publicity is to have a bulletin board in the main auditorium or vestibule of the church and keep this board covered with typewritten programs emphasizing the special features of the regular Sunday night prayer meetings, also posters (hand-made) announcing socials, pageants, hikes, picnics, etc.

You well know that the average American youth is not wild about attending funerals, but if you can show to them through publicity that your society is really alive and doing big things for Christ and the church, you will have no trouble whatever in reaching the young folks of the community.

Another kind of publicity that pays is using the columns of your local newspaper. If the publisher is approached in the proper way he will gladly give you space. Don't ask him to publish sermonettes, but just the high spots, the extraordinary features put on by your society.

There are three essentials to the success of any salesman. First—he must have an article that has been nationally advertised. Second—he must go into a field where this particular article is needed. Third—with his training in salesmanship it is up to him to deliver the goods or the firm he is traveling for will want to know the reason why.

Now folks—spiritually speaking—we Christian Endeavorers have the very remedy this sin-sick world needs. Our field is the entire world—and if we fail to deliver the goods we cannot return to our Master and say: "The remedy was not needed, the field was overworked"—but we can feel assured it was because WE did not present the remedy in the proper way—through the use of sufficient publicity and the living of clean, upright Christian lives.

WHAT ARE WE, FELLOW ENDEAVORERS, GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?

Louisville, Ohio.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

Elijah, Whose Torch Reminded People of God. I Kings 18:30-38

(NOTE—This is not the lesson subject for September 19th, which you are expecting, but is a lesson story written for a Sunday in June and reached our office too late for publication and which we are giving you now because it is interesting and worth reading, and also because the regular Junior Notes failed to arrive in time, which was due to the fact that we had to go to press a day earlier on account of Labor Day.—Editor.)

The time for another lesson in Torch Bearing is here. Our lesson this time is from the life of a great prophet. Do you know what a prophet is? A prophet is one who prophesies or tells what is going to happen in the future. Elijah was God's prophet to men and gave men messages from God. This took a lot of courage because at that time the people did not believe in God as they should.

Do you know about the qualities of Elijah that made his torch shine for God? We have been having so many lessons about torches and the kind of qualities that make them bright. I wish that I could talk to each one of you, Juniors, who may read this and see if you could think of Elijah's good traits and tell me this time. You think it over. Maybe you can add some more ideas after you have read these which I consider important. Read the Bible References and they will help you to learn a great deal about Elijah.

Faith is a very wonderful trait to have. Several of the torches that we have talked about in the past months have shone with the light of faith. Again we have this ray among the other rays of light that come from this torch. Elijah showed his faith and his courage at different times. He used to go before the king of the land with messages that displeased the king. He had to give the king these messages and it took a lot of bravery to be able to do it. One time when all the people were worshiping idols instead of the true God, Elijah called them all together. Elijah wanted to show them that our God was the true God. A very interesting thing happened. Elijah built an altar to God and the rest of the people built an altar to their idol Baal. An altar is a sort of table built of stones. The people in those days built these altars and then put an offering such as some animal on the altar and burnt it. This was their way of worshiping their God. This time that I am telling you about, all the people built their altar and Elijah built one all by himself. The people were to test their God. The test was to be this: after everything was ready and the animal was on the altar, the people prayed to Baal to send fire to make the offering burn. They prayed and prayed for a long time but nothing happened. No fire came down and their offering was not burned. Then all the people stood to one side. Do you remember what Elijah did? He dug a trench about his altar and then he poured a whole lot of water over his offering. Just think how hard that would make it for the offering to burn! There was some wood under the animal to make it burn but when the water was poured over it not only the animal got soaked but the wood, too. Think how much faith it took for Elijah to be willing to make such a test as this!

When everything was prepared, the altar had water over it and around it. Elijah talked to his God and God sent fire and burnt the offering and lapped up all the water. Thus Elijah by his faith and courage showed the people that our God has power and not Baal.

Don't you wish that you could do something heroic like Elijah did to prove that our God is the living and real God? Would it not be nice if all of us could do big things to show that our torches are shining with love for our Maker? Yet we can do things. Every one of us can do things that will make our torches shine. We, too, can show our faith and courage. We can do the things that we know are right in spite of difficulty. The next time that you are tempted to do something else instead of being helpful or

Since writing last month I have had the pleasure of spending about a week with the Bible Coach. This is inspiring work. It brings us into the very front of missionary work where we deal with people who have no knowledge of the Bible and no opportunity to hear preaching. We found in the town of Moldes a great many with the Bible, for the town has been repeatedly canvassed, and there is much interest in the Gospel. I could not remain over Sunday but Brother Yett wrote me the following concerning the Sunday work: "Sunday we held two cottage meetings. I believe twelve were present at our evening meeting. One man at the close said, 'This certainly beats the mass.' It is too bad we haven't a worker to continue our work there. I am satisfied it would not take long to build up a large Sunday school."

While I was with the coach Brother Yett visited his family from which he had been absent six weeks or more. In his absence Adolfo Zeehe cares for the work. He wrote recently concerning the work as follows:

"The work of the Lord here goes forward very well. Sunday we had a fair attendance in spite of the bad weather. Tuesday we had a social meeting of the Endeavor society with about fifty present. We are preparing for the special campaign when you come. Pray for us. We are delighted with the prospect of having a wind mill soon as it is badly needed."

I will share with you also part of a letter from Brother Reina, pastor in Alejandro.

"This coming Monday when I go to Carlotita I will also go on to Olmos on Tuesday. I enclose a letter from the believers there urging me to come. I am sorry I cannot go oftener as the isolated members need visits. I also enclose a letter from M. Gallini urging me to hold meetings there, and I also have an invitation from Las Acequias. The work here progresses as usual. Some families are still working in the corn harvest. Some new people have begun to attend."

Brother Reina also goes every Monday to Carlotita to preach and Brother Pintos cares for the Sunday school and prayer meeting. He writes that there were 25 in Sunday school last Sunday and a few had learned all the texts of the quarter. Mrs. Ross, wife of the ex-mayor, a North American, has promised to contribute five pesos ($2.00 a month toward the rent there.

In Cabrera the new auto is being used to hold meetings in the country and visit the surrounding towns. We will probably soon have regular meetings in Hernandez, where a group of believers has for a long time been urging us to come.

Here is an extract also from a letter from Brother Istueta, pastor in Laboulaye: "We are now in the time of Laodicea, and the work of the Spirit is in individuals rather than in masses, and it is necessary to keep going and seeking. If we bear the good seed it will not return void. We will come rejoicing bringing our precious sheaves. Monday and Tuesday we had meetings in Villa Rosa. Monday we had 35 in the meeting and Tuesday 50. Last night we also had 50 in the home of Brother Perez. The Lord willing, we will hold meetings next week in Buchardo. So far all the expenses of our trips, both for the auto and ourselves, have been borne by Brother Perez. Pray for our work."

Here in Rio Cuarto we are almost always losing some and gaining others. One young man made the good confession a week ago. It grieves me not to be able to do the immense amount of visiting that needs to be done in this city. The Ford is a great boon to us. Sister Nielsen has an increasing amount of teaching to do, but is also doing an increasing amount of church work, in Sunday school, Junior Endeavor and the women's meetings. We are pleased that our daughter Eleanor was recently married at Ashland and hopes to return to help us sooner than we had expected. The time is short and there remains so much to be done.

An Amazing Social Movement in Bolivia

One of the backward republics of South America, where the Roman Catholic church has been long in power, is Bolivia. Here all the weaknesses of the system and the consequent social evils are evident. Recently there seems to have come an awakening of the social conscience and church leaders and Protestant missionaries report what they call "an amazing social movement." A correspondent in La Paz writes:

"About the middle of March a meeting of the clergy of the La Paz Diocese was held to consider the problem of education of the Indians of Bolivia who constitute about 75 per cent of the population of the country. A letter from the Pope to the Bishops of Bolivia had recently made suggestions regarding the social activities of the church, especially in connection with the Indian Problem."

The meeting of the clergy was called by the Bishop of La Paz and the Papal Nuncio was the principal speaker. He said: "The Indian Problem is one of the most urgent that Bolivia has to consider. If it is not solved soon within the church, it will be solved outside the church, because of the constant and insidious labor of the enemy, which we all know about," (referring of course, to Protestant Missions).

It was suggested that a "Gran Cruzada Nacional Pro-Indio" be undertaken, with the support of the church, the Government, high society and the newspapers. Professional organizers were brought from foreign countries to push the drive according to "el sistema norte americano."

The adobe walls of the houses here are smooth finished, affording a good surface for pasting posters. Lithographed posters, a yard square, of a typical Indian head were put up by hundreds throughout the city, along with an appeal for support of the drive.

Bolivia is anxious to raise its standard among neighboring countries. Thus an ingenious appeal was made to patriotism—the idea of making the present inert mass of Indians into intelligent and useful citizens. The drive was evidently spending considerable money for posters, entire pages of newspapers, get-together dinners, etc.

About the first of April two events occurred that produced the first discordant note. It was announced that the office of the drive would be consecrated to the "Sacred Heart of Jesus"—a tendency to fanaticism. A similar attempt to consecrate the nation of Peru some three years ago caused strikes and riots in Callao and Lima. Then the adversaries of the Adventist work obtained a government order limiting their activities. This appeared to be a restriction of religious liberty.

The suspicions that were developing that the drive was neither patriotic nor altruistic but religious (fanatical) were confirmed by these two events. At first the newspapers were loath to publish criticisms of the drive, so that a series of posters and handbills appeared calling attention to the real nature of the "Cruzada." Funds were to be for advertising and to bring in priests expelled from Mexico. It was very interesting to go out on the streets every day and see the new posters pro and con.

The newspapers finally broke their silence and a surprising number of articles appeared telling about the good work being done by the Protestant educational missionaries. One night at the conclusion of the band concert at the Plaza somebody shouted Abajo los frailes, abajo la cruzada. Soon a great crowd gathered forming an impromptu anti-clerical demonstration. The procession passed by the President's palace. He appeared on the balcony and assured them that as long as they committed no disorders, they had the right to express their opinions.

Thus a tremendous anti-campaign and anti-clerical movement began.

An important social function in favor of the drive that was to be held in the Municipal Theatre, presided over by the Bishop and with the President of the Republic as principal speaker, had to be suspended.

A few days later it was announced that the drive had been definitely abandoned and the same day the newspapers announced that the government had provided means for a great school for Indians near La Paz, thus eliminating the church from the solution of the Indian problem.

Another big news item the same day was the passing of a law recognizing the right of the Protestant missionaries to preach and to teach among the Indians.

In the evening, a great celebration of the success of the anti-drive movement was held. Five thousand men marched. Banners with letters two feet high bore the following inscriptions:

"LET US EDUCATE THE INDIANS WITH THE SALARIES OF THE BISHOPS."

"WE ASK FOR THE SEPARATION OF THE CHURCH AND THE STATE."

"WE ASK FOR LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE."

"WE ASK FOR A GOVERNMENT BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS."

"THE STATE SHOULD EDUCATE THE INDIAN."

"WE DO NOT WANT FANATICISM."

Along the route of the parade the air reverberated with shouts in unison like college yells:

"LET THE BISHOPS GET OUT."

"DOWN WITH THE 'SOTANAS'" (figurative for priests).

"LONG LIVE FREEDOM OF WORSHIP," etc.

At the Plaza several speakers addressed the gathering from the balcony of a fashionable club. The speaker, who was apparently the best known and most popular, was the President of the Federation of University Students. He reminded the people that the victory they were celebrating was due largely to the students and the labor organizations working together. He made a statement imported from Russia, that evoked much applause and that expressed the intellectual's estimation of the value of religion: "Religion is an opiate for the people."

The next day the newspapers that at first supported the "cruzada" commented on the large number of participants in the anti-clerical demonstration and the orderly way in which it was conducted.—Missionary Review of the World.

BRETHREN HOME

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Just a brief report from the Brethren Home. We always like to report the gifts sent directly, twice a year.

We have beautiful rugs for our sitting rooms and recently Brother Rinehart purchased two more large congoleums rugs for the dining room which add to the quietness and beauty of both rooms. Other gifts are as follows: One quilt and one comforter from W. M. S., Smithville, Ohio; ten dollars from W. M. S. for rug fund, Washington, D. C.; Two rag rugs, W. M. S., North Manchester, Indiana; two pair ruffled curtains, Sisterhood girls, North Manchester, Indiana; Ten dollars for silverware fund from W. M. S., Allentown, Pennsylvania; two table cloths and two dresser scarfs, Lydia Craig; flower basket, Mrs. J. A. Livengood, Lanark, Illinois; ten pairs for silverware fund, Lydia Craig; Four pair curtains for dining room, W. M. S., Milledgeville, Illinois; One set of dessert spoons, G. V. Brown, Flora, Indiana.

We thank you all for these gifts; they are appreciated.
Yours in his Service,

MRS. J. W. MYERS, Matron.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Traveling to Niagara

In my last missive to this page, I promised some real "flashes" for the next, and so, let me tell you that this is to recount a fine and wonderful vacation trip of more than 2,000 miles. Leaving Ashland on August 2nd, myself, wife and daughter started for Niagara Falls; the distance being much greater than we had been advised, we traveled 319 miles the first day out and much of it in the rain and through some big cities and so, we arrived quite tired; but the cool, exhilarating breezes of Niagara quickly refreshed us and we found ourselves reveling in the wonders, thunders and beauties of this most famous work of nature. Amended by the invention of man and so arranged that it can be seen to its best advantage, it is a wonder that charms and enthalls one. Space will not allow me to elaborate.

Watkin's Glen

Leaving before noon of the next day, we made another hard drive toward Philadelphia, our next destination, via the Finger Lakes with Watkin's Glen as our next objective. This wonder is the exact opposite of the Falls. While there are Falls here, the smallness of the stream of water makes the crags and walls a thing of wonder. How so small a stream of water could have performed the vast work of cutting its way down through solid rock as this small creek has doubtless done, argued that the earth must be very old, indeed. It is a beautiful spot worth a long drive to see—the best of its kind I have seen this side of the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

The Sesqui-Centennial

After another hard day's drive, we found ourselves in the city of Philadelphia, birthplace of the Declaration of Independence and celebrities, and our own daughter Dorcas. We gave one day to the Exposition, not yet completed and yet, some of the Foreign exhibitors were leaving or had gone. Opened before it was nearly ready, kept open on Sunday against all promises and the charter to the contrary, with many Philadelphians and Pennsylvanians staying at home in protest, it was quite a disappointment to many. The purpose of this celebration was noble and it ought to command a wonderful patronage, if carried out in the spirit of that purpose, but when it has to be bolstered up by the desecration of the Lord's Day against the protest of the governor of the great state and then desecrated by the admission of a prize fight, it deserves condemnation rather than commendation, perhaps. After a day of this, we had to hurry on to reach our final destination for which the trip had, after all, been planned.

Many of us remember the time when our roads were made and our trips planned to pass through the cities; now, we plan to miss them. Because of limited time and also of the congestion of our cities, we planned to miss both Washington and Baltimore en route to our meeting. But we did not miss the great battlefield of Gettysburg. In days like ours when statesmen and governors glibly talk about the impossibility to enforce existing laws, it does one good to walk where men died for the dignity of law and order. Maybe a few bootleggers and law-defyers should have a chance to fight for the things they are trying to defy and deny, awhile, and see if they could not get a different slant on the right of governments. I wish all of them could listen to one of the old guides who went through the conflict, tell of the terrible battle and then, hear it over again and again, till they got a new idea of what a real American is. Last night, in Ohio, the law cut off the lives of three men who confessed that they killed another "because he knew too much" about their bootlegging operations. How terrible for them, for the state and for us all; but the law must be obeyed and only "fools make a mock at sin."

In the evening we were with G. Harry Haun's, hospitably entertained in the home that has given our College every one of its children for study, and one, Prof. R. R., for the faculty. It is a fine place to be and we were quite at home, only 50 miles across the mountain from the place for our meeting which was to begin the Sunday following, at Mathias, West Virginia

One brother had said to us enroute, "I'd like to know how they got you to go back there for a meeting?" Well, we had been there before; that says it. To one from an even country, it did seem that we were going to a hiding place; but when one has spent some time there, and found some of God's noblemen there, he does not at all hesitate. Now, I am more ready to go again, than one could expect; indeed, I invited myself back next summer. In a country older in its settlement than much of ours west of the Alleghenies, where wild bears are still caught and where one of the first bridges was finished during our stay there; where they tell of during our stay there; where they tell of Dunker bootleggers, hidden in the coves among the hills; there, we found also, folks with college degrees and people of more common education as good as any, anywhere. From this neighborhood came Dr. F. B. Fitzwater, personal friend of the writer, Dean now, of Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, and our own Landis Bradfield, graduate of Ashland College and Wisconsin University, beginning work in Cleveland Y. M. C. A. College this fall. Here Mrs. Dr. Moyer is superintendent of our Sunday school. Her husband, the village doctor, her son graduate of College and student in three universities. Here Arthur Snider is pastor, merchant, ex-teacher, ex-sheriff, ex-tax-collector, patriarch and friend of all in the community. Each of his five daughters have had College training; his brother in business with him, is the lawyer and political adviser of the community. Of course, they are different; but to be different like them in many ways, would be to have a better community in many places. Brother Snider promised to report the meeting later. The first week was the hottest of our experience, so far as we can remember, but that did not prevent them from coming in truck-loads, over mountains and hills a distance of ten and fifteen miles, till they filled the church and the church yard so full of autos that it took a half-hour for them to untangle themselves and get away. The second week it rained. Rained as I never saw it rain (as I remember) all the time, day and night for more than a solid week. But we had a fine time and a good meeting. With nearly four hundred members and better organization, this church will abide and do a fine work. Snider has the good-will of the community and will report continued progress, as I predict. May the Lord preserve him for many years of service in this place of his birth among a people whom he understands as no new man could in months of study. Snider's home is a palace and his hospitality knows no bounds and his family know how to please him and his guests. More next summer.

WHEN WE TAKE VACATIONS

(We Don't Always Need a Change of Scene!)

By Margaret E. Sangster

To some folk summer stands for vacation time. For a trip to the seashore, where white waves creep up, endlessly, upon a silver shore. Where gulls circle, in ever widening flight, against the blue of a quiet sky. For a visit to the mountains, where God has thrown up his green bulwarks—and where his trees crown the top of the world. For a return, over a well-known road, to the quiet of the country—to the peace of rolling fields, and the wonder of a calm landscape.

Oh, to some people, the summer stands for vacation time! For a closed desk, and a locked office door. For a splendid, singing idleness. For a folding of busy hands, and a resting of weary brains. For a period of blessed, and often needed, let-down!

Swimming, tramping picnicking. They all go with the romance of vacationing. A canoe, under the stars, upon the silent waters of some lake. A horse galloping through the golden grass of a seemingly endless plain. A motor car purring along the broad highway, leaving men and cities and cozy towns in its wake. A steamer plowing through the foam of an ocean. All of these stand, in the hearts of many, for the meaning of vacation.

And yet—to some of us—the days that mean vacation come with no change of scene. With no widening of the familiar landscape. With no crossing of the horizon line. To some of us the vacation days pass, and we never close our desks. Never shut our office doors. Never leave the hurry and bustle and fret of things behind us. Never turn from the round of household duties that go on, unceasingly, as hour follows hour. To some of us the actual physical joy of vacationing is denied. And yet—if we want—we may take vacations, after all. Without a change of scene. Without a divergence from the usual plan of living. To some of us vacation days come, and pass, and we never stir from the old familiar places. And yet we may know the joys of vacationing, after all!

There are ways of taking vacations without going down to the sea in ships. Without challenging the green of the mountains. Without studying time-tables, and making hotel reservations. There are ever so many ways—and some of us are forced, by circumstance, to take those ways. And, often, we are not sorry that we have found it necessary to use our imaginations, rather than our bodies, in the seeking of change and rest.

I know one woman—the mother of a large family. She is never able to take a vacation, for the home must be kept up in the splendid, efficient way that her children demand. She has always given them comfort and prettiness by her ways of housekeeping—and, perhaps, they are spoiled!

Her children have vacations. But these vacations occur at different times. So that there is always some of the family at home to be cooked for, and mended for, and cleaned up after. But this mother goes about her tasks gallantly, with never a word of complaint. And she takes a vacation willy-nilly. And none of her family have the vision to realize the splendor of the vacation that she takes.

Last year, she tells me, she went to Europe. She sent for ever so many circulars and guide books and maps. She bought travel books about France and England and Switzerland and Germany and Italy. Perhaps the literature she purchased cost her five dollars—not much to spend for a trip to the Old World, is it? Carefully—while a pie was in the oven, and a cake was baking and a basket of darning had been finished, she made schedules of her trip. Planning the clothes she would take, and the number of days that she would stay in each foreign city, and the sights that she would see during each stay. She learned more—during her make-believe trip—than many a real tourist learns during a real trip.

And I know another woman who is tied down, by some routine work, to a desk in an office building. Her vacations consist of flying week-ends spent in the suburbs of a large city. But she takes trips vicariously by sending other people away. Many a little tot has gone to Mont-Lawn, as her guest. Many a fragile shop girl has spent a week in the fresh air at her expense. And she tells me that she enjoys these vicarious vacations more than she has ever enjoyed a real one.

"I used to have all my pleasures in one parcel," she told me, laughingly, "Now they are divided into so many bundles that every summer day is like a Santa Clause surprise! It's much nicer to give pleasure—especially when it's vacation pleasure—than to just own it selfishly!"

Oh, friends of mine—making the best of circumstance is the bravest thing in the world, almost! And having a pretend vacation—when you want, and maybe need, a real one—is certainly making the best of things. And if you are a big enough person to get real joy out of the pretending, then—then it isn't necessary for me to say anything more! It isn't even necessary to tell you that the fun of life and the pleasure of life and the thrill of life can be carried, forever, in the soul!—Christian Herald.

SPIRIT AND FLESH

When Jesus separated from his three disciples in the Garden of Gethsemane, to go deeper into its shades, that he might be alone with his Father, he prayed, then returned. He found the three asleep, and asked Peter if they could not watch with him one hour. Then he added, as recorded in Matthew 26: 41: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak."

The flesh is connected with the spirit, and must be. There are only two relations that flesh and spirit can sustain to each other. They can work in harmony, or they can work in discord. In this instance, the flesh was working against the spirit. It is possible for both spirit and flesh to be weak. All have seen it so. The body is tired, listless, and needs to be urged to activity. The spirit sometimes is reluctant to go forward in spiritual life, and needs the urge of the Lord to overcome its inertia. So, spirit and flesh may harmonize in weakness—a serious situation.

But can spirit and flesh harmonize in strength? Is there a possibility that the flesh may become so strong as to support the spirit in its strength? Jesus meant the body, composed of members, such as hands, feet, and eyes. The eyes often are vigilant, watching for things to do to honor the Lord. The hands oft are busy about the Kingdom. The feet are walking in the Lord's highway. This may continue indefinitely. Weakness may come from physical exhaustion, from sin, from moral indifference. Wherever there is sin or moral indifference, there can be no strong supporting flesh to back up the spirit. Where weakness comes from physical exhaustion, support of the spirit is laid aside temporarily, but it may come back in the morning.

In the Lord's words, the flesh was weak in the Garden of Gethsemane. The spirit prompted the three disciples to do certain things, but the flesh vetoed the good intentions of the spirit. So there was disharmony here. Perhaps the flesh did not lust against the spirit, but the flesh, in its weakness, hindered the spirit. It is not possible to combine weak spirit with strong flesh—it doesn't work that way. If there is lack of concord, it is owing to the weakness of the flesh.

It would be a fine thing if the flesh were as obedient to the spirit as it is to the mind. One can start down the street, and walk a mile without even thinking of taking a step—the flesh is so obedient to the mind through habit, which sometimes we call second nature. While walking that mile, one heart beats, obedient to physical law. And so one breathes all this time, and does not know it for a moment. At the same time, one may be reading a book or a newspaper, the eyes rendering unconscious obedience to the mind. If these members of the body can be obedient to the mind, and unconsciously, it should be altogether possible for the same members to be obedient to the spirit, and that unconsciously. But it took a long while to learn to walk, and a long while to learn to read; and it takes a long time to learn to walk on the spiritual highway, and to read the messages of the Almighty. In the case of Jesus, the flesh became a partner with the spirit in doing the will of God.—Religious Telescope.

JESUS

I know of a world that is sunk in shame,

Where hearts oft faint and tire;

But I know a name, a precious name,

That can set the world on fire;

Its sound is sweet, its letters flame;

I know a name, a precious name—

'Tis Jesus.

I know of a Book, a marvelous Book,

With a message for all who hear;

And the same dear name, his wonderful name,

Illumines its pages clear;

The Book is his word, its messages I've heard:

I know of a name, a precious name—

'Tis Jesus.

I know of a home in Immanuel's land

Where hearts ne'er faint nor tire;

And his marvelous name, his own dear name,

Inspires the heavenly choir;

Hear the melody ringing, my own heart singing;

I know of a name, a precious name—

'Tis Jesus.

kind, let us remember that we have an opportunity to use our courage. When you see a chance to help your mother get through with her work earlier just by sacrificing a short amount of playtime, why not show your courage, and make your torch burn more brightly? When other boys and girls seem to doubt God and to think that it is not worth while to go to church and worship him, then again you can show your faith and courage by believing in him and going to his house.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

Wonder Dogs of the Movies

"Rin-Tin-Tin," said Lee Duncan from his place behind the camera, "I want you to leap into the back seat of that car and sit up straight."

With his eyes fixed soulfully on his master and without so much as a wag of his tail, the big German shepherd dog bounded into the omnibus as directed.

"Now then," continued Mr. Duncan in his quiet, gentle voice, "reach down and try to open the car door; you can't do it; so leap into the front seat and put your paws on the steering-wheel as though you were driving the car."

Again without a moment's hesitation the dog obeyed directions to the letter.

"Now come back here and do it all over again from the beginning, just as I told you. Mind you do it gracefully now, for this time it is for the picture."

And with neither a pause nor a false movement Rin-Tin-Tin goes through his stunt while the camera grinds relentlessly on.

So that bit of the film is completed. The camera man snips it off; the continuity-man writes a brief caption and numbers it; some one else files it away—and they are ready for the next scene. Orders for that may run like this, in a monologue from master to dog:

"See that man over there to your left? You are not to let him out of your sight. Don't seize him roughly or hurt him in any way, but don't let him get out of that corner."

And do you think I stood a chance of escaping that dog?" asked the man whose role in the picture made him for the moment Rin-Tin-Tin's prisoner. "Say, if Lee Duncan had been struck dumb there on the lot before he had called off his dog, that hound would be guarding me still—until we both died of starvation."

For Rin-Tin-Tin, like all German shepherds, is a one-man dog. The orders his master gives him are law, to be carried out to the death; what anyone else may say he probably understands, but the words fall without authority on his canine consciousness. Rin-Tin-Tin obeys only Lee Duncan.

Strongheart, the first canine hero ever to be starred on the screen, was brought to this country immediately after the war by Bruno Hoffman, a famous breeder of police dogs, and bought for motion-picture purposes by Larry Trimble and Miss Jean Murfin.

"Strongheart was perfectly trained before I ever laid eyes on him," said Larry Trimble, "probably the most finely trained dog in the world. He had won his star from the German police and his Red Cross diploma for war service before he was one year old—a record held by only one other dog alive. The fact that he had been able to undergo this severe training without breaking under it convinced me that he was the dog I was looking for. But I had to teach him English before I could teach him to act."

The German shepherd dog was little known in America before the war, but it attained international fame on the battlefields. There it did Red Cross duty, sentry-go and dispatch work with an intelligence at times uncanny, remaining through it all insensible to fire, as callous as a front-line soldier. Its fine aristocratic appearance, its amazing strength and intelligence, have attracted much curiosity of recent years and made it one of the most popular and desired breeds in the country.—From Everybody's Magazine.

train them in the doing. Failure in the latter may explain the difficulties encountered in problems of personal conduct. Unchristian behavior is the result. The more thoughtful pastors try to help their people in this regard, but many pastors need assistance. A commission of representative leaders on the Christian Way of Life would aid us in detailing Christian attitudes toward family life, recreational life, industrial life, economic life, social life, political life, church life. The commission would also outline methods of training in practical Christian living.

5. All of these church activities head up, normally, in the stewardship of life. Training in stewardship would inevitably be touched upon in Christian life training. But it is of sufficient importance to be committed to a particular commission of representative leaders who would help to get upon the conscience of the church the stewardship ideal not as an emergency expedient to raise a budget but as an abiding life principle, including the whole of personality in relation to every possession—talent, time, money and all. No value would be placed upon anything in one's possession except in relation to the kingdom of God.

These five commissions, it may be noted, would supersede certain similar committees that exist only in name from year to year. The commissions would be policy forming rather than promotional agencies. Each commission would make a detailed study of its particular problems, and base its recommendations upon factual data rather than sentimental interest. The commission should consist of persons capable of such study and counsel. They might well represent differences in temperament and variety of opinion. They should number from three to seven in each case. Their tenure of office should be arranged on a graduated scale of years so there would not be a complete turn over every year. Their work could be carried on by correspondence and conference. Their findings and conclusions could be made known directly to the several promotional agencies involved. General information could be shared through the Brethren Evangelist, other publications and the various conferences. Grants from funds collected by General Conference should be made to cover the necessary expense. This procedure would give greater unity and continuity to our labors in a perennial forward movement.

Reference to conference leads to a final consideration and suggestion. Some reorganization in form and method may be advisable and profitable. There appears to be less reason for a General Conference at Winona each recurring year. The oft-repeated argument is becoming threadbare. Brethren from remoter points can attend just as good Bible conferences nearer home. If those nearby want to come here; they may. Winona with whatever lure it may have will be here. If much larger bodies than ours can be happily entertained elsewhere, certainly we can. Moreover it is doubtful if we should meet more often than biennially. The off-year respite would afford the needed opportunity to concentrate upon our district conferences, some of which are disappointing in attendance and enthusiasm. Spared the time and expense incident to attending General Conference brethren would feel freer to attend the district conference. Planned properly it could be made a large and worthwhile meeting.

Some of our districts appear too large geographically. When the conference is at a remote end of the district we have a scant, or no representation from the churches of the opposite end. Examples could easily be cited. It looks as if we were attempting the impracticable by trying to pull people too great distance. Consider on the other side one of our younger conferences, all of whose churches are within less than an hour's drive of the other. No wonder those churches are represented by dozens, scores, fifties and hundreds. By redistricting we could bring the churches of smaller districts into closer proximity, and thus make easier larger representation at the conference. Or if it is preferred to maintain the status quo two meetings could be held for instruction and inspiration, one in each end of the large district in the year we have no general conference. In this way we will reach more people with the message and program of the church.

Concluded with the reading of Ephesians 3:14-21.

The BRETHREN EVANGELIST

- ONE - IS - YOUR - MASTER - AND - ALL - YE - ARE - BRETHREN -

The Joy of Soul-Winning

By Charles H. Spurgeon

EVEN if I were utterly selfish, and had no care for anything but my own happiness, I would choose if I might, under God, to be a soul-winner; for never did I know perfect, overflowing, unutterable happiness of the purest and most ennobling order till I first heard of one who had sought and found the Saviour through my means. No young mother ever so rejoiced over her first-born child, no warrior was so exultant over a hard-won victory. I am afraid there are some ministers who hardly think that the gospel is intended to come personally home to the people. They talk, as I read of one the other day, who said that when he preached to sinners he did not look the congregation in the face, for fear they would think he meant to be personal; so he looked up at the ventilator, because there was no fear then of any individual catching his eye. Oh! that fear of man has been the ruin of many ministers. They never dared to preach right at the people. We have heard of sermons being preached before this and that honorable company; but preaching sermons before people is not God's way; we must preach sermons at the people, directly to them, to show that it is not the waving of the sword in the air like a juggler's sport, but it is the getting of the sword right into the conscience and the heart. This, I take it, is the true mission of every minister of Christ.

Notes of Emphasis from General Conference

One of the outstanding and most vital notes that was sounded at General Conference was that of the necessity of a deepening of the spiritual life. It came from sermons on the Conference platform and from addresses in the Ministerial sessions, from the morning prayer meetings and from departmental sessions. Nothing is more important to our denominational life and growth than just that, and it cannot be too greatly emphasized. If the work of the Kingdom is to go forward it must be at the inspiration, with the guidance and by the power of almighty God; it is a divine work and must be divinely prosecuted. We are humanly inclined to make religion too much a matter of profession and to look upon Christian work too much as professional undertakings. This is true both of the ministry and the laity. We do not purposely make it so, but we too widely yield to the tendency to become superficial in religion. We must make our Christianity very vital, a life and not a profession, a spiritual existence and not a mere cloak of respectability, a divinely renewed and ennobled type of life that bears fruit in godliness and service and not a mere system of thought or philosophy of life to be defended. We need to realize more the necessity of being Spirit-filled and directed, of maintaining those vital and divine connections without which the Christian life is impossible. We need to stress more in the pulpit the importance of family worship, of Christian instruction and life in the home, of devotional reading of the Word and of prayer, of the ennobling of our life and relations with men, of the enrichment of our thought and the growing appreciation of the deep and spiritual things of life. If we do not succeed in building up in the lives of our people a genuine vital godliness such as shall be a real savoring influence on the sordid, selfish life of the world, then we have failed miserably even though we make a thousand professions of loyalty to the whole Gospel of Christ. But if our outward professions of allegiance are but the manifestations of an inner spiritual reality, ever aspiring and ever attaining, then will our church be indeed as a light set on a hill and cannot be hid.

Another note received repeated emphasis was that of denominational loyalty, a note which needs more of the right sort of emphasis than it receives. Several speakers stressed this truth in varied degrees and ways and we wish to sound it out to the brotherhood. Granted the right spiritual attitude, the denominational emphasis cannot but be a wholesome contribution to the Kingdom of God. If we permit our Gospel-founded convictions to be neutralized, we thereby prepare the way for a lessening of zeal and effort for the extension of the Gospel into all the world. That is not to say that the old type of narrow denominational selfishness and egotism is contributory to world-wide evangelization, and that such should be revived. The narrowness of "the good old days" was not missionary in the highest sense but primarily proselyting in character, and it was not uncommon for the various regiments of the Gospel army to waste more energy in fighting one another than they spent in fighting the cohorts of evil. But to swing to the other extreme where there are no denomination convictions worth maintaining and no consciousness of a mission to be prosecuted is to place ourselves in a dilemma that is neither necessary nor wise. We can be fraternal and inter-denominationally cooperative and at the same time stand firm for our historic ideals and tenets as a church, and that is what we need to do. Those distinctive features that have given us reason for a separate existence as a denomination must be maintained, and they must be made living and vital with meaning.

Another important echo of General Conference that we would make is the intensive effort that should be given to evangelism, which term is used to include not merely the commonly designated evangelistic campaigns, but all effort at the extension of the Kingdom at home and abroad, and also wisely planned effort to save and conserve the children and young people for Christ and the church. There was frequently expressed a need of greater zeal for the spread of the Gospel in the many and varied ways divinely ordained to that end. We need more of the evangelistic fervor, that outgoing, inward, witness-bearing, yearning spirit of the Gospel, such as characterized the church of the first century, and of every age when it has been marked by aggressiveness and growth. We need more of that spirit of dissatisfaction with present attainments in the saving of souls and of constant seeking the spiritual welfare of those not yet in the fold of Christ. That spirit will make us more zealous soul-winners in the local church, it will make us more earnest and persistent in the saving of youth from lives of sin and for Christian service, and it will send us with more sacrifice to the unevangelized districts in the home and foreign lands with the saving message of the Gospel. Evangelism in its broad and true sense is essential to the very nature of the Gospel. A church that is not evangelistic is not Christian, and that church that neglects or becomes apathetic regarding the spread of Gospel is on the toboggan and is destined to land in extinction, unless it is able to revive the spirit of evangelism. Let us keep the fire burning.

The Pacifist Churches in Conference

A most significant conference was recently held at Carlock, Illinois of representatives of the Pacifist churches. Delegates from the Church of the Brethren, Mennonites, Friends, and Schwenkfelders were gathered from Kansas, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Ohio, Indiana and Pennsylvania in the Mennonite church at Carlock from August 30th to September 1st, inclusive.

The burden of this conference was not merely to discuss the Christian attitude toward war, but to arrive at a program for action with a view to making the Christian attitude more widely prevalent. We are informed that a useful educational program was hammered out of the discussions which were engaged in freely. This program is included among the "Findings" which we hope to publish in a succeeding issue, and which we hope will not merely be informing but suggestive as well to the churches and individuals of our communion. This program contains four principal features, namely, "a re-affirmation of the faith of the Brethren, Friends and Mennonites that the followers of Jesus Christ can have no part in war, and must bear their testimony against it and do what they can to prevent it; a definite protest against compulsory military training; the recommendation that means be considered of forming a joint commission to work out Christian solutions of some of the definite problems of foreign policy as they arise, and to give our members better information on these questions; and fourth, an educational program that, if carried out, would mobilize the individual and collective resources of our churches in a systematic effort to create the will to peace."

These Findings were drawn up by a committee headed by W.

B. Stover and Merlin G. Miller, both of Mount Morris, Illinois. They were summaries of the results of two discussions continued throughout the entire conference. The first dealt with the subject, "The Part of the Individual Christian in World Peace," and was led by Elmer E. S. Johnson of Hereford, Pennsylvania, and the second with the subject, "A Peace Program for the Churches," presided over by Elder H. Mills of Indianapolis, Indiana.

The three evening meetings were of a popular nature and were said to have been very fruitful. The first evening the Mennonite church was filled when Thomas Q. Harrison gave the keynote address on the subject, "The Individual Christian and World Peace." After having served in the American army in France, Mr. Harrison became convinced of the terrible denial of Christianity that war involves, and has dedicated his life to working for world peace. He pointed out the terrible harm wrought by the poisoning of the minds, especially of the young, of all countries by war's false propaganda. In talking to young Germans who had served in the war, he found that they had gone in with the same fine idealism, and the same belief in "the war to end war", that the American boys had. They now know that you cannot end war that way. He declared that a genuine love and patriotism for America should make us face frankly the facts that our national self-righteous belief that this country has never done anything unjust to other nations and that our unconsciously growing materialism coupled with our tremendous economic power, is becoming a menace to world peace. Americans, he said, do not realize how this country looks to others; we do not realize how much we are feared. Young people all over the world are beginning to realize that it is blasphemous to preach Christ unless you practice brotherhood. What is needed is a new dedication to Christ and a willingness to make sacrifices for peace. You cannot serve God and mammon.

Under the topic, "A Working Peace Program", by interesting historical analogy, Elmer E. S. Johnson on the second evening compared the present with the period four centuries ago, the period of the Reformation. "There were discouraging conditions then; nationalism was rampant, the carnival spirit was abroad, the world was full of war and suffering. Yet out of that period came a great religious movement and a great peace movement. To inaugurate an effective peace movement today we need first the will to peace, a passion for peace. We must talk about peace to our children and give them our passion. We must take Jesus seriously, we must go the second mile and smother evil with good. We must carry this peace program in to the schools, the Sunday schools and the churches. We must help in establishing a law for the enforcement of peace and must use such available machinery as we have to this end. We must face the menace of military training in our schools and colleges, and we must seize every opportunity that offers. This is the most tremendous business that confronts the churches today."

The use of superlatives is always dangerous and in this connection it may be an exaggeration, yet the painful lethargy on the part of the church toward the war problem would naturally induce one keenly aware of the church's tremendous responsibility to put it in strong terms. Surely it is time the church was facing its responsibility in this particular as well as in its supreme task of evangelizing the world. The church must not forget, as the speaker on the third evening brought out, that it has in Christ the basis and way to peace and that it is to be the generator of the all-conquering passion of love and good will. We must demonstrate a genuine love for all men, regardless of race or color or nationality. We must not merely express our love for men and display a spirit of fellowship in our Christian assemblies, but in hostile environments as well. The selfish instincts of our lives must be subdued or kept in control. It is unreasonable that they should be left uncontrolled; it would be suicidal in our complicated modern life, if the instinct of self-reservation, for example, should be allowed free rein. The teachings of Jesus must be made the standard and his spirit the motive in all our conduct and relations. Christianity has not been given a fair trial; it has only been used in emergencies. It must be made the "regular thing" and not the "last resort." If in such a manner we undertake our task and use God's mathematics, "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight", and maintain a complete devotion to our Lord and Master, who can say what might be done by our pacifist denominations?

EDITORIAL REVIEW

As we were going to press the following announcement was received from the Ohio Conference Secretary, Brother M. L. Sands: "A change in date of Ohio Conference from last week in October to October 19, 20, 21, 22. We begin Tuesday evening, October 19 and continue to Friday evening, October 22, at Fremont, Ohio. The program is about ready and will be sent in next week for publication."

Dr. W. S. Bell, the Endowment Campaign Secretary, makes a most encouraging report this week. The largest individual cash gift of the campaign comes from Brother and Sister Nininger of Roanoke, Virginia, a gift which came in such a spontaneous way and with such genuine interest that it serves as an example. If many should follow it, it would make Dr. Bell's task an easy and enjoyable one. This splendid gift of $5,000 added to the former total, brings the Endowment Fund up to $64,476.80, which certainly is encouraging, considering that so small a part of the brotherhood has been canvassed.

We are in receipt of a program of "Cornerstone Day" at the First Brethren church of Canton, Ohio, where Brother F. C. Vanator and his enthusiastic coworkers are pressing the task of building a new and more commodious church plant. Dr. R. R. Teeter, a former pastor of that church, gave the address at the special corner stone laying service on the afternoon of September 12th. The progress realized by this congregation during the past few years is commendable and dare say that this building program is the beginning of a very much bigger and brighter day for the Canton church.

The Secretary of General Conference, Brother O. C. Starn, supplies for our readers a report of the business sessions of the late Conference, which should be of interest to the entire brotherhood. Every one should want to know what took place in a business way at Winona Lake, and we are indebted to Brother Starn for his good report. Others write in this issue of other phases of the late Conference, so that we hope those who were not privileged to attend will imbibe something of the spirit, and not only catch something of the spirit of loyalty that characterizes Conference delegates in general, but will be impressed with a feeling that it would have been good to be there and will make plans to attend another year.

The Ashland church observed Layman's Day in a very fitting manner on September 12th. The pastor, Dr. Bame, gave the morning service over to the laymen, who supplied a very interesting and inspiring program and lifted an offering which, we are told, will be an encouragement to the promoters of the movement. We are promised a report from some member of the Ashland church for an early issue, and we invite others. Special offerings lifted on Layman's Day are to be added to a fund for the making of loans to needy ministerial and missionary students and should be sent to George F. Kem, 2224 Harvard Boulevard, Dayton, Ohio.

The following item, we agree with the editor of the "Religious Telescope" who clipped it from a parish paper published at Portsmouth, Ohio, is "most sensible" and would work to the mutual good of pastor and people in any congregation, but especially the large congregations where it is difficult, if not impossible for the pastor to call every member by name. It says:

"It is impossible for the minister, when walking along the street, to recognize the twelve to fifteen hundred members of our constituency, but is possible for each of these to recognize the minister. Do not wait for the minister to speak first. When you recognize him, speak to him. Don't just look at him as though you would speak if he were to speak to you first. Ministers do not think anyone 'fresh' for speaking to them, but some might think even ministers 'fresh' if they should happen to speak to the wrong party."

Of course, there is another side to it. This suggestion is not to excuse pastors for going about the streets so absorbed that they see and recognize no one. And pastors, along with college professors, physicians and lawyers, are accused of being rather absent-minded. The pastor especially should guard against being too subjective in his attitude.

IMPRESSIONS OF GENERAL CONFERENCE

Victories of the National Conference

By Moderator Charles H. Ashman

In a number of ways, the National Conference of 1926 was a success. Much was accomplished which will contribute large things to the continuity of our beloved church. The Editor has requested that we point out some of these accomplishments from the viewpoint of Moderator.

The Conference was a success in the harmonious, efficient, and rapid manner in which it dispatched the regular routine of its business. Some seem to have the idea that unless there are great issues before us which demand prolonged and heated discussion we are getting nothing done. But, the life and progress of the church are dependent upon the regular routine of affairs more than on the exceptional. The real test of loyalty is not whether one is present at a business session of the conference because there are questions to be debated upon which there is division of convictions, but to be on hand to patiently and carefully discharge the ordinary, annual business of the church. The Conference of 1926 was a success in this particular. The so called, "monotonous red tape" was efficiently taken care of and that with rapidity.

The Conference was a success in that a splendid spirit of fellowship and harmony prevailed. As usual and as it will always be, doubtless there were a few whose delight consisted in getting their heads together and knocking. But, we are persuaded that these few were the exception. They were so much in the minority that we ask the forgiveness of the readers for even referring to them. A spirit and atmosphere of splendid fellowship and cooperation prevailed throughout the entire conference. It was manifested in the business sessions where each one tried to work harmoniously with all others. This made the Conference one easy to preside over.

But, this splendid unity was not the result of compromise. The Conference was a success in its unquestioned loyalty to "the Faith once for all delivered unto the Saints." In the rendition of the program during which speakers from all the districts of the church gave voice to their convictions, almost without exception every word rang true to the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. Perhaps some of those that seemed to be otherwise were misunderstood. At least, they were so few and weak that we can truthfully say that the Conference of 1926 revealed the fact that the Brethren church is being kept steadfast in the midst of the apostasy of the day. The Bible lectures and sermons, which drew the largest crowds of any part of the program, were without exception profound messages on fundamental doctrines of Christianity. They proclaimed them, unquestioningly, fearlessly!

Moreover, the Conference was a success in that it deepened the conviction that God has a great mission for the Brethren church in this day. We are not a "Disappearing Brotherhood." Our ministers are not "wasting their time and talents." We have a vital message and ministry for this day and hour! If the Lord tarries, we have a bright future ahead of us! If we remain true to our message and ministry, we shall be crowned with prosperity. Let those who because of inefficiency, failure, greed for gold, ambition for popularity, or an overdose of conceit and personal vanity, seek other and larger fields if they wish, but "as for me and my house", we shall serve the Lord! That was the spirit of determination and optimism that predominated in the hearts of practically all at the Conference.

Finally, this Conference emphasized the fact that our church can grow only as each individual congregation remains true and faithful. Each District Conference is urged to give special attention this year to its weak and pastorless churches. The Manual of Procedure gives instructions as to how to do this. This is vital. I will form either our increase or decrease for this year and determine in no small measure our progress or decline for the year. We believe that a great year is ahead of the Brethren church. Let us "go up and possess the land."

Home Mission Interests

By A. B. Cover, Member Home Board

The Home Mission Board met Friday, August twentieth, for the first meeting. A splendid representation of the members were present to grapple with the yearly problems that were presented for solution. A tabulation of the past year's work indicated some gratifying achievement. Two new churches were built and dedicated to the Lord's service: one at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and the other at Winchester, Virginia. These were in part the result of last year's policy to centralize our efforts in promising fields. In most of the churches under the care of the board progress has been made. This is gratifying for we must continually strengthen the home base. We rejoice in the splendid work that has been accomplished in the Foreign Field and we want to keep the Home Base advancing so that we can meet the obligations of a growing foreign program. The coming year calls for a still larger program which means an enlarged budget. This is as it should be and we trust that the church may rally to this support in that Christian spirit that will enable us to launch out into the deep. A fine Christian spirit dominated throughout our sessions and indicated the earnestness of the personnel of the Board. With Conference now history, we look forward to a year of blessing and well we may if the entire church constituency seeks that deeper consecration in a united purpose of determination to do the Master's will.

Falls City, Nebraska.

The Evening Sessions of the Conference

By C. D. Whitmer

The thirty-eighth session of General Conference is now history. It was a conference of all conferences for several reasons. One element of its greatness is found in its splendid evening programs.

Monday evening was given over to sermon by Brother Charles H. Ashman, Vice Moderator of Conference. The speaker spoke on the theme: "The Greatest Wonder of the Ages," taking as his text, Isaiah 9:6: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. The sermon was a masterpiece, such as the speaker is noted for giving. His message rang true to the old Book and was a suitable opening for the conference that was to follow.

Tuesday evening was given over to an address by Brother George Jones of Muncie, Indiana, on "Boys' Work." Brother Jones gave the conference some valuable suggestions as to the training of the boys under our care. The fact was continually stressed that the boy is not a bad boy, but he must be given a chance to develop himself into a man of much worth in the world.

The evening sermon was delivered by Brother Claud Studebaker of Leon, Iowa, on the subject, "Cleansing, Fellowship, and Communion." The basis of the sermon was found in Philippians 2:3-8. "He humbled, or (emptied) himself and took upon himself the form of a servant and became obedient unto death even the death of the cross." The speaker emphasized the fact of the importance of the cleansing process in the life of every Christian. When the soul is cleansed as Christ would have it be, then we are fit subjects to associate or come in contact with our fellow-man, and this leads to the second great division of the theme of the evening, "Fellowship."

Cleansing and fellowship prepare us for communion with God. The speaker brought very forcibly and beautifully before the conference, our own beloved ordinance, "The Holy Communion."

Wednesday evening program was occupied by addresses by Brother M. A. Stuckey and Brother Charles Mayes who substituted for Brethren M. Puterbaugh and Homer Kent, who could not be present. Brother Stuckey gave a masterful address on "Sunday School and the Young People." Brother Mayes then read a paper on "Christian Endeavor and the Young People," written by Brother Homer Kent. The sermon of the evening was delivered by Brother A. R. Staley of Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, on the subject, "The Spirit-filled Life." Brother Staley took as the basis of his sermon, Ephesians 5:18, the last clause, "but be filled with the spirit." This was a thrilling message and the speaker did splendidly.

Thursday evening was Home Missionary evening. Addresses were given by different workers of the Mission fields. The sermon which followed was delivered by Brother L. G. Wood of Fort Scott, Kansas, on the subject, "Home: The Foundation of Christian Missions." The speaker dwelt on the fact that the training in the home was essential for Christian missions. As is the home, so is the church.
